CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, February 26, 1886.

Mr. Morrison, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following, which was agreed to:

Whereas grave charges have been made, and are constantly being made, by the leading press of the country reflecting upon the integrity and official action of certain officers of the Government of the United States, therefore,

Be it resolved, That a select committee, consisting of nine members of this House, be appointed, and when so appointed said committee is hereby directed, at as early a day as possible, to make inquiry into any expenditures upon the part of the Government incurred relative to the rights of the Bell and Pan-Electric Telephone Companies to priority of patents, said inquiry to include all organizations and companies which have sprung from the Pan-Electric Telephone Company or for any other purpose; and also to make full inquiry into the issuance of stock known as the Pan-Electric Telephone stock or any stock of any other company, companies, or organization springing out of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, to any person or persons connected at the time of such issuance with either the legislative, judicial, or executive departments of the Government of the United States, to whom, when, where, and in what amounts, and for what consideration in money, service, or influence said stock, if any, was delivered; also as to what opinions, decisions, and orders relating to said stock have been made by any officers connected with the Government, and by whom, and all the circumstances connected therewith and arising therefrom, and also as to what suit or suits, if any, have been brought in the name of the United States to test the validity of patents issued or any other right in controversy between the Bell and Pan-Electric Telephone Companies, what contracts have been made, what moneys paid or to be paid to any person or persons as assistant counsel to the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General of the United States, the reason and authority for constituting the United States as a party to said suit or suits, and all matters connected therewith. And the said committee is further authorized and directed to ascertain and report whether either of the telephone companies herein mentioned, or their officers, agents, or employes, have in any manner improperly influenced or attempted to influence officials or official action by or through the public press, and, if so, when, by whom, and in what manner such influence was exerted or attempted to be exerted, and what newspaper or newspapers were so used or attempted to be used by them. The said committee shall have the right to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, to sit during the session of the House, to employ a stenographer, and incur any and all such necessary and reasonable expenses as may be required for the purpose of conducting the said investigation, not to exceed the sum of one thousand dollars, which shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the House, upon proper vouchers certified by the chairman and one other member of the committee, and may report at any time.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
March 4, 1886.

Ordered, That Mr. Boyle, Mr. Oates, Mr. Eden, Mr. Hall, Mr. Hale, Mr. Ranney, Mr. Millard, Mr. Hanback, and Mr. Moffatt be the committee under the foregoing resolution.

Attest:

JNO. B. CLARK, JR., Clerk.

The committee appointed under the preceding resolution of February 26, 1886, consisting of—

Hon. CHARLES E. BOYLE, of Pennsylvania;
Hon. WILLIAM C. OATES, of Alabama;
Hon. JOHN R. EDEN, of Illinois;
Hon. BENTON J. HALL, of Iowa;
Hon. JOHN B. HALE, of Missouri;
Hon. AMBROSE A. RANNEY, of Massachusetts;
Hon. STEPHEN C. MILLARD, of New York;
Hon. LEWIS HANBACK, of Kansas; and
Hon. SETH C. MOFFATT, of Michigan, met to hear testimony on March 12, Hon. Charles E. Boyle presiding. The witnesses subpoenaed to appear, viz, Dr. J. W. Rogers, J. Harris Rogers, and Hon. Casey Young, were present.

A motion was made to proceed to the examination of Hon. Casey Young, which was amended by substituting the name of J. Harris Rogers, the inventor, as the first witness.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask if I can be permitted to say a word before the inquiry proceeds further. I am somewhat awkwardly situated, it being necessary, under the circumstances which surround me, to be in a measure both counsel and witness.

Mr. RANNEY. Do you speak as counsel or witness?

Mr. YOUNG. At present, as both.

Mr. RANNEY. Then we will hear you when you come to testify.

Mr. YOUNG. I desire to say a few words now before the investigation is proceeded with.

Mr. RANNEY. Do you desire to speak as counsel?

Mr. YOUNG. If I can be heard no other way, I do.

Mr. RANNEY. Who do you appear as counsel for?

Mr. YOUNG. For the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

Mr. RANNEY. What members of it?

Mr. YOUNG. Every member.

Mr. RANNEY. Have you authority from them to represent every member of the company?

Mr. YOUNG. I have no express authority from all of them, but I have from some. I will undertake to represent General Johnston, Senator Harris, General Atkins, and Governor Brown. I have had no conference with the Attorney-General, and have no warrant to speak in his behalf.

I desire to protest against the line of investigation which has just been indicated, and while I wish the fullest and fairest examination as the representative of those members of the company I have mentioned, I would like to be informed how the investigation is to be carried on, in what order the witnesses are to be examined, and what accusations we are to be called upon to meet. Charges of the gravest character have been made against myself and my associates in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and if these charges should be found true we should be disgraced in public estimation.

It has been charged through the columns of several leading newspapers, among other things, that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company had been organized for the purpose of imposing upon public credulity by floating a worthless stock upon the market and selling it to unsuspecting persons, and that those who originated the company became connected with it for the purpose of using their official influence to give a fictitious value to its stock.

It has been charged in these newspapers that while I was a member of Congress a bill was introduced in that body for the purpose of advancing the interests of this company, and that I and other members of the company lobbied for the passage of this bill.

It has also been charged that a large number of members of Congress and Senators were interested in this speculative enterprise, and that their purpose and intention was to enrich themselves by the sale of stock to which value was to be given by Congressional action.

If all this is true the persons implicated in this disreputable transaction should be branded with public infamy; but if, on the contrary, these statements are not true, if they have been wantonly made without sufficient evidence to support them, or without careful inquiry to ascertain whether or not they were based upon any tangible fact, then the issue will be changed, and public judgment may be justly appealed to to pronounce sentence upon those who originated them.

As we have been charged with these grave offenses against official propriety and public virtue, and as the resolution under which you are acting grew out of the publication of these charges, the accused have the right, I believe, to be confronted with their accuser, and to be brought face to face with the witnesses who are to testify against them.

This is a right common to every American citizen when arraigned for trial before any tribunal, and I know of no reason why the rule of law should be reversed in this case, and we be required to disprove charges before any witness has been examined to establish them or before any accuser has been produced to stand sponsor for them.

What I ask now is that our accusers shall be put upon the stand and required to establish, by competent proof, the charges they have preferred, or else retract them.

I think I have a complete and perfect defense against every charge that has as yet been preferred against us, but I do not know what others are to come. So far we are fighting an ambuscaded enemy.

I want the case of the prosecution made out, and then I shall be able, perhaps, to answer the accusation.

I think I have a right to ask that this course shall be pursued upon the part of the committee, and I so ask it in behalf of myself and those of my associates whom I assume to represent.

Mr. MILLARD said the committee was not a court to try private individuals.

After some further discussion, in which Messrs. Ranney, Millard, Oates, Eden, Hall, Hanback, and Moffatt took part, it was agreed to call Mr. Pulitzer, the editor and proprietor of the New York World, as the first witness.

TESTIMONY OF HON. JOSEPH PULITZER.

Hon. JOSEPH PULITZER sworn.

Mr. Chairman BOYLE. Mr. Pulitzer, it has been made known to the committee that you desire to make a statement on the matter now under consideration by this committee.

Mr. PULITZER. If it please the committee, I should like to ask indulgence for a few moments. My name has been connected with the publication of the facts of this investigation, and I appear before you, therefore, to say that I assume the responsibility for the publication of these facts, and that I, and I alone, am responsible for these publications. I do not know a human being, and never did, who was interested in the Bell Telephone Company. I had no motive, private or otherwise, than that arising from the feeling that the publication of these facts was in the nature of news, and I honestly believe in the nature of a public service.

No human being connected with any private or public telephone interests ever endeavored to influence me to publish anything whatever in regard to these transactions. My books and papers, private or public, are at the disposal of the committee and I am ready to present them at any time. Furthermore, while I assume the responsibility solely, I have every reason to believe that these publications, instead of being either hastily or carelessly ventured upon, were most carefully considered. I had the manuscript of the first publication for three (3) months in my pigeon hole before I published it. I instructed my correspondent here in Washington to furnish me with the exact information during the three months and to be sure to ascertain whether the facts bearing upon the statements were correct or not, and only after I had ascertained from him that he had made every effort to verify the correctness of the statements, and only after emphasizing the desire on my part to make sure, and only when a hope that I entertained that certain gentlemen, particularly one gentleman, should rid himself of the stock, which while not involving any case of venality at all, did seem to me an act of impropriety or a piece of public indiscretion; only after that hope, entertained for three months, was disappointed, and when I was assured that the facts were correct, did I publish the record. If there are any questions which the committee desires to ask in this connection, I should be very glad to be examined.

Chairman BOYLE. Mr. Pulitzer, are you a member of the present House of Representatives?

Mr. PULITZER. I am, sir.

Chairman BOYLE. What is your relation to the New York World?

Mr. PULITZER. I am editor in chief of that paper.

Chairman BOYLE. Since when; how long have you been?

Mr. PULITZER. Nearly three years.

Chairman BOYLE. You have stated that you had in your possession certain papers before their publication; to what papers do you refer?

Mr. PULITZER. I refer to the manuscript containing the history of the Pan-Electric Telephone organization.

Chairman BOYLE. Are you able to state the date at which that particular publication was made?

Mr. PULITZER. As near as I can remember the story or history of the organization, all of it in piecemeal or fragments, first came out last summer, possibly August or September, I am not very certain about it, I instructed my correspondent here, not very early, but probably after the thing began, to run through the Republican newspapers; I had taken no notice, but finally the thing became rather more serious, and I instructed my correspondent to examine into and find out what the exact facts were. That might have been about a month after the publication appeared. I should think I got his story about a month after that, and I should think I kept it about three months—five or six months from the time the original statements appeared.

Chairman BOYLE. The papers you speak of as having retained in your possession was the history prepared by your Washington correspondent. Other publications had been made prior to that?

Mr. PULITZER. Not in my paper; not in the World.

Chairman BOYLE. Nothing had appeared in the World in relation to this matter?

Mr. PULITZER. I do not think much appeared in the World until what I supposed to be the exact history; possibly some stray fugitive item of news might have appeared. They did not amount to much.

Chairman BOYLE. Have any other publications appeared in the World since the history you speak of?

Mr. PULITZER. Yes; some supplemental illustrations. I must add here that immediately upon the publication of that story or history, I instructed my correspondent here to see all the gentlemen referred to and to convey to them my particular anxiety to receive their statements or whatever corrections they might wish to make. In fact I sent that message two or three times, one-half dozen times probably, and I added to it that I would surrender any amount of space in the paper for any explanation, defense, or correction that any of these gentlemen should want to make. I know I gave that instruction frequently, and I know I received answers frequently that they would not make any statements at that time.

Chairman BOYLE. What other publications have since appeared in the World?

Mr. PULITZER. Oh, a great many on all sorts of subjects.

Chairman BOYLE. Can you indicate their general character?

Mr. RANNY. It seems to me that the rule of evidence should be observed, and that original articles should be produced.

Chairman BOYLE. Have you the publications made in the World?

Mr. PULITZER. Yes; we keep a public file.

Chairman BOYLE. Have you it here?

Mr. CRAWFORD. It is in the Congressional Library.

Mr. PULITZER. I could have it here if the Chair desires. I am just informed by my correspondent that everything has arrived this morning, and will be placed at the disposal of the Chair.

Chairman BOYLE. Can you indicate the character of any of the publications?

Mr. PULITZER. The character of what?

Chairman BOYLE. Have you published any letters purporting to be written by the parties?

Mr. PULITZER. Yes, yes; I have published a series of letters from parties forming the organization.

Chairman BOYLE. Purporting to have been written by whom?

Mr. PULITZER. Purporting to have been written by gentlemen in public life.

Chairman BOYLE. Can you name them?

Mr. PULITZER. I think I can. The Attorney-General of the United States, the head of the Department of Justice, is the chief and most important person. There are some others of minor consequence; I think, in fact, the others are not connected with the direct question of impropriety of a private interest by a public official in a peculiar organization.

Chairman BOYLE. Well, they may have been written by a public official, but did they throw any light or in any way affect the public officials?

Mr. PULITZER. I think they do; they throw a light upon the whole transactions.

Chairman BOYLE. Have you any objection to stating, Mr. Pulitzer, how these letters came into your possession?

Mr. PULITZER. Yes, sir.

Chairman BOYLE. You may state it.

Mr. PULITZER. Oh, I mean I have no objections. I received these letters from my correspondent. These, I believe, came from Mr. Rogers.

Chairman BOYLE. Which Mr. Rogers?

Mr. PULITZER. I do not know either of the gentlemen, and I never saw either of them till now; I am not familiar with either.

Chairman BOYLE. Was there published in the World what purported to be an article of agreement made by the company as to the company's stock?

Mr. PULITZER. I believe my correspondent received a copy of the article of agreement from the chief promoter and organizer of this company, Mr. Rogers.

Chairman BOYLE. Do you recollect any other papers besides the letters and articles of agreement that were published in your paper?

Mr. PULITZER. I received more papers than I published; I presume there were some papers that I did not publish because—well, I did not want to publish them. I did not want to aggravate the matter, and I might have put the story in a more disagreeable light; I only printed that which I thought was necessary to make clear the transaction. I asked these gentlemen to make an explanation; I am not aware that any of the facts printed in the paper—in the World, I mean, of course—were ever denied by the gentlemen in question.

Chairman BOYLE. As I understand you, then, sir, all papers which have appeared in the World came through the gentleman who has charge of your Washington bureau?

Mr. PULITZER. Yes, sir; I do not know any of the parties connected with the companies; I never knew a human being who held any stock, or was connected with the Bell company.

Chairman BOYLE. Does any member of the committee desire to ask questions?

Mr. RANNEY. You have mentioned your correspondent, have you any objection to name him?

Mr. PULITZER. Not at all; I have no secrets. His name is T. C. Crawford.

Mr. RANNEY. You say you took particular pains to have the facts verified?

Mr. PULITZER. I instructed him at least a half a dozen times to be perfectly certain of these facts.

Mr. RANNEY. Did you make any request of him to see these individuals?

Mr. PULITZER. I did, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Was that before making any publication, you took pains to have them seen?

Mr. PULITZER. I do not know that he saw these parties before the publication, but I am quite sure he saw them afterwards.

Mr. RANNEY. You say the inquiry goes beyond that. We are requested to inquire whether any of the newspapers are interested.

Mr. PULITZER. Yes; I offered that resolution myself, and know all about it.

Mr. RANNEY. I desire to know if there was any other motive for offering that resolution?

Mr. PULITZER. These charges were made by responsible people in New York, and I have taken the trouble to collect all they said about it, and I propose to hand whatever I have to this committee for their guidance in this matter. I am curious to know whether there was any impropriety.

Mr. RANNEY. Do you know of any official who holds any of the Pan-Electric stock?

Mr. PULITZER. I do.

Mr. RANNEY. Do you know any member of either branch of Congress who holds any of the stock?

Mr. PULITZER. Well, I know Mr. Vest; he admits that he holds stock, and Mr. Garland, whom I like personally. I do not know of anybody outside of Congress who has any interest in this matter, except through the publications. I do not know any of the gentlemen except the gentlemen named.

Mr. HALL. Your knowledge is not personal?

Mr. PULITZER. No, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Do you own any of the Bell telephone?

Mr. PULITZER. Do I what?

Mr. RANNEY. Own any Bell telephone stock?

Mr. PULITZER. I do not own any kind of stock in any kind of Bell or other telephone companies whatever. I do not know a human being financially connected with or interested in the Bell. No human being ever tried to influence me. As I stated in the beginning, I, and I alone, am responsible for the publication of these facts. I only printed the history after a hope entertained for three months that it might become entirely unnecessary, by the gentlemen in high official station getting rid of that stock.

Mr. OATES. I do not understand from you whether you called upon these parties before or after the publication in the World.

Mr. PULITZER. I am not quite clear on that, but I am quite clear that I instructed my correspondent to call upon them.

Mr. OATES. Do you know it from your own knowledge that he did so?

Mr. PULITZER. He told me that they called at the office of the World after the publication, and that they had no statement to make at that time.

Mr. OATES. You did state it had been done, and you testified that you instructed your correspondent so.

Mr. PULITZER. I telegraphed him about it, and I told him that they could have any amount of space. I sent word to the gentlemen concerned that they could have pages, any amount of space, to explain, correct, or say anything they pleased.

Mr. OATES. How, Mr. Pulitzer, did you first come to get this information upon the company?

Mr. PULITZER. What company?

Mr. OATES. The Pan-Electric Company. From whom did you get the first information?

Mr. PULITZER. From the newspapers. It was only after my attention had been called to it.

Mr. EDEN. Was the World the first paper that published it?

Mr. OATES. Do you remember what newspaper you first saw it in?

Mr. PULITZER. It went through the press, chiefly the Republican papers, and they suggested to me to ascertain the exact fact.

Mr. OATES. You stated that your correspondent fortunately got hold of the album of some one of the Rogers family and from that received the letters. Do you know how he obtained that?

Mr. PULITZER. Only from what he told me. I believe that he said that the organizer of the company—I believe it was Doctor Rogers—had given him that album after the first story appeared.

Mr. OATES. Did you have to pay anything for it?

Mr. PULITZER. I am glad you asked me that. I never paid a cent for that album; but I think I did pay for the original manuscript which I received about three months before the letters; my correspondent sent in a bill for less than $100, but not exceeding that. That is all I paid. I never paid a cent for the letters that I know of.

Mr. OATES. I understand you to say some of these letters and papers of the most damaging character were not published?

Mr. PULITZER. I did not state that I did not print the most damaging letters. I will be explicit; I do not wish to withhold anything; I want the committee to know all I know in this matter. I did not print the transcripts of the cash transactions of the company.

Mr. OATES. Was there anything damaging to the character of these men—anything that seemed to be corrupt or improper?

Mr. PULITZER. I have never said that there was anything venal in it. I have distinctly stated that I never regarded the matter in that light. I only regarded it as an indiscretion or matter of very questionable taste in high officials.

Mr. OATES. Were there any of those you did not publish which seemed to give any considerable evidence or tend largely to prove the indiscretion or improper conduct of those receiving the stock.

Mr. PULITZER. Well, those are things of impression. There are extracts from the papers I refer to not very pleasant to some persons.

Mr. OATES. Did you not publish everything that you found in that album that went, in your judgment, to prove indiscretion.

Mr. PULITZER. I did not, sir. There are certain things which strike me as perhaps not strictly within the legitimate province of a newspaper to publish. Things that seem to bear on public interests and questions, on public officials, if you please, preserving the highest honor and adhering to the highest standard of public propriety, form on line. There was another line, which seemed to be in the nature of private transactions, of what they sold and what they got; these things I excluded.

Mr. OATES. Then, you mean to say that you published only such as you thought the public ought to have, or which you considered proper.

Mr. PULITZER. I published only that which the public, from a public standpoint, could justify for the public welfare, and anything which referred to private transactions I excluded.

Mr. OATES. Have you in your control those letters which you did not publish?

Mr. PULITZER. I did not say letters. These letters did not come to me. I told my correspondent to leave out all letters of a private nature, and all letters which did not bear upon questions of interest to the public. A large number of letters of a private nature I told him to leave out. There was a large number that was never printed; that is my recollection.

Mr. OATES. I heard some one say this morning that you were going away. I make this inquiry, so that we may have these letters.

Mr. PULITZER. I shall be very glad to assist in procuring them, or to attend again at any time you may desire, though I am a very busy man.

Mr. BOYLE. Does any other gentleman wish to examine the witness?

Mr. RANNEY. Do you understand this record from the World will be produced?

Mr. PULITZER. I simply stated that this committee can have everything which I can furnish that the chairman desires.

Mr. RANNEY. These things which you did not publish are not in your possession?

Mr. PULITZER. Some of them. Some were set up in type. I will cheerfully furnish the committee the pages I had set up.

TESTIMONY OF MR. J. HARRIS ROGERS.

Mr. J. HARRIS ROGERS, sworn.

Chairman BOYLE. What is your age?

Mr. ROGERS. I am thirty-five.

Mr. BOYLE. What is your business?

Mr. ROGERS. I am an electrician.

Mr. BOYLE. Have you made some inventions in your line of business?

Mr. ROGERS. I have.

Mr. BOYLE. Can you give the date of your first patent?

Mr. ROGERS. I cannot. It was about twelve or thirteen years ago.

Mr. BOYLE. What was it?

Mr. ROGERS. Embossed telegraphy.

Mr. BOYLE. Can you state in all how many patents you have obtained?

Mr. ROGERS. I can not. Making a rough guess, I should say about forty or fifty.

Mr. BOYLE. Are you the J. H. Rogers named in the publications as having been connected with the Pan-Electric Company?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Were any of your inventions, patented or to be patented, sold to that company, or to persons who afterward figured as the Pan-Electric Company?

Mr. ROGERS. They were transferred to the Pan-Electric Company.

Mr. BOYLE. Can you name some of the inventions?

Mr. ROGERS. Some were on telegraphy, some on electric lights and burglar-alarms.

Mr. BOYLE. Was the transfer made to the corporation or to individuals?

Mr. ROGERS. It was made to a number of associates.

Mr. BOYLE. Can you name them?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Please do so.

Mr. ROGERS. Senator Garland, Senator Harris, Hon. T. C. Atkins and Hon. Casey Young, and Mr. Johnston. They were the original incorporators and associates.

Mr. BOYLE. Can you state the number of inventions that were so transferred?

Mr. ROGERS. I think there were about twenty or thirty inventions.

Mr. BOYLE. When was this transfer made?

Mr. ROGERS. In 1883.

Mr. BOYLE. At what time?

Mr. ROGERS. I think it was in March. It was in March that the documents were signed.

Mr. BOYLE. In March of what year?

Mr. ROGERS. In March, 1883.

Mr. BOYLE. Had any of these inventions been put into practical operation before the transfer?

Mr. ROGERS. We had worked them practically.

Mr. BOYLE. Had they been used by the public at all?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Had their success been established or proved at the time the transfer was made?

Mr. ROGERS. Most of them.

Mr. BOYLE. Will you name some of them as have been proved, such as have been transferred to the company?

Mr. ROGERS. There were some, I think, on automatic telegraphy, several in the telephonic line, also on the electric light system.

Mr. BOYLE. Were these all transferred to what afterward became the Pan-Electric Company?

Mr. ROGERS. They were all originally transferred to my associates in New York, who styled themselves the Pan-Electric Company. They contemplated getting out a broad charter to cover those points. The idea was to get out a charter which would cover the various systems; hence the name Pan-Electric.

Mr. BOYLE. You say your associates in New York. Were they the same gentlemen you named?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; the same gentlemen.

Mr. BOYLE. The transaction took place in New York, then?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir. The date of signing the transaction.

Mr. BOYLE. Prior to the formal transaction, had you had interviews with the gentlemen to whom the transfer was made?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. All of them?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Have you any recollection as to who first made the suggestion of the formation of the company?

Mr. ROGERS. My father did.

Mr. BOYLE. He made the suggestion to you?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you know by what means these gentlemen named by you were brought into the undertaking; I mean by whom?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, to my own personal knowledge, General Atkins was the first.

Mr. BOYLE. Who spoke to him about it?

Mr. ROGERS. I and my father. We gave him a copy of the pamphlet. My father suggested the Pan-Electric Company to him, and he said he was willing to look into the enterprise.

Mr. BOYLE. Have you a copy of that pamphlet, and can you produce it?

Mr. ROGERS. I have one which is almost exactly like it.

Mr. BOYLE. Have you any recollection of a personal interview with any others?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; immediately after the suggestion was made to General Atkins, we met Senator Harris at our house in company with General Atkins. We then went over this contemplated enterprise and examined very carefully into the patents and the pamphlet, and finally, after several interviews, they agreed to go into the enterprise.

Mr. BOYLE. Was Colonel Young present at that interview?

Mr. ROGERS. I know that he was present at several interviews; but as to the first, I think he was not.

Mr. BOYLE. Can you name any others?

Mr. ROGERS. It was suggested that there would have to be other associates, and that they would like to have such men as General Johnston and Senator Garland and men of that kind, and of national reputation.

Mr. BOYLE. Who made that suggestion?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know; either Senator Harris or General Atkins.

Mr. BOYLE. Did you have an interview with either Senator Garland or General Johnston?

Mr. ROGERS. General Johnston came to my house, and I showed him an instrument that I had in operation. Subsequently Mr. Garland called at my house.

Mr. OATES. Was Mr. Garland then a Senator?

Mr. ROGERS. I think he was.

Mr. OATES. Where was your house?

Mr. ROGERS. No 315 Four-and-a-half street.

Mr. BOYLE. Can you state the time that this project was suggested?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; it was in June, 1883.

Mr. BOYLE. Did these gentlemen agree to go into the movement?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; the transfer was made in New York.

Mr. BOYLE. Then the transfer was made afterward in New York?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; several weeks afterward we went to New York.

Mr. BOYLE. The transfer was in writing was it not?

Mr. ROGERS. It was.

Mr. BOYLE. Can you state who has the writing?

Mr. ROGERS. It was sent to General Johnston, as treasurer, and we had copies printed for each one interested.

Mr. BOYLE. Have you a copy?

Mr. ROGERS. I have.

Mr. BOYLE. You say you have a printed copy?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. Can you state what interest these gentlemen have in the undertaking?

Mr. ROGERS. One million each.

Mr. OATES. I mean on what proportion?

Mr. ROGERS. On the basis of five million. It was the intention to capitalize the company at $5,000,000. It was then agreed that each party named should have one-tenth interest, another tenth to be reserved for some gentleman in New York.

Mr. BOYLE. How many were there?

Mr. ROGERS. It was to be divided in ten equal parts at one-tenth each.

Mr. BOYLE. Then six of you formed a syndicate.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Who kept the other four-tenths.

Mr. ROGERS. I kept that myself, I and my father.

Mr. RANNEY. Were there six persons, or five in addition to yourself?

Mr. ROGERS. Five persons besides myself.

Mr. MILLARD. Who were these men who were to have one-tenth?

Mr. ROGERS. Senator Garland, Senator Harris, General Johnston, Colonel Young, and General Atkins.

Mr. MILLARD. Did you give them your patents without any money?

Mr. ROGERS. I did. There was no money paid out.

Mr. BOYLE. What was the consideration for the interests in these patents and inventions to be paid by these gentlemen?

Mr. ROGERS. They were to go ahead and get out a charter covering these patents, and put them under one corporation or company, to be based upon such improvements as we might invent in the future.

Mr. BOYLE. I understand, then, that whatever value the inventions might have had was to be divided into ten parts. You were to keep four parts for your invention, and each of these gentlemen was to have one-tenth for his stock in the enterprise?

Mr. ROGERS. I and my father were as one.

Mr. HALE. Another tenth was to be placed in New York for some capitalist?

Mr. ROGERS. I did not say capitalist. I said a gentleman who was well known in the financial world.

Mr. BOYLE. They were to join you, I think you said, in monetizing and bringing it into use and making it of value?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. They were to pay no money for their interests?

Mr. ROGERS. They were not. The question of money was never opened.

Mr. BOYLE. By what means were the expenses of the company undertaking to bring these inventions into use to be paid?

Mr. ROGERS. They requested me to make a rough estimate of what would be needed to test the patents on the various lines from New York to Washington. I made the estimate, but one of the gentlemen said, "Let's assess ourselves $150 apiece."

Mr. BOYLE. You say that was after the instrument was signed?

Mr. ROGERS. I think it was.

Mr. BOYLE. Is not that in the instrument?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not think it is.

Mr. BOYLE. Is this a copy of the original agreement?

Mr. ROGERS. This is the pamphlet upon which the original agreement was made:

"Be it known that these articles of agreement, drawn up and entered into in the city and State of New York, on this 13th of March, eighteen hundred and eighty-three, by and between James Harris Rogers, a resident of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia; of Joseph F. Johnston, also a resident of the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia; Augustus H. Garland, a resident of the city of Little Rock, in the State of Arkansas; John D. C. Atkins, a resident of the city of Paris, in the county of Henry, in the State of Tennessee; Isham G. Harris and Casey Young, residents of the city of Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, witnesseth:

"That, whereas the said James Harris Rogers is the owner of sundry valuable improvements, discoveries, and inventions in respect to and concerning the various uses, properties, and application of electricity, as a heating, lighting, motive, transmitting, and receiving power of agency, and which said improvements, discoveries, and inventions are secured to aforesaid James Harris Rogers, by Letters Patent, already issued to him as the author thereof, or by application filed therefor, in the office of the Commissioner of Patents of the United States of America, the same being known, designated and described as follows; that is, those which are already patented, to wit:

"'An Invention, styled Embossed Telegraph,' and numbered on the books of the Patent Office in Washington City, No. 130,662.

"'An Invention for improvement of Electric Light,' numbered 216,760.

"'An Invention for a Central Telephonic System,' numbered 268,294.

"'An Invention for a Telephonic Repeater,' numbered 269,326.

"Upon all of which patents have already been granted to the aforesaid James Harris Rogers. There is also embraced in these articles of agreements the following inventions, for which applications for patents have been made, to wit:

"'An Invention for Cylindrical Automatic Telegraphy,' numbered 87,340.

"'An Invention styled a Telephonic Transmitter,' numbered 80,555.

"'An Invention styled the Duplex and Quadruplex Telegraph,' numbered 16,734.

"'An Invention styled Thermotlemetre,' numbered 16,933.

"'An Invention styled A sub-marine Cable, without Insulation,' numbered 69,966, only one-half of which last-mentioned invention is, however, included in these articles of agreement. For all of the last-mentioned inventions, applications have been filed in the Patent Office as aforesaid. And there is also embraced in this agreement the following inventions, for which no patents have been issued, nor applications made for the same; but which the said James Harris Rogers proposes hereafter to obtain, if the same can be obtained from the Commisiener of Patents, to wit: 'Igniting Gas by Dyname Machines;' 'Generating Electricity directly from Coal;' 'An Electric Burglar Alarm;' 'An Electrical Enumerator and Calculator,' and all other inventions and discoveries in electricity heretofore made by the said James Harris Rogers, the title to which still remains in him.

"And whereas the said James Harris Rogers is desirous of further developing and putting into practical working operation the improvements, discoveries, and inventions, and for the purpose of obtaining the aid and assistance in the furtherance and accomplishment of this object of the persons herein named, is also desirous of forming an association or joint stock company with the said Joseph E. Johnston, Augustus H. Garland, John D. C. Atkins, Isham G. Harris, and Casey Young.

"Now, therefore, all the above-named persons hereby mutually agree to constitute themselves an association or joint stock company, for the objects and purposes above set out, upon the following terms and stipulations:

"First. It is mutually agreed and understood by all the parties hereto, that as among themselves, the value of said improvements, discoveries, and inventions, shall be estimated at one million dollars.

"That this amount shall be divided into ten (10) equal parts or shares, four of which are to be held and owned by the said James Harris Rogers, and one (1) each by the said Joseph E. Johnston, Augustus H. Garland, John D. C. Atkins, Isham G. Harris, and Casey Young; and the other part or share shall be jointly held by the company to be disposed of in such a manner as the members thereof think fit.

"Second. It is further mutually agreed by the parties to this agreement, that they will, as soon as the same can be done, procure a charter of incorporation, constituting themselves a corporate body, under the name and style of the 'Pan-Electric Company," embracing under such charter of incorporation such objects and power as they may deem proper and as are allowed to incorporated bodies under the laws of the State of New York, or of any other State in which said charter of incorporation may be obtained.

"Third. It is also agreed that when the aforesaid persons are incorporated as a corporate body, as hereinbefore provided, all the capital stock of said corporation shall be the joint property of this company; and it may issue, sell, or otherwise dispose of so much thereof as they may see fit, provided that no individual member shall dispose of any interest acquired under these articles of agreement at less than the face value thereof without the assent of the executive committee, hereinafter provided for.

"And all interest, jointly held by the company, and which may be sold as aforesaid, and disposed of by direction of the aforesaid executive committee, shall be sold for the joint benefit of the company.

Provided further, That the said James Harris Rogers shall have the right to dispose of, to such persons as he may see fit, an interest in the property of the company hereinbefore enumerated, amounting to the sum of one hundred and seventy thousand dollars ($170,000) upon the basis of a capital stock of five millions of dollars ($5,000,000).

"Fourth. It is also further stipulated and agreed that the aforesaid parties to this agreement may admit others to membership in this Association or company upon such terms and conditions as they may prescribe; it being understood that they are the joint owners of all the properties, rights of franchises herein set out or referred to.

"Fifth: And it is also agreed that until the said charter of incorporation shall be procured, the company organized, and the board of directors elected, thereunder, there shall be chosen from the persons above mentioned an executive committee of three, who shall conduct the business and affairs of the company, and direct the doing of such things as may be needed to do for the furtherance of the objects herein set out. And any expense incurred for the doing of the same, may assess pro rata upon the members of the company to the amount of one hundred and fifty dollars ($150) each; and no greater sum shall be assessed without authority from a majority of the members.

"And should any member be unwilling to pay the amount which may be assessed against him as aforesaid, he may withdraw from the company upon such terms as the remaining members thereof may impose, or he may be expelled by a majority vote; the persons so withdrawing, or being expelled, shall, however, be acquitted of all liability to the company or on its account.

"Sixth. The parties to this instrument hereby stipulated and agree to pay in the manner, and to the amount hereinbefore specified, the expense which may be necessarily incurred in perfecting the inventions, discoveries, and improvements herein set out, and in practically demonstrating their uses and value.

"Seventh. And in consideration of the last preceding article, it is stipulated and agreed by the said James Harris Rogers that any improvements which he may hereafter make upon any of the discoveries or inventions embraced in this instrument, or any further inventions or discoveries which he may make that are necessary to perfect those already made, applied for, or in contemplation, shall be the joint property of the Pan Electric Company, provided, however, that the company shall pay any expense he may incur in making the same.

"Eighth. The executive committee hereinbefore provided for, shall have the power, if in their judgment the same shall become necessary for the furtherance of the objects and purposes of this Association to agree with other parties to sell them such interest in the properties of this company or association as they may see proper, giving such persons a written or printed certificate, in which it shall be stipulated that the purchasers of such interest shall receive therefor a certificate for such share or shares of stock in the Pan-Electric Company, when organized, at such valuation as the said executive committee may determine upon.

"And it is agreed that said executive committee shall consist of Joseph E. Johnston, James Harris Rogers, and Casey Young.

"Ninth. The domicile or place of business of this company or association shall for the present be in the city of Washington, District of Columbia.

"Tenth. These articles of agreement may be altered or amended at any time at the option of two-thirds of the parties in interest.

"In witness of all of which we have hereunto fixed our seals, in the city and State aforesaid, on the day and date above written.

Mr. BOYLE. Have you a copy of the agreement?

Mr. ROGERS. I think I have.

Mr. HANBACK. Let us have the agreement. We do not care for the pamphlet.

Mr. ROGERS. Shall I look for it [rising]?

Mr. BOYLE. Certainly.

Mr. J. W. Rogers read the first agreement of J. D. C. Atkins and others, with J. H. and J. W. Rogers. (See original copy marked No. 1.)

Mr. BOYLE. Mr. Rogers, were Senator Garland and General Johnston present in New York?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you know, sir, whether at any time they paid the amount stated in the agreement?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; I think it amounted to $1,100. In the course of three or four months they sent each individual his pro rata of the expenses, and I paid for my own four-tenths.

Mr. BOYLE. I understand these expenses were incurred in testing the value of the patents.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you consider them of value?

Mr. ROGERS. Inventors generally do.

Mr. BOYLE. It sometimes turns out that they are mistaken; what is expected to be of great value proves of little use.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. That happens more frequently than the contrary?

Mr. ROGERS. Oh, yes.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you know whether the company was afterward incorporated or their charter obtained?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Never was?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Was there ever any stock issued by the association?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know really what stock means exactly. Senator Vest bought an interest in the Pan-Electric. He bought one thousand shares, at ten dollars per share, in the original Pan-Electric, which carried with it the same proportion in the Pan-Electric Telephone and Pan-Electric Telegraph.

Mr. BOYLE. I understand that two companies were formed?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; two companies were taken out of the original one and chartered.

Mr. BOYLE. By the same gentlemen to whom the transfer was made?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDEN. What were the names of the companies?

Mr. ROGERS. The Pan-Electric Telephone and the Pan-Electric Telegraph. Subsequently another company came in.

Mr. BOYLE. They came in through these gentlemen?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Then you had three companies instead of two?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; the Pan-Electric Telephone, Pan-Electric Telegraph, and the Pan-Electric Company.

Mr. BOYLE. Were there any certificates of stock issued by these companies?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; certificates have been issued by the Pan-Electric Telephone and the Pan-Electric Telegraph Companies.

Mr. HANBACK. Now we have come to the point where we want the books.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not want to be technical, but it would be better to show the books.

Mr. BOYLE. The stock that you say was issued, was it delivered to the several parties?

Mr. ROGERS. I suppose so. I think the original interest was simply given on the books. I subsequently received my telephone stock.

Mr. BOYLE. Four-tenths of the capital of five million?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Did Gov. Brown come in through you, or, in other words, did you sell him part of your interest?

Mr. ROGERS. He received part.

Mr. BOYLE. Was that Pan-Electric stock or Pan-Electric Telephone?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; it carried that with it.

Mr. BOYLE. How much did Governor Brown pay you?

Mr. ROGERS. He did not pay anything, to my knowledge.

Mr. BOYLE. What was the consideration for giving him an interest, then?

Mr. ROGERS. The same consideration as the other gentlemen.

Mr. MOFFATT. How much did you transfer to Senator Brown?

Mr. ROGERS. One hundred thousand. It was Governor Brown, not Senator Brown. He is attorney for the Missouri and Pacific, with headquarters in Saint Louis.

Mr. BOYLE. How much was transferred to Mr. Looney?

Mr. ROGERS. One-sixth of the whole enterprise.

Mr. BOYLE. Then he became a larger stockholder than any of the original corporators, excepting yourself?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, excepting myself.

Mr. BOYLE. Out of what interest was that taken?

Mr. ROGERS. Out of mine.

Mr. BOYLE. What did Mr. Looney pay you?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know exactly. I think it was mining stock.

Mr. BOYLE. Then it was an exchange of stock—he paid you in other stocks. Have they any value?

Mr. ROGERS. Not any great value.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you remember the face value of the stock transferred to you by Mr. Looney?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not.

Mr. BOYLE. Did you not take any account of that?

Mr. ROGERS. No; I thought they were of value.

Mr. BOYLE. Who is Mr. Looney?

Mr. ROGERS. A gentleman from Memphis, Tenn.

Mr. RANNEY. How does he spell his name?

Mr. ROGERS. Looney.

Mr. BOYLE. Did you sell any part of your stock to any other person?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. To whom?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not remember. My father attended to all that.

Mr. BOYLE. He can enlighten us?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. I want to ask you, sir, whether it was at your instance or at the instance of your father that the stock was issued?

Mr. ROGERS. You mean the Pan-Electric Telephone?

Mr. BOYLE. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROGERS. It had been frequently urged from the signing of the contract that stock should be issued for the original Pan-Electric.

Mr. BOYLE. Upon whom did you urge it?

Mr. ROGERS. Upon the members of the board, excepting Colonel Young.

Mr. BOYLE. Did they consent?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; they were endeavoring to get the charter out.

Mr. BOYLE. What reason did they give for not issuing the stock?

Mr. ROGERS. General Johnston urged that he could see no advantage in issuing the stock until they had made the test on the line from New York to Washington; and subsequently General Johnston told me, coming from Richmond, that the company would not issue stock.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you remember any other person to whom you sold stock?

Mr. ROGERS. There was Jacob Thompson; we sold to him about five or ten thousand dollars' worth.

Mr. BOYLE. To whom did that money go?

Mr. ROGERS. To Mr. Looney and ourselves; he was our agent, and we reimbursed him one-half of the amount sold, in stock; we got half the money.

Mr. BOYLE. Senator Vest seems to have purchased some stock?

Mr. ROGERS. So I was informed.

Mr. BOYLE. Whose stock was that?

Mr. ROGERS. It was taken from the company's stock.

Mr. BOYLE. And that money went into the company's fund?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you know of the company selling any other stock?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir. Senator Harris wanted two friends of his to buy some.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you know what was the price paid?

Mr. ROGERS. I think it was agreed at $5 per share. They were two ladies that Senator Harris wanted to make some money on it.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you know how much the ladies were favored with?

Mr. ROGERS. Twenty-five hundred, I believe.

Mr. BOYLE. What do you mean by five?

Mr. ROGERS. Five dollars per share.

Mr. BOYLE. The par value, I understand, was one hundred?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. And you say the ladies paid $2,500?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. The whole amount of cash paid, as I understand you, was $2,500?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; that was my impression. It was the company's stock, and that money went into the company's treasury.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you know of any other parties interested selling their individual stock?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not.

Mr. BOYLE. So far as you know, no stock was sold, except your own and the company's?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; I remember a gentleman Senator Harris spoke of; he is from Tennessee. I think he paid $500.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you know his name?

Mr. ROGERS. No; I do not.

Mr. HANBACK. You know his name, but you cannot recall it?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you know of any sales of territory?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; I have been informed that certain States would be sold.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you know of your own knowledge?

Mr. ROGERS. I have seen the papers and leases for certain States—Missouri, Tennessee, Illinois, Texas, Alabama, and other States that I cannot place.

Mr. BOYLE. Can you name the parties to whom the sales were made?

Mr. ROGERS. Saint Louis was sold to General Boyle.

Mr. BOYLE. Can you state what was paid for these rights?

Mr. ROGERS. I cannot now exactly remember; generally $5,000 or $10,000 in addition to a royalty and a certain proportion of their local stock. There may have been some slight difference, but they are the three things which we generally required. On some occasions we dispensed with the royalty.

Mr. BOYLE. Who purchased Pennsylvania?

Mr. ROGERS. My father and I, and paid the Pan-Electric Company a royalty on each instrument. I know scarcely anything about the business, except what I have told.

Mr. BOYLE. Did you put these inventions in practical operation in Pennsylvania?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; we established a local company at Mauch Chunk.

Mr. BOYLE. Did you sell any stock? In what way did you operate?

Mr. ROGERS. We began to put up instruments, thirty or forty of them on the Lehigh Valley Railroad.

Mr. BOYLE. Did you organize a stock company for operation at Mauch Chunk?

Mr. ROGERS. Did you ask me if I sold any stock? The company did not sell any stock.

Mr. BOYLE. Who formed the company?

Mr. ROGERS. Robert B. Klotz, H. D. Money, Frank Armstrong, General Denver, Mr. Manning, and Mr. Cox.

Mr. OATES. Will you state, sir, the capital of this Mauch Chunk company?

Mr. ROGERS. Five million dollars ($5,000,000.)

Mr. BOYLE. Do you know how much money came through the hands of yourself and father?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not think any money came in.

Mr. BOYLE. How were you paid then?

Mr. ROGERS. We let these men come in without the payment of any money.

Mr. BOYLE. And you never received any money from the Mauch Chunk company?

Mr. ROGERS. Never.

Mr. BOYLE. How many dividends were paid by the Pan-Electric Company, or Pan-Electric Telephone Company?

Mr. ROGERS. Three or four.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you know what they aggregated?

Mr. ROGERS. No, I do not; but the books will show that.

Mr. RANNEY. What were the dividends paid out?

Mr. ROGERS. From ten to thirteen thousand.

Mr. RANNEY. What I want to know is whether the money was obtained by sale of shares?

Mr. ROGERS. By selling rights.

Mr. BOYLE. You say as much as ten or twelve thousand was distributed at one time?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Can you name any other amounts?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Did you establish any other company in Pennsylvania?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. In any other State?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you know of your own knowledge of any other company having been established?

Mr. ROGERS. Not to my own knowledge.

Mr. BOYLE. As I understand it, the parent company never realized anything from the transfer of the State of Pennsylvania to you and your father?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Were these dividends on the Pan-Electric telephone?

Mr. ROGERS. On the Pan-Electric telephone. They are just as different as the Pan-Electric Company from any other company.

Mr. HALL. What is the aggregate amount received?

Mr. ROGERS. I am not posted and cannot say.

Mr. HALL. What was the gross amount?

Mr. ROGERS. I would say about thirty or fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. BOYLE. All of that was realized from the sale of rights?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; not all from the sale of rights.

Mr. BOYLE. Well, then, it was all received from the sale of territory.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. In making these sales, Mr. Rogers, did you believe the thing to be of value?

Mr. ROGERS. I did, sir; we believed what Mr. Garland said as the lawyer.

Mr. BOYLE. What was involved in the opinion of the lawyer?

Mr. ROGERS. We depended in a great measure upon that, because Bell claimed the right to the exclusive use of electricity for transmitting articulate speech.

Chairman BOYLE. You do not gather my question. If the Bell claim should not be sustained by the courts, what would be the effect upon your inventions; would they be valuable or otherwise?

Mr. ROGERS. It would greatly enhance their value.

Mr. RANNEY. If this Bell telephone should be defeated, it would increase the value of yours?

Mr. ROGERS. Most assuredly.

Chairman BOYLE. Otherwise your claims would be valueless?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOFFATT. You say that you depended upon the opinion given by Senator Garland as your attorney, in particular; upon what else did you depend in that respect?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, as we had a superior instrument, we thought we might be able to sell it to the Bell company.

Mr. MOFFATT. Did you have the opinion of any other attorneys?

Mr. ROGERS. Senator Harris.

Chairman BOYLE. Do you remember having the opinion of some gentlemen in this city—some patent lawyers?

Mr. ROGERS. Not in behalf of the Pan-Electric, but in behalf of another company; we had the opinions a number of years ago.

Chairman BOYLE. Can you name your attorneys in regard to the validity of the patents of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Noyes, of this city, gave an opinion, and Mr. Smith, but it has been so long ago I have almost forgotten.

Chairman BOYLE. Did they agree with the opinion given by Mr. Garland?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; that our patents did not infringe their patents.

Mr. HALE. I would like to ask a question.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. Do you know anything about the bringing of this suit some time last summer against the Bell Telephone Company?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; I heard of it.

Mr. HALE. You remember the bringing of the suit. Was there any conversation in regard to the bringing of the suit?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; one conversation in regard to the bringing of the suit. I had that with Colonel Young the first time.

Mr. HALE. Was that between Colonel Young and yourself?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. About what time was that?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not remember the exact date. He came to our house on Four-and-a-half street and told us that the Government had resolved to bring suit.

Mr. OATES. Was that last year?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; he said to us that the Government had begun suit. My father asked him whether the Attorney-General had not promised to bring suit. He said yes, that Mr. Garland had, and father said, well, if Garland has promised to bring suit he will do it. Colonel Young told us, however, that Mr. Garland felt a delicacy in conducting the suit, and that everything was to be left to Mr. Goode. It was all to be turned over to Mr. Goode.

Mr. HALE. You say that Colonel Young told your father that Garland had promised to bring suit?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; but I do not remember his exact words. He told him that he was to do it. Am I to state everything that was said on that occasion?

Several MEMBERS. Yes, state everything.

Mr. ROGERS. Colonel Young stated that that was all right; that Goode was a friend.

Chairman BOYLE. I did not exactly understand that.

Mr. ROGERS. He told us that Goode was our friend, or that he was friendly towards us, or, in substance, that he would do what was right, and I believe he said he would rather have Goode than Garland.

Mr. HALE. How soon was the suit brought?

Mr. ROGERS. Probably in a month.

Mr. HALE. Where was the suit brought in the State?

Mr. ROGERS. It was brought in Tennessee.

Mr. HALE. Nashville or Memphis?

Mr. ROGERS. I really do not know.

Mr. HALE. Do you know whether Mr. Garland was here when the suit was brought?

Mr. OATES. I did not hear your question, Mr. Hale.

Mr. HALE. I asked him whether Mr. Garland was here when the suit was brought?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not remember.

Mr. HALE. After the suit was brought, and the question was raised in the newspapers, did you have any conversation with the other members of the company? You remember that the suit was brought in Tennessee—well, after that suit was brought, did you have any conversation in regard to what was to be done?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; I do not think so; I do not remember it. I spoke to Senator Harris, privately, on one occasion. He spoke of the suit and spoke of it when it was pending in the Patent Office. We had a conversation as to that.

Mr. HALE. Now, did you have any conversation with any of the leading corporators about that time?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. HALE. After the suit was dismissed, did you have any other conversation with the corporators?

Mr. ROGERS. I spoke to Senator Harris, and we talked of the possibility of Goode's calling on the suit in the event of the Patent Office deciding against us.

Mr. HALE. After the suit was dismissed did you have some talk of bringing another suit?

Mr. ROGERS. After the suit was dismissed we had another conversation.

Chairman BOYLE. That was while it was pending in the Interior Department?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HANBACK. After it was dismissed he said he had this conversation with Senator Harris.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; I spoke to Senator Harris. I also had a conversation with Colonel Young.

Mr. HALE. In regard to the first suit?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; he sent for me and told me that there were some parties at the Ebbitt House, and that they were anxious to consolidate with us in a company, formed on some of my original patents, as the National Improvement Company. He told me that they wanted our organization, and that they were very wealthy, and that we wanted their money. In other words, that we needed their cash and testimony that they had collected. He said to me that they had accumulated seventy-five thousand dollars worth of testimony in Europe in regard to the telephone, and that if we would consolidate with them they would give us the benefit of their testimony for the purpose of carrying on the suit.

Mr. OATES. For what purpose?

Mr. ROGERS. For carrying on the suit against the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. OATES. So as to decide the validity of that patent?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir. This was about the 1st of July. I cannot give the exact date. Colonel Gamp was at the Ebbitt House.

Chairman BOYLE. They wanted you to unite your force with the company that had the money?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; with the company that had already invested the money.

Mr. HALE. Did you go to the Ebbitt House?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir. He suggested to me that they did not want my father there, so I never went. I went over to the office and told him to stay there until I returned, so that in case my father did not find me there he could come to the Ebbitt. The colonel said he thought they did not want the old man; that they were angry with him, and for me to keep him away. They hated my father because he called their enterprise "a small institution."

Mr. HALE. Who was present during your conversation in regard to Mr. Garland?

Mr. ROGERS. My father and Colonel Young.

Mr. HALE. That was at your residence?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; that was at our residence.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Rogers, to what extent is there conflicting interests between the Pan-Electric Company and the Bell Telephone Company?

Mr. ROGERS. The Bell Telephone Company claimed the exclusive right of transmitting articulate speech by the use of the current of electricity, no matter how the instrument is made. If I should take that water-cooler over there and by the aid of electricity make it talk, the Bell people would claim that you were infringing their patents, contesting that they have the sole right to transmit articulate speech. They acknowledge that you might not infringe any of their instruments, neither transmitters or receivers, but if you use the current of electricity in that way you are infringing their patent.

Mr. OATES. Then the conflict of interests between the Bell Company and the Pan-Electric Company is measured by the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. That is the only part of the company that is in conflict with the Bell Company?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. That part of the company is in conflict with the Bell Company?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Rogers, there has been some testimony that you turned over some letters to the correspondent of the New York World. About what time was that?

Mr. ROGERS. Two months ago.

Mr. HALE. Under what circumstances? What was the motive?

Mr. ROGERS. There was an article in the World stating that I had been dismissed from the Pan-Electric Company, for reasons that it is not worth while to mention—and there were several paragraphs that did not please me very much—and at a meeting of the board that night I suggested the propriety of my answering that charge, that I had sold my patents a second time. A New Orleans paper said that Rogers had sold his patents a second time, first to the National Improvement Telephone Company, and then subsequently that he had gulled all these Senators into the enterprise and got their money for the same patent. At that time Senator Harris got me to write an answer, and got Mr. Marble to look into the affair, and he became convinced that there was no truth in it. Subsequently I requested them to come out in a card, and they refused. My father said we were capable of answering it ourselves, and we went to the World office, and I turned over the book and papers the next day.

Mr. HALE. Did you regard that as a vindication of yourself or the other gentlemen?

Mr. ROGERS. In vindication of myself and my father, that we had not got up a Credit Mobilier. My object in giving these papers and books to the gentleman was that if there was anything like a Credit Mobilier in them to let it come out.

Mr. HALE. Were your relations friendly with these gentlemen?

Mr. ROGERS. With all of them except Colonel Young.

Mr. HALE. Then you turned the papers all over?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. Did you tell the reporter the reason for this?

Mr. ROGERS. I told him that if there was any Credit Mobilier, there it was.

Mr. HALE. Did you tell him anything of these other gentlemen?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; I told him they had refused to vindicate me.

Mr. BOYLE. Was that after some of the publications had appeared in some of the papers.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. Are your relations friendly now?

Mr. ROGERS. I suppose not. I have no feeling, however, against them.

Mr. HALE. You were indignant at their conduct towards you?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; that was not all. I said at the meeting of the Board that some one of the gentlemen had given this information to the World, for I could not imagine how the World could get it unless some one of the directors had given it. I mentioned that Colonel Young had been there the day before, and I thought it was he who had furnished the thing.

Mr. RANNEY. You spoke of your company not having any money. What became of the money you received?

Mr. ROGERS. There may have been five or ten thousand dollars.

Mr. RANNEY. Did you know anything about proposed legislation in the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. ROGERS. Of course we thought it possible that a postal bill would be adopted by the Government, and we were interested in the Government adopting our telegraph. I had an interview with Senator Harris in regard to legislation, as to how he would feel or act—if he had any delicacy if the postal bill was brought up in the Senate. He said none in the least. That he would rise in the Senate and state that he was interested in telegraph companies, and if the committee would consider such interest sufficient to disbar him from voting he would not vote.

Mr. RANNEY. How soon after you came into it that this project was formed?

Mr. ROGERS. I did not say that any project was adopted. There were several bills pending, and in the event the whole affair should be referred to a committee we wanted to come in with our instruments and leave it to the committee to judge of their efficiency.

Mr. RANNEY. You say that bills were pending?

Mr. ROGERS. So I read in the newspapers.

Mr. RANNEY. Did you and your associates talk over that matter of the Government postal telegraph system?

Mr. ROGERS. I think we had spoken of it in a casual way. We never at any meeting of the company had a conference in the matter.

Mr. RANNEY. Did you talk over the question whether some legislation was necessary in order to effect the Bell patent?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Were you present when they talked over how the law then stood?

Mr. ROGERS. The first I ever heard of it was told me by my father. He had read it in the newspaper that Attorney-General Brewster had rendered a decision in regard to the telephone.

Mr. RANNEY. Do you know of any proceedings in the Forty-eighth Congress?

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Young told me that somebody had prepared a bill in reference to the postal-telegraph company.

Mr. RANNEY. Did Mr. Young ever say anything to you as to the proceedings in Congress?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Rogers, you spoke of Mr. Garland's opinion; was it rendered after the date of his interest?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know; I have it in my book.

Mr. MILLARD. What I desire, Mr. Rogers, is this: When this opinion was rendered by Mr. Garland, he was a Senator of the United States. It was not the judicial opinion—judge of any court.

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. Was the opinion rendered by him after he had become interested in the company?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. After his interest had been assigned him?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. Under what circumstances did he come to render an opinion?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know, of my own knowledge.

Mr. MILLARD. Well, what action was taken upon the rendition of that opinion?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know that any action was taken.

Mr. MILLARD. Was not that opinion printed at the expense of the company?

Mr. ROGERS. Not by the Pan-Electric Company. It was printed by our Pennsylvania company. The Pan-Electric had nothing to do with it.

Mr. HANBACK. You said that you relied upon that opinion as to the value of it?

Mr. ROGERS. Certainly.

Mr. MILLARD. Can you give us any intimation that would lead as to when that opinion was given out?

Mr. ROGERS. A party was here from New York to buy, and he addressed a letter to Senator Garland asking for his opinion, and after that opinion the purchase was made.

Mr. MILLARD. The Pan-Electric was organized in the State of New York; do you know under what statute?

Mr. ROGERS. The Pan-Electric never was organized; we never had it chartered to this day.

Mr. HANBACK. Did you say that this gentleman—Mr. Myers—is in the city? Do you know his address?

Mr. ROGERS. I can get it for you.

Mr. BOYLE. Have you other letters besides those published?

Mr. ROGERS. I have.

Mr. BOYLE. Will you produce them?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, I have other letters here in the scrap-book with other matters.

Mr. BOYLE. Can you not give us the letters relating to the Pan-Electric? I believe that all the letters relating to the matter should be produced.

Mr. ROGERS. I have them here.

Mr. BOYLE. Mr. Rogers, I understand you to say you have no personal knowledge as to the opinion given by Mr. Garland. Was the opinion given by Mr. Garland as the attorney of your company?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know.

Mr. BOYLE. Have you a copy?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Bring it here to-morrow morning.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Rogers, what is the present value of your telephone stock?

Mr. ROGERS. It has not any market value; there never was any of it enlisted upon the stock market.

Mr. HALL. At the time that Senator Garland gave his opinion on the telephone company was it known that he was interested?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know.

Mr. BOYLE. Are not the other inventions of value without regard to the contest with Bell about the telephone?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MOFFATT. It was understood that there was a question between your inventions and the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes.

Mr. MOFFATT. You have stated that one element in the value of your patent depended on your success in selling.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; and Senator Harris carried on a correspondence with them for several weeks, and Mr. Vail told me that we asked entirely too much for our inventions.

Mr. MOFFATT. Who is Mr. Vail?

Mr. ROGERS. He is in the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. HANBACK. What did you ask?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, we were up in the millions.

Mr. MOFFATT. When was that negotiation?

Mr. ROGERS. About two years ago.

MARCH 13, 1886.

The committee met according to adjournment.

Present: Messrs. Boyle, Oates, Hall, Millard, Hanback, and Moffatt. Messrs. Ranney, Hale, and Eden subsequently appeared.

J. HARRIS ROGERS continues:

Mr. Chairman, I brought with me the papers you requested me to bring. I have taken out such letters as were of a private nature. There may be some still left, but I leave it with the committee that if they find it they will not publish anything of that kind.

Mr. MILLARD. What letters are these?

Mr. ROGERS. They are letters from each of the persons interested in the Pan-Electric matter.

Mr. BOYLE. Were these letters written in reply to letters from yourself?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. And did you make reply to some of these letters?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Have you copies of your own letters?

Mr. ROGERS. I have not.

Mr. BOYLE. Have you any other papers pertaining to the Pan-Electric transactions?

Mr. ROGERS. Not that I know of. I have papers relating to different transactions.

Mr. MILLARD. What transactions?

Mr. ROGERS. To sales and trades that we have made.

Mr. MILLARD. Will you name them?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, my father conducted all of these. I can bring them if you would like to see them.

Mr. MILLARD. You say your father conducted the transactions as your assistant or attorney.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, in his capacity as counsel and some time on his own account, independent of either my interest or the association's interest.

Mr. HANBACK. Wait a minute. You say you have papers showing transactions of sales of interests and different contracts that have been made and that you can furnish them.

Mr. ROGERS. I can if you so desire?

Mr. MILLARD. Are you speaking of your own interests or of the company.

Mr. ROGERS. I am speaking of my own private interests.

Mr. MILLARD. Nothing in connection with the Pan-Electric Company than your own private papers in that case.

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir. I would like to make a suggestion at this point. The gentlemen asked me yesterday that I should repeat the whole conversation that occurred with Colonel Young bearing upon the Government bringing the suit. I overlooked one point that I will repeat if you think it worth while. During that visit Colonel Young asked me to go to the telephone office to see Mr. Gardner.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Gardner you say?

Mr. HANBACK. Who is Mr. Gardner?

Mr. ROGERS. He is the secretary of the Washington Telephone Company. Before going he said to me, "Do not mention the fact of this suit to any one," referring to conference he had with me, both at my house and in his room, that I spoke of yesterday. When we went to Gardner's room, from what he said I understood that he knew all about it. We talked about the Government bringing suit. When I returned I said to Colonel Young, "How is this? You told me not to mention this, and the very first man I met after I left your room seems to know all about it." He said, "Confound it! I told Bradley Johnson and Henkle, and I suppose it was so good that they could not keep it."

Mr. BOYLE. Was any one present at the conversation between yourself and Colonel Young?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not remember.

Mr. MILLARD. How about the first conversation?

Mr. ROGERS. No one except my father—that is the time that Colonel Young said Garland had promised to bring suit. There was a colored boy in the room during part of the time we were there. He may have been sitting in the room at the time. I have no distinct remembrance of his being present. It was Colonel Young's room.

Mr. HANBACK. I want to ask you a question. You stated yesterday that at the last meeting, and before handing up certain papers to the correspondent of the New York World, you spoke of a difficulty between yourself and Colonel Young; will you state that difficulty?

Mr. ROGERS. We spoke of this publication, and something was said about General Boyle, who was on here to buy interests in the Northwestern States, and I suggested that I had heard that General Boyle had stated to me, as coming from Young, that some of my patents were interferences on the United Bell Telephone Company. He said, "Yes; I have come to that conclusion." I remarked that he was not a very fine judge, or something to that effect, and that after my explanation to him of the various telephone instruments through a series of weeks, at the last interview he did not know the difference between a transmitter and a receiver. He said something about me not knowing what I was talking about, and called me a liar. I arose and knocked him down. General Atkins took charge of Colonel Young, and I walked out with Colonel Looney. It was suggested by one of the gentlemen present that a committee be selected to decide which was in the wrong. General Joseph E. Johnston and General Atkins were appointed as a committee to go up stairs and come to a conclusion on the matter pleasantly. I very readily agreed to abide by any decision they might make. Colonel Young insisted that he would not; that we had come there to raise a row, and wanted to go out in the street and settle it. My father told him if he declined the proposition proposed by the gentlemen that he would settle it in any way and at any time or at any place that he desired. Colonel Young then said, "I will abide by the decision of the gentlemen." They went up stairs, and when they came down reported that General Johnston had looked the matter over and they thought that Mr. Rogers was hasty and ought to apologize to Colonel Young, which I did.

Chairman BOYLE. Your relations with Colonel Young have not been amicable since?

Mr. ROGERS. I have never seen him since except once.

Chairman BOYLE. How long was it after that occurrence that you gave the letters to the correspondent of the New York World?

Mr. ROGERS. The next day.

Mr. MILLARD. You stated yesterday that you gave these papers to the correspondent of the New York World with a view of vindicating yourself?

Mr. ROGERS. I did, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. You say it was simply for the purpose of vindication of yourself?

Mr. ROGERS. I said simply to vindicate myself and the gentlemen connected. The gentleman asked me if I had any animosity. I have not; but, as a matter of course, I felt indignant when they declined subsequently to refute these articles which were appearing in the daily papers to the effect that Mr. Rogers, the electrician, had duped these distinguished gentlemen into a Credit Mobilier; that they were entirely innocent; they had not looked into the matter fully; that it was a swindle, and characterized Rogers as a scoundrel and swindler.

Chairman BOYLE. Then you turned over all your letters and papers?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. What was the date of that difficulty?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know the date, sir. After the last meeting of the board. The secretary can give the dates.

Mr. RANNEY. You spoke of something yesterday that I did not fully understand. It was about an interview at the Ebbitt House with parties representing some other telephone interests.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes. Colonel Young told me that there were certain parties at the Ebbitt House representing the National Improved Telephone Company.

Mr. RANNEY. What telephone company?

Mr. ROGERS. The National Improved Telephone Company of Louisiana; and he said he would write up an agreement that day for the perfect consolidation of the two companies, so that we would be joined in this fight against the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. RANNEY. What is that company? Has it any connection with the Bell Telephone Company?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; it is in opposition to that.

Mr. RANNEY. Did your parties join in anything towards negotiating with the Bell Telephone Company?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. When was that?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, about, I think it was in 1884. A correspondence took place between the Bell Telephone Company and our company; it took place between Mr. Vale and Senator Harris. We subsequently went on to have a practical test as to the superiority of our instruments over their instruments. We went on to Boston with them. We had the test, and their chief electrician and superintendent, Mr. Lockwood, reported to Mr. Vale the superiority of our instruments over theirs, and we then returned to Washington. I do not think anything further was ever done in connection with that. Senator Harris can enlighten you on this. He conducted the whole affair.

Mr. RANNEY. Had you any negotiations for a trade with them?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. What was it?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, the first way in which it came to me was through a man in this city by the name of Augustine. He told us that the Bell Telephone Company were anxious to buy our instruments, but that they would not make the proposition, but if we would make the proposition that they would entertain it, and he had no doubt but that the consolidation of the two interests could be effected. My father mentioned this to Senator Harris; he said that he was already in communication with the Bell Telephone Company. This is partly hearsay, but I do not know whether it should have been stated.

Mr. RANNEY. When was this?

Mr. ROGERS. About 1884.

Mr. RANNEY. Was any sum named for which you were to sell out to them?

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Augustine suggested that if we would allow them to water their stock they would give us a large amount of their stock in pay for it.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; and you were to get the water, were you? Do you recollect what amount you wanted?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, he said something about $5,000,000.

Mr. RANNEY. You wanted $5,000,000 to sell to them.

Mr. ROGERS. That is what Mr. Augustine told me, and that was so reported to our associates.

Mr. RANNEY. Did that negotiation fall through?

Mr. ROGERS. I suppose so. I never heard anything come of it since. I saw Mr. Vale after we made the test. He asked about the sales of rights we made for the different States. He said he thought our figures were too high for them to buy our interest. I remember, now, that Senator Harris said he would like to have them adopt our transmitter. He spoke to Mr. Vale, who said that if they bought our patents at all that they would have to have full control over them.

Mr. RANNEY. The proposition was for your side to sell out to the Bell Telephone Company?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; we were to sell out the patents. I do not know very much about the negotiation.

Mr. RANNEY. Had there not been some litigation between you and the Bell Telephone Company up to that time?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. What suits were brought?

Mr. ROGERS. One was brought in Pennsylvania. I think it was the first.

Mr. RANNEY. Brought by whom?

Mr. ROGERS. By the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. RANNEY. Against whom?

Mr. ROGERS. Against the Rogers Telephone Company, which was licensed by the Pan-Electric Company.

Mr. RANNEY. Was that suit pending when the suit was brought by the Attorney-General in Tennessee?

Mr. ROGERS. No; it had been disposed of. Our parties concluded it would be best not to try it there, and advised the Rogers Telephone Company to let it go by default, and the company called a meeting. When I say "our company" I mean the sub company.

Mr. HANBACK. You mean the Pennsylvania company.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; we called a meeting on the subject and we found most of the Pan-Electric people were very anxious, indeed, to let it go by default and not put in an appearance, and, after considerable talk, we agreed that the Pan-Electric Company would pay whatever expenses might have been incurred in Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANNEY. So you allowed it to go by default?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. And they got an injunction against the local company?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. So, if you had gone on in that trial and contested this matter, it would have been determined whether your patents were infringing on the Bell telephone?

Mr. ROGERS. There would undoubtedly have been a decision rendered.

Mr. RANNEY. You preferred not to try it?

Mr. ROGERS. I was anxious to try it.

Mr. RANNEY. Then, if they wanted to test that patent to see whether there was any infringement or not, why did you not go on with it?

Mr. ROGERS. At first I thought that Senator Harris and Attorney-General Garland would go on to defend the suit; Senator Harris told me that he had spoken to Senator Garland to defend the suit; finally he told me he would have to put a hot coal on the old turtle's back.

Mr. RANNEY. Put a what?

Mr. ROGERS. A hot coal on the old turtle's back.

Mr. RANNEY. Who is the old turtle?

Mr. ROGERS. Attorney-General Garland.

Mr. RANNEY. Was this before the suit was brought in Tennessee?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Was anything said that they preferred to fight the Government suit rather than fight the other?

Mr. ROGERS. At that time, I think not.

Mr. RANNEY. Is there any reason why this suit was not proceeded with?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, Colonel Young went on there finally as our representative. He returned and said that he did not think we would have justice done us in that State; that he had talked with a number of patent attorneys and telephone men and men interested in telephone enterprises, and that he had become thoroughly convinced that we would not have a fair trial.

Mr. RANNEY. In Pennsylvania.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Why?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, for the reason I have just assigned. That is the reason he gave us.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not understand you exactly what the reason was?

Mr. ROGERS. He said he had talked with a number of electrical experts and a number of lawyers, and that they were of the opinion of the Pan-Electric Company, that the Rogers Telephone Company would not have justice done them. That was the opinion of these lawyers.

Mr. RANNEY. Because of the courts, or what?

Mr. ROGERS. I think he meant the courts.

Mr. RANNEY. What is the trouble with the courts in Pennsylvania?

Mr. HALL. He need not give his opinion.

Mr. RANNEY. What did they complain of; was it explained?

Mr. OATES. I object to that question.

Mr. RANNEY. I only want the facts. What did he say about it?

Mr. ROGERS. He said that he had employed one attorney, and that he had also talked with other attorneys interested in telephonic enterprises, and that he was confident we would not have justice done in Pennsylvania by the courts; that they would decide against the Rogers Telephone Company.

Mr. RANNEY. Did he say anything more than that?

Mr. ROGERS. He thought it would be better to let it go by default and not put in an answer; that it would be better now that the suit in Tennessee was begun.

Mr. RANNEY. Did you think you would get along better in Tennessee?

Mr. ROGERS. He said in Tennessee, Missouri, or some other of the States?

Mr. RANNEY. Had the Louisiana company brought suit in connection with it?

Mr. ROGERS. Not at that time.

Mr. RANNEY. Was there any other suit brought in Tennessee, or any other State, except the one Mr. Goode brought?

Mr. ROGERS. The Bell Telephone Company had been circulating pamphlets throughout Texas, Alabama, Tennessee, and Missouri warning the people against the use of the Pan-Electric telephone, and to put a stop to this issuing circulars and these stories we instituted a suit there. I think we filed the papers to restrain them.

Mr. HANBACK. In Tennessee?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; to restrain the Bell people from issuing these circulars, and asking that suit be brought to test the validity of the patent and decide whether there was any infringement between the Rogers patent and the Bell patent. I think the Bell Company were very anxious to have suit there, for they said if we would put any instruments in Memphis that they would immediately bring suit. Then we sent instruments down there, but they refused to bring suit.

Mr. RANNEY. Was that suit you brought prior to that of the Government?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. How long prior?

Mr. ROGERS. It was about six weeks.

Mr. RANNEY. Was that suit pending when the Government suit was brought?

Mr. ROGERS. No.

Mr. RANNEY. Do you know what has become of it?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not.

Mr. RANNEY. Do you know any reason why that suit could not have been tried on the question of infringement?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not; but I think that the Bell Telephone Company claimed that they were not properly served. That is my opinion; that their domicile was Boston; that they could only be properly served there. I think that was it.

Mr. RANNEY. Did the suit stop on that account?

Mr. ROGERS. I have heard. I don't know whether it is quite true or not.

Mr. RANNEY. Then it stopped as soon as the Government suit began?

Mr. ROGERS. About that time, I suppose.

Mr. RANNEY. Did you have any talk with Mr. Young as to the impropriety of that suit going on when another brought by Mr. Goode was going on? Did you have any preference to going on with one suit rather than the other?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir. I never heard any mention in connection with a discontinuance of our suit.

Mr. RANNEY. Do you know of any other suit brought between your company, or any of your companies, and the Bell telephone people?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not.

Mr. RANNEY. Was there not one in Baltimore?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Was there not one in Philadelphia?

Mr. ROGERS. I have named that.

Mr. RANNEY. There was one in Baltimore; what do you know about that?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, I heard that suit had been brought there and that the United Improvement Company were to furnish the testimony they had collected in Europe if they could make their arrangements with us.

Mr. BOYLE. From whom?

Mr. ROGERS. I have to recollect. Well, through the papers. It is very seldom I am in the city, so it was through the papers I learned it.

Mr. RANNEY. Do you know of any other suit which the Bell Telephone Company brought against you?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. There was one in New Orleans.

Mr. ROGERS. Not against the Pan-Electric.

Mr. RANNEY. The mother of a great many little chickens from the description you give of it. Do you know of any others?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not, sir; not against the Pan-Electric.

Mr. RANNEY. Well, any of its branches or the children?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Mr. Rogers, you say this Pennsylvania suit was brought in Pennsylvania. Do you remember whether it was in the eastern or western district?

Mr. ROGERS. I was under the impression that it was in Philadelphia.

Mr. BOYLE. There was a suit brought in the western district, at least was partly argued in the western district of Pennsylvania. I am not sure that the Bell Telephone Company was the party. When was the suit brought to which you refer?

Mr. ROGERS. It was brought about six or eight months ago.

Mr. BOYLE. And it was brought against the local companies—that is, against this Mauch Chunk Company?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Does the Pan-Electric Company have any interest in that company?

Mr. ROGERS. According to the contract they were to have certain royalties on the instruments.

Mr. BOYLE. The suit, however, involved the validity of the Pan-Electric patents.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. As I gather from your testimony yesterday the right of that Rogers Company was acquired by the local company from yours and your father's interests only.

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; from the Pan-Electric Company.

Mr. BOYLE. I understand it was part of your interest—that you were the owners of the right for Pennsylvania?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. They were to have a royalty.

Mr. BOYLE. Was the Pan-Electric Company entitled to a royalty or you?

Mr. ROGERS. The Pan-Electric Company. My father and I acquired the right of operating the Pan-Electric telephone from our associates for the territory of Pennsylvania, and we named it the Rogers Telephone Company, so as to distinguish it from the Pan-Electric. We were required to pay a royalty.

Mr. MILLARD. To pay whom?

Mr. RANNEY. The Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

Mr. BOYLE. This suit was allowed to go by default in Pennsylvania?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Was there a decree against you?

Mr. BOYLE. The Bell Telephone Company doubtless alleged infringement of the patent and you failed to reply; in how much worse condition would you have been had you contested it?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, in Pennsylvania we could not have been in a worse condition than we are now.

Mr. BOYLE. So there is a decree sustaining the validity of the Bell patent and finding that yours was an infringement?

Mr. ROGERS. I simply know we made no defense.

Mr. MILLARD. You mean judgment was entered against you?

Mr. BOYLE. Then is it a fact, Mr. Rogers, that you failed to make a defense either because of the pending of this suit or that you were in any way controlled by it?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, I think it was suggested to the company by several parties that it would be better for the validity of the patents to be tested in Missouri.

Mr. BOYLE. And allow it to go by default in Pennsylvania?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. You say that Colonel Young stated that to you as the proper policy of the company?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; he thought it best.

Mr. BOYLE. You have stated that if you would not contest this bill in Pennsylvania, and, according to your impression, allow judgment to be passed, you would have a better position in Tennessee and Missouri?

Mr. ROGERS. He said that if we did not put in a defense that then we would not be brought into other suits there.

Mr. BOYLE. The bill did not prevent their use in other States?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. BOYLE. Do you know of any of the telephone suits that were brought in Pennsylvania?

Mr. ROGERS. I frequently saw in electric papers that such suits were going on.

Mr. BOYLE. Was the Pan-Electric, or any company springing from it, a party to the suit?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; I saw in the electric papers that the court-house at Pittsburg looked more like a telephone exchange than a court of justice.

Mr. BOYLE. Was the Pan-Electric represented there?

Mr. ROGERS. They were represented there; that is, Colonel Young was sent there by Senator Harris to see the president of the Boston company and try to get our interests joined in something.

Mr. BOYLE. Your statement is that your company was not a party?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Chairman BOYLE. You have spoken of one Augustine as having suggested this deal between your company and the Bell Company.

Mr. ROGERS. He suggested it to me.

Chairman BOYLE. Who is he?

Mr. ROGERS. He was at the time he suggested it to me an employé in some Government building near the Treasury.

Chairman BOYLE. Has he any connection with the Bell Telephone Company, to your knowledge?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Chairman BOYLE. None with your company?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Chairman BOYLE. Do you know what interest he had in trying to bring about the consolidation?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know.

Chairman BOYLE. Who was Mr. Vale?

Mr. ROGERS. He was connected with the Bell Telephone Company.

Chairman BOYLE. General superintendent?

Mr. ROGERS. He was at that time.

Chairman BOYLE. Have you any knowledge as to the capital of the Bell Telephone Company?

Mr. ROGERS. About $10,000,000.

Chairman BOYLE. As I understand you, it was agreed to water the stock; that is, to add $5,000,000 to the capital?

Mr. ROGERS. That was suggested to me by Mr. Augustine.

Chairman BOYLE. And you were to get the additional capital?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. He argued that putting these patents into the Bell Telephone Company would enhance their value, and that they were to water their stock?

Chairman BOYLE. To the extent of the increase?

Mr. ROGERS. That was the proposition, or rather the suggestion, and I urged it to Senator Harris and some other associates.

Mr. HALL. I would like to ask a question: In the conversation between yourself and Mr. Young in which you stated that they suggested the propriety of letting that suit go by default, was there any consideration paid to the idea that the decree by default might be conclusive upon the company every where? Did they discuss that at that time?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir; they discussed it on that line.

Mr. HALL. Had the court not acquired jurisdiction; had they not served process upon your Pennsylvania company?

Mr. ROGERS. So far as the Pennsylvania company were concerned, it had.

Mr. HALL. Was it not considered that when a decision was rendered against Pan-Electric Company—I mean your telephone company—that it would be binding upon both of them?

Mr. ROGERS. You mean the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?

Mr. HALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; not unless the Pan-Electric people put in their appearance.

Mr. HALL. Was the Pan-Electric Company made a party to that suit?

Mr. ROGERS. I think they were.

Mr. HALL. That question, then, was discussed as to the binding effect of any decree upon the Pan-Electric Company?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALL. That is all.

Mr. MILLARD. Have you not got some of the papers showing just what was issued to the parties to the suit?

Mr. ROGERS. I had them. I know there were two patent suits, in which Bell claimed the entire use or right of electricity for transmitting articulate speech, and another patent on his receiver.

Mr. MILLARD. Now, I think you have stated that the suit in Pennsylvania and your failing to appear and defend was prior to the date of the commencement of the suit by Goode?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. And your failure to appear in that suit was prior to the conversation you had with Casey Young?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. That was prior?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. You say you had this conversation with Casey Young prior to the bringing of the suit by the Government. Do you know of any other suits that were commenced after that?

Mr. ROGERS. Well, not knowing the exact date of that conversation I cannot answer positively as to the first conversation. I think though that they were prior to the conversation.

Mr. MILLARD. Prior to that of Goode?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; I think it was about the last of July.

Mr. MILLARD. And suit was brought when?

Mr. ROGERS. It was brought in September or—no, it was August. I am a little confused, but I think it was the last of August or the first of September.

Mr. MILLARD. Of course, Mr. Young has got all of the dates?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. You know of no other suit after the Goode suit was brought?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Rogers, I understand you to state that immediately after the difficulty with Colonel Young which you have spoken of that you went to the representative of the New York World and communicated the particulars, and on your second visit turned over these letters which were published. What consideration, if any, did you receive for this matter?

Mr. ROGERS. Nothing at all.

Mr. OATES. He did not pay you anything?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. OATES. Had they agreed to pay you anything?

Mr. ROGERS. No; no money, in no shape or form, was ever suggested to me.

Mr. MOFFATT. You spoke in regard to not putting in a defense and that the Pan-Electric had agreed to pay the costs?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes; I think so.

Mr. MOFFATT. Who informed you of that?

Mr. ROGERS. I am not very positive.

Mr. MOFFATT. Do you know whether or not they paid them?

Mr. ROGERS. I never heard anything further of it; Colonel Young stated when that question was brought up—he said “it cannot be a very great deal”; and I think that they agreed to pay it; I never heard from Mr. Klotz on the subject since as to any expenses; he would have written if they had been very enormous.

Mr. MOFFATT. You say that after Mr. Young cautioned you to say nothing in regard to the suit being brought by Mr. Garland, that you had a conversation with one Gardner, and that he seemed to know all about it. Who is he?

Mr. ROGERS. He is secretary of the Washington Telephone Company.

Mr. OATES. Is his place of business in Washington?

Mr. ROGERS. He is in the city at present.

Mr. OATES. How long after these letters were furnished to the World before they appeared in that paper?

Mr. ROGERS. I think the first letters came out in one or two days.

Mr. OATES. In one or two days after you furnished them?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. How long before the others appeared?

Mr. ROGERS. I think about a week; possibly longer.

Mr. OATES. How long.

Mr. ROGERS. I am stating as near as I can.

Mr. OATES. Can you mention a space of time within which they appeared?

Mr. ROGERS. I think within two weeks.

Mr. OATES. Within two weeks?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. All appeared in the World?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. If you have the injunction I wish you would produce it.

Mr. MILLARD. I presume it is in printed form.

Mr. HANBACK. This was in the United States courts, I presume?

Mr. MILLARD. Was it in the circuit court of the United States or the district court?

Mr. ROGERS. I do not know.

Mr. OATES. I want to ask him one more question. Mr. Rogers, it is not clear in my mind what you said about that discontinuance. Did you say that you and Mr. Young had a conversation in reference to this suit in Pennsylvania, in which it was understood that that was to go by default on account of the Government suit brought in Tennessee?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir.

Mr. OATES. The suit to be brought by the Pan-Electric in Tennessee?

Mr. ROGERS. Suit to be brought by the Pan-Electric in Tennessee.

Mr. OATES. And that occurred prior to the commencement of the suit in Tennessee?

Mr. ROGERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Had there been any talk about the Government suit?

Mr. HALL. You had not fully or definitely determined at that time just what course to pursue. You were in the condition of clients who were trying to do the best you could to preserve the validity of your patents.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Monday, March 15, 1886.

The committee met at one o'clock p. m. pursuant to adjournment. All the members present.

J. HARRIS ROGERS was recalled, and his examination continued.

The CHAIRMAN. The stenographer informs me that the Government Printing Office cannot print the evidence at night taken before the committee during the day so that we can have the record here the succeeding day. There is no order made for night printing there, except for the Congressional Record, and the testimony taken before the committee cannot be printed at the office until the following day. However, I think the stenographer has made an arrangement which will enable him to produce the testimony about as rapidly as the committee wants it, from this time forward.

Mr. HANBACK. It was the understanding of the committee at the last session that you would ask for authority for additional assistance to be employed.

The CHAIRMAN. There was no order made, but it was stated that the matter could go over until this meeting. The examination of the witness can now proceed.

Question. I will inquire if you have done all the committee desired in regard to assorting and arranging the correspondence?—Answer. They appointed one o'clock to-day as the time, and requested that during yesterday I would try to formulate the letters, which I did to the best of my ability.

Q. There are one or two matters connected with the testimony taken the other day, that I have been thinking of, concerning which I desire to put a few questions. You have said that in a meeting in New York a certain contract was drawn up and signed which has been read here. I understand you there was nothing given for those interests except what appears in that paper?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any agreement that anything else should be given?—A. No, sir; no written agreement; that is the only written agreement.

Q. There must have been some conversation about it. Was there nothing said about what these parties were to do in consideration of having each his one-tenth interest?—A. Yes, sir; we had lengthy discussion before going to New York, and we gentlemen had the pamphlet that the chairman now has, before us, and it was thoroughly understood that we should organize this Pan-Electric Company—

Mr. EDEN. I would rather you would state what the conversation was.

The CHAIRMAN. Give the substance of it if you can.—A. Well, that they should issue stock based upon the patents, and the future possibilities of electricity, and that they were to give their names to guarantee to parties that the company should be conducted honorably and fairly. Going into an enterprise based upon these future possibilities, it required men of national reputation and men whose names were well known throughout the country, as a guarantee that such an organization would be conducted honorably and honestly. That was the main consideration for which we gave them the stock for their respective interests. They agreed to get out this charter and to give their names, and it was that that we bargained for and that we have never received.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You mean to say that you selected these men because of their commanding influence and their position?—A. Well, it was because they were well known throughout the country for honesty and integrity, and at the same time they were shrewd lawyers, most of them, and we expected in all probability to have lawsuits.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. You are just giving the reasons now that operated on your mind, not the conversation?—A. Oh, that was the general tenor of the conversations before we went to New York and also in New York. For example, when we were about signing, either before or after, and the point was raised as to the issuing of stock, having it printed, Colonel Young said "Well, just write a certificate for the present." My father said, "No, gentlemen, the stock will only cost about $60;" and General Atkins rose and said, "Gentlemen, if I understand this whole affair it was with that understanding that we went into this company; that we should issue the stock and go forward with it, and I see no reason why we should not issue the stock at once."

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you know of the official positions these gentlemen occupied?—A. I did.

Q. Was anything said by them with regard to their occupying the official positions in connection with this enterprise?—A. I think not immediately at that time. I know that my father addressed a letter to Senator Harris, in fact I believe it was before he became thoroughly interested with us, before we went to New York.

Q. I will not ask what it was, but was there a reply to that letter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had a letter from Senator Harris before he went into it?—A. Yes, sir; that is my belief. I think it is in the book.

Q. Did you write to any other one of these gentlemen who were associated with you?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. Or get any letters from them, giving their influence?—A. With respect to their being Senators or Members of Congress?

Q. No; in regard to their giving their influence in floating this stock.—A. No, sir; I think not. There were quite a number of letters; I do not remember them all. There was one letter touching that point they addressed to Senator Harris asking him—

Mr. EDEN. You need not state what was in the letter.

Q. We will get the letters; they are the best. You have said that one-tenth interest was laid aside for Abram S. Hewitt. Did he take it?—A. No, sir; he declined, on the ground that he was in feeble health, and since the death of Peter Cooper, his father-in-law, the most of his business had devolved upon him—most of Mr. Cooper's business—and that he could not venture to go into a new enterprise requiring so much time.

Q. Did you see him personally?—A. Senator Harris, Mr. Atkins, and myself went in person to see him.

Q. You were present?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What became of the one-tenth interest that was laid aside for him originally?—A. One portion was sold to Senator Vest and to the two ladies that I mentioned the other day, and one to a gentleman whose name I could not recall, and $100,000 to Gov. John C. Brown.

Q. What were the proceeds of those sold to Governor Brown?—A. He came in on the same ground, except for a smaller amount, that we proposed to let Mr. Hewitt come in.

Q. That is to say, he was to pay nothing?—A. No, sir.

Q. How was it with the ladies?—A. Senator Harris stated that these ladies wanted an interest in it, and he thought it would be a valuable investment for them, and he requested us to put it down to the lowest figure, and we followed the suggestion and let them have it for $5.

Q. Did you give it to the ladies for their influence?—A. I did not, and I do not suppose any of the gentlemen did.

Q. What became of the proceeds?—A. They were divided among the associates.

Q. It did not come to you but to each one of the associates?—A. Yes, sir; they divided them equally.

Q. If that was to be given away to Mr. Hewitt originally, and these gentlemen were not to have any, how did it happen that they had a share of those proceeds?—A. Well, it was suggested at the meeting that they would take that stock that was set aside for Mr. Hewitt, and I made no objection. I thought that I had enough already to give me all the money I needed, if they would go ahead with the general scheme, and I always felt confident that they would do so, though I made frequent demands.

Q. That was additional to the interests which you originally gave them by contract?—A. That was additional. It was more than I proposed originally to give them.

Q. What consideration did they render for that additional gift?—A. Nothing more than they did for the other. I would suggest here that I stated the other day that we gave each party one-tenth interest. But there is a clause in the contract that I have thought of since, in which there is $170,000 reserved, or, rather, put at my disposal. I had promised a number of parties before they became interested. One was an old friend of mine, Father Rochfort. I gave it to him for the church, and they put in the articles of agreement that I should have at my disposal $170,000 that was to be taken pro rata from each one of the ten interests; so that, in fact, I did not give them quite one-tenth interest. It was minus that $170,000. But the way they have managed it, they have received more than one-tenth by one-tenth of that set aside for Mr. Hewitt.

Q. Was that share of the fund got from Senator Vest and the ladies given them on account of their not getting the whole tenth in any way?—A. No, sir; that was not mentioned.

Q. Did Senator Harris take a part of the money received from the ladies who purchased; did he share in the division?—A. It was divided. I drew my share and I suppose the other associates drew theirs. I only got my share.

Q. I see by the contract that there was $170,000 of the stock that was to be disposed of by you. Will you be kind enough to state what became of that stock, to whom it was disposed of, who it was, and for what consideration?—A. I gave Father Rochfort $100,000 for the church, St. Dominic's church over here, and I gave $10,000 to Col. Richard Wintersmith.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Who is he?—A. He is Colonel Wintersmith of Kentucky, whose son was door-keeper here in the Forty-eighth Congress. He is a gentleman I had known many years during the war.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. There is a letter here from him; he seems to be very grateful in that letter?—A. We regretted very much that that one letter was published. I do not know that it did any harm however.

Q. Did he give you anything for it—it seems to have made him happy?—A. No, sir. Then I gave $10,000 to a gentleman, Marcus Wright.

Q. Tell the whole—are there any others?—A. I had promised, before my Pan-Electric associates became interested, $10,000 in the proposed Pan-Electric to General Price, in consideration of a transmitter that I had previously sold him. I sold this transmitter to Price, and my father suggested this Pan-Electric company, and I said we had better buy that back, that it was a very superior instrument, and that I would give another transmitter in its place and $10,000 to boot. Negotiations were carried on through a Mr. Cahoon, or rather I promised him that $10,000; he has never been able to get it, though I have urged it upon the company to do so. Not long ago he put his claim in the hands of Mr. Jeff Chandler and General Hunton, a few months ago.

Q. I only want to know where that $170,000 of stock went; not to enter into the details?—A. It went to Mr. Wright, to Mr. Wintersmith, and to Father Rochfort; I think those are the only names I remember right now. Am I at liberty to refer to a note here?

Mr. EDEN. Certainly.

The Witness. (After referring to some papers.) Those are the only names I remember; there are a couple of others, but I forget them.

Mr. RANNEY. If you recall them at any time let me know. I have been reading the correspondence, and I want to ask you one other question. I did ask you the other day whether you had anything to do with distributing any other stock amongst Congressmen, and I believe you said you did not?—A. I did not except those I have suggested.

Q. Do you know of any efforts that were made by the Pan-Electric Telephone Company to sell stock to Congressmen; if so, by whom, when, and where?

Mr. MILLARD. Sell or give?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; sell or give. (To the witness.) Do you know of any efforts made by the Pan-Electric company to sell or give stock to Congressmen; and, if so, by whom?

A. At the meeting of the board—

Mr. HALL. I object to that. It is a matter of record.

The WITNESS. I heard of efforts made to sell.

The CHAIRMAN. State what you know yourself. If you know of any of the company as a company, or of any individuals doing so, you may state.

Mr. HALL. The objection I make goes farther than that. My objection is that no company has any power or authority to offer its stock; it must act by a governing board, and its proceedings are presumed to be of record, and that is the best evidence of those proceedings. Individuals may offer stock without authority.

The CHAIRMAN. In view of the character of the investigation, I do not think the objection well taken. If it was intended to bind the company, it would be necessary, perhaps, to show official action. But as the purpose is to show an attempt to distribute stock amongst Congressmen, as I understand the question, I think it is proper.

Mr. HALL. I object to it, as it was all individual action.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is by the company or by any member of the company. (To the witness.) Do you know of any action by the company with a view to giving or selling stock to any member of Congress, or do you know of any individual member of the company offering to give or sell his own stock to any member of Congress? If so, you may state it; only state what you know of your own knowledge.

A. At the meeting of the board—I can state what was transacted there—is that what you mean?

Mr. RANNEY. That is to the point.

The WITNESS. Colonel Young suggested that a number of gentlemen in the House were anxious—

The CHAIRMAN. Before you proceed, you may state who was present; what members of the board?

The WITNESS. Senator Harris, General Johnston, Colonel Young, and myself. Mr. Looney may have been there; I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

The WITNESS. Colonel Young stated to the company that a number of members wanted to become interested in the Pan-Electric Company, and that they had frequently importuned him on the subject, and he asked the advice of the company as to what should be done. I think they suggested to him that they thought that probably we had enough of that class of gentlemen already associated with us, and it ran on in a running conversation which was substantially this: as to what they would give, and some suggested twenty, and Colonel Young said that he thought that was too much; that most of them wanted to get in on the ground floor, or as near as possible to the ground floor.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. They suggested twenty members?—A. No, sir; $20, and he said he thought that was too much. I do not know whether a vote was taken upon it, but it was left pretty much to Colonel Young to do the best that he could. The sum might have been named, but if it was named it was somewhere about 10 cents to a dollar. One of those mentioned was Mr. Dunn, of Arkansas; I do not mention the others.

Mr. OATES. Mentioned in what connection?

The WITNESS. As one of the parties who was anxious to become interested. That is one name that Colonel Young mentioned.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. As the result of that arrangement was it concluded there or was any one appointed to attend to it?—A. I think Colonel Young was appointed to see them.

Q. Was there any definite arrangement as to what the stock should be given them for?—A. I think that was left with Colonel Young.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not understand that the witness testified that there was any proposition to give them stock.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not mean that.

The WITNESS. Oh, no, sir; not as a present, but to sell them stock.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Was there any definite arrangement as to terms?—A. Yes, sir; that he should receive money, somewhere between 10 and 20. The conversation continued for some time, and it was left to Colonel Young to get the best he could; to settle the amount.

Q. Was there anything fixed as to how much stock should be left undisposed of?—A. No, sir; not to my remembrance.

Q. Did he report that afterwards?—A. I never heard of the report; that is the last I ever heard of it. There is a private individual who attempted to sell some of the stock to a member.

Q. Who was that individual?—A. My father.

Q. That is all you know about it, is it? Do you know of any member who did have stock or interest or claimed any?—A. Not in the Pan-Electric telephone.

Q. In any of the subordinate telephones?—A. No, sir; not to my own knowledge.

Q. When was this interview with the board, that you have spoken of? Give the date as near as you can.—A. I can tell you where it took place, but I cannot give the date. It was at Senator Harris's room. Possibly he could enlighten you on the subject. It was when he was living between the Baltimore and Ohio depot and the court-house.

Q. What year was it?—A. I cannot tell positively. It was about the time that Senator Vest became interested; I think it was at the same meeting.

Q. I wish you could fix the date.—A. Oh, I can guess; I think it was in 1884.

Q. You have spoken of Governor Brown; I do not know the gentleman. Did he occupy any official position at the time he was gotten into it?—A. He became one of the directors.

Q. Did he occupy any political position?—A. No, sir; not that I know of. He was only the attorney, as I heard, of Jay Gould's lines.

Q. Was he a member of the Democratic committee in the last Presidential campaign?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What position did Mr. Looney occupy?—A. He had no Government position whatever; I do not think he ever had any. He was a Presidential elector from Tennessee, though, in the last election.

Q. Of which party?—A. The Democratic party.

Q. Was he in any way connected with any large capitalists or men of large capital?—A. Not of my own knowledge.

Q. I saw something said in the paper that he was connected in some way with Jay Gould?—A. Yes, as his attorney. I thought you meant financially.

Q. Which was that, Looney or Brown?—A. That was Brown.

Q. He was connected with Jay Gould's roads?—A. With his railroads west of the Mississippi, as his attorney, so it was represented to me.

Q. You are an electrician. Was there anything done in the Forty-eighth Congress about your getting appointed electrician to the House, I mean the last Congress?—A. No, sir; not in the last one.

Q. Was there in this Congress?—A. No, sir. I don't know whether you call them the Forty-eighth or Forty-ninth Congresses. I can give you the year, though, in which there was an effort made in that way. It was in 1883—the latter part of 1883 or the beginning of 1884.

Q. It was after this association was formed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long after this contract was formed or made?—A. It was at the next meeting of Congress, I think; during the next Congress after the signing of that.

Q. It was in the winter succeeding, then. What was the arrangement about your being made electrician of the House?—A. I suggested that I would like to be made electrician of the House at a meeting of the board on one occasion, and something was said as to whether it would interfere with my carrying on my experiments, and I said no, that I thought on the contrary I would have better opportunities for developing some of my improvements, and at the same time I had always been anxious to put the electric light and some other inventions here, especially the electric light; and Senator Harris or Mr. Garland, whichever it was, I do not know which, said—Senator Harris said, "I will take Mr. Garland to-morrow to see Mr. Clark, the architect, upon the subject," and shortly afterwards they told me they had seen Mr. Clark upon the subject. Shall I give the whole conversation?

Mr. RANNEY. Certainly.

The WITNESS. But that Mr. Clark, while he spoke of me in the highest terms possible as to my abilities as an electrician, stated to the Senator that I sometimes became intoxicated, and that Senator Harris, if he appointed me, or Mr. Garland or Senator Harris together, would have to take that responsibility upon their own shoulders. I told the Senator that I did not care for the place so far as the money was concerned anyhow, but I was very much astonished that Mr. Clark should speak of me in that way.

Q. That was when it was spoken of about your becoming electrician of the House?—A. That was not the first. It first was mentioned by my father in a letter to Colonel Young; I think by letter.

Q. There was a letter first by your father to Colonel Young?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you get a reply to it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you got that reply?—A. Yes, sir; that is one of the letters that has been printed in which Colonel Young says substantially—

Q. Never mind; we have that letter. Was there anything said between these gentlemen and yourself, at the time it was talked of, about what advantage it would be, if any, of having you electrician of the House?—A. Well, I suggested the advantage myself, and while it might collaterally be an advantage to our associates I was confident, and I think they were also confident, that I could greatly improve the electrical system here as I had in the past. And I stated to them that Mr. Clark had in his annual report said that I had saved between $1,200 and $1,300 a year, to say nothing of the rentals of the rooms and apartments heretofore occupied. I suppose that would be some $1,300 now.

Q. Was anything said about carrying on experiments here?—A. Yes; I suggested I would like to put in my lights and I thought I would be able to make a success of it in the Capitol.

Q. You mean the lights which are embraced in these patents, which are disposed of?—A. I mean all of the improvements that I have made upon the same, and some others.

Q. Did you have any letters from either of those gentlemen to aid you in getting the position?—A. I got a letter from Mr. Garland to Mr. Cox and Mr. Hewitt. I want to do Mr. Garland justice in this. I do not know that it was mentioned to Mr. Garland what we wanted to see the parties about. I do not remember. Possibly he did not know. I do not know that Mr. Garland knew for what purpose we wanted this letter to Mr. Cox and Mr. Hewitt; I am not positive about that. We may have written him what we wanted with these gentlemen, and we may not.

Q. You did get letters from Mr. Garland to Mr. Cox and Mr. Hewitt?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where are those letters?—A. We got one letter, and it is here.

Q. Did you get any letter from anybody else?—A. It seems to me I did, but I do not remember just now.

Q. Did Mr. Casey Young give you any?—A. I think not; no, sir.

Q. Did he do or undertake to do anything in your behalf, to your knowledge?—A. Yes; he said he wanted to go not so much upon the ground that I was an electrician, or better fitted for the position than anybody else, but he wanted to go in on the ground that we were Democrats. When the Republicans came in I was told by Mr. Clark that I would probably have to go, and must look around among my Republican friends. I told him I did not ask for any favors—

Q. We do not care to go into that.—A. That is the ground that we wanted to go in on. Mr. Young suggested subsequently that we had better go in on the ground that I was a superior electrician. I knew nothing against the gentleman who was holding the office.

Q. Was Mr. Casey Young a member of the House then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did your name go in as a candidate for the position of electrician of the House?—A. Yes, sir. I recall a name now—General Joseph E. Johnston, who went to see the Speaker on my behalf.

Q. Did you have a talk with him before he went?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was that?—A. I think he was present at the meeting at which we suggested it. I asked him to please go and see the Speaker on my behalf.

Q. Do you know whether he went?—A. Yes, he went.

Q. Did he report to you?—A. I was present; he took me to see the Speaker.

Q. Was General Johnston a director in this Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Atkins do anything about it more than you have stated?—A. I think not.

Q. Was Mr. Atkins then a member of the House?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there anything said during these interviews about his being a candidate for Clerk of the House also?—A. In a letter it was suggested—

Mr. EDEN. You need not state what was in the letter.

Q. In what letter was it?—A. Mr. Young's letter.

Q. You have that letter, have you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In this talk you had together was there anything said about his being a candidate for the position of Clerk of the House?—A. No, sir; I think not. I do not remember any conversation to that effect.

Q. He said nothing about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You knew of the fact, did you not, that he was a candidate for Clerk of the House?—A. I did subsequent to the receipt of this letter.

Q. Was that letter addressed to you?—A. I do not know; either to me or my father.

Q. I forget whether his name went before the House to vote upon?—A. It did go before the House; yes, sir.

Q. In what form?—A. Mr. Young wrote to us; in fact, he became dissatisfied with our bold policy of having the place anyhow, since we had started in on that ground, and we had begun to think that he was not pushing it, and we got a member named Robinson, of New York, to put in a resolution, which he did. Mr. Clark stated subsequently that he did not have the power unless the Speaker would appoint, and the Speaker said he could not unless Mr. Clark would, and each said the other would if the other would take the responsibility.

Mr. EDEN. Was Mr. Robinson, of New York, a member of this company?

A. No, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I see one of the papers said he had some of the stock?—A. Not of the Pan-Electric.

Q. Not of the subordinate companies?—A. No, sir.

Q. What stock did he have?—A. He holds, or held, a certain amount of American Postal Telegraph stock. I do not know whether he held it at that time; whether it was after or prior to that.

Q. Was that the stock in which your company, or individuals of your company, were interested in any way?—A. None, except my father.

Q. You spoke the other day about this stock not being listed or having any market value; I wish you would be more definite about that and state whether it had any actual value or not, whether offered or sold in the market, and whether you had any offers for it.—A. Yes, I have had frequent offers; we have sold stock for money; for example, I mentioned Jacob Thompson, late Secretary of the Interior; I stated it was five or ten thousand; we got $5,000 cash for $50,000 worth of stock at ten, and we sold some to Mr. Neely, either five or ten.

Q. Please be more explicit; you say "we"; who did it?—A. My father, myself, and Colonel Looney; Colonel Looney sold it.

Q. It was a part of your four-tenths?—A. Yes, sir; I had an offer not long ago (to give you some idea of what the value is) of three and one-half for $500,000 cash; we declined taking it; the letters in the book show it; we declined taking less than six.

Q. Who made the offer?—A. Mr. Looney stated there was a banker at the Ebbitt House who would pay five and one-half cents on the dollar for $300,000 or $400,000.

Q. How recently is that?—A. About a month ago.

Q. Referring again to men getting offices, was your father a candidate for any office under this administration, too?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For which one?—A. For some position in which he could carry on his profession as a lawyer, as assistant attorney in some Department; or if he could get some position abroad, as consul to Marseilles or Milan.

Q. Do you know whether he got letters of recommendation from any of your associates?—A. Yes, sir; they were signed by some of our associates.

Q. By whom?—A. It is in the book there; the original application.

Q. The Mr. Atkins that you speak of now who was a former member, does he hold any office now; I want to identify him?—A. He is Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Q. Do you know when he was appointed?—A. He was appointed soon after the new administration came into power.

Q. Was your father a candidate for the office of Assistant Attorney-General?—A. I think not; I do not think that was ever mentioned at all, except it might have been in a jocular way.

Q. Where are the letters of recommendation that he got for the office that he did have?—A. They are in the book among the papers.

Q. We will have them then at the proper time; I do not think of any more questions that I desire to put until these letters are in.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. You stated the other day in your examination, Mr. Rogers, that Colonel Young at some time, in some conversation, said to you or your father that Attorney-General Garland had agreed to bring this suit against the Bell Telephone Company in the name of the Government for the purpose of setting aside the patent; I believe that is one statement that you made. Can you give us the date of that, and the place where it occurred?—A. Do you refer to the first conversation?

Q. At the time you stated that Colonel Young said—A. I mentioned two occasions that he went over the same conversation.

Q. That Mr. Garland had agreed to bring the suit. Can you name the place and the date?—A. The first occurred at my residence, at 315 Four-and-a-half street. I think it was some time in July last.

Q. About what time, as near as you can state?—A. It might have been only a few days prior to the second interview, and it might have been several weeks before; but I think it was a few days before the second interview, from my remembrance of it, and several other collateral things which occurred.

Q. Where did the second interview occur?—A. At his rooms on H street, I think, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth, near a large church with a gold cross on it. That was, I think, the latter part of July. I can give you a point so that you can find the date. When he was at my house he told me that Colonel Gantt was here, stopping at the Ebbitt House, and that he wanted me to come up and see him; that he wanted to see me in reference to some of these patents, and that these "National Improved" people were anxious to enter into some kind of an agreement with us. When I had the second conversation with him he told me that Mr. Gantt had returned to Memphis, and that the "National Improved" people were at the Ebbitt. That is as near as I can fix it.

Q. You say that Colonel Young said in both or each of these conversations that Attorney-General Garland had agreed that suits should be brought by the Government?—A. At the first conversation he said so, and I repeat it in the most emphatic words that he did. At the second conversation he did not go over the whole thing, I do not think. He just talked about it as a thing known and understood between us. He cautioned me, both at our house and at the second place, to say nothing about it; that it would be the best thing. He did not give his reasons, but I supposed he did not want the Bell people to hear about it.

Q. At which one was it that he said that as Mr. Garland was attorney of the Pan-Electric Company he felt some delicacy about it and that Mr. Goode would bring the suit?—A. He said that at the first conversation. He may have gone over it at the second conversation; I do not remember. It was not impressed on my mind as fully as the first, because it was news for me, and something we had been expecting a good while and looking forward to since the 23d of May, and I was deeply impressed when he told me, and hence I remember almost word for word what transpired at the first meeting.

Q. You stated a while ago that you had a letter to Mr. Hewitt and to Mr. Cox. Did that letter have any reference to taking stock in the Pan-Electric Company?—A. No, sir; it was in reference—

Q. (Interposing.) It was merely a letter of introduction?—A. Yes, sir; a letter of introduction.

Q. What was it that he stated?—A. That was never presented to Mr. Hewitt. It was presented to Mr. Cox.

Q. You stated a while ago that Mr. Hewitt declined to take any stock in the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did he say that he would not?—A. Upon the ground that he was in bad health, and since the death of his father-in-law, Mr. Peter Cooper, his business was very pressing and that he could not go into it.

Q. Was that the only reason he gave?—A. That is all that I remember. I do not know that those were his words, but they were his reasons given. He thereupon (Mr. Hewitt did) gave us a letter of introduction to Mr. Eckert of the Western Union Telegraph Company, which we presented.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. You speak of this conversation between you and Colonel Young in regard to Mr. Garland's bringing that suit, that you had looked forward to it since the 24th of May?—A. Yes, sir; the 23d or 24th of May.

Q. What occurred on that date?—A. My father addressed a letter to Attorney-General Garland—at least, I will tell you what my father told me; I never saw the letter; I have seen copies of it, though—in which he stated—

Mr. EDEN. You need not state if the letter is here.

Q. Did the Attorney-General reply to the letter?—A. He did not. He took no notice of it.

Q. During the organization of this company was there, to your knowledge, in the deliberations of the company or the executive committee, any question raised in regard to new legislation needed through Congress to carry out any of your schemes?—A. I do not think that that subject was ever broached, as to legislation, by any of my associates.

Q. Then you do not know of any efforts made to secure any legislation?—A. Except in behalf of the Attorney-General, which is already on record, the order to have the suit instituted.

Q. Giving them power to commence the suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was said in regard to that?—A. It is in a letter there.

Q. That is all in the correspondence?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is all you have any recollection of?—A. Yes, sir; the point of legislation was never raised by any single individual of the Pan-Electric Company, or I never heard it.

Q. You never heard anything about the law being deficient in regard to securing some of your patents; that the scope of the patent law would have to be enlarged?—A. I do not remember that. I remember we sometimes talked over the postal bill, and the probability of our having our telegraph adopted by the Government in the event that they should provide a postal bill; but as to legislating on the subject, I never heard any one of my associates say a word. We asked Senator Harris how he would feel about it in case the bill should come up, and he said that he would rise in the Senate and state that he was interested in a postal system, and that he would decline to vote or to have anything to do with it; that was the idea.

Q. You do not remember Mr. Young introducing a bill in the House amending the patent laws so as to enable you to secure patents on some of your inventions which the laws did not allow?—A. No, sir; not of my own knowledge.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Did you see Colonel Gantt while he was here?—A. No, sir; not on this visit that you speak of.

Q. You spoke of a conversation in which Colonel Young told you that he was here?—A. He told me that he was here, and was stopping at the Ebbitt House, as I have stated.

Q. That was at the time of the conversation about the Government suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He told you that Colonel Gantt was here?—Ans. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you understand that he had returned to Memphis afterwards?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From whom?—A. From my brother, who is here.

Q. What took place upon his return to Memphis?—A. I do not know.

Q. As to the bringing of the suit; was the suit brought soon after his return to Memphis?—A. I only know what I have seen through the press.

Q. You so understood?—A. I was under the impression that the suit would be brought, and that Colonel Young must leave in a few days to follow him; and that it was to be instituted there.

Q. And after his return there, was such a suit brought as was talked of between you and Colonel Young?

The WITNESS. How is that?

Mr. MILLARD. The suit was brought soon afterwards?

(Objection was made to the question by members of the committee.)

Q. I will ask you, who is Colonel Gantt?—A. His name was suggested to us as a man of great legal ability, and the propriety was suggested of our employing him to defend the suit that the Pan-Electric had begun prior to the institution of the Government suit. We employed him, Colonel Gantt, and General Luke Wright to assist in that suit; the Pan-Electric employed him.

Q. The Pan-Electric employed him for that purpose?—A. Yes, sir; not for the Government suit.

Q. When the suit was brought by the Government, application was made before whom?—A. It is only hearsay—Mr. McCorry, of Memphis.

Q. Who was directed to manage that suit by the Government?—A. That is all hearsay with me. You gentlemen all know about it as well as I do. I have no object in declining to answer.

Q. But you know very well?—A. Yes, sir; from hearsay.

Q. State, if there is no objection.

(Objection was made.)

The WITNESS. It is only hearsay.

Q. If there is objection I will not insist upon it.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Please state, if you can, the date of that conversation with Mr. Hewitt when you offered him the stock.—A. It was during the time I and my associates were stopping at the New York Hotel, to the best of my remembrance.

Q. State the month and year.—A. I think it was in March, 1883.

Q. Soon after the agreement was entered into?—A. Yes, sir. Colonel Young, I do not think, was present. He was left to prepare the papers while we went to see Mr. Hewitt at his down town office.

Q. That was in March, 1883?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. There is one question that occurs to me. You alluded the other day to that suit in Pennsylvania where you concluded not to defend it. I want to know whether this Pan-Electric Company were not obliged to defend your patents there?—A. They so bound themselves in the agreement; yes, sir.

Q. So that although that suit was against the company in Pennsylvania it involved the validity of the patents, and the parent company was obliged to defend it?—A. Yes, sir; under their agreement, if we insisted upon it. Right there, Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest something in the interest of Mr. Klotz. It was asked by some member the other day if he came in on the same ground that my other associates came in on, and we were then speaking of the Rogers telephone and telegraph, and I thought you spoke with reference to his interest in that, and I said yes. He did come in without paying any money. Subsequently he bought an interest in the Pan-Electric Company, amounting to $7,500 from me, which was to be expended in putting up lines and exchanges in Pennsylvania. He spent $2,500, and when this injunction was about being brought, we wrote to Mr. Klotz, and he came on, and we told him not to put any more money in the enterprise; that we did not want him to lose; that he had come up like a man and given us the money, and so far as the other $5,000 that he owed us was concerned, he could have that as well as the Pan-Electric stock.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. At what rate did you sell that stock to Mr. Klotz?—A. At 5.

Q. Amounting to $7,500, that he bound himself to pay?—A. Yes, sir; but we released him from that. He spent $2,500.

Q. If I understand you correctly, the matter of obtaining favorable legislation for your company was never mentioned between you and your associates; never talked about?—A. Do you mean that none of my associates ever suggested that they would legislate in behalf of my company?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir.

Q. It was never mentioned?—A. No, sir.

Q. You have stated that these interests were divided among these gentlemen in tenths, and that you took them in—your language was that you gave it to them—and that they were expected to render services to the company in setting the enterprise on foot?—A. They were expected to give us the benefit of their legal talent and their services as business men and their names as honorable men.

Q. At that time had your inventions any market value?

Mr. HANBACK. Do you mean in the stock market or sale to the public?

The CHAIRMAN. Had they any market value? I think the witness understands the phrase.—A. There was no stock issued; of course I looked upon the patents as very valuable.

Q. But had they any value in the market?

Mr. RANNEY. There was no stock in the market at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Were the inventions themselves recognized by the public as having any value?—A. I do not suppose the public looked upon them as being worth a great deal, if anything at all.

Q. As I understand you, then, you put only inventions, without known value at that time, into this association, and you expected from the gentlemen to whom shares were assigned services?—A. Yes, sir; but if you gentlemen had read the pamphlet.

The CHAIRMAN. I have read it. I am only getting this out. Was there anything said between you and any one of these gentlemen to the effect that the company would derive any benefit from their official positions, that is, from the exercise of official power by any one of them?—A. I do not think any one of us looked to legislation in the beginning. We did not depend upon it nor care for it.

Q. Did you then take them into the enterprise and assign these interests because of the official positions they held, or because of their standing as lawyers, and because you expected to be benefited by their services?—A. I can give you one of the reasons we suggested to the gentlemen.

Q. If you will just answer that question it will be sufficient.—A. What is the question?

(The question was read by the stenographer as follows: Did you then take them into the enterprise and assign these interests because of the official positions they held, or because of their standing as lawyers, and because you expected to be benefited by their services?)

A. I will have to explain that. One reason was because they held official positions, and through that fact they were widely known; second, because they were lawyers; thirdly, because we had known many or most of them for years. My father had known them for twenty or thirty years, and I had known them from my boyhood, and we were satisfied that they would conduct everything upon an honorable basis, and we wanted to have none but such men associated with us.

Q. My question was this: Did you expect to benefit by the exercise upon their part of any power that their official positions gave them, or did you look at their official positions simply as giving them standing?—A. Standing, that is all.

Q. You have spoken of the fact that one-tenth of this stock was set apart for Mr. Hewitt. Was it set apart for him specially, or for some one in the position he was, that is, a man of means and engaged in business?—A. It was suggested that Mr. Hewitt was a man well known in New York in the financial world, and he was known equally well for his honesty and integrity, and we thought when we went on to New York we would approach him on the subject and see if we could be so fortunate as to have him associated with us.

Q. Was that after the execution of the agreement?—A. I cannot be positive as to that. It was during that visit; a day or two before or after.

Q. You have been inquired of by the gentleman from Massachusetts as to the sale of parts of your tenth interest. To whom did that tenth really belong?—A. It all originally belonged to me.

Q. But under the agreement?—A. I am not lawyer enough to tell you about that agreement. It was my understanding that that was mine until some one like Mr. Hewitt should become interested.

Q. I will ask you whether the agreement does not provide that it belongs to the company?—A. I say that as a legal interpretation it may be that.

Q. That one-tenth belonged to the company, and was intended to be assigned to some gentleman like Mr. Hewitt?—A. I never made any objection to the division as it subsequently took place.

Q. So, as to such parts as were sold, the money would properly belong to the company, if the stock or interest belonged to the company?—A. If your interpretation of the agreement is correct that would be so.

Q. Was it, then, an additional gift, at the time of these sales, to these gentlemen—whatever money they may have received from the sales of these interests or parts of interests?—A. If the law so interpreted it, it was an additional gift.

Q. Although it belonged to the company already and they owned this one-tenth interest in the company?—A. If it belonged to the company of course it belonged to them, and if it did not belong to the company then it did not belong to them, but to me.

The CHAIRMAN. Dependent upon the agreement.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You spoke of Mr. Klotz?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Robert Klotz.

Q. What is his position, or has it been?—A. He was for some years a member of Congress here, but during the time he became interested with me he was a private citizen.

Q. He was not a member then?—A. No, sir; that is my impression.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You stated that it was proposed to sell interests to other members of Congress?—A. Yes, sir; there was a suggestion made to that effect by Colonel Young.

Q. I think you stated some one objected to that. Who was it?—A. I cannot give you the names of those parties. It was just in a conversational way that the thing went on. We did not sit down like a deliberative body or in a business way. We knew one another and just went in and trusted one another.

Q. Colonel Young was authorized to make some arrangement in regard to that matter?—A. Yes, sir; that is my understanding and remembrance of it.

Q. Was he to get the best price that he could for it?—A. That is my impression. They may have put the margin at 10.

Q. You spoke of 20 before?—A. I know; it was debated, I said, as to whether it would be 10 or 20; it was fluctuating in the minds of the parties somewhere between those limits.

Q. Was there any proposition to sell it to them at less than you were selling it to other persons for?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. He sold to Mr. Klotz for 3½?—A. Oh, that was long after; that was Pan-Electric.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You had been electrician of the House previously?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What years?—A. I was here four or five years, about.

Q. When did you cease to occupy that position?—A. When a Republican administration came in. I think it was in 1881 when I ceased, or about there.

Q. That you ceased to be connected with the House?—A. Yes, sir; in 1881 or 1882; I do not remember the exact time. I have a copy of the resignation there, with the dates, in the book.

Q. And you say you wanted to be restored because you were a Democrat?—A. I did not want to go in and say anything against the gentleman who was there at all. I simply wanted to go in on the ground of being a Democrat. I thought I was entitled to it.

Q. Was there any conversation between you and your associates that you were to seek this position with a view to benefiting the Pan-Electric Company?—A. It was understood that collaterally it would benefit to some extent the Pan-Electric individuals.

Q. In what way?—A. In the fact that I would have a better opportunity in carrying on my experiments, as I had dynamo machines and a steam engine that I had purchased, and the general paraphernalia that was already existing here.

Q. It was the opportunities, then, it would give you to develop your inventions?—A. To be beneficial alike to my associates and to the Government, as I had been in years previous.

Q. Who made that suggestion?—A. I did.

Q. You have stated that a resolution was offered in the House by Mr. Robinson, of New York?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At whose instance was that done?—A. At the instance of my father and myself.

Q. Had these others any connection with it?—A. No, sir; not to my knowledge. It was independent of any of them.

Q. You say your father was an applicant for an appointment under this administration?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And, like many others, he did not get it?—A. No, sir; he did not.

Q. Was he a lawyer?—A. He says he is "not a lawyer to hurt."

Q. I observed that. Is he a lawyer at all?—A. I think he is a very good lawyer.

Q. Has he ever practiced?—A. Yes, sir; ten years at the bar of the courts of the District.

Q. What position did he want?—A. He wanted some position as assistant attorney in some of the Departments, or as attorney in some of the Departments, or a position abroad. He was very anxious to go to Italy.

Q. Did you say there was some conversation in regard to the passage of a postal telegraph bill; was that talked of?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you any interest in that other than in competing for the place, for the service, in case the bill was passed; was there to be any indirect influence exercised by yourself or any of your associates to give you any advantage?—A. Not to my knowledge. Never a word was suggested.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You had no objection to competing for it, I suppose?—A. That was our idea. If we had instruments superior to others we wanted the Government to have them; not otherwise.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. Out of these resources of $100,000 there was $2,500 paid by these ladies and $1,000 by Senator Vest. I understood you to say that that money was divided up in the company?—A. That money was divided up among our associates, so I was informed and believe.

Q. Then you got your share?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. How much have you received altogether as your individual share or how much have you and your father jointly received from these dividends?—A. I suppose about $5,000. I do not know the exact amount; the books have it.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. That is your individual share, did you say?—A. It might have been more than that. Between my father and I probably it was $6,000 or $7,000.

Q. You are speaking of your individual shares now?—A. Yes, sir. I did not receive half of that, probably, independent of my father's share.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Does that include what you received from these local boards in other States?—A. The moneys that came were divided among those sources mainly.

Q. You say your individual share was $5,000, or was it your share and your father's interest?—A. I say $3,000 individually and $5,000 or $6,000 together. I never have kept any books in my life. I never put down the amounts that I get.

Q. You say there was no talk between you and your associates in regard to your inducing the Government to adopt your system provided this postal telegraph law passed?—A. We looked forward to the adoption of a system.

Q. Who do you mean by "we"?—A. My associates and myself.

Q. You did not know what they thought about this matter; was there any talk about it?—A. Yes, sir; sometimes they would say something about the Government's postal system ; something in the way of hurrying me up with it ; something about the tests. I do not think they ever conversed much upon the subject.

Q. Was there any understanding, direct or indirect, that if that law passed you would try and induce the Government to adopt your system?—A. The general idea was that the inventions should stand upon their merits before a committee that might be appointed, and solely upon their merits.

Q. Nothing was said about any political efforts, then, to induce the Government to adopt your system?—A. No, sir ; not in their official capacity as Senators and Representatives.

Q. Or in any way, whether as Senators or individuals?—A. No, I do not remember anything. Some little conversations may have been had, but I am not positive in remembering or disremembering. I am giving you the truth as near as I can.

Mr. OATES. I move that the committee go into executive session, and that we postpone the further examination of witnesses until day after to-morrow, Wednesday, at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee, after an executive session, adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday, March 17, 1886.

The committee met at 12 o'clock m., pursuant to adjournment, all the members being present.

J. HARRIS ROGERS appeared before the committee, at his own instance.

The WITNESS. With the permission of the committee I would like to make a short statement before you proceed.

The CHAIRMAN. You may do so.

The WITNESS (producing a package of papers). These are the papers relative to the contracts. There are a few letters here pertaining to the business, some of which I have found since yesterday, and a few that were taken out that I thought I had better bring here, notwithstanding they contain a little something private. I also wish to state that in my testimony the other day in reference to the interview with Mr. Hewitt, in company with General Atkins and Senator Harris, I stated that Mr. Hewitt gave as his reason for not going into the company the death of Peter Cooper and his own ill health ; that that was why he declined. On thinking over the matter afterwards, I remembered that while in New York we met General Manning and Mr. Money and Senator Walthall, who were there with us ; and in speaking there of some land-grant speculations they were in, one of them suggested that he had dined with Mr. Hewitt, I think, and that it had been the custom to open a bottle of wine on each anniversary of Peter Cooper's birth, and I am under the impression that they partook of that bottle ; and hence, if that was so, Peter Cooper could not have been dead then. However, I do not know whether he was dead at that time or not, but that was the impression lodged in my mind at the time. In case he was not dead, it is irrelevant. The main point was that Peter Cooper's business had devolved upon Mr. Hewitt, and that, in connection with his own ill health, forced him to decline.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Hewitt had been seen prior to the interview to which you have testified by Mr. Atkins?—A. I do not. His name had been suggested before we went on to New York, as I have already testified.

Dr. JAMES W. ROGERS, sworn and examined by the chairman.

Q. What is your age?—A. Sixty-three or four ; I was born in 1822.

Q. What is your present place of residence?—A. Parthenon Heights, Bladensburg, Md.

Q. What is your occupation?—A. Lawyer.

Q. Are you a practicing lawyer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you been in any way connected with the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Yes, sir ; from its foundation.

Q. By whom was the formation of that company suggested, if you know?—A. It was suggested originally by Mr. L. G. Hine, a very distinguished lawyer of this city.

Q. To whom was the suggestion made?—A. He made the suggestion to me and my son.

Q. When was that?—A. That was in 1881, I think, or 1882.

Q. What, if anything, was done in pursuance of that suggestion?—A. Mr. Hine waited upon some parties with the view of purchasing the old Chase mansion in this city, in which it was proposed to establish laboratories and develop all the possibilities of electricity ; that the company should be founded upon the possibilities of discovery and of invention, and the values that would accrue therefrom.

Q. Was there anything done towards organizing the company in pursuance of the suggestions of Mr. Hine?—A. Well, he discovered some defect in the title of the Chase property, or at least some difficulty in having it conveyed, and at that time the project was abandoned.

Q. When did the movement originate which resulted in the formation of the present Pan-Electric Company?—A. About the 1st of January, 1883, or the last of the December preceding.

Q. In what manner?—A. I and my son were guests at the Ebbitt House, my family residing on Lexington Avenue, in New York, and we learned that a very fine brown stone mansion, a better house than the Chase house, on Four-and-a-half street, was being offered very cheap. It had been built by the late Mr. Purdy, and cost about $35,000. We were told at the Ebbitt House that it could be bought for about $10,000, and it struck us as being an admirable place to carry out the original Pan-Electric idea. We bought it at once, and paid the money for it, and started out with that idea of Mr. Hine to establish laboratories in that house—it was a very large house—and built up the enterprise which he had suggested; but when we began to count a little more carefully than we had at first, since it was more his scheme really than ours, we found it would cost a great deal of money to employ learned electricians and skilled mechanics and to organize a company upon that idea, and I suggested to my son that we would form a stock company, and instead of taking it out of our own humble means that we should sell stock to parties who might be willing to take chances in the possibilities of electricity, and in that way—

Q. Before you go into the formation of the company I would like to have you state when you made the purchase of that house?—A. I think about the last of December, 1882, or in January, 1883; I do not remember the date.

Q. Now you may proceed and state what followed.—A. In order to form a company commensurate with the object in view we naturally turned our attention to the subject of great names and to men of influence who would give character to the enterprise. In view of that, I either wrote to General Atkins or called upon him; I think I called upon him.

Q. Did he occupy any official position at that time?—A. Yes, sir; he was a member of Congress, chairman of the Appropriations Committee, I think; I suggested to him just about what I have already stated to this honorable committee; he seemed pleased with the idea as one that was feasible, and a few days thereafter, I think it was, I communicated with Senator Harris on the subject; I believe General Atkins had seen him before I did; at any rate, those two gentlemen and the Hon. Casey Young came to my house, 315 Four-and-a-half street, the building I have referred to. In the meantime my family had removed from New York, although at first we did not contemplate that; I laid the scheme before them, with a pamphlet which I gave to the chairman of this committee, and offered each one of them, I think, something like $100,000 a piece in stock, on the basis of $5,000,000; they hesitated, at least Senator Harris more than any other seemed to hesitate, about going into it, and nothing was done at that meeting.

Q. Did he give any reason for his hesitancy?—A. He did not, sir, but I suspected—

The CHAIRMAN. You need not state your suspicions.

The WITNESS. Well, sir, I will state it in another form. Suspecting that he—

The CHAIRMAN. You need not state your suspicions.

The WITNESS. It occurred to me that Senator Harris, whom I know to be a very honorable gentleman, as well as a very distinguished statesman, might be apprehensive that there possibly would be some impropriety in his advancing such an enterprise, and I wrote to him accordingly to ask whether or not he entertained any feeling of that kind, to which he replied in his usual frank manner that he saw—

Q. Have you that letter?—A. That letter should be among the letters of the case. We have so many I could not swear it is there. The substance of the letter can be given in a word, that he saw no—

The CHAIRMAN. You had better not give the substance.

Mr. RANNEY. Is that letter in the scrap-book?

The WITNESS. It should be there.

Mr. HANBACK. I think it is. It is the letter in which he said he would rise in his place in the Senate and state his position. You have got the letter here.

Mr. EDEN. The letter itself would be more satisfactory.

Mr. MILLARD. Why not put it in at this stage of the case?

Mr. OATES. It was before the sub-committee.

Mr. MILLARD. It will throw light upon his explanation as he goes along.

Q. Has the letter been published?—A. I do not think so; if so I do not remember it.

Mr. RANNEY. Had you not better let him state the substance?

The CHAIRMAN. We will pass it, and recur to it if we can get the letter.

Q. Have you a copy of your letter to Senator Harris?—A. No, sir; I have no copy I seldom ever kept copies. It was a mere accident when I did keep copies of letters

Mr. HANBACK. Young Mr. Rogers testified to the same letter; that Senator Harris stated he would rise in his place.

The CHAIRMAN. That was in another connection; that was when the project of the postal telegraph was spoken of.

Mr. HANBACK. Oh, yes; that was another matter.

Q. Unless there be objection, you may state the substance of the letter, and we will have it put in.—A. The substance of the letter was simply that, having duly considered the matter, he saw no impropriety in persons situated as he and General Atkins were taking part in a scientific enterprise such as that which was proposed, but still he did not go into it; there was nothing in his letter to indicate that he would go into it. Subsequently to that, however, they met again at my house, doubtless at my own invitation, though I don't remember why.

Q. Who were present?—A. Senator Harris, General Atkins, and Colonel Young. I proposed to them that each one should take $500,000, which they accepted, and agreed to go into the enterprise. At that meeting, when it was evident that they would go into it, I suggested to them that several other gentlemen had previously consented to act as directors, and left it chiefly with them to determine who their associates might be.

Q. Were any of those gentlemen members of Congress or persons in office?—A. No; I think not, sir. One was a priest, the pastor of St. Dominic's church, who had been a patron of my son, sometimes advancing money and permitting him to use the convent up there for one end of his lines. He had agreed to allow us to use his name in the enterprise, Father John Rochefort, now prior of the convent of St. Bertram, in Louisville, Ky., having been just before that time the provincial, as it is termed, of all the Dominican priesthood and Dominican sisters in the United States.

Q. What was his standing in the church?—A. As high as that of the cardinal.

Q. Go on and name the others, if you can.—A. Another was General Marcus Wright, an old friend of mine from Memphis, who had been a general in the Confederate army, now in charge of the Confederate records, I think, in the War Department.

Q. How long has he been in that position?—A. I do not know when he was appointed. He had been there several years, though, before that time, I think.

Q. He was not appointed by this Administration?—A. Oh, no, sir; I think that was referred to at that very meeting—that the general had been appointed by Republicans, or something like that.

Q. Name the others.—A. Another was Richard Wintersmith, who had been formerly secretary or chief clerk of the legislature of Kentucky—something of that kind—a man of universal reputation for good humor; in fact he is a national wit, and one of the best men in the world. I have known him for over twenty years.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a good certificate.

The WITNESS. He does not need my certificate, sir.

Q. Were there any others?—A. Another was Mr. Snyder, a prominent merchant of this city—Christian G. Snyder—who had said I might use his name in that connection. Another was General Basil Duke, of Kentucky, who made those raids with Morgan during that unpleasantness which occurred some years ago; and I believe another was Mr. Nicholas Shay, a wholesale grocer in this city. I do not think we proceeded further than with those names at the time I broke off from the main narrative.

Q. These were the gentlemen whose names you mentioned to Senator Harris, Mr. Atkins, and Colonel Young as having been spoken to previously?—A. Yes, sir; and they were the gentlemen for whom I provided $170,000 to give them what I had told them. I think I had suggested different sums to different ones; that I would put that to their credit which they were willing to accept; that it was of no present value; but they were moved all, I may say in justice to them, more to assist me and my son in our enterprise than to make any money by it.

Q. Do you refer to the whole party?—A. To the whole party that went into it originally. I do not know about my friends who went into it on the $500,000 basis, because that was a good deal of money if it was worth anything; but these other gentlemen were going in for a mere trifle.

Q. I understand you to say the stock did not have much value at that time?—A. It had no commercial value, but my son and I thought it was worth about $100,000,000 if it was developed as we thought it could be developed in great laboratories by learned electricians and skilled mechanics.

Q. Now you may proceed as to the transactions between yourself and these other gentlemen.—A. Having the pamphlet on the table and reading passages, and having previously sent this pamphlet to the gentlemen I have mentioned, and to many others in the Senate and House, and business men about this city, they agreed that as soon as Congress should adjourn they would have a little more time, and that we would draw up a contract upon the basis I have suggested. Pursuant to that, about the first or second week in March following, Senator Harris, Colonel Young, General Atkins, my son, and myself went to the city of New York and stopped at the New York Hotel, with the object partly of drawing up that contract, and some floating idea of getting a charter from New York, or of getting Mr. Eaton, who was a great friend of Senator Harris, to get the charter out for us in Hartford, Conn. We had an idea at first that the general incorporation act of one or the other of those States might cover so vast a field as the patents already made and applied for and the possibilities of electricity.

Q. Do you refer to Senator Eaton?—A. Senator Eaton, afterwards a Congressman, I think. He had, however, nothing to do with the Pan-Electric Company, only his services to assist. Nothing was done in that direction. We found, upon consulting authorities, that no State, so far as we knew, could guarantee any such charter, and it would have to be a special act of the legislature to bring all these things and to permit the stock to be sold upon a general plan. Hence we simply drew up a contract, which is in evidence here, in which it was agreed to get the charter, &c. The contract speaks for itself.

Q. Will you name again the parties who were present at the making of that contract?—A. Senator Harris, Colonel Young, General Atkins, my son, and myself.

Q. Until the signing of this contract had you any conversation with General Johnston with regard to this matter?—A. Yes, sir; not a conversation so full as with those other gentlemen; but General Johnston, the first time I had the honor of seeing him in my life, brought a letter of introduction from Senator Harris, either to me, or to my son, or both of us, at my house; and thereupon we talked the matter over with him, the general scope of it, and exhibited to him the telegraphic system which was already in operation in the laboratory, and the telephonic system, and showed him generally the other patents and inventions.

Q. Can you state when that was?—A. Well, some time I think in April, or in the preceding months, March, January, or February.

Q. Did you come to any agreement or understanding with General Johnston at that interview?—A. Nothing more than that he had the pamphlet. You will find in a subsequent letter that he as a soldier, rather than as a lawyer, calls that paper a contract. He says: "This is the contract on which the association was founded." It was in one sense a contract. He considered it a contract.

Q. Was there any agreement reached at that time that General Johnston was to go into the enterprise?—A. Well, I do not know that there was any definite statement to me that he would go into it, but it was my impression that he was one of us at that time and was going into it.

Q. Did you have any other interview with him preceding the making of the written contract?—A. I think that he occasionally came there, either alone or with Senator Harris or Senator Garland. They came frequently to look at the instruments at work.

Q. That was before the making of the New York contract?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. You may state whether you had any interview with Senator Garland before the making of the New York contract, in reference to this matter.—A. Well, we had two or three interviews, assuming—we made no agreement—but it was generally assumed that he was one of us and understood the matter. He came to my house at one time—the first time—to examine the instruments, and went into the laboratory and seemed to look through them with a great deal of interest.

Q. Was anything said at that time about Senator Garland taking part in the matter?—A. I cannot recall it, but it was just assumed that he was one of us. I think either Senator Harris told me he would be one of us or he told me himself. I do not recall the words. We looked upon him as one.

Q. Do you recall anything that Senator Garland said at the time he was examining the instruments, indicating that he was willing to take part in the company that you then had in view?—A. Well, I could not recall a single word that either gentleman said. There was nothing striking in the matter.

Q. Can you recall the substance of anything he said indicating a purpose to go into the company?—A. I think not.

Q. Did he do more than examine the instruments?—A. At the first visit I think that is all he did.

Q. State what occurred at the second visit?—A. Well, he sat in my parlor with me, where we talked the matter over. Shall I state everything that occurred in my private house?

The CHAIRMAN. Not of a private nature.

The WITNESS. In connection with these gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. Anything in relation to this enterprise.

A. He sat there with us and we talked this matter over, about the possibilities of electricity, which was a favorite theme with me; at least I talked it over, and I suppose there were responses; but those fugitive conversations made no impression upon me. There was no contract drawn then.

Q. Was there anything said then in regard to the formation of this company?—A. I do not remember that there was.

Q. Were you doing anything more than discussing the general subject of electricity and the possibilities of it?—A. Oh, infinitely more. It was understood already that these gentlemen were parties to our concern—Garland, Johnston, Harris, Young, Atkins, myself, and Harry. We talked it over just as partners would who had agreed.

Q. You say that was the understanding. I have asked you to state the conversations or occurrences from which you gained that understanding, making my question as broad as possible.—A. I cannot recall a single word of it, sir.

Q. Can you recall the substance of anything that was said at any time upon which this understanding was reached?—A. The understanding was not reached in any sense through conversation. Senator Harris had said to me that these gentlemen could go into it, and they seemed to come and acquiesce in it.

Q. Had you been acquainted with Senator Garland?—A. I had never met him until he came at the instigation of Senator Harris, as I understood, to go into this enterprise.

Q. You may state anything that occurred between you preceding the New York contract?—A. Well, when I proposed to give this $500,000, Senator Harris remarked that it seemed a little too generous in me, but he said: "As you express it in your pamphlet, if we develop it or succeed as we anticipate, there will be fortunes for a hundred men; and although you seem to be too generous, with the view of there being a great deal in it and plenty for you and for others, we will accept it." He seemed to be the spokesman for all the gentlemen.

Q. Who were present when Senator Harris said that?—A. At that meeting Mr. Atkins and Colonel Young and my son and myself were present.

Q. Was General Johnston present at any of the meetings with Colonel Young and Mr. Atkins preceding this contract?—A. If you mean a business meeting, no. They dropped in to look at the instruments.

Q. Was Senator Garland present at any meeting?—A. No, sir; I don't think he had occasion to call any meeting. It was all settled at once. I will say here that in choosing associates I suggested to the gentlemen that I had already written to Senator Windom just as I had written to them, and he wrote me a polite letter saying he had too much business to go into it.

Q. Had you written to Senator Garland?—A. Never.

Q. Had you written to General Johnston?—A. Never.

Q. You had written, then, only to Senator Harris?—A. I had written to Senator Harris and spoken to General Atkins. I wrote to several parties. I wrote to Senator Windom, as I have just stated; I wrote to Hon. Ben Le Fevre, and I wrote to Architect Clark about the time I wrote to Senator Harris and had the interview with General Atkins, and offered some small amount, suggested that I would put some small amount to their credit, and they all declined, just as Senator Harris and General Atkins did, upon those amounts. I suppose if I had raised the amount any of them would have gone into it, as it seemed to be a very fair, legitimate thing.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did General Le Fevre decline it?—A. Yes, sir; he declined the small offer, just as Senator Harris and General Atkins did.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. The small offer of $100,000 each?—A. I don't remember the amount; it might have been $50,000 or $100,000. Whatever it might have been it was small compared with $500,000.

Q. Will you state what was said, if anything, by any of these gentlemen in these interviews as to the consideration they were to pay you or to render to you for the share they were to have in this enterprise?—A. I stated to them the general contents of the pamphlet, and, in urbanity, said they were men of national reputation, and they were known not only as lawyers and statesmen, but they were known for their integrity, and as the enterprise was an unusual one, I wanted to have such men as a guarantee to the people that the stock which we should issue upon the possibilities of electricity and so much that lay in the future—I wanted that class of men, or otherwise we couldn't sell the stock.

Q. Did you expect services from them?—A. I expected those services that their interest might prompt, in addition to the use of their reputation for integrity and good business sense.

Q. Was General Johnston at that time in any public office?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was anything said by you to any of these gentlemen or by any of them to you with reference to the company deriving any advantage from any official position held by any one of them?—A. Never a whisper; never a breath. The object of the thing was, as I have stated, to bank on their names and general reputation and upon my son's genius.

Q. Upon their names as officials, or upon their names, as you have stated, as honest men?—A. Just so far as their official character gave them a broad reputation for integrity, honesty, and good business sense.

Q. Can you recall any instance from the beginning to the end of this transaction in which the company sought to derive any advantage from the official position of any one of these gentlemen?—A. I have thought of that a great deal, sir, and I cannot trace a single vestige of an effort by the company to get anything through official position, except possibly it was the effort to appoint my son to be the electrician of the House; and I believe I will state on my oath that if it had not been for their official position they would have been more likely to have obtained it for him.

Q. Had your son ever been electrician to the House before?—A. Yes, sir; he had been electrician for several years.

Q. When was he appointed?—A. I think in 1876.

Q. Who aided in securing his appointment then?—A. Prof. Joseph Henry was the chief person. He had been my preceptor at Princeton and was my personal friend. He wrote a letter to Col. Casey Young, commending my son in the highest terms, after having examined a number of his inventions.

Q. That, you say, was in 1876?—A. 1876, I think, sir. Colonel Young thereupon wrote a letter to Mr. Adams, but cautiously said to him he would not ask anything of him, but if he thought it was due to Tennessee he might give it to my son. Feeling that was a very cold way of pushing him into the place, I waited upon Mr. House, of Tennessee, who went warmly into it, and upon a kinsman of mine, Judge Ashe, of North Carolina, and upon General Atkins, to whom I had borne a letter from Senator Harris, and they went in to see Mr. Adams. I think they took Colonel Young with them; I don't remember certainly. They, however, did not succeed. Mr. Adams appointed somebody else—some druggist in this town—who went to work to light up the House. His predecessor, it was said, had so arranged the wires that they could not be lighted.

The CHAIRMAN. You had better not go into that.

The WITNESS. I only wanted to bring out the point that he was placed there chiefly through his merits. When the House could not be lighted, Adams sent for him, and put Henry's letter into the archives, saying, "This will protect me anyhow, and I will give you the place."

Q. Did Senator Harris give any assistance at that time in procuring the appointment of your son?—A. He was not in the Senate.

Q. Had you known Colonel Young before that?—A. I had known Colonel Young since before the war, many years.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. This matter is of no consequence unless it be suggested that the effort to have him appointed the second time was because of his connection with this company. It appears that he was appointed the first time years before the company was thought of.

The WITNESS. I would suggest, lest I should be misunderstood when I said these gentlemen would have exerted themselves more if they had not been connected with us, that it is in testimony in that book [indicating book on table] that my son had the highest commendations from Mr. Clark who was the appointing power at that time. Those testimonials go to show that my son had been of great advantage to the Government, and had saved thousands of dollars by the new instruments he had introduced. Senator Harris has been instrumental in the Senate in getting—

Mr. RANNEY. I don't think you need go into that.

Q. Were those testimonials from gentlemen who were associated with you in this enterprise? A. The testimonials were chiefly to show—

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Whose were they?—A. Chiefly from Edward Clark, the architect, and Professor Henry and others.

The CHAIRMAN. We don't care about that.

The WITNESS. I beg pardon; it suggests this: That if all these gentlemen had gone together and got him appointed, the natural inference of charity and reason would be that they did it for the public service, for the benefit of the public, and not to get their little things into the Capitol. That would come in incidentally to putting in telephones and electric lights; but it would certainly seem reasonable to appoint a man to a place in which he had previously saved to the Government thousands of dollars, when they had the Architect's word for it. I want to exonerate those gentlemen, or at least to tell the truth.

The CHAIRMAN. We have gone into this matter simply because of your suggestion that they had never done anything through their official positions which would further the enterprise, unless their support of your son was such action.

The WITNESS. If it had been charged, I should think it was a misinterpretation.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Will you state what was done by the company after the signing of this agreement in New York?—A. Well, some questions arose between us as to the procedure necessary to bring these things before the public and my son was appointed as the electrician of the company to rent a wire reaching from New York to this city, and directing it to be connected with the uptown wires of the Rapid Telegraph system, so that we could experiment from New York to this city both on the telegraph and the telephone, and he was also instructed by a resolution of the gentlemen at the New York Hotel to have the stock engraved or printed, pursuant to all of which he had the stock engraved. We had not the charter yet.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. You mean the certificates?—A. I mean to have the certificates of stock engraved. We rented the wire, and General Johnston was a committee of one at this end to superintend and employ electrical experts to operate with him here, while my son and other electrical experts operated at the New York end; and after some weeks of testing these various instruments I think the general reported to the board that they were very satisfactory.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was the Pan-Electric Company ever organized and incorporated?—A. Well, no sir. There was a stock company formed, simply a stock job company. The partners were the gentlemen whose names I have already mentioned in this connection; but in the contract which will speak for itself they proposed to get a charter and to issue stock under that to carry on this enterprise.

Q. But never did so?—A. They never did. I beg pardon in saying they never did. I might be misunderstood. With our acquiescence some year or two afterwards, I think about a year afterwards, they concluded to get out a telephone charter, which they did in Tennessee.

Q. When you speak of "they," to whom do you refer?—A. I mean my associates whose names I have given all along. By this time there were others. There was Colonel Looney, who had come into it, and General Brown, of Saint Louis, formerly governor of Tennessee, I believe. You may add those names to those which I have been mentioning.

Q. Were you present at any meeting when it was determined to organize the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. I think I was. I was in favor of it. I had written to the parties that after there was so much delay about us getting the big charter we might start out with something smaller, and get that when we could.

Q. Where did these meetings take place?—A. The first I remember of on the subject of the telephone was in the Judiciary Committee room of the Senate.

Q. Who was present?—Colonel Looney, my son, Senator Harris, Senator Garland, General Johnston. General Atkins was not there.

Q. Can you state the time?—A. Well, I should say about a year after we organized, to give a guess; but the papers will show.

Q. Did you have more than one meeting with reference to the organization of this telephone company?—A. Yes, I think we had two, both in the same place. At the first we adverted to the subject, and there was a general agreement about it. At the second meeting it was agreed to have the charter prepared or have it reported on, I don't know which; but there were two meetings. Mr. Garland prepared the papers and submitted them at the second meeting, I think.

Q. In what State was that charter obtained?—A. The charter for the telephone was obtained in Tennessee. The charter for the telegraph was obtained in New York. The two first charters that Senator Garland wrote out were designed to be obtained from the State of New Jersey. I went on there and found that a recent law which the Senator had overlooked, or possibly had not been published, put a very high tariff upon charters in New Jersey, and I had to go back and get instructions.

Q. You say there was another company, a Pan-Electric Telegraph Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was the foundation for those two companies?—A. The foundation for the telephone company was several inventions of my son in the art of telephony, which he had operated up at the laboratory, and for the telegraph company it was mainly based upon a patent which he had already obtained for embossing a metallic tape and then running over those embossments with great rapidity, so as to send at least ten times as many words a minute as can be done by ordinary manipulation.

Q. Were these inventions included among those originally assigned to the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Yes, sir; they were, and on account of the delay in getting out the main charter, still hoping it would be done after a while when legislation could be had, we chartered them, hoping to get stock that would enable us to do in part what we had contemplated in the original enterprise.

Q. Has any of the stock of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company been issued?—A. We have never had any stock proper; that was one thing we insisted on very frequently—getting stock. The secretary sometimes signed with his pen a statement that a party had so much stock in the company, but it was tantamount to a man obtaining a charter for a bank and then writing that that paper would entitle a man to five dollars; and we found great difficulty in using that kind of paper or stock. We were always insisting that they should, according to the original contract, either get out the stock under the great charter or under this authority we would issue stock, have it printed, and given to the owner; but that they never did.

Q. As I understand, then, there has been no stock issued by either of the three companies?—A. None.

Q. But there have been assignments of interests?—A. They called it stock, but it was a certificate. In the papers you will find every species of it, a certificate showing that John Smith was entitled to $500,000. There is one there for $500,000 to J. W. Rogers, stating that J. W. Rogers is entitled to $500,000 in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, signed by Casey Young.

Q. Have you such a paper?—A. It is in the book there, the one that I told the committee to take care of, as it contained millions.

Q. Has the question of the issuance or non-issuance of the stock been a cause of disagreement between the parties?—A. Oh, it has been a bone of contention through the whole business.

Q. Who wanted the stock issued?—A. Chiefly I and my son and Colonel Looney.

Q. Who opposed the issuing of the stock?—A. I think it was chiefly Senator Harris. I believe he was the head of the whole business of opposing it.

Q. How did the others take sides?—A. The Senator had great influence over the rest of them. I think they were all willing to go into it, and their letters will show they wanted to go into it; but the Senator seemed to draw back more than anybody else and didn't want to issue that stock.

Q. Did Senator Harris give any reason for opposing the issuing of stock?—A. I can give you the conversation we had.

Q. Give it.—A. After we had waited a long time and felt that we were not being—that the contract was not being carried out—my son wrote a formal letter demanding the stock according to the contract. It was considered, as I am told, at a meeting of the board, and the next day Senator Harris came down to my house—that was, I suppose, two years ago—and, said he, “Doctor, that letter of Harry’s demanding the stock was considered at the board, and I for one have made up my mind to withdraw from the association rather than allow it to be issued.” Said he, “It is for you to say whether you insist upon that demand.” I said, “I most certainly do. As my son’s attorney, and a party in interest, I demand it.” Thereupon he added, “I think all my associates will withdraw.” It struck me that the Senator was impressed with the idea that we would be left fearfully in the cold if these great men should withdraw, and I said, “We should be most melancholy, Senator, if you gentlemen should withdraw.” Thereupon he left my house, and they had a meeting at the judiciary committee—

Q. I will ask you, before you proceed to that, if he stated any reason why he objected to the issuance of the stock?—A. No; I think not. It was generally understood among us that they were unwilling to have their names go forward on the stock.

Q. Why?—A. Well, I suppose their names were sacred, and they did not want them on the street.

Q. Was there any other reason?—A. Well, yes. It was suggested in conversation—I could not give the words—that possibly the whole thing might fail, and that if it should fail the whole concern would be looked upon as scoundrels.

Q. Was there anything said with reference to first establishing these inventions or showing their value before the stock was put upon the market?—A. Yes, sir; and pursuant to that I and my son advanced $1,200 or $1,500 on two of the instruments to do what we knew perfectly well they would do, and were willing to put the money up in New York, simply that our friends, whom we greatly honored (for their reputation was as dear to us as our own), should have something tangible to go upon. We knew that our instruments would work from New York to Washington. We knew it as electricians. I speak in regard to the telegraph. If it would work across this room we know it would work between New York and Washington; but these gentlemen, being in the higher sphere of state, and not having paid the attention which we had to our humble science, naturally wanted to see something. They were honorable men, and they didn't want to pitch into the dark.

Q. You and your son were accomplished electricians?—A. No, sir; not accomplished, but we had paid a great deal of attention to it. Professor Henry had taught it to me, I was going to say a century ago, but as I am on my oath I will say a long time ago. My son had given his whole life to it from his boyhood. We knew that the instruments would do these things, and we were willing to put in our money, and we advanced that money, which they paid back to us pro rata.

Q. You were going on to state a moment ago that there was another meeting in the Judiciary Committee room in the Senate?—A. Yes, sir; I cannot speak except from—I can tell what Colonel Looney said—Colonel Looney, I think, or one of the gentlemen told me. It was in the Judiciary Committee room, and the meeting was held after this interview with Senator Harris. Looney came back, I think, at least some one came who had been present, and told me that they had considered the matter, and Senator Garland was present, and they had concluded that they would not issue the stock for the present at least, and that they would not withdraw; whereupon I was about to file a bill in equity, when Colonel Looney, who is a man of universal peace and good humor, besought me not to make a stir, and said it would injure the stock and the enterprise, and it would be a great deal better to wait, and after awhile they would get the charter and issue the stock. So I did not file the bill in equity, and the thing just jolted along until the present time.

Q. I gather from your statement that you were not present at that second interview at the Judiciary room?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know when it took place?—A. I should say about May, 1884; some time in 1884. You can find the date in this way: A man named Harlan, a doctor, had been spoken to as a man who would take charge of the electrical department, and he came in while Senator Harris was in my room. Senator Harris turned to him, saying, "Dr. Harlan, I presume you will have to deal with other gentlemen than ourselves, as we will probably withdraw from this association." When they did refuse positively to go forward and get the charter contemplated and issue the stock, we invited them in a polite but firm way to take their instruments out of our private laboratory. The removal of those instruments will be indicated in the papers, so that you can get the date in that way.

Q. What time elapsed between the first and second interview?—A. Oh, I think it was the next day.

Q. Why were you and your son anxious to have this stock issued?—A. To sell it and to get money to build laboratories and pay electricians and mechanics.

Q. You wanted to put it upon the market?—A. We wanted to put it upon the market, as I stated in that pamphlet giving everybody warning. You have seen that pamphlet?

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, yes; I have it here.

The WITNESS. There is the whole plan. We say: "Here is this stock. It may be worthless. You must bring your own electricians and judge for yourselves and then take your chances. If you want to put $1,000 in and sink it, it is your own business."

Q. That, then, was the point of difference between you and those other gentlemen; you wanted to issue the stock and put it upon the market, and they were opposed to anything of that kind?—A. Yes, sir; they were unwilling to issue stock with their sacred names upon it, mark you, but they sold State rights under which millions of stock went to the people.

Q. Do you know of your associates, or any of them, selling any part of their individual interest in this company?—A. I do not, sir.

Q. Do I understand you, then, they are still the owners of those interests, so far as you know?—A. So far as I know.

Q. Of their original interest?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have said something in regard to the formation of local companies. You may state how many of those companies have been organized or formed, and where they are.—A. Well, the first was in Missouri, in the city of Saint Louis. Colonel Looney, to whom I had sold a large interest, or rather, bargained it to him on condition of his making sales of stock if we could ever get it—which we never did—went to Saint Louis at his own expense and fell in with a kinsman of his, who was a man of influence, General Boyle, and they exhibited the telephone instrument in Saint Louis and soon reported to us that they had secured a contract upon which $10,000 in money would be paid and one-quarter of the stock. I think Colonel Boyle told me they sold it for more, but that he and Dr. Arrington, a very nice gentleman in Memphis, having made the negotiation, got for their services the surplus, several thousand dollars. Our company having agreed to take $10,000, if they sold for more than $10,000 they considered the balance their right, and I acquiesced in it so far as that went. I would like to see everybody make money. I don't think there was ever any objection made to it. That $10,000 was sent on in a check to Senator Harris, and the stock of a company therefrom was sent on, as Senator Harris informed me, to him.

Q. What territory was that company to cover?—A. I think it was to cover the State of Missouri.

Q. Was it a sale of stock or was it a sale of territorial right?—A. Territorial right upon which the stock was issued. We bargained that they should issue stock and give us one-quarter of it.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You say the purchase price was $10,000 and one-quarter of the stock?—A. One-quarter of the stock.

Q. And, as I understand, that sale was by the Pan-Electric Company?—A. By the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. The papers were signed by its officers.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. And you received $10,000, which went into the treasury?—A. I suppose it went there. I got my pro rata of it, according to the amount of stock I had at that time

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you not get the stock, too?—A. We never got that; I can explain that, however.

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose that would belong to the company?

The WITNESS. The money belonged to the company also.

The CHAIRMAN. I can conceive of the difference, though, between money and stock. The money would probably be divided, and the stock would probably be held by the company, and the dividends as they accrued would be divided.

The WITNESS. Well, there were no dividends proper ever made.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. At all events it comes to this, that the money was divided and the stock was held by the parent company?—A. By the company, and is held to-day by the company. I would say just there in elucidating this thing, to show that everybody courts a fair investigation——

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; tell us everything you know.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; but check me, please, if I state anything impertinent or use any surplusage. We wanted the stock from Saint Louis to put upon the market and sell it if possible, for we understood that first-class business men, the wealthiest men in Saint Louis, were on the paper.

Q. On what paper?—A. On the stock that was issued by the Saint Louis company.

Q. They were the stockholders?—A. They were the stockholders, and had signed the certificates as president, secretary, &c. My son and myself, in order to get some portion of the original idea carried out, wanted to get hold of our share of that stock, but it was sent in one large block, and was not cut up so that we could get any slice of it, which substantiates what you have just suggested, that we could not divide it into slices as we did the money; we wanted the money that came in antecedent to this, and as fast as it came it had to be appropriated toward developing these twenty odd patents; in one case, especially, we required about five patents to be obtained for a telemorph, so named by my son (tele, distance; morph, form). The telemorph was an instrument enabling you to see by electricity at a distance, and my son had so far developed it in his theories and practice and drawings which he had made that he was ready to obtain the patents; but these gentlemen said they didn't see any practical benefit in seeing a fellow at a distance. Well, I argued with them that it might be valuable. Suppose a man in New Orleans was to draw a check upon a bank here for a large amount of money, and there would be doubt about paying it; they could see him; they could touch a button, and he would stand before them in the bank in Washington, and so it might be of great commercial value; but they wouldn't put any money out on that or on many other of the things we had; there were patents he had applied for, that have since lapsed, that we wanted carried out; they put no money into them. When we spoke of developing all these ideas, we could not get the money to pay our electricians and mechanics, or to pay for the patents.

Q. Were you opposed to dividing this money?—A. Of course I was opposed to dividing this money, if I could get it put into developing my son's inventions; but if I couldn't do that, then I wanted my share of it and was anxious to have it divided.

Q. Why did you want the stock divided?—A. To sell it, because there were good names upon it, and it could be sold better than this stuff Colonel Young had issued with these names on it.

Q. In the view you held, would it not have been better for the company to have sold the stock and got money to develop these inventions?—A. I would have been very glad if they had done that; but they had it all in one big certificate, and couldn't do it.

Q. Did you ever get any other money from this Saint Louis company?—A. Nothing more from Saint Louis.

Q. You have stated that that was a regular corporation?—A. That was a regular corporation.

Q. Controlling, as you understood, the State of Missouri?—A. That is all. They bought the State right and issued their stock upon that right.

Q. What other companies were formed?—A. Colonel Looney went on his way with the same electricians he had hired, at his own expense, to Texas, and has put the telephone on wire fences, and he told me that the children and women began to cry for the telephones.

Q. Colonel Looney was a good-hearted man. Go on and state the result of the Texas enterprise.—A. The result was that he got another $10,000 in cash, which was returned to the company, and I have understood, though I do not know it of my own knowledge, that his sons and their partner got a great deal more. Some one said $30,000; I know nothing about that. I told Colonel Looney if they had done so I would be very glad of it. I wanted them all to make money. We got only $10,000 in money.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. For what?—A. For the right of the State of Texas.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were you to have any part of the stock of that company?—A. One-quarter of the stock of that company.

Q. What was done with that $10,000?—A. Well, it was now understood that the precedent had been given for dividing, and we all went for it as soon as it came in. It seems we could not get money to build laboratories and employ electricians and mechanics to develop the great scheme. We were still waiting for the big charter to come out, hoping it might come some day.

Q. And so you divided that $10,000?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did the women and children cry for the loss of that money?—A. Looney told me the last time I saw him they were crying for stock.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was there any other company organized?—A. There is a point there that I am reminded of by seeing a gentleman present—a very celebrated lawyer, a great man, and a good man, no doubt. When we couldn't get any of this money to devote to laboratories, we came down to so small a point as this: We had two or three little bills, not amounting to more than $30 or $40, for work mechanics had done for some part of the apparatus. We sent this mechanic to Colonel Young, and the mechanic came back saying Colonel Young was tired of the thing, and didn't have any money and wasn't going to pay it.

Q. Was it the mechanic talked that way or Colonel Young?—A. Colonel Young. Then the bill was sent to General Johnston, and he wrote upon the back of it: "This is Mr. Rogers's bill." It was made out against Mr. Rogers by name. General Johnston is a soldier and a very exact man, and as it was made out against Mr. Harry Rogers, he just put upon the back of it "This is Mr. Rogers's bill"; but were so provoked, to tell the plain truth about it, after we had gone into this thing with these grand expectations that those small bills should be sent back to us by the company, that we took up our traps and went to New York to establish a telephone company independent of this concern.

Q. Were these bills sent in after or before the division of the money?—A. Before there was so much money. We had only assessed ourselves occasionally. I must do Colonel Young the justice to say it is probable there was no money in the treasury at the time; but it provoked us to think there should not be any money in the treasury. We were always ready to do our part.

Q. You have spoken of two companies. Were there any others?—A. It is very material, if you will excuse me, that I should explain in my testimony about going to New York to start the company there, for it will probably come out in this investigation. We went there to establish another company, and agreed with a gentleman whom I see present, I can't think of his name, but it is a Christian name—Beckwith—at any rate, it is a sacred name, because there is a great bishop named Beckwith.

Mr. BECKWITH. I never agreed to start any company.

The WITNESS. I know you did not. I do not say so. I went on to see you. (Addressing committee.) Beckwith entertained our proposal. He said he had access to hundreds of men in every part of the Union, through acquaintances which he had made while connected with the overland telephone, and if we would go in with him he could make us more than all these statesmen would ever make us. "Well," said I, "here are the instruments we have been making, ready for a new deal. What will you give?" Said he, "Not a cent; I put in my influence." Thereupon he consulted with a famous lawyer, a son of Abraham, named Jacobs, about our contract. We wanted to look into it to see whether Harry and I could diverge from the statesmen and go in with these business men. Jacobs, after examining the thing, came to the conclusion that Harry was sold, body, if not soul, to these gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. I am afraid you are wandering a little now. You told us to check you if you wandered.

Mr. RANNEY. I think he ought to finish.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no objection.

The WITNESS. It was a part of the contract that he had bound all his future possibilities and all his future labor. We had not understood it. We understood in signing the contract that it was for improvements on specific inventions; but Jacobs decided that whatever Harry might invent in electricity belonged to the Pan-Electric statesmen; and this arrangement we were trying to make with Beckwith was altogether broken up.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. To whom had you bound all the possibilities?—A. Harry had bound himself to Senator Harris, to General Johnston, to Colonel Young, to General Atkins, and to their associates who might legally go into that concern.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do I understand that you wanted to organize this New York company under the Pan-Electric Company or outside?—A. Simply as the Rogers Company.

Q. Independent?—A. Independent.

Q. Did you propose to use any of his inventions which had been transferred to the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Oh, no. So far from that, we brought the instruments here, after we had had Jacobs's opinion. We didn't make any concealment of it. We told these gentlemen that here were instruments that we had invented and we could have a new telephone independent of theirs, and they agreed to take them under a contract which said provided they paid for the work on the instruments they would be entitled to them. They paid us, I think, for those instruments what the mechanic had charged us, and put them into the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. That has no connection, then, with the subject of this investigation?—A. Well, it has a remote connection, most certainly, on this question of right, and not getting their charter out, and developing the original scheme; that that not being done here we tried to use what liberty we might have to make money in another direction and build laboratories.

Q. Do I understand, then, you were not satisfied with the course that these gentlemen were pursuing?—A. Satisfied? How could I be satisfied?

Q. Answer the question, if you please. Were you satisfied?—A. No, sir; never.

Q. And you proposed to set up for yourselves?—A. To set up a new concern, and leave them to run their own patents, and take the patents they had.

Q. State whether there was any other local company organized under the Pan-Electric Company.—A. Well, Colonel Looney continued on his pilgrimage around through Alabama and Tennessee, and went over to Colonel Oates's country and sold out Alabama for $7,500 in money.

Mr. OATES. He didn't get so much for that.

Q. To whom was that sold?—A. I think that Colonel Looney, his son, and Colonel Upshur made the sale to parties in that great iron city—what is the name?

Mr. OATES. Birmingham.

A. (Continuing). Birmingham; and there established lines and got up a stock company.

Q. What was done with that $7,500?—A. Tennessee was sold, and I think that with the Tennessee money all came together. Senator Harris had sent it, and he wrote word that the money was short. His letter is not here, probably. He wrote to some of us that he had taken his part of it, just kept his part; he was pushed for money, and kept his part, and we could divide the rest when it got here. That being done, of course each fellow wanted his money, and we divided it up. I am not saying anything unjust about Senator Harris.

Q. I understand you there was a company formed for Tennessee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that the right for Tennessee was sold?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who sold it?—A. I think Looney was the main man selling it all. As a legal matter of course he couldn't sell; he was a mere agent. Senator Harris and General Johnston, as president and vice-president, and Colonel Young, as secretary, sold. Looney was the individual who made the sales.

Q. What was the money price for the Tennessee rights?—A. $7,500 and one-quarter of the stock.

Q. Did you receive one-quarter of the stock of the Alabama company, also?—A. We never got any of the stock. It was generally sent in a big certificate, and it is on deposit in our treasury.

Q. The company got it?—A. The company has it now.

Q. Was it a part of the contract that you were to have one-quarter of the stock of the Alabama and Tennessee companies?—A. I think so; but this is partly hearsay. I was not a party to it.

Q. You may state what was done with the $15,000 received from the Alabama and Tennessee sales.—A. Senator Harris kept his part, and very properly. It was very proper for him to do it, upon the precedents we had set of dividing it up as soon as it got in. We went for it, all of us, and got our checks from Colonel Young and went over to Riggs' bank and drew our money, and that is all I know about it.

Q. Were there any other sales?—A. Yes, sir; they didn't amount to a great deal, though. There was a sale in New York. I think New York was sold originally for about $2,000,000 in stock. I am guessing at that. I do not know the amount. It was a large amount of stock. We were to have half of the stock and they were to pay no money. There were a lot of very enterprising and wealthy sons of Abraham there. Senator Harris's opinion was that they could make the stock worth more to us than we could make it worth, and we had better take our pay in stock; that the sons of Abraham would run that stock up and make it very valuable, so that we agreed to let the sons of Abraham have New York for stock and no money.

Q. And you were to have one-half?—A. One-half of what the Jews made—that is, one-half of the stock that they made; that they executed, or put afloat.

Q. Who made the New York sales?—A. Senator Harris made that to Jacobs, the lawyer of whom I spoke.

Q. Do you know the capital of the New York company?—A. I do not know that they ever organized. I am only speaking of the contract. I think they failed to come up to some condition, and that the contract was subsequently annulled by our company.

Q. Was there any other territorial right sold to any other company?—A. Pennsylvania.

Q. State the facts in regard to that.—A. My son and I were at the Grand Central Hotel, New York, and saw some decision in Pennsylvania about the Drawbaugh concern, that we thought would make Pennsylvania a very favorable place, in view of the possibilities of Bell's suits. It was something against Bell; possibly it was the refusal of injunction in the Drawbaugh case. I think that was it. I telegraphed to our associates that we would be glad to take Pennsylvania upon the same terms on which they had already sold the District of Columbia and Tennessee to Dr. Harlan and Augustine and Bradley T. Johnston, I believe.

Q. To whom did you make that statement?—A. I telegraphed and wrote it both to President Johnston. He wrote back to me that the terms made for this territory were very favorable, and that they expected a much higher price for Pennsylvania, and that I and my son couldn't get it. I wrote to Colonel Looney about it, and suggested that it was rather a hard case that the inventors could not get Pennsylvania upon about the same terms that strangers had gotten this territory; and Colonel Looney called another meeting, or went with somebody, he told me, to see the gentlemen, I don't know which, and remonstrate with them; and thereupon General Johnston telegraphed me, "You can have Pennsylvania on your own terms." The terms we settled upon were that we were to pay $2 a year on each instrument, or rather each set of instruments, as a royalty, and nothing beyond, for the right of Pennsylvania, and it was guaranteed to us from the company; that we sold to the company formed there, Klotz, Denver, Manning, Money, my son, and myself. I don't remember any others.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What Money was that?—A. Hernando D. Money, of Mississippi.

Q. Was he a member of the House?—A. He was not at that time.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When was that?—A. It was, I think, early in 1884. He might have been a member then.

Mr. HANBACK. He was a member of the Forty-eighth Congress.

Mr. RANNEY. He was the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The WITNESS. Yes; he must have been in Congress at that time.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. That company, as I understand you, was organized by yourself and your son?—

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The territorial right of Pennsylvania was sold to that company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the parent company to receive anything except $2 on each instrument?—

A. No, sir.

Q. It was not to have any part of the stock of the local company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there any agreement as to the protection of the patents for use in Pennsylvania?—A. Yes, sir; the agreement was that they would defend any suit that should be brought.

Q. Who would defend it?—A. The Pan-Electric Company guaranteed it. The contract shows for itself.

Q. Was that agreement in writing?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Do you refer to the agreement already in evidence?—A. I do not know whether it has been put in evidence. It is the agreement the Pan-Electric Company made with my son and me.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it the agreement for the sale of Pennsylvania?

Mr. J. HARRIS ROGERS. No sir. It is in the book, I believe.

Q. You say there was an agreement that the parent company should defend the Pennsylvania Company?—A. Defend us against the Bell people; but there was a subsequent clause in which it said they would be bound for no damages, I think. It will speak for itself.

Q. Was it your understanding that they were to carry on the litigation, but not to be bound for damages?—A. The contract will show what it is. I took whatever they gave me.

Q. I merely ask you because you undertook to state it. How much money did you and your son receive for Pennsylvania?—A. Never a cent.

Q. What were you to receive?—A. Nothing.

Q. How were you to be paid?—A. We were to be paid by selling stock.

Q. What proportion of the stock were you and your son to have?—A. Nearly all of it. I want to say a word in justice to Mr. Klotz, who was one of them. You asked my son the other day if Klotz came in as the Pan-Electric gentlemen did, and Harry said yes. The fact is that Klotz had a little of the stock that I gave him for the use of his name, and he then bought Pan-Electric stock, and paid me $2,500 for putting up poles in the Lehigh Valley.

Q. From whom did he buy that stock?—A. He bought it from me. I furnished it to him at $7,500. I call it stock. It was one of those things Colonel Young got us. It was in the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. To whom did the money go that Klotz paid?—A. It went for putting up poles and wires in the Lehigh Valley.

Q. Did it go in the Pan-Electric Company?—A. No; it went into the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Company.

Q. As I understand, you and your son sold him a part of your interest?—A. My Pan-Electric interest; yes, sir.

Q. It was not a sale by the company?—A. Oh, no, sir; in no sense; but just ours. I want to say just there that though he paid only the $2,500, as my son stated, he came down here and said, "I am a man that always keeps my contracts, and I will pay you the $7,500 for those patents;" but we said we were not that kind of men, and made him a present of the balance of the stock, and let the thing stand in that way until we could see what would become of it. I want to say that in justice to Klotz.

Q. Did he have any other Pan-Electric stock except what you and your son sold him?—A. None that I know of, sir.

Q. And that he paid $2,500 for?—A. Yes, sir; he paid it. He gave us his obligations for $7,500, but had paid $2,500 when we released him from the rest on account of the suit.

Q. Have you any recollection of his paying $200 more for some reason?—A. He never paid me a cent, nor my son, that I ever heard of. He might.

Q. Did this company ever go into operation in Pennsylvania?—A. Yes, sir; we put up an exchange there with about thirty telephones, running out to some coal mines, and through the town of Mauch Chunk, and we were enjoined there.

Q. Where did those lines extend, if you know?—A. I think one line ran over that high hill there that they call the Switchback, and one went to Allentown. Klotz told me he had the poles put down almost to Allentown, I think, when I saw him at one time. I think that was about 30 miles off. There was some other coal place where it was carried—I don't remember what the name of the place was—and in different parts of Mauch Chunk.

Q. Where was the money raised to put up those lines?—A. I furnished about $1,000 to start the thing, and Klotz put up those lines with the $2,500 in addition to the $1,000 I had spent in starting the machinery of the thing. Only about $3,500 was laid out at the time we were enjoined. We were going on to make other connections.

Q. I gather from what you say in justice to Mr. Klotz, that Mr. Klotz has paid for all he got?—A. Every cent, and he wanted to pay more. He wanted to pay us $5,000 more than we would take.

Q. You have given us Missouri, Texas, Alabama, Tennessee, New York, and Pennsylvania. Was there any other company formed? You said something about the District of Columbia.—A. Yes, sir; the District of Columbia, West Virginia, Virginia, and Maryland.

Q. One company?—A. All one company. They were sold originally to Dr. Harlan and a man named Augustine, and some gentleman, called Dr. Roseberry or Rosecrans, or something of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. It is very important to get the right name.

The WITNESS. I do not know his name. It is all in the pamphlets. I must say in justice to myself that in those transactions I had no part. It is only what I heard, as a man interested would hear.

Q. Who made the sale of the District of Columbia and the adjoining States?—A. I presume the Pan-Electric officers. I don't know. Nobody else could make it.

Q. Do you know the individual who made the contract or the arrangement?—A. I know the president and secretary, by the by-laws, must make it. Do you mean the preliminary arrangement?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The WITNESS. Dr. Harlan had become electrician after my son had the Pan-Electric instruments removed from his private laboratory, when they wouldn't issue the stock or get out the charter. Dr. Harlan became the electrician of the company, and he was in conference with them thereafter, and he was the leading man in making that contract. Then Bradley T. Johnson came in with him and Dr. Henkle.

Q. Do you know the prices received or that was to have been received by the company for the territory named?—A. I think they were to have one-quarter of the stock.

Q. How much in money?—A. I don't believe those fellows had any money.

Q. They might have promised it. Was there any other company that you recall?—A. General Boyle sold Chicago, or sold Illinois, I suppose. It was in Chicago that the trade was made for $10,000 in money. I heard, I think maybe he told me, that he got $15,000 or $20,000 for it. I am not sure of that. Somebody told me so.

Q. For himself or for the company?—A. Not for the company. I know what the company got, for I got my slice. The company got $10,000.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Was it the State of Illinois or the city of Chicago?—A. I think it was the State of Illinois, though it was done in Chicago.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was the company to have any part of that stock?—A. Yes, sir; I think they were to have one-quarter of it, the same as in Missouri and Texas.

Q. What was done with that $10,000?—A. It was divided up as soon as it got in.

Q. You were pretty prompt in dividing?—A. Let me say that whichever was the last State—it might have been Tennessee and Alabama that came in last—it never was divided. It got so stormy with the Bell people that we thought we had better keep to the windward a little, and we held that in the treasury. I hope that is there now.

Q. Was there any other company formed?—A. No; no other.

Q. That was all?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did the Pan-Electric Company receive any of the stock from the Illinois Company?—A. I do not know, sir.

Q. You have stated, I believe, that no part of the stock received from the local companies was ever divided?—A. It was never divided that I ever heard of.

Q. Was all the money received from the local companies divided?—A. No; I have transcended the limit of truth in that, not meaning to be untruthful. We retained from either Tennessee or Alabama or Illinois, I don't know which, I think about $13,000 in money and in notes. There were some notes from Alabama paid in addition to the money. You will bear in mind that I am not stating about these things from my own knowledge, but what was my understanding.

Q. Let us get at that fact. I understand you to say that $7,500 in money was paid for Alabama?—A. I think so.

Q. And notes in addition?—A. I think so. That was the contract.

Q. Do you remember the amount of the notes?—A. I think some one said in a meeting that there was $3,000 in notes. That was probably from Texas. I remember now the $3,000 note was Texas business. The books show all that. I am only going from hearsay.

Mr. RANNEY. We will get the books after while.

Q. You stated that Texas had paid $10,000 in money?—A. I think so. It may be that they paid only $7,000 in money and $3,000 in notes.

Q. As I gather from your testimony, nearly all of these sales, or the greater portion of them, were made by Colonel Looney.—A. I think every sale was made by him except New York.

Q. Colonel Looney and General Boyle?—A. General Boyle and Looney made all those out West and South, and Senator Harris made the one in New York.

Q. Where did Colonel Looney reside?—A. He resided in Memphis.

Q. By what means did he go into the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Expecting every day this stock to be issued under the great charter, and knowing he was a great operator I gave him $600,000 to come in.

Q. Part of your stock?—A. Part of my stock.

Q. He did not derive any stock directly from the company?—A. No; they offered it to him, but it was so small a sum that he spurned it. They wrote to offer him $50,000 when he came on, and he said he wouldn't turn around for that; he had just made $30,000 in one operation in a coal mine in money.

Q. You say he spurned $50,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Because he had received $30,000 in a coal transaction?—A. Well, he instanced that. He said, "I have just got $30,000 in money on one stock operation, and I ain't going to take my time away from those operations to help run this concern for $50,000 in stock." So, as he was a great operator, I agreed to give him one-half of all the money we made, and we drew up a contract accordingly, and I proposed that he should take a one-sixth interest in the whole concern.

Q. So he came in through you?—A. Through me.

Q. Was that agreement in writing?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Where is it?—A. I guess among the papers. Is it not, Harry? (Addressing J. Harris Rogers.)

Mr. J. HARRIS ROGERS. I don't know; it is probably among the papers.

The WITNESS. If it is not, I will get it. He is an expert, and a thorough expert.

Mr. J. HARRIS ROGERS. Colonel Looney looked over that paper a short time ago—last month.

Q. All of the companies, then, except the New York company, and the District of Columbia, and the adjoining States, were organized by persons who held their interest in the company through you?—A. Through my son and me; yes, sir.

Q. Who was General Boyle?—A. General Boyle was a general, I think, in the Federal Army. He is a gentleman of prominence in Missouri, I think a distant kinsman of Colonel Looney, all of which is very honorable to him.

Q. Had he any interest in the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Yes, sir; he bought some stock from me and Looney.

Q. What did he pay for it?—A. I think he paid ten.

Q. Ten dollars a share?—A. Ten dollars on $100; $10 a share.

Q. How many shares did he get?—A. I think it was only about $1,000 that he paid us; $500 went to Mr. Looney and $500 to me.

Q. Did Mr. Looney pay you any money for his interest?—A. No, sir; it was Mr. Looney's genius that I banked on, as I banked on these other gentlemen's names.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Mr. Looney seems to have gotten a good deal of money?—A. He brought me in money continually.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Were these local companies organized under the Pan-Electric Telephone Company or the Pan-Electric Company?—A. The Pan-Electric Telephone Company. The Pan-Electric Company never got into shape, never got their charter.

Q. Would these companies have been entitled to any interest in the Pan-Electric Company or the Pan-Electric Postal Company had they been organized, by virtue of their purchase of the interest in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company? They seem to have bought territorial rights of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Suppose you had gone on as you intended and incorporated the Pan-Electric Company and the Pan-Electric Postal Company, would these purchasers have acquired any interest in those companies by virtue of their purchase of Pan-Electric Telephone stock?—A. The only interest they would have acquired would have been in telephonic improvements which my son might make in the future.

Q. It was confined to telephonic improvements?—A. Yes, sir; whatever Harry might invent until doomsday would belong to them in ratio.

Q. You said something about some persons having received money in addition to what was paid to the parent company, Colonel Looney's son, I think, and some others?—A. Well, yes, I have heard that; I do not know that it is true.

Q. Did any of those companies make any money?—A. Do you mean the local companies?

Q. Yes.—A. I do not know.

Q. Did you ever receive any money, in addition to your share of the dividends, from any of those companies?—A. No, sir; none. I had no stock in them except that which belonged to us in common. But they have a system of lines and wires in Saint Louis and probably do make money. General Boyle told me that they had organized very thoroughly in the city and that they had some peculiar invention by which, if a fellow wanted to get an answer to anything, he just put in his money, and if the other fellow did not answer, that the money dropped out of its own accord—a very ingenious thing. [Laughter.] It had to be metallic money to make an electric connection, and when you dropped it in, if the fellow spoke at the other end, the money was all right, the money would stay; but if the fellow did not speak in a certain time, the money would come out and the fellow would go away. So, in answer to your question, I guess they are making money there. [Laughter.]

Q. Did you get any of it?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Who did?—A. These gentlemen in Saint Louis who organized the company, the first merchants and bankers in Saint Louis.

Q. It has been published that you sent certificates of stock to the amount of $10,000, together with a poem of your own composition to the Hon. Lewis Beach, of New York; was that a fact?—A. Yes, sir; I will tell you all about that.

Q. We do not want to go beyond the scope of the inquiry and do injustice to anybody. Was the stock Pan-Electric stock?—A. No, sir.

Q. What stock was it?—A. American Postal stock.

Q. It had nothing to do with this matter then?—A. It had collaterally a good deal to do with Pan-Electric operations, and I think the committee should allow me, in justice to myself, as you refer to this publication, to state how it is connected with the Pan-Electric and why we did it.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no objection if the committee is willing.

Mr. RANNEY. I think he ought to state it.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

The WITNESS. This is a New York company. The Pan-Electric had nothing at all to do with it. It is the American Postal Company. I was in New York soon after, continuously through the summer after these gentlemen had made the Pan-Electric contract.

Q. What gentlemen?—A. These gentlemen I have been speaking of this morning; I mean the Pan-Electric gentlemen. The Postal Telegraph, of which you have heard a great deal, were banking chiefly upon a peculiar copper wire, a steel core and a copper covering.

The CHAIRMAN. Confine yourself, if you please, to the matter concerning Mr. Beach.

The WITNESS. Well, I will leave that out and say, in general, that there was a New York company (I will come as directly to Mr. Beach as I can) who had their stock engraved at a very considerable cost, $400 or $500, I think, to put on the New York market. They are very strict there as to what kind of stock you shall have engraved. The parties who went in with me went in as friends in an enterprise of this kind and were not famous men, but they said to me at a meeting, "Any of us will drop out if you can get any of those great men in Washington, who have a national reputation, to go in with you." I came down and made this offer to Senator Harris, General Johnston, and the rest of my Pan-Electric friends. I made two propositions. One was that while we had a certain system of telegraphy, which I thought very valuable—the cylinder which Harry had sold them, and on which the Pan-Electric Telegraph is founded—we would give them $1,000 in money and $1,000,000 of American Postal stock for that cylinder that ground out messages. This proposition was declined. We then proposed to raise this $5,000,000, for which this was chartered, to $10,000,000, as was permitted by the charter, and that the Pan-Electric gentlemen should take charge of it; that my friends not being so famous, would drop out. We had a meeting to effect that at the Metropolitan Hotel. Senator Harris was complaining, and I went up for Mr. Garland myself. He came down and when they came to consider the matter I withdrew. It resulted in their sending me word by my son that they would make a counter proposition, which, however, they did not make, and after a reasonable time to carry out the suggestion of my friends, I cast about in Congress to see what men would take their places and be more efficient.

The CHAIRMAN. Just state what you did in regard to Mr. Beach.

The WITNESS. I am coming to Mr. Beach.

The CHAIRMAN. But before that let me ask you this: That counter proposition related to the sale to the American Postal Company of certain instruments and improvements owned under this agreement by the Pan-Electric Company?

The WITNESS. The first proposition related to the sale which Harry had made originally to the Pan-Electric. We wanted to buy back, and offered $1,000 in money and $1,000,000 in stock for them. The second proposition was that we would club together and let the officers of the Pan-Electric be the officers of the American Postal Company, and that would give us all the fame we wanted, and we had in instruments enough foundation for a great company.

Q. That was not done?—A. No, sir; that was not done. Then I cast about to find another great man—

Q. And wrote to Mr. Beach?—A. I did not go to him yet. Mr. Money and Mr. Manning were old friends of mine from Mississippi. I do not think Mr. Manning was connected with the House, but Mr. Money was; but I would as soon put my head in a lion's mouth as to think of bribing them in regard to legislation. I offered them the mere trifle, I think it was, of $10,000 apiece, and I think if I had given them nothing they would have permitted me to use their names; but beyond that I had no other reason. They were at the New York Hotel with this new Senator from Mississippi, Mr. Walthall. Senator Walthall, Mr. Money, and Mr. Manning were at the New York Hotel with our Pan-Electric friends when we made the contract, and told me they were running a railroad through the pine lands of Mississippi, which could be bought for $1.25 an acre, and that after running the road through they could make the land worth $10 an acre. I thought it was a legitimate enterprise and I wanted to go in with them. They had said "Oh, yes, you shall come in," and I said "I will tell you about my enterprises, as you are going to reciprocate about yours." Now there were two men I sent my stock to just about that time when I was casting about for men. One was Dr. Hassell, who lived in Thirty-fourth street, New York; a famous man and a member of the St. Vincent de Paul Society. Some gentlemen here may know what that means. He said "If I can help you in any way, by any friends I have, in this changing of your company (he was a director of it), I shall be glad to do so." He then introduced me first to Mr. William E. Robinson, the "British lion" man—"Richelieu." We went around to Mr. Robinson's house, and I told him about this enterprise, and that we wanted to interest men especially who had influence in the New York market (he was a Brooklyn man) to sell this stock; that we had put so much money on New York. He said he would entertain the idea. I gave him the pamphlet to read, and we did give him $10,000 of stock. I said "You will get this; it is nothing at all." I will say this, that whenever a fellow came to buy stock I always said to him, "There is only one place where you can get cash for it, and that is at Wheeler's, on Seventh street. There you can get cash for it, a cent and three-quarters a pound, and that is all I guarantee, but it may be it will develop into something very valuable."

Q. You mean they could sell it for waste paper?—A. Yes, sir; for waste paper. I told Mr. Robinson that the thing should be further developed with good lines and sufficient capital—the plan was to run lines and tap Mexico—for without lines we could do nothing.

Q. Why did you give the $10,000 of stock to Mr. Robinson?—A. Because I wanted to get Mr. Robinson after awhile to join us in American Postal Company as a director.

Q. Why would you select him; for what reason?—A. Because Dr. Hassell told me that he was an influential man—I knew nothing about him—that he was in Brooklyn and could be of service to me in Wall street.

Q. Did you know that he was a member of Congress?—A. Yes, sir, I knew that he was a member of Congress as well as I knew that Senator Harris was a member of the Senate. Well, he said, Mr. Beach is another man who will be of great service to you in New York. We came down to Washington and looked for Mr. Beach. We looked for him in the gallery, and he was not in. We looked for him in the restaurant, but he was not there. But we met him afterwards. I think he says in his impudent card that I introduced myself to him. It is possible that I sent my card in and said that Mr. Hassell, his friend in New York, had told me to call on him in regard to an enterprise, and that I would send him papers which would explain the matter. At any rate I thereupon did send him the pamphlet and some rhymes. You gentlemen may not know it, but I write poetry.

Q. You did, in point of fact then, send him some poetry?—A. I sent him rhymes, but I think I said to him in the note that I would bribe him to look into my enterprise by sending a poem.

Q. Why did you ask him to read your poem?—A. You had better ask Senator Harris when he gets on the stand, for I wrote to him the same as I did to Mr. Beach, and he said that it took no bribery to get him to read my poems. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANNEY. Which one was it that said it needed no bribes to make him read your poems?

The WITNESS. Senator Harris.

Q. Please explain seriously for what reason you gave to Mr. Beach $10,000 of this American Postal stock.—A. As I had given it to Mr. Robinson. I had an idea of reforming the company and thought I would use his name. I gave it just as I did the $500,000 to Senator Harris and Senator Garland.

Q. Why did you put it in that way, that you sent him $10,000 of stock to induce him to read your poem?—A. That was mere pleasantry. Any gentleman would have understood it, and if he had been a gentleman he would have understood it. [Laughter.] I thank you for allowing me to explain the matter, because the Post here—Stillson Hutchins (who slipped around to get the Vest stock back and tried to cover up tracks when nobody needed to be covered up)—refused on the Beach occasion to insert a card from me in my own town, and permitted a citizen here to be maligned by a blackguard from New York.

Q. Did Mr. Beach decline, as a member of Congress, to have anything to do with that sent to him?—A. No, sir; nothing more than Dr. Hassell told me—

Q. Never mind that. How much stock did you send to Mr. Cox, the member of Congress from New York, and what stock was it?—A. It was the same and he was the only man I sent it to.

Q. What stock did you send to Mr. Cox?—A. The same stock. When I wanted to form a company I thought if I could get Sunlight on it I would have life.

Q. Did you send him a poem?—A. No, sir. I think if I had sent him the poetry he would have gone in it with me. [Laughter.]

Q. It did not seem to carry Mr. Beach into it?—A. Oh, Mr. Beach is too stupid to understand anything. [Laughter.]

Q. You did send Mr. Cox $10,000 of American Postal stock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you send any to any other member?—A. Never; to none of them.

Q. I believe all of these gentlemen declined the stock except Mr. Robinson?—A. No, sir; Mr. Money and Mr. Manning did not decline.

Q. I am speaking of the three, Mr. Cox, Mr. Beach, and Mr. Robinson.—A. Mr. Robinson took his, and so did Mr. Money and Mr. Manning.

Q. How much did Mr. Money take?—A. Ten thousand dollars.

Q. What did he pay you for it, anything?—A. He was going to help me. He paid me just as these other gentlemen in the Senate paid me, by letting me use his name.

Q. Did Mr. Manning pay anything?—A. No, sir; they all paid in the same way.

Q. Mr. Beach, you say, declined?—A. Yes, sir; he declined both the poetry and the stock. He saw no value in the stock, or he would have pocketed it.

Q. It has been stated, also, that you offered stock in some one of these companies to Mr. Randall; is that a fact?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Just give us the facts.—A. That brings us to the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Company. In forming that company I wrote to several gentlemen of the House saying I wished to use their names, just as I have stated before a dozen times, as I hoped to use the names of honorable men to go into the enterprise, for I felt the names of such men would be a protection to my son, to the public, and to myself. I wrote to Mr. Randall, telling him that if he would go into that Pennsylvania enterprise we would give him, I think, $100,000; I am not sure, it may have been $50,000, but I wanted him specially because he is a Pennsylvanian.

Q. What was the capital of your Pennsylvania company?—A. Five million dollars.

Q. You may proceed.—A. Mr. Randall wrote me a very courteous letter, saying that he did not know enough about the matter—

Mr. RANNEY (interposing). Have you got the letter?

The WITNESS. I think my son has a part of it, which says, "Yours respectfully, Samuel J. Randall." But the balance of it is missing. His clerk probably keeps copies of his letters. The amount of it was that he did not know enough about the matter, and I think he intimated that he wanted to hear more about it.

Q. Have you made search for Mr. Randall's letter?—A. Yes, sir; we made search but found only his name.

Q. Where did you find that?—A. In a barrel.

Mr. RANNEY. Did you send any poetry with that?

The WITNESS. No, sir; I do not think I sent Mr. Randall any poetry.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Mr. Randall declined to receive the stock?—A. Yes, sir; he did.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It is also said that you made some overtures to Mr. Carlisle?—A. Yes, sir; I had that published myself.

Q. State what it was.—A. It was a letter, if not in the very words, at the same time about the same letter I had written Mr. Randall. Mr. Carlisle wrote me a very respectful letter, contrary to the newspapers, which said that he wrote me very sharply. He wrote as one gentleman would write to another.

Q. Have you that letter?—A. No, sir; I have not been able to find it, but he said distinctly "If there is any legislation connected with this affair I can have nothing whatever to do with it."

Q. What stock was that?—A. The Rogers Telephone Company stock. We had some men who wanted to drop it, but I thought if I could get Mr. Randall and Mr. Carlisle into it, their names would give prestige to the stock.

Q. Did you ever offer stock in any of these companies to any other member of Congress?

Mr. RANNEY (interposing). How much did you say that you sent to Mr. Carlisle?—A. I sent the same to him as to Mr. Randall. I did not send it; I just wrote a letter saying that I gave them $100,000.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you name any price for it?—A. Oh, no; but they understood that. The letter would run about like this: "I will put to your credit on the books of the company $100,000 in this stock if you feel like going into the enterprise with us and assisting us," meaning for them to be elected directors when the time came for the others to withdraw.

Q. I want to get the reply of Mr. Carlisle.—A. As near as I can state he said something like this: "Dear Sir: Your letter received. I have noted its contents. If any legislation is contemplated I can have nothing to do with it." I think you will find if you look at his letter-book that that is about what he wrote to me.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You may state what Mr. Cox said in reply.—A. He said, wittily, "I do not think the thing is worth anything; if it was, you would not be distributing it around here so fluently." I had sent it to Mr. Beach at the same time and I suppose they had been comparing notes. At any rate, he wanted more light about it before he would keep it. He sent his clerk down to my office to say that Mr. Cox did not know anything about this thing and would not take stock unless he knew enough about it, and he returned the stock to me at the same time.

Q. Did you offer the stock to any other member of Congress?—A. No, sir, I think not—let me see now; I began this morning with the Senators who went into the first enterprise. About that time I went to Senator Windom and offered some to him, and to Mr. Cox, and to Ben Le Fevre, the same amount that I offered to Senator Harris and Senator Garland. But they all declined. I did not offer enough to any of them.

Q. That is your inference. Did they say that you had not offered enough?—A. No, sir; that is my own inference.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did Mr. Money or Mr. Manning take shares?—A. Yes, sir; they took shares; they would do almost anything I would ask them to do which was honorable, and they knew I would not do anything else.

Q. Did they pay you anything for it?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You may proceed.—A. I was telling you the names. Senator Windom and Mr. Clark are the first ones.

Q. How much did you offer to Senator Windom?—A. I should have to guess; it might have been $50,000.

Q. Did he reply by letter?—A. Oh, yes, sir; in a very courteous letter.

Q. Have you the letter?—A. I think it is in that book. Senator Windom had some time ago owed me $10,000, and was going to send his check to me to New York, and when we got there we found that Tom Ewing had disturbed the arrangement we had there, and I telegraphed Senator Windom not to send the money, and I saved him $10,000. I could have put it in my pocket the next day. Hence when he got this note from me he treated me very courteously, but said he was so much engaged in other business that he could not go into it.

Q. This $10,000 was for what?—A. It was to give him an interest in the National Secret Telegraph Company on which the improved company of Van Bethuysen was founded.

Q. You do not recall then, as I understand, other members of Congress to whom you offered any stock in any of these enterprises?—A. There was Mr. Money, Mr. Manning, this fellow Beach, Sunset Cox, and Mr. Robinson. I do not remember any others.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Mr. Manning was not a member of Congress then?—A. No; I know he was not. I know when he was at the New York Hotel with us he was afloat.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Can you give us the time when you made this offer to Mr. Manning?—A. It was some time in the summer of 1884.

Q. Was he at that time a contestant for a seat?—A. I am inclined to think he did have some sort of a contest with somebody. But it should be said in justice to them that these two gentlemen were my own personal friends, and if I had offered them anything they would know it was all right.

Q. You have stated that. Did you offer stock to any gentlemen who were not members of Congress?—A. Oh, yes, sir; why I have given away millions. [Laughter.]

Q. At the time you were offering stock to members of Congress, did you offer it to any other person?—A. Oh, yes, sir; every day. [Laughter.]

Q. You have stated, now, that you have given away millions.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you a man of large means?—A. Oh, no, sir; very slender means; I am as poor as Job's turkey.

Q. Were you poor at the time you gave these millions away?—A. Yes, sir. Always poor excepting in the prospective value of my son's patents. I thought they were very valuable, and, if properly managed, that I would be worth millions in gold.

Q. You do not mean millions of dollars?—A. No, sir; millions of stock.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You were casting your bread on the waters, and you thought it would come back again?—A. Yes, sir, and it is coming back now. Mr. Looney and Mr. Boyle offered me $7,500 in cash for some Pan-Electric stock and I would not take it. They said there was a banker at the Ebbitt House who would give me $17,500 for $500,000 of it.

Q. When was this?—A. About three weeks ago.

Q. Since this exposure?—A. I don't know that there has been anything exposed yet; since this controversy and illumination, this electric shock.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You may state whether you offered this stock to any of these gentlemen with a view to influencing their official action in any way.—A. Why it never crossed my mind to do it with that view, but simply just to get them to help me in the enterprise. I never dreamed that Senator Harris would take a bribe.

Q. I speak particularly of the last gentlemen named?—A. They were all in the same boat. I supposed they were all gentlemen or I would not have dealt with them.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. It seems that you confined yourself to one political party?—A. Yes, sir; I am a Democrat, and "birds of a feather flock together."

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Senator Windom is not a Democrat, is he?—A. No, sir; but there are some great and good men outside of the Democratic party, and Senator Windom is one of them. Well, there are a great many of them, you will find, if you know them as well as I do. But since you put the question I will explain. These gentlemen were for the most part my old associates in the South, and it was natural that a man should keep in his own family.

Q. Did you offer it to them because they belonged to any particular party?—A. Oh, no, sir; money has nothing to do with party. It was just a natural affiliation of men who were acquainted with each other. Most of the people are Democrats down in my country.

Q. So that there are some things into which party differences do not enter; business operations are separate?—A. I was never more shocked than when Father Rochfort, to whom I gave $100,000, went to the Bank of Washington, and Mr. White, the clerk, said to him, "Father Rochfort, you gentlemen just need one thing to make these things go," and he said, "What is that?" and Mr. White said "You should put Jeff. Davis on it." [Laughter.]

Q. As I understand this agreement, these gentlemen each were to receive one-tenth of the stock of the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your son retained four-tenths?—A. Yes, sir; a little more than four-tenths. There was $170,000 to come pro rata from everybody's stock.

Q. Not to come out of the other tenth?—A. No, sir; the other tenth was for Abram S. Hewitt, or for some other commercial or Wall street man. When we made the contract that $170,000 was to come off of the stock of all of us; it would come out of that fellow's, his ratio.

Q. I gather from the written agreement that this tenth was to remain the property of the company.—A. Well, it was the property of the company in this sense: Mr. Hewitt had declined, and we did not know anybody else to give it to, though I was in correspondence with C. P. Huntington, whose letter is in the book. But the company had sole control of it to dispose of it to the Wall street man, whoever might be selected. It was not, as I see from looking at the contract, expressly stated that it was to go to a Wall street man; but it said it was to be disposed of as the company directed, in that mutual confidence of men who understood the matter perfectly. However, as time went on, we got John C. Brown cheaper, whom he said was a Wall street man, a gold man. He came for $100,000, and it was proposed to sell some of the other, and Harry and I acquiesced, and it was sold to Senator Vest and some ladies, and to a man named Howard. Those are the only sales I know of.

Q. Do you know of any stock being sold by the company?—A. I know I got money for stock that was sold to Senator Vest, my ratio. I had but comparatively little then, but whatever it was I got a portion of the certificate I had.

Q. Do you know of sales to any other persons?—A. Yes, to a man named Howard, I understood. I do not know that of my own knowledge at all, but only through my son.

Q. Perhaps you can tell whether you received any dividends?—A. No, sir; I did not receive any dividends specially; I could not tell; it was all lumped together. I never received any dividends from Senator Vest or the ladies, for example.

Q. Did you receive dividends other than those arising from the sale of these territorial rights which you have mentioned this morning?—A. Yes, sir; we received from sales part of that $170,000 that was sold by the company.

Q. Was there $170,000 sold by the company?—A. I say a part of the $170,000.

Q. Was any part of it sold by the company?—A. If the $170,000 became part of the remaining sixth in its ratio, a part of that would be sold to Senator Vest for example, the six-tenths part I mean, which was to go to Mr. Hewitt.

Q. The one-tenth of the whole?—A. Oh, yes, sir; I mean to the sixth man; I got it confused.

Q. I understood the $170,000 was set out for your son?—A. Yes, sir; and to come out of all.

Q. Was any part of it sold for money?—A. Oh, no; that all went as a gift to these friends of ours. I say it "went"; it has never gone yet; I have never been able to get hold of it to give it to them yet. In the hands of Hunton & Chandler is a claim from a man named Price under an engagement I entered into three years ago to give him some Pan-Electric stock. I wrote to him that I would give him the telephone stock if they would get up my certificates, so far as they will go, and that is not anything more than a written thing by Colonel Young.

Q. The formation of this company and the allotment of the interests as you have stated was before the Presidential election?—A. It was.

Q. It was in the spring of 1883?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was before the nominations were made by either party?—A. Do you mean at the time we made the contract?

Q. At the time of the allotment of interests.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At that time had you any knowledge as to who was likely to be nominated as the Democratic candidate?—A. Oh, I had heard of speculations in the papers, but I did not know anything about it.

Q. Was there much said in the spring of 1883 in regard to the nomination of President Cleveland?—A. I think after he was elected Governor of New York by that overwhelming majority, I saw it adverted to very frequently.

Q. Was there anything said about that time as to the probable selection of Mr. Garland as the Attorney-General of any Democratic administration?—A. Oh, no; we said jokingly that he would be the next President and hoped he might be.

Q. Was he taken into this enterprise because of the probability of his being connected with any Democratic administration?—A. Oh, no, sir; how could he be? It was taken the year before.

Q. I do not think he could; but I ask you. I have an impression that I have seen it published in the papers that you claimed to have made Mr. Garland Attorney-General.—A. The man who said that wrote falsely. I never said such a thing as that, although I am weak enough in the upper story. Some one wrote to me from Baltimore to know how I assisted to make Mr. Garland Attorney-General, and I telegraphed back that all I had said was that I had contributed my efforts towards making Mr. Garland Attorney-General, and added, ambages longè sunt—it will take too long to explain.

Q. Had you anything to do with making Mr. Garland Attorney-General?—A. Precious little, I guess. I did my best, though, as the little boy said. I was about publishing a book, the second edition of a book in which I had eulogized Mr. Cleveland in contradistinction to the "Plumed Knight," and I naturally thought that the verses were worthy of Mr. Cleveland, and before Mr. Garland was made Attorney-General I dedicated the book to Attorney-General Garland, predicting in it that Mr. Cleveland would choose the wisest and best and purest of men to be the Attorney-General of the United States to reform the jurisprudence of the country.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. What was the date of that book?—A. It was entitled "The Plumed Knight against Governor Cleveland," or "Arlington," and I expressed in that dedication the hope that such a man being at the head of the Department he would render Mr. Cleveland's administration as illustrious as that of Edward the First or Justinian.

Q. Can you give the date when you wrote it?—A. I think it was about two months before Mr. Garland was made Attorney-General. I sent it to Mr. Cleveland, and this notice was published very extensively in the papers; at least I saw it in some of the papers in New York, and I hoped that it might contribute a modicum, something towards Mr. Garland's advancement, although I never alleged that it did.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. You spoke of him as Attorney-General in your dedication, you mean?—A. Yes, sir; I spoke of him as Attorney-General. I also made a special point to see Mr. Looney when he was going to Albany on some business as an elector and impressed on him to try and get Mr. Garland appointed Attorney-General.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You never have said, then, that you had Mr. Garland made Attorney-General?—A. Never, sir.

Q. In what you did towards that end, had you in view any advantages to be derived by the Pan-Electric Company from his position in case he was selected?—A. None in the world. Mr. Garland would be an incidental advantage, as he would be a member of my company, and it would render his name still more illustrious.

Q. There is a publication in the New York World, a dispatch from Washington, dated February 3, purporting to be an interview with you; do you recall it?—A. I cannot recall it.

Q. Allow me to read it, then. It says, "Dr. Rogers, the promoter of the Pan-Electric scheme, said to-day that the publication of so many letters from his book had annoyed some of his friends exceedingly." Do you recall that?—A. Yes; I recall that, and I got the correspondent of the World, who is here present, to put it into writing (lest he should die. I knew he was a true man and would keep his word, but I like these things in writing in the uncertainties of human life); that I gave this book to him with the distinct pledge that nothing of a private nature should be published and that the persons annoyed, as I heard, were Colonel Wintersmith and General Wright; that letters had been published that had nothing to do with the controversy.

Q. This interview, then, is authentic?—A. So far as you have read.

Q. I am coming to other parts of it.—A. I wish to say in that connection, in justice to the World, that their interpretation was that while there was nothing of a private, delicate, family nature to be published, that matters like Wintersmith's and Wright's letters referring to Pan-Electric had nothing in them that could injure anybody, and they interpreted their agreement with me that they had a right to publish them, and perhaps they had, though I regretted that these gentlemen should be annoyed.

Q. Did you state in that interview this, after referring to the case of Mr. Randall and Mr. Carlisle, "I pressed none of these gentlemen, for the first of the Senators and Congressmen—scores of them—were anxious to get in on what they called 'the ground floor,' and I only let in those whom I deemed fit"?—A. Yes, sir; I said that.

Q. Who were the scores who were anxious to get in on "the ground floor"?—A. I cannot give their names as scores. That arose from a conversation between Colonel Young and Senator Harris and General Johnston. He spoke of one score at least; he said "twenty of them have been to me to get hold of this stock, and want to get in on the ground floor, and I want instructions about it." Colonel Young was instructed to make sales of the stock, as stated substantially by the witness yesterday, and he represented there were at least twenty gentlemen who wanted to get in; that they were at him every day.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I understand you to say that he did not say who they were?—A. No, sir; I do not remember any names.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was it upon what Colonel Young had said that you based that statement?—A. Yes, and a general knowledge of it. I never have seen any who would not go in if you would give them enough.

Q. You made the broad statement here, without giving Colonel Young the inference of being the authority, that "I pressed none of these gentlemen, for the first of the Senators and Congressmen—scores of them—were anxious to get in on what they called 'the ground floor,' and I only let in those whom I deemed fit." You say you made that broad statement to the press and let it go out upon the authority of Colonel Young, without stating the fact in the publication that it was upon such authority?—A. Yes, sir; I did it without stating either of the two reasons. One was a general analogy, in which, whenever I offered enough, they went into it, and I inferred there were scores who would do the same thing, just as I say the sun will rise to-morrow.

Q. It was just an inference that because certain gentlemen had accepted stock there were scores of others willing to do the same thing?—A. Yes, sir; I can say without any fear of impeachment that the sun will rise to-morrow or the day after to-morrow without giving any one as my authority for it; I say so from analogy.

Q. And then because certain members of Congress did a certain thing you say from analogy that scores of others of the leading members of both houses will do the same thing?—A. I do.

Q. You put it on the same certainty that you do the rising of the sun day after day?—A. Perhaps there are different degrees of probability. I did not perhaps put it so high as the rising of the sun when I considered that they would go by their interests. Where they risk nothing, where it is an honorable enterprise and a large number of members of Congress and Senators had gone into it freely, I believed there were scores who would do so, and I reiterate what the World stated.

Q. I see it stated in this same publication, speaking of your son, "when he sought reappointment [as electrician of the House], it was for the sole purpose of advancing the Pan-Electric Telephone Company in securing a place where experiments could be made at the expense of the Government, and at the same time advertise to the world and future subscribers of the company the advantages of the various properties owned by the company." Did you make that statement?—A. No, sir; I think not. I think that the reporter misunderstood me very seriously, for I know the truth of the matter is that we believed that my son's antecedents in advancing the public interests and saving thousands of dollars to the Government would be advantageous, and I could not say that those gentlemen would not have that in view.

Q. It is not given here as having been stated by you?—A. I do not know that I did state that; I do not want to do injustice to the World.

Q. Do you remember using any language or saying anything which, in your judgment, would have warranted the reporter in stating that fact as I have read it?

Mr. RANNEY. The article does not state it in that language. Are you reading what purports to be his statement?

The CHAIRMAN. I stated that there was nothing here to indicate that the witness had made that declaration.

The WITNESS. I said something very like it, I can tell you. I did not say it was the sole object, though. I said it was one of the objects, and it was one of the prominent ones we all thought.

Q. You have stated here that that was not the object?—A. I have stated distinctly that our prime object was to advance the public interests. These gentlemen may have had, though, for their prime object, that they would not be bribed by their private interests to simply put their telephone in there, and I do not say, or did not intend to say, that we did not have the collateral object of the advantages of using the engine or tools and the paraphernalia of the electric department for developing our various Pan-Electric instruments, for that was an object.

Q. Was anything said by any of the gentlemen who were associated with you that warrants you in saying that they sought this appointment for your son with a view to the advantages that you now speak of?—A. As a collateral thing?

Q. Anything they said collaterally or directly?—A. Well, my son at a meeting stated to them that it would be a great advantage to us to put the electric light in; that we had a system of electric lighting which we had patented, and if he had their influence in the electrical department it would be an advantage in developing it and we could do it more cheaply than to buy the engines and dynamos ourselves.

Q. Who was present at that meeting?—A. It was a meeting of the board. Mr. Garland was there, Senator Harris and General Johnston and my son, and I think probably Colonel Looney was there, because he was very anxious about the electric light. I do not know it, though. I remember one thing that is probably in that very article, that I told the reporter about, that Mr. Garland had said in his dry way, a mere jocular thing. My son said, "I do not care a cent about the salary, the little salary that comes in, but I want to be in the Capitol for the purpose of developing these instruments," and Mr. Garland said, "Well, Mr. Rogers we will take the money." Every gentleman will understand it; he meant it merely in pleasantry. But with that before me I know we had it as a secondary object, and it was but a secondary object—our prime object was to do it, because we might not be so patriotic as these statesmen. But I am willing to do these gentlemen the justice to say that there is reason to suppose that the prime object was to advance the public service, and with Mr. Clark's report before them that my son had saved money every year to the Government, they would naturally wish to gain advantage, and at the same time develop these things.

Q. You have said in this interview also, that the company "never needed any legislation or wanted any for the Pan-Electric Company, and if anything was ever done in that way I never heard of it, except perhaps a bill mentioned to me by Casey Young for an appropriation for underground telephone lines." You may explain that, if Colonel Young ever said anything of that kind.—A. I do not think there is anything in that. The reporter wanted to know if there was any Credit Mobilier in the thing and I wanted to tell him all of it.

Q. We want to know all the facts.—A. Colonel Young met me, or I met him, at his rooms, and he said he would like for me to come up to Congress and look at a bill there about something in reference to underground wires running up to the Smithsonian Institution and other parts, and he said that the Bell people were trying to get hold of that by some kind of legislation, and he wanted me to come up and look at the bill that had been prepared there. I did not go. The next day he rather reproached me for not coming and I told him then that I would come up, but I did not; I was very busy. But that is the only thing in the way of legislation I know of, and that was legislation for running a little wire up here, a temporary thing, and I did not attach much importance to it.

Q. It is only fair that I should read the rest of that part of the statement so that it may go in the record. "He said that he had so shaped this bill that the Bell people could not monopolize the wires."—A. I think he said he wanted it so shaped.

Q. (Continuing to read.) "And requested me twice to go up to the House and look at the bill, but I was indifferent to it, and only know what I have stated. I wanted the Pan-Electric inventions to stand on their own merits. I wanted a company honestly managed, organized with names of well-known men, under a great charter, something like that of the East India Company, and floated by stock which would make all who bought it rich." You gave that to the reporter?—A. Yes, sir; I gave that, substantially.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Is that true as you have stated there?—A. Oh, yes, sir; it is true except that it is possible that Colonel Young did not say that he had formed it so. I think he said that he wanted it so formed. I think he went on to say that he, being in a telephone company, did not want to do it himself, or something of that kind, which implied that he did not want to do anything that was improper. I do not suppose that he did anything improper in it. I do not know anything about it, though; the records will show.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. From what you stated to the reporter, which I have read, did you intend to say, or did you say, that the Pan-Electric Company was expected by yourself or Colonel Young to derive any undue advantage from the position of certain of its members as members of Congress or otherwise?—A. No, sir; I said that was the only legislation I had ever heard of, and I did not know anything about that.

Q. Was there anything in the bill, as you understood it, which gave to the Pan-Electric Company an advantage over the Bell Company?—A. Well, it was something to prevent the Bell Company from taking an unfair advantage of the Pan-Electric; that was my idea.

Q. You have spoken of an American Postal Company?—A. That is the Beach Company.

Q. That was the New York Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who held the stock?—A. I held nearly all of that myself.

Q. Who organized it?—A. I may be said to have organized it.

Q. Have you any recollection of the first suit brought by the Bell Telephone Company in which the Pan-Electric was involved, or which was brought against the Pan-Electric?—A. I think the first one brought against us was the Pennsylvania suit.

Q. That was brought against the Rogers Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir; a branch of it. But they brought it also again against the Pan-Electric. They were the acting party. But they demurred to the bill on some ground, and the demurrer was sustained and they got out, and the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone were enjoined.

Q. You say that the defendants demurred to the bill?—A. Yes, sir; in some way.

Q. And the demurrer was sustained?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then, why was there an injunction?—A. The injunction was against the other company—against the Rogers Telephone and Telegraph Company, the Klotz Company.

Q. It was the Pan-Electric Company, then, that demurred?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. They demurred for want of service?—A. Yes, sir; I think so; and we were unwilling to defend it. I would say, in justice to our company, the Pan-Electric Company, that the reason we did not defend this suit was—

The CHAIRMAN. We will come to that. If you know what was the ground of demurrer or of the plea in abatement or any objection of the Pan-Electric Company you may state.

The WITNESS. I do not know whether it was a plea in abatement or a demurrer. I do not know what it was.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It was suggested that it was because of want of service on the Pan-Electric.—A. I think I have heard that, but I do not know.

Q. Then the Pan-Electric had no Pennsylvania domicile?—A. No.

Q. Was there anything said by the members of the Pan-Electric association about not defending the Pennsylvania suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. State now what was said and by whom.—A. Colonel Young was spokesman for the Pan-Electric people on that subject chiefly. He went on to Pennsylvania and came back persuaded that we could not have a fair hearing in Pennsylvania.

Q. Why not?—A. I do not know the reasons exactly, but he said the lawyers there who knew a great deal about their own localities advised him to bring the suit somewhere else; that the judges of Pennsylvania would almost certainly decide against us.

Q. Did he give any reason for that?—A. No, sir; I do not think he did.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Who said that?—A. Colonel Young.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was that anything affecting the integrity of the judges?—A. No, sir; I do not think it was anything affecting the integrity of the judges, but I think the judges had probably decided cases there, and he might have had an idea that they were prejudiced.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. They had decided cases in favor of the Bell telephone?—A. Possibly.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was the resolution reached?—A. The resolution reached was that if we defended there then it would become res judicata, and could be pleaded in any other suit, and that we had better let it go over so that that plea could not be made.

Q. And that the injunction would affect only the local companies there; that is your view?—A. Yes, sir; only the local companies.

Q. It would not determine the rights of the Pan-Electric?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Notwithstanding the Pan-Electric had agreed to defend the patents and hold them harmless under it?—A. Yes, sir; but there was so much prejudice against it that although I, too, for a long time urged them to do it, I was more interested in that company than the other, and I wanted it defended and was willing to take my chances. I first went to see Colonel Young and then Senator Harris on that subject, and he said he had been to see Mr. Garland about it two or three times, and he could not get the old fellow to move, and he thought that he would see him again and try to move him. However, time went on and I became uneasy lest we should have some heavy amounts of money to pay anyway to the Pan-Electric, for a clause of their agreement with me and my son said that they would not be responsible for any damages, or something like that. The president called a meeting, at which I was present, and we proposed to the Pan-Electric that they should bear all expenses of this suit in Pennsylvania, and that we would give our consent as far as a director could give it for them to do what they said they were going to do. I do not think I ever made a formal answer, but Colonel Young said it would be all right, that the damages would be merely nominal.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Where was the next suit brought against the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I do not think another suit was brought.

Q. Was there a suit brought by the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Yes; I have been told so, in Memphis, or the bill was prepared. I read the bill, but whether it was ever served or not I do not know.

Q. Before we come to that I will ask you whether a suit was brought in the western district of Pennsylvania to which the Pan-Electric gave any attention. A suit by the Bell Company against some local company?—A. The company as a company gave no attention to it, but some of the officers did.

Q. What did any of them say about it?—A. Well, Colonel Young was in the city, and the officer who told me was my son. He came to see Senator Harris about it, and Harry Rogers told me that Senator Harris said he had sent Colonel Young off to Pennsylvania without his carpet-bag, or something to that effect, in great haste to be there, as there was a suit to be tried. My son went to see Senator Harris with the Electrical Review, in which it was represented that the court-house was like a laboratory full of electric instruments, and Senator Harris said he had seen that in a newspaper, and had sent Colonel Young right off without going to his room, without allowing him to go to the Pan-Electric Company or to assist them.

Q. The Pan-Electric was not a party to that suit, I understood you?—A. No, sir. But there it was, so Colonel Young said, so he reported at the last meeting I ever heard of, that Van Benthuyzen heard for the first time that the Government could bring a suit to cancel the Bell patents. It was Van Benthuyzen who was chiefly interested in New Orleans, and who went to New York and wrote a letter to Mr. Garland—

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Colonel Young had suggested it at a meeting?—A. Colonel Young told us at a meeting that he sent his card to Van Benthuyzen, and suggested to him this procedure.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did Van Benthuyzen represent any companies which were parties to the Pittsburgh, Pa., suit?—A. I do not know that. It is the same genus of a company. It is the National Secret Telephone.

Q. You may state what Colonel Young said as to his interview with Van Benthuyzen.—A. I think I have stated that; that he sent in his card and told Van Benthuyzen about it.

Q. Then what did Van Benthuyzen do?—A. I only know the rest from what I saw in the press; it is not testimony.

Q. You need not state that. Do you know of a suit having been brought in Memphis by the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. I saw the bill; I do not know that it was ever filed.

Q. Who had the bill when you saw it?—A. I think Colonel Young gave it to me when he was at my house. It was a bill prepared by George Gantt and some other lawyers; I think Messrs. Wright and Young.

Q. Have you the bill?—A. I think there is a copy at my house. My son would know.

Q. Can you state how that suit came to be instituted in Memphis?—A. Yes, we talked it over frequently before it was instituted.

Q. Who talked it over?—A. Colonel Young, General Johnston, myself, and Mr. Looney. I have heard them all talk about it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. And Mr. Garland?—A. No, I never heard Mr. Garland ever say anything about it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. State what was said and when?—A. We were at the Ebbitt House—no, it was at Colonel Young's room in the neighborhood of the Ebbitt House, in which he said that the cotton-tie men had brought a suit against fellows who had slandered them by a circular some years ago, and that the man who had issued a circular analogous to this one Bell had issued against the Pan-Electric was mulcted in the sum of $100,000 and it was sustained by the Supreme Court, and that we should file a similar bill to that one of the cotton-tie people, to the circular of the Bell people which they had printed in Memphis, and it was understood that that should be done and Colonel Young went there and the next I saw was the bill. That is about all I know about it.

Q. Do you know what became of that proceeding?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. That, as I understand you, was a proceeding by the Pan-Electric Telephone Company against the Bell Telephone Company to restrain the circulation of a circular or paper?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did it go beyond that?—A. Oh, yes, sir; I remember it embraced the very validity of the Bell patents, and I remember it struck me that George Gantt had put the thing very strongly.

Q. You say you do not know what became of that suit?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Do you know of any other suits being instituted by the Pan-Electric Company?—A. No, sir; I do not think there was any other.

Q. You may state if you know what was said or done by any of the members of this association with reference to the institution of a suit by the Government to test the validity of the Bell patent. Give us all you know about it?—A. Well, on the 24th of May, that is, if a letter which I had is dated right—sometimes I make a mistake of a day—I have a copy of a letter written the 24th of May, which I sent to Mr. Garland, asking him as Attorney-General to institute proceedings against the Bell Company.

Q. Have you that copy here?—A. It is in among the letters. The preceding Sunday there was an article in a paper published in this town—not the Gazette, not the Capital, but in the Chronicle—the preceding Sunday to the date of this letter there was a very able article on the subject of the rise of the patents preceding the Bell. I think it was Monday morning that the 24th of May was. At the same time I saw the Washington Post, which stated that Attorney-General Brewster had ordered a patent for painting on glass to be investigated, or procedure to be instituted by the United States authorities in New York, and it now had been consummated and that the patent was canceled. That was in the Post either that morning or the preceding morning. I went around to the National Hotel and bought a half a dozen copies of the Post and Chronicle and cut out these two slips, as they went together, and inclosed them in letters to nearly all our Pan-Electric people; one to Mr. Garland, urging him to have the suits instituted, and one to Senator Harris, with these documents in it; one to Colonel Young, one to Colonel Looney, and one to General Johnston.

Q. You say that was the 24th of May?—A. That was the date of that letter.

Q. Was it 1884 or 1885?—A. 1885.

Q. Prior to that time had anything been said to your knowledge by any of the Pan-Electric Company with reference to the institution of a suit by the Government for testing the Bell patents?—A. I never heard them say a word about it.

Q. So far as you know, the idea originated with you as suggested by these publications?—A. Yes, sir. There was no great originality about it, but seeing these publications it occurred to me that as Mr. Brewster had done it Mr. Garland might do it, and as this was a very striking argument I thought I would inclose them, and I made an additional argument of my own in the letter.

Q. Did you receive any reply?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you receive a reply from any members of the association?—A. Colonel Young wrote me—

Mr. RANNEY. You need not tell what is in that letter.

Q. Have you the letter?—A. I do not know. There are about two hundred and forty letters there. He wrote acknowledging the receipt of my letter, as Colonel Looney did, and said, I think, that he thought Mr. Garland might feel a delicacy about it, being interested.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. The letter is the best evidence?—A. The letter will be there probably.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you have any conversation with any members of the association after that with reference to the bringing of a suit by the Government?—A. I talked with my son about it very often, but I do not remember any other person. He is one of the directors. Yes, I talked to Colonel Young once about it at my house, when he was on a visit here from Memphis, after he wrote that letter to me, and he told me that Mr. Gantt, of Memphis, had found a great many precedents for it, not only that of Attorney-General Brewster, but many others.

Q. That was after that publication which you speak of here?—A. It was after I wrote my letter.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Is that all Colonel Young said about it?—A. Yes, sir; I think that is all he said, that Mr. Gantt had found many precedents for it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you ever have a conversation with Mr. Garland about bringing the suit?—A. No, sir; never a word.

Q. Did you have any conversation with Senator Harris about bringing the suit?—A. No, sir; I wrote to him and received no reply.

Q. Do you know of a suit having been brought in Memphis in the name of the Government?—A. I have heard that it was brought.

Q. Have you any recollection of Mr. Young's ever coming to your house and telling yourself and your son of an interview he had had with Mr. Garland?—A. Perfectly.

Q. State what was said and when it was?—A. He said, enlarging on that thing about Mr. Gantt having found precedents for it, that the suits would now be brought and with good prospects, and I asked him if Mr. Garland had promised, and he said that he had.

Q. How did you come to ask him whether Mr. Garland had promised?—A. I thought it would have to come through the promise of Mr. Garland.

Q. Did he indicate that he had had an interview with Mr. Garland?—A. Oh, I think so. It was predicated upon that.

Q. Give his words as near as you can.—A. It is difficult to give the very words, but I can give you the substance. I think I would be more apt to give the words in that case than in most others, because I had felt great interest in that thing from the time I wrote my letter, and I said "Well, if Mr. Garland has promised, he will do it." Then Mr. Young said "But Mr. Garland will leave the matter or refer the matter to Mr. Goode." I saw in some paper that I had said that he would leave Mr. Goode; that he would go home to Arkansas and leave Mr. Goode to attend to it. I probably used the word "leave," but it was not said that he would leave it with Mr. Goode.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Is that the conversation of Mr. Young with you?—A. Yes, sir, with me. I said, "How would Mr. Goode act; would he do as well as Mr. Garland?" "Oh yes," he said, "I believe I would rather have Mr. Goode than Mr. Garland. He is a friend of ours, and it will be all right." That is the substance of it; I cannot remember the very words.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did he state whether Mr. Garland had given any reason for feeling a delicacy in the matter?—A. None at all. That was in the letter I think that he wrote me from Memphis, that Mr. Garland would probably feel a delicacy.

Q. It was not in this conversation?—A. I am not clear upon that. When my son made that statement the other day I could not recall that definitely. I remember the letter, and I thought my son might have coupled the letter with what Colonel Young told us at that time.

Q. In that conversation are you sure he said Mr. Garland had promised?—A. Oh, yes, sir; I am quite sure.

Q. You are not sure that in that conversation the words "delicacy of feeling" were used?—A. No, sir; not sure.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You are clear that Mr. Garland had promised it to be done?—A. Yes, sir; completely, as I understood. I will stake my salvation on it. I jumped up and said, "If Mr. Garland has said he will do it, he will do it." I was delighted, of course.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you remember anything else being said in that conversation about it?—A. We talked over the matter of these proceedings to some extent. He relied to a great extent upon Colonel Gantt's ability and great energy, and said that he thought with George Gantt there would be no doubt in the world of our succeeding if the Government went into it; that Colonel Gantt had been studying the matter very thoroughly.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Was there anything said about who was going to be employed by the Attorney-General?—A. I think it was just mentioned. He did not say there was any promise made, but he considered that Colonel Gantt would be, I think.

Q. Colonel Gantt was at that time your lawyer?—A. He was the lawyer in the suit which we were bringing against Bell in Memphis, yes, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did Colonel Young say that anything had been said to Mr. Garland as to who should be counsel?—A. Oh, not a word. I think I have given you just the conversation so far as it touches Mr. Garland.

Q. Did you have any other information from any of your associates as to any action upon the part of Mr. Garland?—A. No, never; not one.

Q. Do you know that the suit was brought?—A. I have seen it so stated in the papers; I presume it was brought.

Q. Brought in the name of the United States?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I understand you then, never from first to last had you any talk with Mr. Garland?—A. Never in my life; I never said a word to him on the subject of this suit.

Q. Did you have any conversation with any of your associates?—A. Never, except with Colonel Young about this Government suit. We saw them seldom, as we lived out in the country and saw them by accident at the time we saw Colonel Young. We were living in the country at the time.

Q. I observe a statement published over your name in the New York Tribune, dated September 29, in which you say that it was in the letter from Colonel Young that he said that the Attorney-General felt a delicacy in the matter on account of his ownership of stock in the company?—A. That is the letter I have been referring to.

Q. It was not, then, in the conversation?—A. No, sir, it was not; it was in the letter. It might have been in the conversation, and my son, I observe the other day, thinks it was. If it was, I do not remember that anything more was said about it.

Q. In your statement of last September you said it was in the letter?—A. I said so, and I say so now, and I have been saying so.

Q. Do you think it was made known to you twice, first by letter and then in conversation?—A. I think it was possible, from my son's great truthfulness, that he probably said it; but it could not rest much on my mind as he had already stated it to me in a letter.

Q. Which was first, the letter or the conversation?—A. Oh, the letter was the first.

Q. As I understood you, the first knowledge you had of any movement in the matter was when Colonel Young came to you and told you that the Attorney-General would proceed in the matter?—A. It was.

Q. Then could you have known before of any intention on the part of the Attorney-General to bring a suit or have it brought?—A. You do not understand the testimony—I will go over it again. It is my own stupid way of expressing myself. I see you are very bright. I meant to say this, that on the 24th of May when I wrote all these letters with the documents inclosed to Colonel Young, to Senator Harris, and to General Johnston, Colonel Young in answer to that letter, before we had heard anything from Mr. Garland, before Colonel Young could have heard anything from him on that subject, Colonel Young writes back that he thinks Mr. Garland would feel a delicacy in the matter.

Q. You did not state it in that way?—A. I intended to do so.

Q. You said "Mr. Young reporting to me by letter that the Attorney-General felt a delicacy in the matter?—A. I meant to say that he felt a delicacy in the matter, but I thought it was Mr. Young's inference.

Q. You did not state it so?—A. I did not mean that the Attorney-General had told him so, for he was in Memphis.

Q. Is not that a fair inference from this statement: "Mr. Young reporting to me by letter that the Attorney-General felt a delicacy in the matter on account of his ownership of stock in the company"?—A. I think it would be the inference.

Q. You say now, at the time you wrote that letter, Mr. Young did not write to you?—A. No; not that he had seen the Attorney-General.

Q. And he did not write that the Attorney-General felt a delicacy in the matter?—A. He suggested it as a supposition; that is my remembrance of it. The letter will speak for itself.

Q. We have the letter. Have you had any transactions with the Bell Company—any business transactions?—A. Nothing more than talking over their telephones.

Q. How is your Pan-Electric stock now held, not your Pan-Electric Telephone stock?—A. It is held by the company.

Q. As owners of it, or are you and your son together the owners?—A. I and my son have certain interests in it, but the stock has never been issued.

Q. Have your interests been pledged or hypothecated in any way?—A. Except what I have sold directly or what I have given away, I have now all my interest, all except what I have either given away or sold.

Q. That you have already stated in your testimony.—A. I do not remember to have said anything about that.

Q. You stated about selling or giving away large amounts?—A. Oh, yes, but I was speaking of stock in general when I was giving millions. I did not give so many millions of this.

Q. In other words, is any part of your Pan-Electric Telephone and Pan-Electric Postal stock in any way pledged to the Bell Telephone Company?—A. Oh, no.

Q. Was it ever pledged?—A. Never. None of mine was, and I never heard of anybody pledging any.

Q. Do you know whether the Bell Telephone Company holds any Pan-Electric stock?—A. No. I heard, somebody told me, that they had offered to buy Colonel Young's; that some overtures had been made to him and that he would not entertain them. That is the only whisper I ever heard of it. I do not know that there is any truth in that. But somebody said so, that he would not entertain it for a moment. I never heard of their buying it. There was a negotiation once—

Q. Has anything ever been said to you by any official of the Bell Telephone Company, or by any person assuming to speak for the Bell Telephone Company, with reference to these publications or this general controversy?—A. Never one breath by any mortal man connected with the Bell Company or any of the Bell people. They have never said one word to me or my son, that he has ever reported to me, and I do not think to any of us.

Q. Has any person other than the gentlemen of the press said anything to you about furnishing matter for the press for publication?—A. Never; my family have talked matters over, of what I should do.

Q. Have you ever received anything for information, for matters furnished for publication?—A. Never one farthing from any paper, or the Bell Telephone Company, or from anybody whom God ever made.

Q. It was just a voluntary act?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why did you furnish these letters which had passed between you and your associates?—A. On account of an article in the World, which represented me as being the head devil in a kind of Oakes Ames Credit Mobilier affair, and represented the Senators associated with me, and Congressmen, as being my own and my son's dupes.

Q. Did you furnish this material and make that publication with a view of vindicating the gentlemen associated with you, or maligning them?—A. First of all to vindicate myself and collaterally to vindicate them. In order to vindicate myself I had to vindicate them.

Q. In your view, then, the publication vindicated the gentlemen who were associated with you?—A. So far as I knew (there may be things I do not know anything about); I hoped that it would.

Q. The letters, if I recollect right, were furnished on the night your son and yourself had some personal difficulty with the other members of the association?—A. Yes, sir; but that had nothing to do with it. The only thing at that meeting which prompted the letters was this: After the difficulty had all been settled, I offered a resolution, the burden of which was that they should pass a vote of confidence in my son as the electrician of their company, or one of their companies, who had not imposed upon them by selling to them patents which he had previously sold, as had been charged, to the National Secret Telephone Company, upon which the National Improved Company was founded. I offered that resolution, and I think it was Senator Harris who said, "All lawyers know that if you answer one part of any series of allegations without paying any attention to the rest of them, you virtually admit the rest;" and on that ground he was unwilling to do it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Had something been published in the newspapers?—A. Yes, sir; just the day before. Colonel Young said there was a lie in every line. It was an article in the World.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was it a history of the affair?—A. It was a kind of history of the thing. It was in the main true, I think, but Colonel Young thought not.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. That was before the fracas?—A. Yes, sir; it was published before the fracas, and the resolution was prompted by an article in the Electrical Review. My son got up and said "Why, gentlemen, I want to be protected; I want this thing answered. It has gone broadcast from the press that I have swindled you gentlemen and have duped you into it."

Q. Was there ever a publication of that kind in the World?—A. No, sir; it was in the Electric Review, and my son wanted that resolution to cover it all. He went on to say: "When this thing was first started, years ago, you employed Mr. Marble to look into it, and Mr. Marble gave a thorough examination, and reported that there was no infringement between the first patent you sold and this last patent, on our suit about the infringement of that." I offered a second resolution that they should simply state that their agent, Mr. Marble, had been employed to sift the matter to the bottom, and there was no truth in the allegation of Mr. Rogers having sold the same patents the second time. But they refused to do it. I had got from several sources that these gentlemen were not so friendly as they ought to be toward us, and wanted to get rid of us, and I proposed to my son that he should retire, and I said to these gentlemen, "Then I can answer for myself." Upon that we retired and went to the World office and reported to them that I had a bag of letters, and that if there was any Credit Mobilier about the matter it would be at the service of the World. I went out home that night. The correspondent of the World said he would come out to my house and get them. He was to come on a certain train. He did not come on that train. I therefore came into town with my son and met him at the depot as he was going out on the next train. I thereupon went up with him to the World bureau and opened the letters before him, and I said, "Now here is the great bulk of the correspondence, and there are other letters scattered here and there. Here is this correspondence and the letters from these gentlemen for the last three years. Now, if there is any Credit Mobilier or rascality in any shape or form connected with this matter, take these letters and show it. I do not know what is in there; there are a good many private things probably, and you must pledge me your word that private matters will not be published," and he pledged me that he would not publish them; and, going over the same part again—

Q. It is not worth while. Had there not been some previous publications in the Tribune?—A. That letter which you read this morning I published on September 29

Q. You had furnished a letter to the Tribune before that?—A. Yes, a letter of mine that I had written to the Tribune.

Q. Had you not furnished letters of Colonel Young to the Tribune before that?—A. No, sir; I think that was the first one, and then the Tribune reporter came out and told me that Colonel Young had been interviewed—I had seen it in the paper, and he called my attention to it in the Tribune where Colonel Young said that he had paid for his stock, although I had said in my card that the stock was a donation to these gentlemen.

Q. My recollection is that there had been a number of publications in the Tribune before the history was published in the World?—A. Nothing from me except one letter.

Q. And that Mr. Pulitzer stated that the first publication in the World was the history. I may be wrong about that.—A. Well, I do not remember anything, but my letter of the 29th of September, that you speak of; and when he stated that Colonel Young had denied positively that my statement was truthful about donating the stock, I said, "His very letters will show it," and he said, "Can I see some of those letters?" I said, "I have no objection. There is a letter which thanks me, and says he is indebted to me for the whole thing." "Yes," I said, "You may see all the rest of them;" and some others have been found since.

Q. As I understand, you gave these papers for publication because your company had refused to pass the resolution?—A. No, not because they had refused to do it. If they had passed that resolution to sustain my son, there would have been no need for the publication, and they probably would not have been published. I thought he was probably to be crushed in the bud, and I intended to defend him at all hazards compatible with my honor and his.

Mr. MILLARD. I notice, in looking over our record, that it is not a full statement of our proceedings here; that it does not contain the statement of Mr. Casey Young, and the decision of the committee as to the manner of proceeding with the witnesses. It seems to me that ought to be made a part of the proceedings.

The CHAIRMAN. The stenographer asked me as to the propriety of publishing the discussion as to what the members had said on that subject, and I told him that was not necessary.

Mr. MILLARD. But it seems to me that Colonel Young's statement ought to be made a part of this case, and also the decision of the committee as to the manner of procedure.

The CHAIRMAN. The stenographer has the notes of Colonel Young's statement, made at the opening of the investigation, and will write them out.

Mr. MILLARD. I think it is due to Colonel Young that it should be done.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be done at the end of the day's session. This is only the proof-sheet of our record. The statement may be written out and submitted to the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. We want it verbatim from the beginning.

(The chairman directed the stenographer to write out his notes and submit the transcript to the committee.)

The WITNESS. I want to make an explanation; it is very short. Dr. Beckwith, who is present, understood me to say that when I went to New York on this expedition to get a new telephone into operation, he understood me to say that the Pan-Electric Telephone, as he expresses it, was a "new lot." That is precisely what I meant to say. It was a new lot of telephones I had gotten up, and we consulted Mr. Jacobs, as a lawyer, as to whether Harry's inventions belonged to the Pan-Electric or whether we were at liberty to go in with a new lot.

Dr. BECKWITH. That is true. That is my understanding.

Mr. OATES. I move that the committee go into secret session, and that when we adjourn it shall be until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee, after an executive session of 40 minutes, adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday, March 18, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.14 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. Dr. Rogers will take the stand again.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I notice some errors in the report of the testimony.

The CHAIRMAN. It was suggested yesterday that each member of the committee should make a note on his copy of such errors as he may find, in order that they may be corrected hereafter.

Mr. HALE. To whom shall we report these errors?

The CHAIRMAN. To the clerk.

Mr. RANNEY. I think if there is any change to be made in the substance of the testimony, the attention of the whole committee ought to be given to it.

Mr. HALE. The errors I refer to are not of substance.

Mr. RANNEY. The wrong name?

Mr. HALE. That is all.

J. W. ROGERS then resumed the stand, and his testimony was continued as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. I want to ask a few additional questions.

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, if you will permit me, I desire to make a preliminary statement in regard to two points of my testimony yesterday, with reference to which I think there might be some room for misunderstanding.

When you questioned me as to a certain report in the World, in which, if I remember rightly, it seems to say that the only object my associates had in commending my son to be appointed electrician of the House was to use the machinery of the Government and the appliances of the electric department, I went on to say that there might have been a higher motive, as my son had saved a great deal of his money in past years. Patriotic statesmen, of course, would make that the higher motive. Reflecting about it afterwards, I thought it would be understood that I had told the World that that was their motive. If I was so understood, I wish to recall that, for I was only explaining to the committee that there might be a higher motive. In my interview with the World correspondent I don't remember to have adverted to that at all, and it might seem to put the World in the position of omitting something that would be material. What I meant to say was, that they were not my words in that report; that that was not the only consideration of these gentlemen. I meant further to say that it was my chief motive. They may be more patriotic than I was. But my object was to get my son appointed in order to have the advantages of the Government machinery. That is one point.

The other point was, when you questioned me about the conversation with Colonel Young at my house, you asked me to recall what he said, or whatever he might have said upon that subject. On that subject I answered, I think, that there was nothing more material that I could recall, excepting that he had insisted that Colonel Gantt, of Memphis, had examined precedents and was thoroughly satisfied that the Government could bring the suit. Then we passed on to something else. That question and the answer, as they appear, might imply that I never heard any other conversation, whereas I was present at the conversations related by the witness on the stand who preceded me at Colonel Young's room. As we passed over that, it occurred to me that I might possibly have led your honors to believe that the only conversation I ever had with Colonel Young at any time was that one which I had related, whereas I suppose the question pertained to other conversations on that occasion or during that visit of Colonel Young's to my house.

Those are the two points.

Mr. RANNEY. Let that conversation be stated.

The WITNESS. I stated the conversation at my house, but not the conversation I had with Colonel Young at his room on a subsequent occasion.

The CHAIRMAN. State it now, sir.

The WITNESS. The colonel had sent out for my son to come in. I drove in with him in a buggy. Upon meeting the colonel he was in very fine spirits about the prospects of this Government suit; I don't remember the words exactly, but I know the general tenor of his conversation was that the Pittsburgh people had had experts in many parts of Europe, and that they had accumulated about $75,000 worth of testimony, which, in fact, he had referred to in the previous conversation, and that they wished to put that testimony against what they supposed to be some little influence which we might have. His way of expressing it, "Some little influence," impressed me, for I had an idea that although the $75,000 was a very material thing to us in the depleted state of our treasury, yet I thought our influence ought to be worth a very great amount to that company, and that the colonel was very modest in saying "some little influence which they supposed we might have." The general drift of the conversation was relative to that which I related yesterday, not, of course, going over the same ground, but merely adverting to it as a thing we well understood.

Mr. RANNEY. What thing?

The WITNESS. That the Government had promised us, or Mr. Garland had promised, that this suit should be brought and that it would be undertaken by Mr. Goode.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Had the suit at that time been commenced in Memphis?—A. No, sir.

Q. How long was it prior to that?—A. Some weeks; I couldn't fix the date. I know that I told some persons, to cheer them up about their stock, that the Government would certainly bring a suit, and within a very short time, and I think that the suit was brought probably two or three weeks afterwards.

Q. Mention has been made of a company called the American Improved—

The WITNESS. If you will pardon me, with reference to the conversation at my house I was going to say that immediately after the colonel left my house, my son James, a student of law here, who has been very much interested in that matter of Attorney-General Brewster bringing the suit, more directly interested in my efforts to get the Government to bring suit—my son James was a little indignant that these people in Pittsburgh and New Orleans (the Van Benthuyzen people) should get the prestige of bringing that suit. Said he, "Now the Pan-Electric will lose all the credit of that." That was in my dining-room, in the rear of the parlor, immediately after the conversation with Colonel Young. My son Harry was present, but he told James that he was not after glory now, but was after money.

Q. What suit did he refer to?—A. The conversation with Colonel Young was related to him. I refer to the suit that Mr. Garland had promised to bring, and as Colonel Young was saying there, it would be brought in the name of the National Improved Telephone Company. James said, "Then the Pan-Electric will lose all the credit of it, and the advantage it might be to the stock," or something to that amount.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you know why it was brought in the name of that company, and not in the name of the Pan-Electric?—A. I do not; there was no conversation on that subject.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In the name of what company was the Government suit?

Mr. RANNEY. In the name of the United States ex rel.

J. H. ROGERS. Will the committee allow me a word of explanation? My name is James Harris Rogers, and I have a younger brother named James, and he is the one to whom my father has just referred.

Q. Was there any arrangement that it should be brought in the name of the National Improved Telephone Company?—A. I don't think that was touched upon, any more than I suppose it must have been brought in their name.

Q. Your son James was fearful that it would be brought in the name of that company?—A. I don't remember that point, but they must have told him that it was going to be brought in their name, or he would not have been so stirred up on that subject.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did Casey Young state anything about Garland having it brought in the name of that company because he was more interested in that company than he was in yours?—A. No; he did not give that as a cause. That might be an inference of yours or mine, but it was stated that it would be brought in the name of that company. Van Benthuyzen was at the bottom of it. I supposed it would be brought in the name of the people.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was that the same company that had the testimony?—A. The same company that had the $75,000 of testimony.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. The talk about putting their testimony against the influence that your company had, was that before the Government brought suit?—A. Long before, several weeks before.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was the name of the company defendant in the Pittsburgh suit?—A. The National Improved Telephone Company. I am supposing that to be the name; I am not sure. I only know this, that the National Secret Telephone Company of New York, which was founded on ten of my son's earlier patents, gave leases, through Hine, Hume, and Dean, of this city, to the Pittsburgh people, and their name might be the National Improved Telephone Company, or some other name.

Q. Were you a party to the organization of the National Secret Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who organized that company?—A. Mr. Hine, an eminent lawyer of this city; Mr. Frank Hume, one of the most famous merchants here; General Thomas Ewing, of Ohio, and of silver fame; and Mr. Dean, a wealthy gentleman of this city.

Mr. OATES. I object to this line of testimony, because we are not instructed by the resolution under which we are acting to inquire into these matters.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought it might be important in the investigation.

Mr. OATES. My object is to save time and to keep within the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. It belongs to the same class of questions that have been asked, but the testimony will have to be closed on that subject if the objection is insisted upon.

Mr. OATES. Go on.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Was this company organized prior to the Pan-Electric?—A. Some two or three years prior.

Mr. HALE. I think it is totally outside of the resolution.

The WITNESS. The National Improved leased from the National Secret, and subsequently came into partnership with our Pan-Electric.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the view I took of it. They seem to have run together in some way. Were there any others connected with the organization of the National Secret Telephone Company?—A. There may have been other stockholders, but I think I have named about all who were on the board.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What was its capital?—A. $5,000,000, with the privilege of raising it to $10,000,000.

Q. How was the stock made up? Who controlled the capital?—A. My son furnished all the capital in his patents.

Q. How did these gentlemen named by you come into the company—by what arrangement?—A. We gave Mr. Hume and Mr. Hine one-half the patents we owned; I think about six at that time. Afterwards they got out others, making ten.

Q. You gave them $2,500,000 stock in that company?—A. This was before it was stocked. The general impression was that it might be about that. We gave them half of the enterprise, whatever it might be.

Q. Just like the Pan-Electric?—A. With this difference: Mr. Dean, for instance, paid us $10,000.

Q. For what interest?—A. His must have been one-fifth, as he was the fifth man. He paid $10,000 to me and my associates, Frank Hume, L. G. Hine, and my son. He (Dean) was the fifth man in. Then General Tom Ewing was the next.

Q. What did he pay?—A. He first paid for one-sixth; he paid for his sixth the same time Dean paid for one-fifth.

Q. $10,000?—A. $10,000; and then had an agreement under which he could, at the end of thirty days, get the option of taking another sixth at $20,000, or two other sixths. Yes, he got about half of it in that way—two-sixths for $20,000, and he paid us $20,000 at the end of thirty days, making in all of his payments $30,000 in money.

Q. And that was paid to you and your son, Hume, and Hine?—A. And Dean, the fifth man.

Q. Is that company yet in existence?—A. I think so; yes.

Q. A telephone company, is it?—A. Yes; and they leased to the Pittsburgh and New Orleans people, as I am informed.

Q. I was coming to that. You have spoken of the National Improved Company.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know by whom that was organized?—A. I have heard that it was organized by a man named Van Benthuyzen, of New Orleans.

Q. And as you have stated, that company acquired the right to use some of the inventions owned by the National Secret Telephone Company?—A. The original ten patents on which that was founded.

Q. How much of the stock of the Secret Company did you and your son retain?—A. It has been a long time, and I forget. The books could be brought in here. We had our original half, and sold out as I told you. I and my son had a very large amount of it, even after these sales.

Q. Can you state about what proportion?—A. I would have to guess; six or seven or eight hundred thousand dollars; but the books would show.

Q. Do you still hold that stock?—A. No, sir; I sold it.

Q. To whom?—A. It was a man by the name of Caboon, a projector in New York, living at the Astor House, a friend of Col. Thos. Ewing's, and who was subsequently identified with this National Improved Telephone Company. Caboon came to us purporting to desire to buy it, in answer to advertisements I had put in the New York papers, and I made a sale. The circumstances of the sale, if that is what your prompter wishes to know, can be stated very explicitly.

Q. If you wish, you may state.—A. There was formed what is called a pool. We bound ourselves in writing—all these parties whose names I have mentioned—that no persons in the pool should sell except to members of the pool.

Q. Who composed that pool?—A. These very names I have mentioned, all the original purchasers, Gen. Tom Ewing, Hume, Hine, and so on.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Did that pool include any of these men who are under investigation, Garland and others?—A. No; that was before their day.

Mr. HALE. Then I object to it. It is clearly outside the scope of our inquiry.

The WITNESS. As the gentleman is prompted, let me say that the point ought to be limited, and it will be, to an agreement to deliver that stock.

Mr. HALE. I object to it, unless it has some connection with these men who are included within the scope of our investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not, except as has been brought out already by the testimony.

Mr. HALE. It has nothing to do with these transactions?

The CHAIRMAN. No, sir; but whether any part of that money—

Mr. OATES. If we look to the resolution we will see just what we are instructed to do, and we shall see that we shall have work enough before us without going outside the scope of that resolution.

Mr. HALE. There is no end to such a line of inquiry if we allow it to go outside of its proper limits.

The CHAIRMAN. I have decided, unless the committee should determine otherwise, I will submit the question to the committee. Is it the sense of the committee that the testimony shall be pursued in the line we have been following?

Mr. OATES. Before a vote is taken, Mr. Chairman, I want to be heard for a moment.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon this matter?

Mr. OATES. Yes, sir; because this will be a precedent, and I would like for the question to be settled now as to how wide a range the evidence is to take in the case—whether we are to be confined in our investigation to the resolution under which this committee was raised, or whether we shall go outside of that and investigate the private conduct of people who may be incidentally connected with this telephone business. I have carefully analyzed that resolution, and would be thankful to any gentleman to point out, if he can, any other inquiries which this committee is instructed to make, or has any jurisdiction to make, than the following:

(1) We are to inquire into any expenditures upon the part of the Government incurred relative to the rights of the Bell and the Pan-Electric Telephone Companies to priority of patents, &c.

(2) To make full inquiry into the issuance of Pan-Electric telephone stock, or stock of any company springing out of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, to any person connected at the time of such issuance with either the legislative, judicial, or Executive Departments of the Government of the United States, and the amounts, to whom, when, consideration paid, &c. I presume that this part of the resolution was framed without a knowledge of the character and origin of these companies, because the language here is: "Stock of any company springing out of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company"; whereas, from the evidence we have there is no company that has sprung out of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company; but the Pan-Electric Telephone Company sprang out of the Pan-Electric Company, and I am willing to put that construction upon that part of the resolution, because I think that is what the Committee on Rules intended when they drafted the resolution, but, from lack of accurate information, got the minor proposition instead of the major.

Mr. EDEN. You are willing to construe that part of the resolution in that way?

Mr. OATES. Instead of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, it undoubtedly should read, "or any company springing out of the Pan-Electric Company, to any person connected at the time of such issuance with either the legislative, judicial, or executive departments of the Government of the United States."

(3.) As to what opinions, decisions, and orders relating to said stock have been made by any of the officers connected with the Government, and all the circumstances thereof.

(4.) As to what suit or suits, if any, have been brought in the name of the United States to test the validity of patents issued, or any other rights between the Bell and the Pan-Electric Telephone Companies, and not suits that may have been brought between these companies, or one against the other, in Pennsylvania or elsewhere.

(5.) As to what contracts have been made and money paid or to be paid for assistant counsel to the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General in such suit or suits.

(6.) As to the reason and authority for constituting the United States a party to such suit or suits, and all matters connected therewith.

(7.) As to whether the telephone companies mentioned, or their agents, officers or employes, have in any manner improperly influenced or attempted to influence officials or official action—now mark the manner—by or through the public press; and if so, by whom, when, what newspapers, &c.; and not whether they have attempted to exercise influence in any other manner, but only through the newspaper press of the country.

It is very entertaining to hear these gentlemen talk, but my time is too valuable to me to sit here and fritter it away during a good part of this summer when other matters demand my attention. I do not wish under such circumstances to sit here listening to things that are not within the scope of the inquiry at all, and of which we have no jurisdiction to inquire. And from this time forth I shall vote, whenever the question arises, to exclude and keep aloof from any inquiry that is not pertinent to the questions named in that resolution. We are here in an official capacity, and I have no interest in it, and no duty to perform, except as I am instructed by the House of Representatives in the resolution upon which is based the appointment of this committee.

Mr. RANNEY. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this resolution, or these resolutions, are of broad scope, and we ought not to confine ourselves to any technical, narrow view of them. We ought to comprehend in this investigation everything and anything that will throw light on the subject-matter we are instructed to inquire about, and one subject matter of inquiry relates to these suits.

Mr. OATES. What suits?

Mr. RANNEY. Suits brought by the Government?

Mr. OATES. Exactly, and I do not object to it.

Mr. RANNEY. Wait until I am through.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor.

Mr. RANNEY. "All the reasons and circumstances connected therewith" constitute one prominent subject of an inquiry. We want to find out whether that was brought for the public good, or whether it was brought at the instance and in the interest of private individuals or private companies, using the name of the Government for an improper purpose. If these companies that joined in it had an interest in it, all their transactions are proper subjects of inquiry, as bearing on the question of whether the people have been injured, and the influences that were brought to bear upon the Attorney-General to cause him to lend the name of the United States and furnish the services of United States officials at the expense of the country. All these companies seem to be interlaced, interlocked; they are acting in combination, each having purpose in this thing in connection with others; and this matter of inquiry, it seems to me, comes within the scope of the resolution.

Mr. OATES. I want to say, in reply to the gentleman from Massachusetts, that no man is willing to go more fully into this investigation about every matter we are instructed to inquire about than I will, but I am not willing to go outside and bring in irrelevant matter—matter which no court upon the face of God's earth would allow to be adduced before it. This discussion, which occurred three or four years before the organization of the parent company, out of which sprang this rival telephone company that got into the courts, has had no influence whatever, and there has been nothing done here to show that it had any influence, even the slightest, upon anybody in causing him to bring suit in the name of the Government; and, therefore, I think the objection is well taken.

Mr. RANNEY. We must take one thing at a time. I believe the world was made in that way. We cannot comprehend everything in one inquiry. It may lead to something else to furnish a starting point.

Mr. OATES. I am opposed to this inquiry about private parties, whether it leads to blackening or to whitewashing.

Mr. EDEN. I do not understand that the objection applies to making the inquiry as to any influence that may have been brought to bear by anybody upon the Attorney-General to bring suit. The objection is to going into the inquiry about stock issued by this company; that it did not spring out of the Pan-Electric Company at all. I do not understand that any evidence is objected to as to any company bringing improper influence to bear. Certainly, upon the question as to the issuance of stock, by the resolution we are confined to stock issued to officers of the Government and to influences brought to bear upon the officers of the Government.

Mr. RANNEY. What is the objection to ascertaining what relation this company had to it? You must confine the question to somebody in the first place.

Mr. EDEN. If there are any Government officials in it—

RANNEY. Perhaps influences were brought to bear upon Government officers. We are talking about men in the dark until we find out who has been influenced.

Mr. OATES. Every lawyer knows that it is a rule of evidence that you cannot bring in evidence which is irrelevant on its face until you show its relevancy.

Mr. RANNEY. We are on a voyage of discovery.

Mr. OATES. I am not with you on any voyage of that description, and do not propose to go on it.

Mr. MILLARD. "From the Pan-Electric Company or for any other purpose." The inquiry is very broad.

Mr. RANNEY. Anything else that is melted into this, as kindred drops of water are merged.

Mr. MILLARD. It not only includes all companies that may have sprung from the Pan-Electric company, but every other company that is in any other way connected with it. "Or for any other purpose," says the resolution, and it does seem to me that it could not be broader.

Mr. HALE. Were these gentlemen in any way interested in the Pittsburgh company?

The CHAIRMAN. I will state to the committee what led me to this line of examination. I would not maintain here that it is relevant to this inquiry, but it appeared from the testimony of Dr. Rogers or of his son, that this National Improved Telephone had been consulted or had taken a part with the Pan-Electric Company, or with members of the Pan-Electric Company, with a view to the institution of this suit at Memphis. Van Benthuyzen came on here to consult with Colonel Young, or with some of the company, and it seemed to me in that view that, with a view to show the character of the transaction, to show what was moving this Pan-Electric Company and its associates, it was pertinent to inquire what the National Improved Company was. That is all.

Mr. HALE. If the witness will state that any of these gentlemen had any connection with the Pittsburgh company, all right; but if they had no connection, and got any of the proceeds of the stock, it is not a proper subject for investigation by us.

Mr. RANNEY. As I understand, Dr. Rogers invited the Attorney-General to bring suit, and then one Van Benthuyzen made application to bring suit; for some reason or other it was shifted to Van Benthuyzen. It may be an important question whether the Attorney-General, being connected with the Pan-Electric Company, and being interested in it, thought it not wise in fact to proceed in their behalf, and so took Van Benthuyzen as a mere makeshift.

The CHAIRMAN. As I have stated, I will not maintain the relevancy of this evidence, and will refrain from further examination of that kind. If any other gentleman wishes to pursue it, the question will then arise.

Mr. MILLARD. You withdraw further examination on that point?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; and when the time comes for further examination of the witness by other gentlemen of the committee, the question may arise then, if at all.

Mr. RANNEY. What was the question?

The CHAIRMAN. I have yielded to the objection and withdrawn the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The objection was to the inquiry as to the National Secret Telephone Company and the National Improved Telephone Company, and was not as to what became of the stock.

Mr EDEN. Yes, that was the point.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I inquired of you yesterday what disposition you had made of your stock in the Pan-Electric Company or the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. Have you stated to us all the transfers you made?—A. I don't remember to have stated them.

Q. Will you do so now, if you can?—A. I will do so as near as I can from memory. transferred to Col. Robert Looney, first, in the Pan-Electric enterprise, a one-sixth interest. The agreement I made with him in writing was to sell stock in this original company—for we had only that idea at that time—as soon as the charter should be obtained and the stock put into his hands—one-half of the proceeds to be mine and the other half his; but whenever he should sell stock and give me money I was to supply stock in the place of that which he sold, in ratio—that is, my half—of which he was to make regular reports to me. Soon after that, this difficulty that we ad-verted to somewhat yesterday, came up in regard to the stock, and the charter was never obtained.

The CHAIRMAN. You need not go over that; I only want to get the transfers.

The WITNESS. Colonel Looney reported to me that he had made one sale very early in the transaction. In the development of the Pan-Electric Telegraph and Pan-Electric Telephone Companies—if you mean that—

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

The WITNESS. The telephone and telegraph patents were taken out and a kind of certificate which we ordinarily called stock was given by Colonel Young to Col. Robert F. Looney, entitling him to some $600,000 or $800,000—I don't know how much—you can count it. It was one-sixth of stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. With that writing in hand he tried to make headway in sales. The first sale he made was to Mr. Neely, a wealthy merchant of Memphis, to whom he sold $100,000 for $2,000. His next sale was, I think, to Colonel Boyle; I think he got about $1,000 at $10, but I am not clear on that; I stated that yesterday with some doubt; I don't remember the exact amount; it was something like that; that is my remembrance. The next sale I think he made was to the late Hon. Jacob Thompson, formerly Secretary of the Interior, to whom he sold $50,000 of this stock upon this certificate which he had—that is, that much interest in his certificate—for $5,000 cash, one half of which he forwarded to me by check, retaining the other half himself. Then orders were made by Mr. Neely, Jacob Thompson, and others, upon Colonel Young, bearing Colonel Looney's orders therewith; I understand that he sent to them a similar certificate to that which he had given to Looney; that they were entitled to so much Pan-Electric Telephone stock. The next sale that I remember was to the Rev. Dr. Watson, of Memphis, Tennessee. I think Looney got from him $2,500 in money and $100,000 in some kind of mining stock; I don't remember the name of the company, but it was $100,000 in mining stock. I do not recall any other sale that he made. The last time he was here he had made a quasi sale, as I believe I stated yesterday, to some banker, whose name he gave me, but which I forget, of $500,000 for $17,000. Colonel Looney at that time did not have quite that amount, and I had a certificate, that I have at home, and what I had in the hands of some friends, made about that amount; so he proposed to me to take the $17,500 for myself. He and Colonel Boyle came out to my house on that business. I declined the proposition. Whether he made any sale I do not know; he has not reported to me.

Q. Did any of this money received from Colonel Looney go into the company?—A. That is my own private interest.

Q. That is what I understood you. You stated that you transferred to Colonel Young one-sixth. Did you make any additional transfers?—A. Not that I remember. I don't think we ever had but one writing.

Q. To any other person, I mean?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. State to whom the transfers were made?—A. I transferred $100,000 to my wife.

Q. Who else?—A. I transferred some $40,000 or $50,000 to a gentleman in this city named Thomas Mitchell, for some land he sold me in West Virginia; and to Dr. Dean, I believe; at least, there was a man named McEwen connected with him; that transfer was made for some land in Georgia; the amount of stock transferred was $30,000.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to be captious, but I would like to know what this has to do with our inquiry. It strikes me that we ought not to be inquiring with reference to the issuance of stock to parties not shown to be connected with the Government in any manner whatever. It may not do any harm.

The CHAIRMAN. Then we had better go on with it, if it does no harm. It looks to me as if it were a matter of some importance, as showing the disposition made of the stock and the character of the enterprise.

Mr. OATES. We are not directed to inquire into that.

The CHAIRMAN. If we confine ourselves to the letter of the resolution we will get nothing; but, take the resolution in its spirit, and I think we may be allowed to go into such matters as explain the matters spoken of in the resolution. That is my view of it.

Mr. OATES. I cannot see how that explains anything.

Mr. RANNEY. We may trace that very stock into the hands of some official of the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not put it in that view.

Q. Have you transferred any of your stock to a gentleman named Cummings or Cummins?—A. I know a Dr. Cummings in Memphis, and I know one Cummings in New York, who is connected with a telegraph company as superintendent, but I never transferred any stock to him or had any dealings with him.

Q. Do you know a Mr. Cummings who is a member of the firm of Cummings & Baker, attorneys?

The WITNESS. Where do they live?

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know, sir.

A. I don't know any firm of Cummings & Baker. I remember a Presbyterian clergyman, of Clifton County, Tennessee, by the name of Cummings.

Q. Have you had any transactions of any kind with a man named Cummins or Cummings relating to the Pan-Electric, Pan-Electric Telephone, or Pan-Electric Postal stock?—A. None that I can recall in making the transfers I was going on to tell you about. There may have been a man named Cummings who was introduced to me, but I do not recall any such man.

Q. Have you pledged or hypothecated any of your stock?—A. None but what I sold or put into the hands of others for sale. I have hypothecated none.

Q. Did you not receive $500 from a gentleman named Cummings on a pledge of a portion of your Pan-Electric or some part of this stock?—A. Never. I know nothing of it. I don't remember receiving any $500 as a pledge. I had one transaction with Mr. Mitchell; the $500 may put you on the clue of what you are seeking. Mitchell engaged with me to take a block of Pan-Electric Telephone stock by a given day, for which he was to pay me, I think, $3,000 in money and about 30,000 feet of ground near Boundary street; and, as a pledge of his doing that, he put up for the option, one week, $500. When it came to the end of the week he said some people in Baltimore had disappointed him, and that he wanted another week, which I gave him. At the end of that week he was unable to fulfill the engagement, and the thing stands just so; it has not been touched, except I met him yesterday, and he said, "Ain't you going to give me a chance to make that $500 back?" I said, "O, yes; any time."

Q. Are you acquainted with any gentleman named Cummins who is connected with the Bell Telephone Company?—A. There is a man named Cummings connected with this same telegraph company that Robinson, of New York, and John B. Alley, of Boston, and several other parties, are connected with. What is the name of that telegraph company?

Mr. RANNEY. The Postal Telegraph Company.

The WITNESS. That is it. I know that Cummings. I will tell you all about him. I was introduced to him when I went to look at some of Elisha Gray's instruments, but I have not seen him from that time to this.

Q. Have you had any transactions with him?—A. Except I went up to look at some instruments, and was introduced to him, and walked out.

Q. Did you ever receive any money from him?—A. Never a cent.

The CHAIRMAN. That is all I have to ask.

The WITNESS. That was four or five years ago that I saw him, before the Pan-Electric was organized.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Ranney) can proceed with the examination of the witness under the rule.

By Mr RANNEY :

Q. You spoke yesterday about your associates being unwilling to have any stock issued by the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and have it put upon the market, for the reasons that you stated. I wish now to ask you whether they were aware of the sales of rights to these subordinate companies and of the issue of stock by them?—A. Of course it was part of the bargain that the parties should sell stock and give them one-fourth of it.

Q. Did they make any objection to the other men about issuing stock by subordinate companies and putting the certificates on the market?—A. No; in one case I preferred the stock to the money, thinking it would make it as valuable as money.

Q. Did they suggest that there was any difference between issuing stock of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and putting it on the market, and issuing stock of these subordinate companies who were using the same patents?—A. I see a very obvious difference. When any company issues its stock, the members look to it for the obligation; when a party who buys the rights and issues stock, that company which buys is the responsible party to which people look in case of disaster.

Q. But the basis of your companies was the validity and value of these patents?—A. Of course.

Q. They stood on the same ground in that respect?—A. Identically.

Q. And when these individuals simply signed certificates of stock in their official relations to the company, that did not create any obligation on their part, did it?—A. No further than it would affect a man's reputation being connected with a company that might fail.

Q. Can you see any difference between the moral responsibility in the two cases?—A. The moral responsibility is the same.

Q. I understand that when you sent the stock to Mr. Money you sent it by letter?—

A. I know I wrote to him, and I think I sent it by letter; I am not sure but I handed it to him; I don't remember.

Q. I wish you would state whether your negotiations with him were by letter or verbally?—A. Perhaps it will enlighten the committee if I enlarge upon that. Yesterday the question was about the American Postal Telegraph stock. I said we sent him $10,000 of that. I subsequently informed this committee that the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Company, when I tried to get Mr. Randall and Mr. Carlisle to go in with me, sent Mr. Money, I think, $50,000 as an inducement for him to come in and aid us in the enterprise of the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone. I think in other instances I sent it by letter.

Q. Have you a copy of the letter which you sent?—A. Hardly, in a case of that kind. In some important matters I would have copies, but I do not think that I probably took a copy of a letter like that.

Q. Have you any reply of his to your letters?—A. I am inclined to think I have replies from all the gentlemen whose names I used, because I wanted something to show that I had the right to use their names. I expect the names of all those gentlemen, or most of them, will be found among the papers.

Mr. RANNEY. I should like the letter of Mr. Money now.

The WITNESS. If it is in that book it is at your service; or if it is among the papers which we are still searching, I will produce it.

Q. It was the understanding that he was to retain the stock?—A. Yes, sir; it was the full understanding that he was to be a director, and he met these others at the meetings of the board.

Q. Did he buy the stock, or was it given to him?—A. It was just a donation, just as I gave it to these other gentlemen.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. I want to know exactly what company this was in?—A. The Rogers Telegraph and Telephone.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. It was one of the subordinate companies. How was it in regard to Mr. Manning? Was your correspondence with him verbal or in writing?—A. I think I wrote to him. My remembrance is that I wrote to a whole batch of them from the Continental Hotel, Philadelphia, and they answered me there, and I remember that I wanted to keep their letters, because when using gentlemen's names in a pamphlet before the public you want something to show your authority for doing so.

Q. Have you Mr. Manning's name to any letter?—A. It may be among the letters.

Mr. OATES. I object; Mr. Manning was a private citizen at that time, in no manner connected with the Government.

The WITNESS. I think Mr. Manning went out at the end of that session, when we were organizing the Pan-Electric. I was at the National Hotel with Walthall and Money, and my recollection is that Manning was out of Congress at that time.

The CHAIRMAN. He claimed to have been elected to Congress in 1883.

Mr. OATES. At first he declined to take the certificate and declined to be sworn in, but afterwards he changed his mind. The question was up for discussion in the House whether the certificate entitled him to a seat. Governor Curtin moved that he be sworn in, but the Speaker declined to administer the oath to him. The contest then went on before the committee, and was decided by the committee. I don't remember what date.

Mr. RANNEY. I remember the fact, but Mr. Chalmers got the seat originally.

Mr. OATES. Chalmers was seated.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Manning held the certificate, but originally declined it, and claimed the right to the seat prima facie. Mr. Chalmers protested, and claimed the right to the seat. The contest went before the committee, and was under investigation for a long time, and the committee reported upon it quite late in the session. Mr. Manning was then before the committee all the time, claiming the seat. He did not decline taking it in that way, but he declined taking it until it was decided that he had a right to it.

The CHAIRMAN. He changed his mind about it.

Mr. RANNEY. The election case had been for some days under discussion in the House, and when we closed the argument Mr. Manning stepped up with Governor Curtin, just before the vote was to be taken. It had been argued that the gentleman did not claim the right to the seat, and if he did not claim it he ought not to have it. If you will look at the case you will find that decision was not reached until very late in the session. My recollection is now—I may be mistaken—that it was near the end of the second session; it may have been the first. But at this very time, as I recall the dates, Mr. Manning held the certificate and had the prima facie right to the seat if he had asked for it and taken it, and his case would have been heard before the Committee on Elections while he was still claiming the seat. He did claim the seat to the last moment—claimed it through the discussion and until the discussion was ended, and claimed it then, but the Speaker refused to let him be sworn in.

Mr. OATES. It will take more time to send up and get the evidence than it will to let the testimony come in.

Mr. EDEN. Go on and ask the question. The objection is withdrawn.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you have your correspondence with Mr. Manning in writing or verbally?
—A. I did.

Q. Which was it?—A. It was in writing. I say that in every instance where I used a gentleman's name in publications I have his letter, but I do not remember otherwise whether I had it or not.

Q. How much stock did you give him in all?—A. $50,000 of Rogers' Telegraph and Telephone Company stock, and $10,000 of American Postal.

Q. Did he pay anything for it?—A. No, sir.

Q. It was a gift outright?—A. Just the same kind of a donation we have been talking about, for assistance in my enterprise.

Q. He did not give you any assistance, did he?—A. Oh, yes; he came to the meetings of the board; he was one of the company.

Q. Were you aware, when you had your dealings with Mr. Money, that he was chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post Roads?—A. Oh, yes; I knew that; I had been intimate with him.

Q. You knew that he occupied a prominent position in the House?—A. I knew that; yes, sir.

Q. Did you not know that he was a candidate for Postmaster-General under this administration?—A. When I made the donation he was not; he was subsequently.

Q. Did you do anything to further his interests in getting appointed Postmaster-General under the present administration?—A. No; I don't remember that I did. I would have done it if I could.

Q. In this conversation with Mr. Young, where he was to attend to the disposing of stock to members of Congress, your son testified to a meeting of the board where it was suggested that there were certain members who would like to come in on the ground floor, and it was left to Mr. Young. A. Yes; I was not present at that meeting. The conversation I related occurred up at Col. Young's room; it was on the same subject, and we were there together and talked it over.

Q. Do you know to whom, if any one, this disposal of the stock to members of the House was left?—A. Except as reported to me from one of the meetings, that Colonel Young had been authorized to make the disposal.

The CHAIRMAN. You need not state that.

Q. Were you aware yourself that Mr. Young was authorized—did you so understand—to determine to what members the stock should be delivered?—A. Some names were mentioned, but I forget them; and parties were anxious to buy. Colonel Dunn came to see me afterwards, and I tried to trade him some stock for a store he has in Arkansas, but the trade fell through.

Q. Did you sell him any?—A. No.

Q. As I understand, the stock was given outright, and not sold, to all the men you have named connected with the House?—A. I never sold any to anybody in the House.

Q. Do you know any one member of the House who bought any stock; that is, who paid anything for it?

The WITNESS. You mean the House of Representatives?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. No; I never heard of any, unless it was that man Howard. I don't know who he is; he might be a member.

Q. Who?—A. Some stock sold to a man named Howard.

Q. What you proposed to give Hewitt was proposed to be given outright, I understand?—A. Precisely; yes.

Q. What was given to Mr. Robinson was given outright?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. And what was given to Mr. Manning and Mr. Money was given to them outright?—A. Given outright, with the understanding that they were to come in and contribute their influence.

Q. I mean without money consideration?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that was the case with what you sent to Speaker Carlisle?—A. Precisely; they were all in the same boat you are passing just now.

Q. If there was any member of the House to whom you sold any, or proposed to sell, state who it was.—A. I don't know of one.

Q. Did you give the stock broadcast to members of the House?—A. No; I didn't cast it very broad; I stated yesterday about five or six persons to whom I gave it.

Q. You did not mean to distribute it among all the members of the House?—A. Oh, no.

Q. What real distinction did you make?—A. I stated the real distinction yesterday. I can give it over again. With reference to the American Postal I had my eye upon the New York market—the Stock Exchange. They had gone to great expense to get stock made for that. Of course, between you, on the one hand, and Mr. Robinson, Mr. Cox, and Mr. Beach, on the other hand, the distinction would have been that you lived in Massachusetts and they lived in New York.

Q. How about those in Mississippi?—A. The discrimination in that regard was stated yesterday, but I can state it again, that they were not like these other persons, new men to me, but they were old friends and acquaintances; and they also had an enterprise to run a railroad through Mississippi and make the pine lands very valuable. And they had been promised a great deal of capital from New York to effect that object, and I was anxious to get in with them, and they told me I should. I think the general manager told me that. Certainly he was to let me in, just as we say, "You must let me into that."

Q. Why did you confine your gifts to one party, with the exception of Mr. Windom? You spoke about him.

The WITNESS. You mean the Democratic party?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. Being a Democrat, and having been brought up in a country where nearly all the white people are Democrats, the men with whom I was best acquainted happened to be Democrats, and the chances happened to be that I would fall in with them rather than the Republicans. Windom was the only exception, I believe. Yes; Architect Clerk is another Republican to whom I offered some stock. I didn't do it because they were Republicans or because they were Democrats; I did it just on account of the fitness of the men whom I happened to know.

Q. Why did you select members of the House and men in prominent positions?—A. Because I wanted the biggest men I could get.

Q. The men who had the most influence?—A. Yes, sir; of course. I will say, in general terms, that in proportion to a man's political influence he has moral influence, and in proportion to the amount of political or moral influence that stockholders have will they give value to the stock, and that was the thing I was aiming at.

Q. Did any of your associates know that you were distributing that stock among members of Congress?—A. I never concealed it. Whatever I do I generally do on the house tops, but I don't remember telling any of them about it.

Q. Did you ever speak with Mr. Young about it?—A. No, I never said a thing to him about it.

Q. As you knew that he was engaged in disposing of stock to members of the House, how was it left to him to know whether you and he might not be working on the same men?—A. I was running my private interests, and he was running the company's interests, and I would not like to mix up the company's interests with mine, but I never asked him anything about it.

Q. Did you try to ascertain which of the members of the House he was dealing with?—A. No; I think there was one fugitive conversation in which some names may have been mentioned, but I don't recall any except Dunn, and I don't know that I would recall his name but for the fact that I was trying him myself. He said that Colonel Dunn was a man that would probably come in with us.

Q. Did he mention anybody else?—A. I think he did mention some other name, but I don't recall anybody but Dunn.

Q. Young was a pretty efficient man; did you ascertain whether he was successful in his endeavors to sell stock to members of the House?—A. I suppose he would have reported if he had made sales.

Q. Did you ever find out to how many he had sold except Dunn?—A. No, I never heard of any sale being made. If sales had been made I suppose they would have been reported to us and we would have got our slice of the money.

Q. I do not understand you to say that you know of any being actually sold to Dunn?—A. No. The reason I happened to remember Dunn specially, if you will allow me to make the explanation, is because he is the man who told us an anecdote, which is not evidence at all here, but is very funny. He said that when he was a boy he thought the woods were full of fish. I don't remember anything else that fixes in my mind the name of anybody else.

Mr. RANNEY. If you did not remember any others I will pass from that.

Q. You have been asked about the value of your Pan-Electric stock and the stock of the subordinate companies. Do you think that if the Government suit had been prosecuted and the Bell telephone patent had been vacated it would have affected the value of your stock?—A. Of course. I said to my son yesterday, "Wherever I have traded for lands I would cancel those trades now, and give them and a slice over in order to get back the stock."

Q. If the Department of Justice should succeed in destroying the Bell telephone patents—A. My stock would be worth par, I think.

Q. So that it was esteemed to be a great object?—A. Why, of course.

Q. Do you think it would have been an advantage to you if Corncross had passed the postal telegraph bill that was pending, and would it have affected your patents?—A. In this way: that if Congress had passed the bill which contemplated taking hold of lines and managing them by the Government, we would have had a new customer for new supplies of instruments. The Western Union, for example, has its instruments, which cost them hundreds of thousands of dollars, and they would not be likely to lay aside those hundreds of thousands of dollars to take up an altogether new set of instruments.

Q. I do not want to go into the details, but will simply ask this question: Did you not suppose that if Congress would pass a postal telegraph bill and establish a system of postal telegraphy or telephony that would be a great advantage to your interests?—

A. Unquestionably. We would have a rich customer who might come in and buy all our patents and interests.

Q. So that it would have been a great object with you men and your associates to have had Congress establish a telegraph and telephone system?—A. Oh, beyond question. I was looking forward to it. I found there were three bills put in, and I was going to have another put in myself, but—

Q. You did know that before Congress bills of that kind were pending?—A. There was Mr. Edmunds's bill before the Senate and two or three before the House.

Q. How long had Mr. Edmunds's bill been pending?—A. About two years ago that was introduced, I think.

Q. Was not that subject agitated before Congress when you formed this association and distributed this stock?—A. I think the stock was formed before that postal business had assumed the definite form of bills, but it was always in my mind to have a postal bill. In the pamphlet which I published, and which is there in the book, I say that Congress will some day pass a postal bill.

Q. Then you knew that, and you had that in your mind when you were distributing stock among members of the House?—A. I knew that, but I did not distribute the stock with a view of corrupting these great and good men, either in the House or Senate.

Q. I did not ask you that; I simply asked whether you knew the fact.—A. I knew that the fact constituted a factor in my finances.

Q. Why did you select men in Congress instead of prominent business men outside of Congress?—A. Prominent business men generally have a local reputation, while Congressmen are universally known, and I wanted this stock to go all over; I wanted everybody to get the benefit of it.

Q. Were you in the canvass in this last Presidential campaign?—A. A horse ran away and broke my shoulder, so I could not take the stump, but I wrote that book for Cleveland; that is all I ever did for him.

Q. Did you not electioneer in New York for Cleveland?

The CHAIRMAN. What relation has that to the subject-matter of inquiry?

The WITNESS. No; not for Cleveland. I did for Tilden and Hancock.

The CHAIRMAN. Just suspend your testimony.

Q. Did you have any recommendations from either of your associates?—A. Yes, sir; lots of them.

The CHAIRMAN. Recommendations for what?

The WITNESS. That I was a good, sound Democrat, and a man that could talk pretty well to the people; perhaps a man that was a popular speaker.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you propose to investigate that?

Mr. EDEN. I judge by the published letters that that was away back in 1880.

Mr. RANNEY. I mean since these associates were in with you, did you have any letters from them commending you?

The CHAIRMAN. Suspend a moment. I do not think this has any relation whatever to the matter under consideration.

Mr. OATES. If there has been an attack upon the witness—

Mr. RANNEY. There has been an attack upon the witness.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been no attack made on the witness here.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not wish to go into it to an unreasonable extent.

Q. Had Mr. Garland or Mr. Harris indorsed you in that respect?

The CHAIRMAN. The witness need not answer that unless the committee so directs.

Mr. HALE. At what time?

Mr. RANNEY. After the association was formed.

Mr. HALE. Indor-ed him personally or for a position?

Mr. RANNEY. I do not know what the fact is; I only wanted to inquire. If this investigation develops the fact that there was a design here to influence the officers connected with the administration, using their influence politically in that way, it has a bearing. It has already been gone into.

Mr. OATES. I do not understand that he has been attacked in this testimony. If his credibility is assailed by these parties, then, if any of them are entitled to credit—

Mr. MOFFATT. It seems to me that, in view of the relations existing between these parties, it is perfectly competent testimony to be given here.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose?

Mr. MOFFATT. For the purpose of giving the influence which he might be able to exert on the administration.

The CHAIRMAN. The administration was not Democratic at that time.

Mr. MOFFATT. It is now, and the inquiry is directed to the witness with reference to one who is now constituting a part of the administration.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand it, the tendency of the testimony is only as to the purpose of these gentlemen in giving commendatory letters to the witness at that time. That was before the election. There may have been no such purpose. It is too remote, at all events. I am in favor of the broadest inquiry, of which the committee must be satisfied, but I am opposed to giving it a political cast or turn.

Mr. MOFFATT. We all know that it has been charged in some of the papers that the witness and others did what they could to secure Mr. Garland's appointment as Attorney-General. If his acquaintance and intercourse had been such that he had any sort of influence or standing with reference to this matter, it would seem to me to be perfectly competent.

Mr. OATES. I would suggest that my friend from Michigan ought to have moved in the House to amend this resolution so as to get that in, to instruct us to inquire about it.

Mr. RANNEY. It is not a matter of form; it is a matter of using influence.

Mr. MOFFATT. I do not believe in being bound to the strict rules of evidence in investigations of this kind. We ought not to stick in the bark.

Mr. OATES. I want it settled. I do not want to inquire about everything in the world.

The CHAIRMAN. I have stated my own view. The determination is for the committee, if the question is raised by any gentleman.

Mr. RANNEY. I will pass it for the moment, but will come to it again.

Q. After Mr. Cleveland was elected were you a candidate for any office?—A. Yes; I made an application for some assistant attorneyship in the Department of Justice.

Q. Did you have indorsements for that?—A. Oh, yes; I had the best indorsements in the world.

Q. Who were they?—A. I think I have the names here in my pocket.

Mr. RANNEY. That would be the best way to get at it.

Mr. HALE. I suggest that if he gives names he gives the dates connected with them.

A. His grace the archbishop of Baltimore, primate of the United States, now his eminence cardinal elect; his grace the archbishop of Philadelphia—

Mr. HALE. I object to any names being given aside from those connected with this investigation.

The WITNESS. I give them as they come.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will suggest the pertinency of this inquiry, we can determine its relevancy.

Mr. RANNEY. The purpose is as one of the investigators, to get at the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. That does not give the committee much light as to your purpose in making this particular inquiry. I assume that we all want to get at the facts, but we must confine ourselves to the relevant facts. I cannot see that it is material or relevant to inquire as to an effort to get office under this administration unless it is intended to affect some matter connected with this inquiry.

Mr. RANNEY. It may affect the witness.

The CHAIRMAN. In what way, as to giving him standing, or how?

Mr. RANNEY. Perhaps it was a disappointment to fail to get the office.

The CHAIRMAN. If you say that you will give that as the purpose of the inquiry—

Mr. RANNEY. You have no right to put me in the position of espousing anybody's side or anybody's cause, or cross-examining or examining in anybody's behalf. I stand as an independent member of this committee, and I want the facts upon which ever side they cut.

Mr. HALE. I am in favor of the question if you confine it to the parties under investigation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts understands that I do not question his purpose, but he must state something to indicate its relevancy, or know its purpose. If the chair is called upon to rule upon the question we must have it in such shape that it may be ruled upon.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not make any charge, one way or the other, nor do I state whether I believe one thing or the other. It may be that his associates and those connected with him sought to get him into a position in this Department in order to further their interests. That may be another reason, I see. It may be that a bias will be disclosed on the part of the witness.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I just want to remark that I think the question put by Mr. Ranney would be pertinent for the purpose of showing the animus of this witness.

Mr. RANNEY. It is assumed quite too strongly that some of us are here as counsel, espousing one cause or the other, that we are trying somebody. I want to say again that I am here as an investigator. I do not put questions for any purpose, except it bear on one side or the other of this investigation. You must understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. I have heard no gentleman take any such position, unless it is the gentleman from Massachusetts, as to being on sides here, one side or the other.

Mr. RANNEY. Brother Oates says that he can see a way in which it is material. Now, if he says that he sees a way in which it is material, he ought not to say what my purpose is.

Mr. OATES. I take it on your own words. You said that one of your purposes was to show the bias of the witness. I say in that light it is material.

Mr. RANNEY. I have said that I had no purpose except to discover facts that might be on one side or the other, and personally I do not care on which side the facts are. I represent nobody but the public.

The CHAIRMAN. In my view, it is irrelevant to inquire as to his application for office under this administration and to any indorsements he may have had, because that does not relate to the inquiry. That is my view.

Mr. HALE. I propose myself, when it comes to my turn to make inquiries on that subject, to ask if he was recommended by his associates for a position in the Department of Justice. I think that is important. If he failed to secure his position after having made application, it might show an animus with reference to Mr. Garland or somebody else. In that case I think it would be proper.

The CHAIRMAN. I agree with the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. Hale) that if Dr. Rogers made application for that position and was indorsed by his associates in this enterprise, that is not only relevant, but it may be important.

Mr. RANNEY. Why stop me then? I have asked him who indorsed him.

Mr. HALE. He can single out the names of his partners very readily, if on that list.

Q. Have you your papers?—A. They are in that album.

Mr. RANNEY. Let us have the written papers; that is the better way to get at it. You produce a written paper containing an indorsement.

The WITNESS. It is in the custody of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. If any of your associates in this Pan-Electric Company, or any of these companies, indorsed you, there is no objection to your stating that fact.

Mr. RANNEY. I object to his stating it without the paper itself. That will show for itself.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Hanback is not present.

Mr. OATES. I saw Mr. Hanback a short time ago in another committee room working on these papers.

Mr. RANNEY. I think the proper way is for the paper itself to be shown, if we find the paper here, but we cannot undertake to find it now.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Can you answer the question outside of the paper?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you answer the question correctly?—A. Yes; as near as I can.

Mr. RANNEY. You need not answer it. If the committee please, this is one of those cases where I think the paper itself should be referred to, and, therefore, I insist upon the rule of evidence.

Mr. HALE. I am not asking the question now.

Mr. RANNEY. I should think you were asking a question.

Mr. OATES. I take issue with the gentleman's legal proposition. It is only where a suit is founded upon a paper and it is brought into that suit that you have to produce the original, and the witness cannot speak of its contents in the collateral way.

Mr. RANNEY. We will not discuss that question now. I am directing my attention to the witness. I ask him to produce the paper; I do not ask him to state what is in it.

The WITNESS. I will produce it if I can get it from Colonel Oates and Mr. Hanback; it is in their custody.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you get the office?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you apply for another office connected with the Departments?—A. Yes, sir; I began to think that Mr. Garland moved very slowly, and I sent duplicates of some of my recommendations to the State Department. I believe I wrote in my application that Mr. Garland had moved very slowly in the matter. My daughters were at that time thinking of going to Italy, and I thought of having a consulate at Milan or Marseilles, somewhere in that region, to help me pay expenses, and give me a kind of standing abroad.

Q. Did you apply to any other Department?—A. No.

Q. How early was that application made to the Department of Justice after Mr. Garland was appointed?—A. Very early; the papers will show the date, which I don't remember.

Q. Had the subject-matter of bringing this suit in the name of the Government to vacate the Bell Telephone patent been broached at that time?—A. I don't remember.

The first broaching of it was on the 24th of May, I think, in my letter to Mr. Garland on the subject, and the application will show the date at which they were made.

Q. I want to know whether you presented to the Department of Justice any paper of Mr. Garland's relating to the commencement of suit by the Government to vacate the Bell telephone patents?—A. I wrote a letter to him and mailed it, and wrote simultaneously to all our associates.

Q. Have you a copy of that letter?—A. I happen to have a copy of that letter; yes.

Mr. RANNEY. I suppose that would be one of the papers, the originals of which we shall have to ask to be furnished by the Department of Justice?

The CHAIRMAN. I have no objection.

Q. You did not hear from them?—A. Not directly. Colonel Looney went to see Mr. Garland on the subject of my appointment to some place, and he reported to me substantially—

Mr. RANNEY. That was an official communication, and you need not report what anybody else said to you about it.

The WITNESS. Mr. Garland wrote to me about it.

Q. Have you the letter from Mr. Garland about it?—A. I think I have.

Q. Where is that?—A. I guess it is among the papers.

Q. A reply to your application to have suit brought?—A. No; it was in the nature of a complaint I made as to what he should have said to Colonel Looney.

Mr. RANNEY. We are now on the subject of the application to bring suit.

The WITNESS. I thought you meant my application for office.

Mr. RANNEY. I am speaking of your application for suit to be brought.

The WITNESS. He never made any reply to that; his writing was upon the subject of the other application.

Mr. RANNEY. I am now on the application to have suit brought.

The WITNESS. I never had a scratch of the pen from him; nothing except those incidental things that came through Colonel Young.

Q. Can you give the date of the request made to have suit brought?—A. The letter was dated May 24; I presume that is the right date. You can get the date more certainly from this fact: that I had just gotten it from the mail, and the Morning Post has in it an account of Brewster's action in the premises; and a Sunday paper, the Chronicle—

Q. Right there, you have spoken before about those articles in the Washington Post and Chronicle. Do you know who wrote those articles?—A. No; I have no idea.

Q. Did you ever inquire?—A. No; I don't think I did. I was accosted several times about the article in the Sunday paper. People would say, "I saw your article in the Chronicle," and I was rather pleased that they should think I was capable of writing it, because it was an admirable thing; but I did not write it.

Q. Did you get any one to write it?—A. No, sir; not a word of it.

Q. Do you know whether any one of your associates wrote it?—A. I do not. I never heard.

Q. How was it about the Washington Post article?—A. The Washington Post did not refer to the Reiss or Bell patents, or anything of the kind. It was just simply an item of news to the effect that, pursuant to an order of Attorney-General Brewster, suit had been brought in New York, by the United States authorities, to vacate a patent for some painting on glass, which patent had been made so broad, or had been obtained through fraud, that Brewster's agents in the Department of Justice had canceled it absolutely. Seeing that, I thought ours was a much stronger case than that presented in the article.

Q. I do not care to go over your thoughts about it. I want to know, first, if you know who wrote the article?—A. No; I do not.

Q. That immediately preceded the writing of the letter to Attorney-General Garland, did it?—A. Yes; that stimulated me to do it just at that juncture. I went and bought a half dozen of each of these papers—

Q. Yes, you have said that. Did you know anything about Van Benthuyzen putting in a similar application?—A. No; I didn't know that until our last meeting of the board, as to Van Benthuyzen being instructed by Colonel Young about the matter. I had seen an article in the papers that he had applied to the Attorney-General, but knew nothing of it in person until Colonel Young spoke of the matter at our last meeting of the board.

Q. When was that?—A. About three weeks or a month ago. It was the day after the first article appeared in the World, which purported to be a history of the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. You had no knowledge of Van Benthuyzen applying to the Attorney-General, or of the application being referred to the Secretary of the Interior and being withdrawn?—A. Nothing except what I saw in the newspapers.

Q. We do not want that. You had nothing to do with it? Were you up in Pennsylvania when Van Benthuyzen was there?—A. No, sir; I might have been there when he was there, but I don't know that he was there.

Q. Do you know whether he had anything to do with the initiation of the suit brought against your company there by the Bell Company, letting it go by default, and injunction issuing?—A. No; I don't suppose he had; I never heard anything about that.

Q. You don't know whether he had anything to do with it?—A. I do not; I suppose not.

Q. He was connected with the other company?—A. Yes, sir; with the National Improv.

Q. What interest did you say your company, or any of your subordinate companies of the parent company, got in the stock of the National Improved Company?—A. Nothing in that stock, but we were to get $75,000 of testimony which they had got in Germany.

Q. You had made an arrangement with them?—A. I understand so; I understand that an agreement was signed; I have never seen it; my son Harris told me the agreement was signed.

Q. As you understood it, had that junction been made before you made application to the Attorney-General?—A. Oh, no; long after. This was done some time in July or August.

Q. Was it done before or after the suit brought by the Government to vacate the Bell telephone patents?—A. Before the suit was brought.

Q. Do you know how long it was after that arrangement had been made that the suit was instituted?—A. I think not more than two or three weeks from that time. I only knew of its institution through the press, but it was long after I had understood that it would be brought, and long after this agreement with Van Benthuyzen. The agreement can be produced, and will show for itself. I have never seen it.

Q. Do you know who has it?—A. The secretary of our company should have a copy of it, at least.

Q. The secretary of your company, whom you suppose has it, is who?—A. Colonel Young.

Q. He was the one that told you of the proposition?

The WITNESS. What proposition?

Mr. RANNEY. That they should put in the $75,000 worth of testimony, and you should put in—

A. That we should put in "some little influence that they supposed we might have."

Q. Do you know whether Mr. Goode had any stock in these subordinate companies?—A. I do not. I heard a rumor that he had.

The CHAIRMAN. We do not want rumors.

The WITNESS. I do not know anything about any stock except my own.

Q. Do you know who has any stock in that Improved company with which you made an arrangement?—A. No, sir; I don't know a man who has any of it. Hine and Hume were interested in it, and I presume they had stock in it. I think Mr. Nicholas Shea, in this city, has; I don't know it of my own knowledge; I have heard it.

Q. I do not care about that. Do you know of anybody in Maryland who had stock in this Maryland, District of Columbia and West Virginia Company?—A. I have never seen any stock in the possession of anybody; but Bradley T. Johnson was one of the officers, and officers of these concerns generally have a block of the stock.

Q. Who holds the books of that company?—A. They are kept, I think, by a gentleman named Gardiner, in the Pan-Electric Company office, at the corner of Thirteenth and F streets.

Q. Did you ever have any stock in that company?—A. I had only my pro rata of the one-fourth which they agreed to give us, but I never got it in my possession.

Q. You never looked to see to whom that stock was disposed of or given?

The WITNESS. You mean that Washington Telephone Company stock?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. No; I would have to look at their books to find that out.

Mr. RANNEY. We have not the books in here yet. We began at the other end of the investigation; we will have them by-and-by, perhaps.

Q. You have no personal knowledge?—A. None at all. Mr. Gardiner told me he had some of the stock; he is their secretary. He is the only man that I ever heard say that he had any. Yes; Harlan told me that he had some.

Q. Do you know whether any man from the State of Maryland, connected with either house of Congress, had any?—A. No, sir; I don't know any Congressman from Maryland.

Q. Have you any knowledge as to whether any of it was offered to any member of the House who was on the Committee on the District of Columbia?

The WITNESS. Any stock?

Mr. RANNEY. Any of that stock?

A. No, never.

Q. You had nothing to do with it in any manner?—A. Nothing at all, except my one-fourth that I suppose Senator Harris has put into our treasury; I have never seen it.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Was General Atkins an officer of the Government at the time when this organization was effected?

The WITNESS. Which organization; the Pan-Electric Company?

Mr. OATES. The Pan-Electric, in March, 1883.

A. I should think the general, like Manning, was probably going out at that time. The session had ended. You can tell better about it than I can.

Mr. OATES. It ended the 4th of March, 1883.

The WITNESS. He was in the preceding session. Whether that lapped over to the fall or whether he came back there I don't remember. I don't think he did. I am pretty certain he did not, because I didn't see him for a great while afterwards. I don't think he was a member of Congress when he went into this thing.

Q. You stated in your direct examination that he was the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations?—A. I think, so; yes, sir.

Q. Let me ask you if you are not mistaken about that. In the Forty-seventh Congress he was a member of that committee, but the House was Republican?—A. Oh, yes; I was mistaken.

Q. He was a chairman in the preceding Congress?—A. Yes, sir; I had known him as the chairman of that committee, and as a Democrat.

Q. In the Forty-sixth Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is the state of feeling between you and Attorney-General Garland at this time?—A. Well, sir, that is very general.

Q. Is it friendly or unfriendly on your part?—A. I expect he is very friendly to me. I wouldn't say I feel very friendly to Attorney-General Garland, or that I was very unfriendly to him. I think he has acted badly to me.

Q. Your feelings were wounded towards him because he did not give you an appointment?—A. Yes, sir; partly that and some other matters.

Q. So that you do not feel very friendly towards him now?—A. No; but I have no malice against Garland. I think that when he had opportunities to act generously he didn't do it, and I think he acted meanly to me.

Q. Did you write a letter that was published in the Tribune September 29, 1885?—A. I did.

Q. About him in this connection?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What do you say about the statements in that article; are they all true, as stated?

Mr. RANNEY. I object to that.

The WITNESS. You had better read it to me again; it has been written a long time.

Mr. RANNEY. I object to that examination on the rule of evidence. If you will let him read the article, you can ask him.

The WITNESS. You read it, Colonel, and I will answer seriatim as the sentences come on.

Mr. RANNEY. If the article is read, I do not object to your asking any questions about it.

Q. After you failed to get the appointment that you thought you ought to have, did you write any poetry in the nature of satires upon the Cleveland administration, and especially Garland?—A. (Producing pamphlet.) I have got it this morning fresh from Baltimore; do you want it?

The CHAIRMAN. You may put in whatever you want.

Mr. OATES. I am just asking for the fact. I will ask you to state the fact. I am not asking you what the poetry was, but simply as to the general character of it.

The WITNESS. I wrote the poetry.

Q. Was that poetry a satire upon the administration, and especially upon Garland as the Attorney-General?—A. It speaks for itself. The committee can have it read.

Mr. OATES. No; I do not ask for that. I just ask you to state.

Mr. RANNEY. I think it is taxing a man's modesty too much to ask his personal opinion on his own writings.

The WITNESS. Yes; I am abashed.

Mr. OATES. I am conducting this examination now, and I ask him for the animus and purpose with which it was written. (To the witness.) What do you say about that?

The WITNESS. What is the question?

Q. Was your poetry written for the purpose of ridiculing or satirizing the Attorney-General and the administration?

Mr. MILLARD. I object to the question, Mr. Chairman, on the ground that the poem is the best evidence.

The WITNESS. There it is.

Mr. OATES. That rule does not apply to everything that comes in collaterally.

Mr. MILLARD. I cite your own authority.

Mr. OATES. I ask the question merely for the purpose of showing the animus of this witness. It is not relevant in any other way. The doctor has already admitted he did not have the best of feelings toward Mr. Garland.

The WITNESS. The animus might have a great many complexions to it.

Q. I merely ask you whether it was a friendly or an unfriendly feeling?—A. Well, a man who will tell his friend unpleasant truths is sometimes the best friend, and does a friendly thing. I think that is a friendly thing that will help Garland if he will read it.

Q. I don't call for the paper, but merely ask you why it was written?—A. It states on the the first page that it is the first of a series of satires, to be followed by "Parthenon," "Whitewash," and "The Last of the Dog-carts." The question is answered on the first page. It is a satire.

Q. (Handing newspaper slip to witness). Look at this and see whether it is your letter in the Tribune.—A. That is all true, with such explanations as may be necessary. There are condensations in letter-writing that might need explanation. They are subject to several interpretations sometimes; but with my interpretation of that, which would be the natural one, I think all is true that is said in that letter.

The following is the letter referred to:

PARTHENON HEIGHTS LABORATORY,
Bladensburg, Md., September 29, 1885.

To the Editor of the New York Tribune:

SIR: My attention having been called to your criticism of Mr. Garland's conduct in bringing suit in the name of the United States for the Pan-Electric Company against the Bell Company, I wish, in justification of a faithful public servant, to give you a complete history of the proceedings, and believe that you will at least see the matter in a new light and give the salient points of my defense to your readers. I have been for several years attorney for my son, J. Harris Rogers, the inventor of "The National Secret Telephone" and of the "Pan-Electric Telephone" systems, and had been for a long time anxious to have a suit brought by the Government against the Bell Company to cancel their patent, which claimed "the art of telephony," known to have been invented by Phillip Reiss, of Germany. Three years ago I donated to Mr. Garland $500,000 stock in the original Pan-Electric Company, which carries with it $500,000 in the Pan Electric Telegraph and $500,000 in the Pan-Electric Telephone, making in all $1,500,000 (one million five hundred thousand dollars) stock in the company. This donation was made with the understanding that he and other prominent persons associated with us should assist in monetizing some twenty-five patents belonging to my son. All the parties incurred considerable expense in experimental work, renting of telegraph lines between New York and Washington, manufacturing, &c., but were soon reimbursed about $10 or $11 from sales of State rights (still retaining all their stock). Mr. Garland and Senator Harris had both given their written opinions that our patents did not infringe the Bell patent—a copy of which I send herewith.

Soon after Mr. Garland's promotion to the office of Attorney-General I applied to him to move against the Bell Company, but he declined doing so. I then by letter requested Senator Harris, Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, the Hon. Casey Young, and other members of the company to urge him further, but he still declined; Mr. Young reporting to me by letter that the Attorney-General felt a delicacy in the matter on account of his ownership of stock in the company. I had always appreciated his high sense of honor, but could not see how his private feelings of delicacy should deprive me and my associates of our right as citizens if we had a right to try the validity of our patent in the manner proposed. Furthermore, Mr. Garland being indebted to me not only for his $1,500,000 stock, but for my efforts in getting him appointed Attorney-General, I began to feel that he was not inclined to reciprocate the favors I had done him; but to relieve him in a measure of the delicacy referred to, I prevailed (through my agents) on the National Telephone Company—a small corporation founded on several of my son's earlier patents—to press once more upon Mr. Garland my favorite plan for canceling the Bell patents; and he, having no stock in this company, consented; but said (so the Hon. Casey Young reported to me and my son) that he would leave the matter with Mr. Goode, Assistant Attorney-General, and so he did; and accordingly the suit was commenced by the United States in behalf of a company in which Mr. Garland held no stock, and in behalf of citizens of the United States who had made out a prima facie case against the Bell Company to the satisfaction of Mr. Goode. How Mr. Garland or Mr. Goode could have acted otherwise as faithful public servants passes my comprehension.

Respectfully,

J. W. ROGERS,
Attorney for J. Harris Rogers, Inventor of the Pan-Electric and National Telephone Systems.

Q. Were either of your sons applicants for appointment to office under the Attorney-General or the administration?—A. No; not the Attorney-General.

Q. Were they applicants for appointment under the administration?—A. My son Harry made application for the electrical department, but he made no application since that I remember for any departmental work.

Q. He didn't get what he applied for, did he?—A. He did not apply to the administration for that. It is the same yarn we went over yesterday, about getting the position of electrician.

Q. I ask you whether either of your sons applied to Mr. Cleveland's administration or any of the Departments for appointment to office?—A. I think not; not that I know of.

Q. Who of the Pan-Electric Company or of the Telephone Company first suggested to get the Government to bring the suit, or who first spoke of it?—A. I don't remember any one of our company ever speaking of it except through my suggestions after the 24th of May. It had occurred to me in a floating way that such a thing could be done, and I would have been very glad to have done it, but none of our associates ever said anything about it to me.

Q. You were the first one to suggest that idea, were you not?—A. I don't know what ideas other people might have had.

Q. To get the Attorney-General to bring suit in the name of the Government against the Bell Company?—A. I am the first one I know of. I think I originated it, probably, but I don't know what other men might have done.

Q. It was soon after that you wrote the letter to the Attorney-General, that you spoke of a few moments ago, asking him to institute the suit?

The WITNESS. Soon after what?

Mr. OATES. It was soon after this suggestion which you made to your associates that you wrote the letter that you spoke of in answer to the question?—A. I don't think I had suggested it to them. I wrote on the spur of the moment—the very moment I saw these articles in the Post and the Chronicle; the papers were at my feet, and I wrote it without suggesting it to anybody; but I wrote that day letters to all of these gentlemen inclosing the same articles that I inclosed to Mr. Garland.

Q. Did you go with your son to the correspondent of the World about the publication of these letters?—A. I did, sir.

Q. And sanctioned the turning over of the "album" to him?—A. With the understanding that no private letter should be published—nothing except those connected with the charge of Credit Mobilier, &c., in this Pan-Electric business.

Q. What was your object in turning them over to him for publication?—A. My object was to make what I thought would be the best answer possible to the charge of a Credit Mobilier operation in Congress, of which I was supposed to be one of the chief instigators and promoters.

Q. In answer to the charge which had been made in some of the newspapers?—A. Yes.

Q. That was the way the charge had been made, as I understand it?—A. Yes, sir; especially in the World. It had suggested it in the article which we were anxious for our company to answer. The World was a paper that had given what purported to be a history of the Pan-Electric Company, and it mentioned the Credit Mobilier and something about my sons having been dismissed, and three or four things that I excepted to; but the history of it, as to the books, &c., was in the main correct.

Q. Did the proprietor or correspondent, or other person connected with the World, or any one else, pay you anything, or propose to pay you anything, for these communications which he furnished for publication?—A. Of course not. I went straight from our meeting when these gentlemen refused to make that answer, which I thought ought to be made to the people, defending my son. I got in my buggy and drove straight to the World, and told the correspondent I had a book of letters which would convict us all of rascality if there was any rascality going on, and I would bring the book and he could have the book. He said pursuant to that he would come out on the next day's train at 10 o'clock. He failed to come, and I brought the book in and met him at the depot, going on another train. I took them up to him, and he reiterated the promise to publish only those things that appertained to the Pan-Electric Company. I told him to just ransack the whole correspondence of three or four years, and if there was any Credit Mobilier, or anything that indicated anything improper, to let the World have it.

Q. It was for the purpose of vindicating yourself and your comrades from this charge of Credit Mobilier that had been made in the newspapers?—A. I would like to be a little more explicit about that than I probably was yesterday. My object was to vindicate me and my son, and as I could not do that without vindicating them at the same time, my parallel or co-ordinate object was to vindicate them. I was not so chivalrous as to go in to a fight just to vindicate gentlemen who I thought had not treated me or my son well, and I wanted to vindicate them in order to vindicate myself and my son.

Q. You were not influenced through any hard feelings toward these other gentlemen in doing that?—A. Well, it is difficult for a man to analyze his feelings with that nicety which some people trained in casuistry might exercise. I think my leading motive was to vindicate my son, and being of the stock of old Adam I think I had some little feeling toward my associates that would naturally arise with any man who thought his son had been treated badly by them.

Q. That correspondence that was given to the newspapers embraced, did it not, all the letters which you had received from any of these associates of yours touching the Pan-Electric and the Pan-Electric Telephone Companies?—A. Oh, no, sir; the very disorder of the letters will show you we are not that kind of business men that keep everything. These letters were ordinarily laid about loose in my study—what we had been receiving for two or three years. Some time ago my son began to gather them up as he could and put them into a book. I would answer that question in this way: They embrace the great body of the correspondence, but not all the letters. Some of them are probably in old barrels or trunks about my house now. I have had one of my children looking for them, and they exhumed two or three yesterday that I think my son brought in. Others may come to light. I think there are many others.

Q. You say some of these letters published you did not intend should be published?—A. That letter of Dick Wintersmith's I think had nothing to do with it, and I was a little pained at its publication. I was afraid he would be offended, for it looked like putting him unnecessarily before the public, but Mr. Crawford, the correspondent of the World, explained to me that he thought, as it was on the Pan-Electric matter and could do no harm to anybody, it was not violating a private correspondence. He said, in fact, that Dick had told Pulitzer that if he could write that letter for stock he would write him a better letter for money, showing he was not offended.

Q. Did you intend the publication of Young's letter of recommendation of you as a good Democratic speaker, &c.?—A. I didn't know it was in the book. I didn't know it until I saw it in print. I think I just threw the book down with about two hundred and fifty letters in it. I didn't read those letters over, and wouldn't read them for a Pan-Electric Company.

Q. Did you intend the publication of General Butler's letter?—A. Yes, sir; I sent it especially to be published.

Q. With reference to bringing the suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was Butler going to bring the suit?—A. Not Butler. He declined. He said he had too much business to attend to it, and didn't want to take a suit to be tried in the newspapers.

Q. Are all the original letters touching this Pan-Electric Company that you received from Mr. Young in the correspondence that your son has delivered to the committee?—

A. Perhaps not half of them. I have been receiving letters for several years, and my son but lately picked up what letters he could and put them in that book. I think it has been about six or eight months ago since he began to put them in that shape.

Q. Have you any others?—A. I think probably I have a lot of them. I have got my children looking through old boxes and barrels of papers now. My wife told me of one that was marked "Confidential" that she had laid away.

Q. There is a letter or letters purporting to be from you to Attorney-General Garland published here. Of course they must have been published from copies which you furnished. Were they actually written to him and mailed to him?—A. I don't know what letters they are.

Q. Those that are published?—A. I don't remember what was published. I will say this, that I read at the time I think nearly all the publications, and the letters that I have seen published met with my approval. As to that, they were letters that I had—

Q. The originals were actually mailed to Garland?—A. Oh, yes; though there might have been letters published that I don't know about, but that is true of what I have seen. I think I saw all the letters in the World and Tribune.

Q. I only inquire about those that were published.—A. There might have been some publications that I never saw.

Q. How much stock did you originally hold in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. In the ratio of four-tenths, minus Colonel Looney's one-sixth. When I say "me," I mean my son also.

Q. How much of that have you sold?—A. I have only sold about $400,000 or $500,000 worth. I have sold it short. I never sold for much more money than we went over this morning, but I have traded some of it away and given some of it away.

Q. In addition to what you already stated in your former testimony?—A. Yes; there was a number of transactions in which some of that stock went in trades. Most of those deeds came through trades in telephone stock, but the bulk of it was the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone stock.

Q. Have you ever hypothecated any of it—put it up as security?—A. No, not formally; I used to put a whole lot of stock, some million dollars' worth, in Nick Shea's safe up here. He is a wealthy man. It was not formally hypothecated; but it was a suggestion to him that whenever I wanted money I was a pretty wealthy man, and he generally let me have money, but I just asked him to keep those millions for it. It was not what you lawyers would call hypothecating; no bargain about it. I said "Put these in your safe and I will draw on you sometimes," and he generally honored my checks.

Q. Have you ever deposited or hypothecated elsewhere?—A. No, sir; I think not; if so, it does not occur to me. If you can suggest any place I will tell you the truth about it. I would have hypothecated it in a moment for money.

Q. Have you advertised your stock for sale in the newspapers?—A. Oh, yes; in nearly every paper in the United States, directly or indirectly. I don't mean particular advertisements formally, but I have seen it advertised in all the papers.

Q. Did you ever advertise to sell it at auction?—A. No; I don't think we ever did. I saw an advertisement here of some stock that Duncanson was to sell, and they called it "Pen stock," I supposed it meant "Pan," but I don't know whether it was sold or not. It was not mine, and I know nothing about it, except that I saw some "Pen" stock was for sale at auction and supposed that meant "Pan."

Q. Did you sell or give away the greater amount of it?—A. Well, I gave away the most of the Pan-Electric stock, I guess. It is very hard to answer that question without some circumlocution. To illustrate: In the Klotz case, he was to pay me $7,500 in money, to be expended, as we said yesterday, in the Lehigh Valley. When the injunction came the old fellow had paid but $2,500, and said he never would go back on his word and would pay us the other $5,000. We told him no; he might keep the stock and we would give him absolution for the $5,000. It is hard to say whether I gave it to him or sold it to him.

Q. You say you have advertised in pretty much all the papers in the United States. How many advertisements have you ever put into the Washington papers in this city?—A. You do not understand me as saying I advertised?

Q. You and your son?—A. No, not me; because it would take a hundred Pan-Electric companies to advertise as I advertise—long columns in every paper in the United States; but I have seen through these advertisements and through our suits that the companies have been advertised in vast numbers of papers, and I suppose in all the papers of the United States. My paid advertisements, for which I paid, were numerous. I advertised in three papers in Memphis for nearly a year, a column, and I advertised in three or four papers here about a column, and I advertised in a paper at Newport News, and I put a short advertisement often in the New York and Philadelphia papers. That is about it.

Q. Did the company authorize these advertisements or were you merely advertising your own stock?—A. That was the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone, but that company owned Pan-Electric, and incidentally advertised Pan-Electric stock, which, by the by, they ought to pay.

Q. Did the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Company spring out of the Pan-Electric Company, or was it organized independently of it?—A. Independently of it, but I transferred $1,000,000 of the Pan-Electric stock to the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone corporation, that fictitious body, that man called the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Company, became the recipient of $1,000,000 of Pan-Electric stock, and Klotz has it now.

Q. Was any officer of the Government in that corporation, the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Company?—A. I don't know. I don't think so. I can give you the names: Denver, Manning, and Money.

Q. You say that was an independent company, and the only connection it had with the Pan-Electric Company was some stock of yours in the Pan-Electric Company which you transferred to that company.—A. I say that was one of the connections it had. It had other connections.

Q. What were they?—A. One was that we were bound to them to pay them $2 on every instrument as a royalty every year as long as our corporation used their instruments. That was one. Another connection was that they were to defend suits. A great many things might be called connections.

Q. Then it was derived from the original Pan-Electric Company?—A. Oh, yes, sir; all our powers over the instruments came from them. The instruments belonged to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. I do not want to confuse the sales made under that corporation you are speaking of with those of the Pan-Electric. Those deeds will indicate to you as to all the contracts, &c. I got about $250,000 worth of lands, at pretty high prices, I suppose, for stock. I was very uneasy about it at one time. I got so rich on it, and our people had got the thing in such a jumble, that I was afraid we might get into trouble, and I went to Mr. Garland and got the whole thing written out properly. I wrote it out myself and submitted it to him, and he indorsed it, and we sent it to Colonel Young as a proper way of transferring all the patents, and so on. For a long time it was not in ship-shape, but I believe finally they got the transfers made.

Q. Have you seen published in the New York Tribune on the 22d of February, 1885, a letter from Casey Young to you?—A. I don't know the date. If you will read the letter I will tell you all about it.

Mr. OATES. We will find it.

The WITNESS. While you are looking for that letter I want to advert to a matter you asked me about. You passed from the subject abruptly, and I am afraid what I said might be liable to a misconstruction, without I explain it while it is yet warm. You asked me if I was friendly towards Mr. Garland, and I said I thought he had acted meanly toward me, but I didn't mean that that applied especially to his not giving me an office. I felt exceedingly disappointed that he should not help me, but, of course, I did not blame the man for that; but when he came back from Hominy Hall and made statements which seemed to reflect upon my letter of the 29th I thought that as a man he ought to have come out squarely and said that what I had stated in the letter was true. I believed it to be true, and I think that his silence in that regard has impaired him greatly in my estimation.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. What was the date of the letter you refer to?—A. The letter I wrote was dated the 29th of September.

Q. Last year?—A. Yes, sir. In writing to the President upon that subject-matter it struck me, from reading his letter, that he meant to discredit my statement in that letter of the 29th; I thought there was nothing to his discredit in the thing, and it would have been very easy, or at least a graceful thing, for him to have treated it with that consideration for truth which it deserved.

Mr. OATES. In order to save time, let Mr. Millard go on now, and I will recur to my examination when I can find the letter I want.

Mr. MILLARD. I only desire to ask three or four questions.

Q. The first question I will ask you is this: Do you know of any Republican member of the House of Representatives or of the Senate of the United States that has accepted any stock in the Pan-Electric Company?—A. No; I don't think I ever offered it to any Republicans but Windom and Clark, the architect, unless Beach is a Republican. What is he?

Mr. MILLARD. He is not a Republican.

Q. Colonel Oates has referred to a certain letter recommending you for some purpose; by whom was that letter written?

Mr. OATES. I did not refer to any letter.

Mr. MILLARD. Yes you did.

Mr. OATES. You are mistaken.

Mr. MILLARD. You asked him about it a few minutes ago, and I asked the chairman for the letter.

The WITNESS. The letter I had last was written by me.

Mr. MILLARD. I refer to a letter indorsing you as a Democrat, &c.

Mr. OATES. Oh, that was Casey Young's. I asked him why he published it; if that had any reference to the Pan-Electric Company.

The WITNESS. And my answer was I did not know it was to be published. It was in the book of letters.

Q. [Handing slip to witness.] Is this a copy of that letter?

A. That is the general substance of it.

Q. Is not that a copy of the very letter that Colonel Oates called your attention to?—A. I don't think he did.

Q. You don't think it is a copy?—A. Oh, he might have referred to this. I guess he did; but I don't know what he referred to.

Q. Is that a copy of a letter that Colonel Young did write?—A. It is substantially. I can't say positively without I have the two together.

Mr. MILLARD. Read it aloud, so that the stenographer can get it on the record.

The WITNESS. I would blush to read it. [Reads:]

"MY DEAR SIR: I think the services of J. W. Rogers, esq., of Washington, D. C., could be used with great benefit to the Democratic party in the present canvass, and I write this to suggest that they be engaged at once, and he be sent to speak in the Northern and Western States. He is a gentleman of much scholarly culture and extensive knowledge, and possesses superior powers of oratory. I know of no man who is likely to arouse more enthusiasm among the masses than he is.

"Yours, very truly,

"CASEY YOUNG."

That is the substance of a letter the colonel once gave me.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. You didn't give the date. What is it?—A. September 30, 1880.

By Mr. MILLARD :

Q. To whom was the letter addressed?—A. Hon. John G. Thompson, Washington, D. C. Thompson was managing that Ohio campaign. He was not here, but I went out there and spoke under his administration through the northern and western part of Ohio.

Q. And you took this letter with you. Did you go up into New York?—A. Yes, sir. At that time I only went into that country to fight Credit Mobilier against poor Garfield, and hence I felt more pain when they accused me of being in the same box.

Q. Mr. Oates called out the fact of the publication of this poem. I will ask you if you sent this poem, or a copy of it, to the Attorney-General?—A. No; that is just published. I got it last night.

Q. To whom was it dedicated?—A. You are referring to another one. Oh, my rhymes are as thick as blackberries.

Q. You spoke of a poem dedicated to three dignitaries; who are they?—A. Their names are there.

Q. Can't you state them? There is objection to the poem going in.—A. That was dedicated pursuant to an article in the Tribune, asking me to write a new poem dedicated to the three G's—Goode, Garland, and Grover—and pursuant to that I dedicated it to those three gentlemen.

Q. You have compared Garland to Lord Bacon?—A. Yes; a great lawyer.

Q. Was there anything else that suggested it?—A. Well, Bacon had some timidity in his elements that was not characteristic of greatness after all, and I think Garland has some of the same.

Q. You have quoted from another poem the following :

Little Jack Horner sat in a corner
Eating a Christmas pie.
He put in his thumb and picked out a plum,
And said "What a good boy am I!"

A. Yes; I put that in for such men as Beach. [Laughter.]

Q. How does the plum apply to Beach? What was the plum, and why did you cite this particular verse?—A. The context shows it.

Q. Is not that the telephone plum?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That is what I supposed. Does not "Jack Horner" refer to the Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Not to Beach, then?—A. No; but Beach can understand that. [Laughter.]

Q. You compare Grover to the Arkansas owl? Why make that comparison?—A. I don't think it is said there he is compared to the owl.

Mr. MILLARD. I offer this poem in evidence without further examination.

Mr. OATES. I object to that going in evidence now. Mr. Millard can wait for that until we go into executive session.

Mr. RANNEY. I think it is important to show the animus.

The WITNESS. It will show my feelings toward Mr. Garland pretty clearly, and if Colonel Oates wants the animus he will find it in there.

Mr. MILLARD. It has been made proper, I suggest, by the examination of Mr. Oates.

Mr. OATES. I do not object to your putting it in evidence, but only to your doing so at this time.

Mr. MILLARD. You are willing that it shall go in after awhile?

Mr. OATES. That which you prove by him you can offer afterwards. It is printed matter, and you have proved it.

Q. You spoke yesterday about the Attorney-General visiting your house some time during those transactions. Can you fix the date?—A. Well, I think early in 1883; probably in February.

Q. Was it prior to the signing of the articles in New York?—A. That was March 13, I think.

Q. How did he happen to come to your house?—A. Well, we had selected him in a meeting at my house as one of the parties to whom the $500,000 was to be given, and after that meeting he came in with Senator Harris and went up to the laboratory and examined the instruments as a party either already interested or thinking about being interested. I don't think it was said definitely whether he was a party or not, but he examined all the instruments.

Q. His visit there was in reference to the formation of the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. You have spoken of two meetings in the Judiciary Committee room in the Senate. As I understand, you attended one of them?—A. I think I attended two there.

Q. Was Senator Garland present at both meetings?—A. Yes, sir; I think he was present. He was present at those two.

Q. Do you know how the meetings came to be called there?—A. No; my son generally got a notice from General Johnston when formal notice was given to all the members, and I guess probably it was through a letter, but I don't remember.

Q. Was the meeting called there at the request of your son, so far as you know?—A. Oh, no; not at our request. I expect it was called there for the convenience of the gentlemen up there. I expect more for Garland's convenience than anybody else's.

Q. Were both of those meetings or either of those meetings prior to the commencement of the Government suit?—A. Oh, yes; long before the Government suit was thought of.

Q. Both of the meetings were held there prior to the talk?—A. Prior to the agitation of that business.

Q. You have referred to a letter that you received from Senator Garland that Colonel Looney had something to do with; what letter was that?—A. That was along some time in last summer or probably late in the spring; it must have been in the summer.

Q. Have you got that letter?—A. I think it is in the book.

Q. I would like to have it produced. What is it about?—A. Simply this: The amount of the letter is, without saying about what it is predicated upon, that Colonel Looney was not authorized to say that he did not intend to give me any appointment. That is all that was in Garland's letter. Looney had come to me and told me (and I have no doubt he told the truth, for he never did tell me a lie) that Garland had intimated to him that I was importunate, and that I couldn't get anything at his hands.

Q. Did I understand you correctly yesterday when you stated that Colonel Looney solicited of President Cleveland the appointment of Mr. Garland?—A. Yes, sir; he went on to Albany.

Mr. EDEN. If that is merely something that Colonel Looney told the witness I would suggest—

Mr. MILLARD. I want to fix the date. I am not going into that interview.

Q. I want to know whether you know of the fact of Colonel Looney's going to Albany for that purpose?—A. Well, no. Colonel Looney was going to Albany, I think, to advance the interests of Mr. Whitthorne, who was once the chairman of the Naval Committee, and I besought him to exert all the influence he could for Garland, which he promised me faithfully to do, and I have no doubt he did.

Q. Was that after Colonel Looney had become connected with this Pan-Electric Company?—A. Oh, yes; he had been connected with it a year or two.

Q. And was it after some of these subcompanies had been formed and moneys had been received?—A. Yes, sir. I interested Looney very much in him. He was a man of some influence with Mr. Cleveland. Then there were some combinations in the Senate and other places that we heard rumored, and so far as we could do so without violating privacy we kept Garland posted. Looney hired a carriage late one night and went to his office. You asked me yesterday, and it occurred to me afterwards I ought to have answered more fully. I don't want to say anything improper—

Mr. MILLARD. This is simply explanatory of the questions put by the chairman yesterday.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; it looks almost preposterous that an insignificant person like myself should be assisting, or to have intimated that his efforts had been expended for Mr. Garland. I want to put myself right, and not appear as a vain fool who thought he could wheedle the President. But I did what little I could in that way, through Looney and through my publications, and communicating knowledge of things that came to me, when I could do so properly, of combinations against Garland, which I communicated to him and which Looney communicated to him.

Q. How long was it before Mr. Garland's appointment that this conversation took place in regard to Looney soliciting his appointment from the President?—A. Oh, I think it was only a few weeks.

Q. Now let us come down to another fact in this transaction. It seems that Senator Garland at one time wrote an opinion in regard to the Pan-Electric inventions?—A. I happen to have that in my pocket. It was asked for yesterday.

Q. Have you a copy of that opinion?—A. There is a copy of it [producing paper].

Q. I don't want to go into the merits of it yet. Give us the date of the opinion, please.—A. It is there.

Mr. OATES. It is dated January 5, 1884.

Mr. RANNEY. Is that the opinion addressed to Myers?

Mr. OATES. Yes.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Who is that D. E. Myers to whom the opinion is addressed?—A. He is an Indiana man, from Indianapolis.

Q. Has he any connection with your companies?—A. He bought Indiana. He and Dr. Allen, in Indianapolis, bought the State of Indiana, but it was never—

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. What I want to call your attention to is this: Whether the two meetings in the Judiciary Committee room were prior to or after that opinion was written?—A. I think they were prior to that.

Q. That opinion was given in response to a letter or inquiry from whom?—A. From one D. E. Myers.

Q. Now, please tell us what you know about this man Myers.—A. Colonel Looney trumped him up somewhere as an enterprising fellow who wanted to buy Indiana, and represented that General Luke Wright, of Memphis, had known Myers to be a man of great energy, and that he had good business connections; and the company agreed to sell him the State of Indiana for so much money and so much stock; I forget the particulars of it.

Q. Did he buy it?—A. He was here to buy it when he wrote this letter to Garland, I suppose. The first I ever saw of these letters they were in Colonel Looney's possession at the National Hotel. Myers seems to have written from there, or somewhere here, a letter to Garland, without my knowledge, and there was Garland's reply, which was handed to me by Colonel Looney.

Q. You have seen the original letters, have you?—A. I am rather inclined to think that Colonel Looney had published this when he showed it to me. I don't think I saw the original letter.

Q. Colonel Looney had published this?—A. I think it was print. I think he gave me a slip of print.

Q. He had the opinion published, and he had also Myers's letter with it?—A. Yes, sir; with it. I took it up and put it into this circular then, to illustrate our enterprise in Pennsylvania.

Q. Do you know whether the sale to Myers was made after this opinion was rendered?—A. I think the sale was made to Myers after the opinion; yes. I don't know, though. No; I don't know about that. It might have been before or after. I presume, of course, that Myers got his opinion before he would put in his pledge for money.

Q. Your idea is that he bought on the strength of the opinion, in part, if not in whole?—A. Well, he bought on the value of the instruments, as one thing, and this Bell question being one that was uppermost in the public mind whenever you pronounced the word telephone. As a matter of course, it must have had a great influence with him in determining it.

Q. How much did he pay?—A. I don't think he paid anything. He was to pay $5,000 or $10,000.

Q. How much was he to pay?—A. I will have to guess at that. The books will show, or ought to show.

Q. About how much?—A. I think about $10,000 in money. It is in my mind some how that it was $7,000, but I am guessing at it, and a certain amount of the stock of the company they should form in Indiana.

Q. Was Myers here when he wrote that letter, according to your understanding?—A. I think so. I think Myers was with Colonel Looney at the hotel when he wrote to Garland.

Q. This opinion is published in connection with an opinion from Senator Harris in regard to the same stock, is it not?—A. I published it. There was no connection originally between them, but subsequently I found Senator Harris's opinion in the hands of General Denver, and as I had taken this Garland opinion from Looney I got Senator Harris's opinion from General Denver, of this city.

Q. What was your object in publishing the opinion?—A. To sell my stock in the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Company.

Q. Was the opinion used for that purpose?—A. Oh, yes; I told a great many people that the stock was worth, as I said yesterday, about $1\frac{3}{4}$ cents a pound if Garland and Harris should be wrong about it; but if they were right the stock would be very valuable; that they were only betting on the chances of beating the Bell people; that even if our instruments were very far superior, they would be of very little value without these opinions would stand. I did not put it altogether on those opinions; it was the opinion of a great many eminent lawyers; we had their opinions; I would seem to do injustice to these gentlemen to say that all rested on their opinions.

Q. You only published the opinions, as I understand, for the purpose of inducing persons to buy your stock—Senator Garland's opinion and Senator Harris's opinion?—A. That was all; the others were very voluminous, and these were very concise and to the point, and I had told people, as I said, when I sold stock, of the able opinions of Professor Norton and other scientists, and I would say: "If these gentlemen are right, your stock will be very valuable. If they should be wrong, you can get $1\frac{3}{4}$ cents a pound for it if you want it. It is for you to keep your eyes open, go and see all these gentlemen, get electricians to examine the instruments and apparatus, and judge entirely for yourselves."

Q. How extensively were these opinions published?—A. I had in this town four or five advertisements running about a year, a column, with these opinions in it, and in all the Memphis papers, and at Newport News, down here in Virginia. I don't think they were published any length of time in any other paper, but they went in the circulars; I have had thousands of these things circulated.

Q. Were they published and circulated to a considerable extent prior to the commencement of the Government suit?—A. Oh, yes; a year before.

Q. You published them wherever you thought the company would realize any benefit?—A. Yes.

Q. You published them at whose expense?—A. My expense.

Q. Were they not published at the expense of the company here and also your company in Pennsylvania?—A. No; I don't think the company ever spent a dollar in advertising.

Q. You spent it yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Without sending in any bill?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. A single question further, and I will finish. Has Senator Garland or any of these persons paid out, to your knowledge, anything more than you have stated, in the shape of incidental expenses, for the benefits they have received?

The WITNESS. I don't remember to have stated. Did I, yesterday?

Mr. MILLARD. I think the young man, your son, said eleven hundred dollars and something.

A. Well, some $1,100 or $1,200. They authorized us to expend as much as $1,500, and we paid the money out and they reimbursed us in their ratio the next fall, when they got back here to the next Congress; but subsequently to that we had some mechanical work done from time to time, and I think there was another assessment put on ourselves in addition to the original assessment, but I suppose the whole thing didn't go beyond $1,500.

Q. And they have paid their pro rata share?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. And that is all they have paid?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you if you know where Mr. Myers is now?—A. I do not, sir. I expect he lives in Indianapolis. Dr. Allen, who was in with him, was an old citizen, a wealthy man there.

Q. He lived where?—A. At Indianapolis.

Q. Do you know of Colonel Gantt and Colonel Looney being in this city at any one time?—A. I saw them both here from time to time. I saw Gantt during Lamar's investigation.

Q. Do you know of Gantt and Van Benthuyzen being here at one time together?—A. Nothing more than Colonel Young told me they were here. I did not see them.

Q. When was that?—A. That was some time in the summer. He came to my house at the same time of the conversation that I have been relating here about Van Benthuyzen bringing a suit, and he told my son to come up to the Ebbitt House that evening; that Gantt wanted to see him, and for some reason he couldn't go that evening and sent a letter up. Then my next son went up and saw Colonel Young the next day, and he said that Gantt had come a thousand miles to see Harry to consult him about the patents, but had now returned to Memphis, as Harry failed to come over. That was reported by my son when he came back, and he went to the clerk and found Harry's letter there, which Harry handed to Colonel Young.

Q. Was Van Benthuyzen here at that time, as you understood it?—A. If he was here then he staid over, because subsequently to that we were told that Van Benthuyzen was at the Ebbitt House, after Gantt had gone back to Memphis. He might have been here then, but he was here subsequently also.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You say that Mr. Young was engaged in the sale of stock to members of Congress, and you at the same time were engaged in giving it away. Did it occur to you that your giving away stock might interfere with his selling?—A. He didn't know about my operations.

Q. Did it occur to you that if he was trying to sell stock to members of Congress and you were so profusely giving it away you might interfere with the profits of the sales?—A. I would not have entered into the market with the same stock. It was different in this: That these were new companies. The Pan-Electric was already on a good basis, and the stock had a value; but my new companies were too young to bring in any hard cash, and I was trying to get them that credit which would make the stock valuable. I wouldn't give them any Pan-Electric stock then, because I could get money for it.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Did you ever know of any talk among your associates in regard to any legislation necessary to enable the Attorney-General to bring a bill to set aside the patents?—A. Nothing but what I saw in print in the papers.

Q. You never knew anything of any bill being introduced in Congress?—A. I saw in the newspapers that there had been such a bill, but it was lost in the Senate. In none of my talks did I ever speak of any legislation in that behalf.

Q. In whose name was that stock issued which the Pan-Electric Company received in consideration of their sales to these other companies?

The WITNESS. Do you mean the stock in those local companies?

Mr. MOFFATT. Yes; which they gave the Pan-Electric Company in part payment.

A. I never saw one of these certificates. No doubt they will be in evidence. I presume—

Q. You do not know of your own knowledge?—A. No; I do not know.

Q. Do you know of any legislation that was attempted or any bill introduced in order to obtain the patenting of any other inventions of your son's?—A. Oh, no, sir; nothing of the kind was ever done, I think.

Q. You never heard of a bill introduced by Colonel Young in the House and Senator Harris in the Senate?

The WITNESS. To promote the inventions?

Mr. MOFFATT. Yes.

A. Oh, no.

Q. Extending the law?—A. No. The only thing I ever heard of was the thing adverted to yesterday. It is in my mind that that was a bill in regard to some underground wires here; but I am satisfied no legislation was ever mentioned at any meeting of our board or mentioned to me on that subject.

Q. That was not the bill I refer to. In speaking of some conversation that was had with you in regard to the National Improved Telephone Company putting in their testimony that they obtained in the old country— —A. They had sent experts over there and spent $75,000, so Colonel Young reported to me.

Q. (Continuing.)—you spoke of the little influence that your company would have. What influence did you refer to?—A. Nothing was said further than I have said. I suppose he meant he was a man of some influence, and Senator Harris was a man of influence, and General Johnston was a man of influence, and all put together would make some little influence.

Q. The National Company was to bring the suit?—A. Yes, sir; I think so, and they were to put their testimony in against our little influence, and we were to join our forces and fight the Bell people.

Q. I see in this little pamphlet that you laid here a moment ago that you speak of Mr. Garland saying to a reporter that he paid for his stock. Do you know of your own knowledge what reporter he told that to?—A. No; I saw it in the paper.

Q. Do you know what paper it was?—A. I think it was in the World. He [indicating Mr. Crawford, correspondent of the World] shakes his head. Is a Tribune reporter here? I saw it in some paper that Mr. Garland had been interviewed and he said he had paid for this stock. I saw an editorial about it either in the Sun or the Tribune in which it spoke of it as special pleading. I remember that. You can find it.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. At the time you authorized this publication in the World, whenever it was, had you or had you not at that time disposed of the bulk of your stock in this Pan-Electric Company?—A. I don't think there was anything published in the World in the fall.

Q. I speak of the time when these charges were first made in the World through your communications to the reporter here.—A. I think they were only made about a month ago.

Q. At that time had you not disposed of the bulk of your stock in this Pan-Electric Company in some way, either by gifts or sale, or hypothecation?—A. I disposed of the bulk of it the first day to my associates.

Q. I mean the bulk of what you retained yourself.—A. I had still about $400,000 or $500,000 worth, and have got that yet.

Q. Is that in bank, and are you drawing money on it?—A. Oh, no; that is at my house.

Q. You have retained, then, $400,000 or $500,000 worth out of how many million?—A. I think originally there were two million.

Q. And you retained four-tenths, did you not?—A. Four-tenths, yes, sir.

Q. The capital stock was five million?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you retained about one-quarter of your stock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I will ask you to state whether or not Mr. Garland ever refused to recommend you for office?—A. He said not, in a letter to me. Colonel Looney had impressed me with the idea that he had; but I don't think he ever refused me, for Colonel Looney told me subsequently—

Q. Did he ever recommend you for office?—A. I don't know that he ever did.

Q. Did you not complain that he had failed or refused to do something for you in that direction?—A. I don't remember. I would do it now.

Q. Was not that your feeling at that time; that he had failed to assist you in getting a position?—A. Yes; that is the feeling of every man who can't get the thing he wants.

Q. Had you applied to him for assistance in obtaining some position here?—A. I wouldn't ask him for any assistance. I simply sent in my recommendations, as any other applicant for office would do.

Q. Did you ask him to sign a recommendation?—A. No; I never asked him to do that.

Q. Did you ask any of your associates to sign a recommendation?—A. Yes, sir; lots of them.

Q. Did you ask Senator Harris?—A. Yes.

Q. Did he sign it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For what position?—A. For some position in the Department of Justice. It was not very definite. The petition is there.

Q. Was the position named that you wanted?—A. I think it was some position of attorneyship in the Department of Justice. That is my remembrance.

Q. Was it a law clerkship?—A. No; I didn't want to have a law clerkship. I wanted to be some sort of assistant attorney.

Q. Does the petition name the position you wanted?—A. I don't think it does, but it will speak for itself.

Q. Then you did not designate any particular office that you wanted, but you wanted some position in the Department of Justice?—A. Yes; anything I could get that was not a clerkship. I wouldn't write with a quill for all the money there is.

Q. When you failed to get that position, whatever it was, weren't you inclined to complain?—A. I didn't complain of anybody; I felt disappointed.

Q. Did you not make any complaints against these parties, and say they had failed to do what they ought to have done for you?—A. I don't say they ought to have done it. I never said so. Garland was the best judge of that. I don't remember of making a complaint. I would naturally say that a man who had been associated with me in business, and who, in my enterprise had made money, and who had been very friendly, ought to have helped me in the matter if I was worthy of it. It occurs to me I have said that a man recommended by leading members of the bar where he had lived for ten years, by archbishops and bishops of the United States, and by many learned lawyers in Congress and in the Senate, was in such a position that Mr. Garland would be thoroughly protected, if he felt friendly to me, and should give me such a position with such recommendation.

Q. And you were inclined to charge your failure to Senator Garland; was not that true?—A. I have just said that, for he could have given it to me with the turn of his hand.

Q. Did you blame these other gentlemen for your failure—Senator Harris and others?—A. No; I never blamed them.

Q. You charged it all to Senator Garland?—A. I did not charge it to any of them. I did not charge it to him. It has never been charged.

Q. Did you not think he had failed to do his duty?—A. I knew, as a matter of fact, as the sun shines, that he did not assist me; that is all.

Q. Did you censure him or feel unkindly to him on that account?—A. I felt disappointed, just as you do when you ask for something at the White House and they don't give it to you.

Q. You expected something through Garland, and did not get it and therefore felt unkindly?—A. I felt just as you and other gentlemen feel every day when they are kind of kicked at the White House.

Q. Did that feeling have anything to do with your authorizing these publications? The WITNESS. What publications?

Mr. HALE. The publications in the World.

A. No; I would have published them if the heavens had fallen, or Garland had been dead or at Hominy Hall.

Q. That was with the view of vindication?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For a different motive?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To vindicate yourself?—A. To vindicate my son and myself.

Q. Was there any other purpose or object in the thing; retaliation or revenge on these gentlemen in making these publications?—A. No. Possibly, as I said just now, you cannot always exactly analyze your feelings, and I have got a considerable amount of the old Adam in me, and I think very likely I didn't feel as tender and delicate toward those gentlemen as I did three years ago.

Q. You heard your son's testimony the other day?—A. I heard part of his testimony.

Q. Did you hear him say that one object was to retaliate on these men for some supposed or fancied injury?—A. I don't know as I did. I think probably he does not know the language as well as I do or he would not say "retaliate." There is no lex talionis with either of us.

Mr. J. HARRIS ROGERS. I never used that word.

Q. Did you hear the word he used?—A. I don't remember; the reporter can read it.

Q. "Retaliation" or "revenge," or something of that kind?—A. I don't remember it; I remember he said in that connection he had no malice.

Q. You think you had no motive of that sort?—A. "A motive of that sort" is so general I would say yes and no.

Q. Didn't you claim that these associates of yours had failed to carry out the original plan by organizing a stock company and issuing the stock?—A. I did; yes, sir; and that was the foundation of the entire controversy.

Q. And for that reason they were no longer entitled to the stock they still held in the company?—A. That is a question of law.

Q. Did you not claim that?—A. It is in the bill.

Q. I am not talking about your bill. Did you file a bill?—A. I prepared a bill.

Q. Is it filed?—A. No.

Q. Did you not then, and do you not now, claim that they having failed, as you allege, to carry out their contract by organizing the company and issuing stock, that therefore they had no right to the stock they still held, and you were entitled to it?—A. I would not make it as broad as that. They may have some legal rights that I do not know of. I don't think they have fulfilled their contract, and therefore they are not entitled to so much as they would have been if they had fulfilled the contract.

Q. And therefore you are entitled to have this stock back. Your bill was to rescind the contract, have the thing set aside and the stock retransferred to you, was it not?—A. There are half a dozen prayers in it. I will bring it in.

Q. Is not the substance of it to get the stock back?—A. I think that is one of the prayers.

Q. When did you conceive the idea that they were not entitled to this stock?—A. I don't know when I had that conception.

Q. How long had you been thinking about it?—A. For the last three years.

Q. Have you ever told any of those gentlemen that they ought to give the stock up; that they have not complied with the contract?—A. No.

Q. And they had no right to it?—A. No; but I told Senator Harris I demanded it, when he said they would all leave me in the cold, or threatened to do it. He first asked if I insisted on the stock being issued, and I said emphatically, "As my son's attorney I demand it."

Q. Did they not say to you that rather than have a stock company of this sort organized and the stock placed on the market they would surrender all their interest in the organization?—A. I think Senator Harris said so, but he was very careful not to speak for other people. He spoke for himself, and said that his associates would do the same thing. Then they went up to the Judiciary Committee, as reported to me, and concluded they would not surrender the stock, but would just hold on, and did hold on.

Q. You had been thinking for the last two or three years that they were holding this stock wrongfully and without any fair consideration?—A. No; I still hoped they would get this charter out. I thought the delay was improper; but I am willing to give men a fair chance to explain their motives. I don't know what the motives of men may be. I didn't think there was anything morally wrong.

Q. You said a moment ago, if I remember correctly, that you had been feeling for the last two or three years that these gentlemen had not fulfilled the contract, and therefore were not entitled to the stock?—A. I don't know as I said I had been feeling it. I said I had been thinking it.

Q. Do you draw a distinction between the two?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. That is all.

Mr. RANNEY. I want to ask you some questions based on this pamphlet here which is called the poem. I see there is a prose statement in it. It was called out by some gentleman since I examined you.

Mr. MILLARD. Colonel Oates called out the poem.

Mr. OATES. No, I didn't call it out. I only asked for the date.

Mr. MILLARD. I did not know there was any such poem until you developed the fact.

Mr. OATES. I did not call it out.

Mr. RANNEY. You asked about the animus of it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Take this statement of fact on page 13. I have not read the poem. I want to know whether the facts that you have stated there are true.

Mr. EDEN. That is a very general way of examination.

A. I would not like to say that either the poem or the note on it was explicitly true without taking it apart and explaining some of it.

Mr. MILLARD. The poem is founded on fact, I suppose.

Mr. RANNEY. I have not read the poem, and I don't care to encumber the record with it.

Mr. EDEN. Is it part of the poem, or what?

The WITNESS. It is the note upon it. It is a satire, an imitation of Juvenal.

Mr. RANNEY. I will go through each fact, if you care to have me, beginning at the bottom of the page. (To witness.) Read from there on.

The WITNESS. The first thing is a statement that I could not verify, but my son will. It says: "His Department further refused my agent access to my letter of May 24, saying to him, after considerable bird-chattering among employés and running to and fro, that it could not be found."

The CHAIRMAN. Were you present?

The WITNESS. I am just reading it, and saying I couldn't swear to it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not worth while to read it.

The WITNESS. I could not take it and say it is all true. I state it because I believed it. My son told me, and he will swear to it.

Mr. EDEN. If those things are to be brought out they ought to be brought out in such a way that the witness can be cross-examined to see whether it is truth or mere hearsay.

The WITNESS. That is hearsay. My son told me that and I put it in as truth, but I cannot swear to it.

Q. What fact does that refer to?—A. That refers to his going there to get the letter of the 24th of May, which suggests, in the plain democratic language of Mr. Cleveland's late message to the Senate—

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, no; that will not do.

Mr. RANNEY. I want to find whatever facts there are.

The WITNESS. Here is something that is not hearsay: "Hon. Casey Young"—

Mr. HALL. Wait; let us understand what the question is.

Mr. RANNEY. Take the next paragraph.

Mr. HALL. I object to that; I propose to know what the paragraph is.

Q. You say here:

"His Department further refused my agent access to my letter of May 24, saying to him, after considerable bird-chattering among the employés and running to and fro, that it could not be found, and was probably among Mr. Garland's private papers."

I want to know if that was a fact which was within your own knowledge?—A. It was related to me by my son, J. Harris Rogers, and is not within my knowledge. I sent him for the letter.

Q. I omit the paragraph with comments. Take this:

"Hon. Casey Young brought my plan of attacking the Bell Company by the Government to the attention of one Benthuyesen, of Pittsburgh, about July 1. The next thing we knew this adventurer had appropriated my thunder to give prestige to the National Improved Telephone Company, a small corporation founded on some of the earlier patents of my son. He slipped off from Pittsburgh to New York, and wrote to Mr. Garland, July 12, pretending he had originated this plan of procedure."

Were those facts within your knowledge? State what you know about it.—A. The first one, as to Colonel Young's suspecting Van Benthuyesen, is a matter of Colonel Young's knowledge. It is my knowledge that he stated that to us at a meeting; that is the first part of the paragraph; that he brought it to Van Benthuyesen's attention at Pittsburgh. As to Van Benthuyesen slipping off to New York, I got it from the public press that on the 12th of July he sent this letter to Garland; that is not my knowledge; I only read it in the papers.

Q. That shows how much you know of that. You say then:

"Mr. Garland's next blunder was in referring this Van Benthuyesen letter to the Interior Department without any reference to my letter of May 24 preceding. He should have referred mine in like manner two months before. At least it would have been decent to have sent it with this one, its shadow, from New York."

What do you say as to that?—A. That is in the documentary evidence of Lamar's investigation.

Q. That is where you got that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you say next—

"The Attorney-General's next blunder was in permitting this (Benthuyesen's) letter to be withdrawn from the Interior Department July 1, the very next day after the conference at the Ebbitt House, when Wilbur made his celebrated affidavit July 30."

How do you know about that?—A. From the briefs. Those dates and the general circumstances I got from the briefs published in the Interior Department investigation.

Mr. EDEN. The briefs of the lawyers?

The WITNESS. Yes; the briefs and the testimony.

Mr. MILLARD. Have you got one of those briefs?

The WITNESS. I have one at home, I think.

Mr. RANNEY. I only want to see where you get the information, so that we can have access to it.

Mr. J. HARRIS ROGERS. I will state that there is a misprint in that copy. It should have been July 31. I think that was the intention.

Q. You say :

"Neither I nor my son was admitted to this conference. In point of fact we were excluded, on the pretext that Van Benthuyzen disliked me, although Senator Harris was admitted, who had denounced him, at a business meeting of many citizens of New Orleans, for publishing that the Pan-Electric Company had infringed his patents, (horresco referens) as a God damn scoundrel and liar, and adding that he, Harris, could be found at his hotel, and was responsible for what he had said."

Take the first part of that paragraph. Were you and your son admitted to that conference at the Ebbitt House?—A. No. My son told me—

Mr. EDEN. That will not do—

A. (Continuing.) I went to Colonel Young's room at the time, and was going over and Harry said to me—I can only tell you what Harry said to me—"Colonel Young says they dislike you and you must not go over there;" that they were going to have a conference about a combination of the Van Benthuyzen Company and the Pan-Electric Company; and Harry told me they said you must keep the old man away." Of course I didn't go; and I being his attorney—

Q. What knowledge had you that Senator Harris was there?—A. I think I got that through my son. He saw Senator Harris subsequently at his room, and Senator Harris, so it was reported to me—

Q. I only want to know the sources of your information.—A. My son Harry told me.

Mr. EDEN. I shall object to this hearsay evidence going into the record. You would not try a case for $5 in a court in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. It is going into the record, it seems.

Mr. EDEN. It makes a false impression on the country. It goes in the newspapers as being testimony.

Q. How do you know that Senator Harris had denounced Van Benthuyzen?—A. Colonel Looney told me so, and Senator Harris told my son so, and my son reported it to me.

Mr. HALL. That assumes certain facts to exist which are in controversy.

Mr. RANNEY. It don't assume anything. I want to know his sources of information.

Q. You say :

"It is probable that Van Benthuyzen became convinced at the Ebbitt House conference, to which I have referred, that the Interior Department might report adversely, and if he would withdraw his application and sign a certain agreement a direct order from the Department of Justice would be issued to bring the suit, and thus forestall an adverse decision in the Interior Department."

By the CHAIRMAN :

Q. Is that a statement of fact?—A. It is stated as a probability.

Q. It is only a probability?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not said to be a fact.

By Mr. RANNEY :

Q. You have been asked about your motives. What reason had you to publish that statement?

The WITNESS. That probability?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. Because I am a logician.

Q. What facts had you to base it on?—A. My major was—

The CHAIRMAN. Those questions indicate a want of personal knowledge, and ought not to go into the record.

Q. You have been asked about your motives?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Why were you making these statements if you did not have any facts to base them on?—A. I did not say I didn't have any facts.

Q. What facts did you have?—A. I was proceeding to state them.

Q. State them.

Mr. HALL. Facts within your own knowledge?

Mr. RANNEY. No; I am now on the question of motive, which Colonel Oates has talked about.

A. I will begin with motive. To make money is a motive with most men. The Van Benthuyzen people probably wanted to realize money as rapidly as possible, and in order to do that they wanted to bring this suit to a consummation as soon as possible. It was already before the Interior Department, and I concluded they would prefer for it to stay there, as the grist was already in the mill, if it was going on in regular sequence and they had no promise of a more direct method if they should withdraw it; and I wanted that to substantiate my statement and my son's statement of what Colonel Young had told us, that Garland had promised to bring the suit. I believe that Van Benthuyzen and Young and Garland all understood perfectly that the suit was to be brought in a short time.

The CHAIRMAN. That is improper

The WITNESS. I gave my reasons.

Mr. RANNEY. I am after your motives.

The CHAIRMAN. The latter portion of the answer giving his suppositions as to the Attorney-General and others is clearly improper, and I suggest that it be stricken from the notes of the hearing. Is it the sense of the committee that it should go into the notes of the stenographer?

Mr. OATES. Oh, no.

Mr. RANNEY. Not as a fact, but whether the witness had reason to believe it as affecting his motives.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen, let us settle this question.

Mr. EDEN. It is my judgment that it should be stricken out.

Mr. RANNEY. But you are accusing this man of having malicious motives.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand it to be the sense of the committee that it be stricken out?

Mr. RANNEY. I don't understand it so.

Mr. MOFFATT. I think we had better have a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no motion, but simply a suggestion on my part.

Mr. RANNEY. If I was asking him to have it go in as a statement of fact, I should agree with the gentleman; but you must remember you have impeached this man's motives, or inquired into them, and I am following in the same line. If this man has made a false statement about this thing, and that was his motive, I want to know it.

Mr. EDEN. How can it relieve the witness to have a statement go into the record reflecting upon the character of other men?

Mr. RANNEY. If a man makes a false statement with a good reason for making it that would explain his motive.

Mr. MOFFATT. That pamphlet has been drawn out, and I think it is very proper he should be cross-examined in regard to it.

The CHAIRMAN. We should not go into the suppositions of the witness that certain events occurred of which there is no evidence whatever.

Mr. OATES. Let us have the reporter read what the witness said.

The reporter read as follows:

"I believe that Van Benthuyzen and Young and Garland all understood perfectly that the suit was to be brought in a short time."

Mr. RANNEY (to the witness). On what ground have you reason to believe that?

Mr. EDEN. Nobody has put that statement in evidence yet.

Mr. OATES. Without having it taken down, let us see if he can furnish any evidence of that kind.

The CHAIRMAN. Wait, Mr. Reporter, until we see what it is.

Mr. RANNEY. I propose to put a question. You may take a yea and nay vote and see whether or not it will be allowed.

Mr. OATES. I suggest that the question can be asked without its being noted, so that the committee can understand what it is.

Mr. MOFFATT. He has a right to ask the question and have it taken down anyhow.

Mr. RANNEY. My question is this: You say here—

"If this be the true inwardness, and if this was the real and not the alleged reason for withdrawing the petition, they skillfully recaptured my stolen thunder from Van Benthuyzen and turned it to the advantage of the Pan-Electric Company. This plan for striking the Bell Company being mine and mine only, I took a deep interest in it, and feeling as an attorney a just pride in the prestige it gave me, I wrote to the New York Tribune, September 29, in order to claim whatever credit might be due me for originating, suggesting, and urging this suit by letters and documents and arguments to Garland, Johnston, Harris, Young, and Looney, May 24, 1885. I aimed, further, to strip Van Benthuyzen of his lion's skin by showing that he and his little company had been made a cat's-paw or a stool-pigeon by my agents; and, at the same time, my letter defended the Attorney-General, while I yet supposed that in a manly way he had referred the matter to Mr. Goode, and would face the music."

Mr. HALE. Is that all put down as part of the question?

The CHAIRMAN. It is all down. You have passed over the allegation as to Mr. Garland and these other people, or the conjecture. It is all a part of this record.

Q. What reason had you for writing that; what motive had you for writing it?

The WITNESS. Shall I give my reason for it?

The CHAIRMAN. One moment. Mr. Reporter, go back to the answer I called attention to, and read the question to which that answer is given.

The reporter read as requested.

Mr. OATES. I don't think we ought to take his opinion.

Mr. MILLARD. Is not this the point: Mr. Oates called out his reasons for giving the letters to the World, and he was further examined by Mr. Hale to show that he had some feeling. Now can he not state the motives which he had, as justification to any member of the committee, without giving the facts?

The CHAIRMAN. I am quite clear that he cannot state anything affecting his motives in the way of conjectures as to what may have occurred between these parties. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. MILLARD. Then he should not have been examined upon it.

Mr. HALL. Has he been examined with reference to the contents of that pamphlet and why he published it?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

Mr. HALL. I understood the examination was with regard to the publication of certain matters in the World.

Mr. RANNEY. I insist that we shall have the pamphlet put in. Mr. Oates asked him as to the animus he had.

The WITNESS. He did.

Mr. OATES. I asked him if he did not, after Garland had declined to give him an appointment or he failed to get any, write a poetical satire upon the Administration, and Garland especially, and thereupon the doctor pulled that pamphlet out and said, "Yes; and here it is." Then I asked him what was the state of his feelings towards Garland.

Mr. HALL. And now it is proposed by cross-examination to get at the poetic inspiration?

Mr. OATES. I did not offer the poetry. Mr. Millard, when he cross-examined, said he would offer it.

Mr. MILLARD. You made it a subject-matter of cross-examination.

Mr. OATES. I asked him if he did not write something of the sort.

Mr. MILLARD. It is a good deal like opening the door and then trying to close it again.

Mr. RANNEY. Gentlemen forget all the time in putting questions on one side and on the other that they are not prosecuting and defending a suit. We are all on the same side. I am on the same side with you, and I want his motives.

Mr. EDEN. My objection is for a witness to give merely his opinion and have it go out to the world as evidence. What we receive here goes out to the world as evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. He has done it all the way through his direct examination. I am just as anxious to get at his motives as you are, and I have just as good a right.

Mr. EDEN. You do not regard what he says there as being responsive to any question, or competent evidence for any purpose, do you?

Mr. RANNEY. It is just what it appears to be on its face. There is no evidence about anything. We are not proving or disproving anything, but simply getting at the facts.

Mr. OATES. If he can state any facts tending to show that state of affairs, I have no objection.

Mr. RANNEY. Why not let it go on? It is of no consequence.

The CHAIRMAN. It does not make an opinion competent. You would not be allowed to prove an opinion although it might be very clear it was an opinion. Facts constitute evidence, nothing else.

Mr. RANNEY. I want to know the man's animus.

Mr. HALL. The chairman suggests the proper course.

Mr. RANNEY (to the witness). I want to know your animus about that, and I want to know any facts upon which it is based; that is all. In the first place, take the paragraph which I have read. What fact do you know on which it is based?

Mr. HALL. What is the ruling in regard to the question already entered on the record?

The CHAIRMAN. It is my view it should be stricken out, but there is no motion to that effect and I can't correct it.

Mr. HALL. There was an answer to question before that.

Mr. RANNEY. He stated an opinion on cross-examination.

The CHAIRMAN. I think not. I have examined him on nothing but facts. There is no motion to strike out, and so we will proceed.

Mr. RANNEY. State on what facts within your own knowledge you based that statement.

Mr. HALE. I object. The answer will necessarily require him to go over the whole case and give his reasons. The question should be directed to some particular point.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Ranney) to have read a portion of this article.

Mr. HALE. And he wants to know his reasons and motives for writing the article, which involves the entire history of this transaction.

The CHAIRMAN. The article is not in evidence and is not offered. I have not seen it. There is nothing before the committee in my mind that makes the examination proper.

Q. Will you state what facts you base that paragraph upon—what facts within your own knowledge.

Mr. HALL. I understand that is objected to, and I suppose the objection must be sustained, either by the chairman or by the committee, or else the question will be allowed.

The CHAIRMAN. If it is competent for the chair to do so, I would sustain the objection.

Mr. HALL. I think that would be the proper course, and if any gentleman desires to appeal to the committee he can do so and take the sense of the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. I read that paragraph, and now my question is, what facts are within his own knowledge on which he wrote that?

The CHAIRMAN. On the point made I hold the question to be incompetent.

Mr. RANNEY. I call for a yea and nay vote on that.

Mr. HALL. I want to make a suggestion as to my views about this matter, if I am in order. I understand that this witness has been asked whether he wrote satirical productions for the purpose of illustrating his motives. In the further examination I suppose it is proper to ask as to whether he wrote them and for what purpose he wrote them; whether he wrote them for the purpose of influencing action or preventing action; whether he wrote them because he was actuated by a spiteful or revengeful spirit. All that would be proper to rebut the idea that might arise from the writing satirical works. But it would be a very strange procedure, it seems to me, to undertake to investigate the truth or falsity of statements that have been made in these satirical works. A court or committee that does that will never get through.

Mr. RANNEY. This is not satirical, as I understand it. I have not read the poem. The poem is satirical. This purports to be a statement of facts.

Mr. OATES. I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. Ranney) to have changed his question. The last time, I think, it is competent. He asks, "What, in this statement of alleged facts, do you know to be true?" That is competent.

Mr. RANNEY. I will read the paragraph and ask if the facts on which he bases that statement are within his own knowledge.

Mr. HALE. If he asks him about the facts to which he refers that would involve a history of his reasons for making the allegations.

The CHAIRMAN. In the view of the chair there is no fact stated in the question.

Mr. MOFFATT. As a matter of practice I would like to raise the question as to what is the course when an objection is made?

Mr. RANNEY. My question is, on what facts, in his own mind, does he base that statement? It bears on his motives as well as animus.

Mr. HALL. How can that be material unless the pamphlet itself is offered for the purpose of proving something material?

Mr. RANNEY. If a man who is a witness writes such a paragraph as that based on no facts within his knowledge, but manufactured out of whole cloth, such a fact would affect the witness.

Mr. EDEN. The article itself should be in evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. It bears on the conduct of the witness. That is all. I suppose I shall be permitted to inquire into a man's animus and motives as well as you gentlemen. We are both on the same side. If this witness will make a statement like that based on no fact, but manufactured out of whole cloth, I think we ought to know it and the House ought to know it.

Mr. OATES. I have no objection to the question in the last form.

Mr. HALL. The way to prove it is to prove it by persons who know what the facts are.

The CHAIRMAN. There seems to be no objection, and the witness can proceed.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. On what facts within your personal knowledge did you base that statement when you penned that paragraph?—A. It was within my own knowledge that one Hon. Casey Young stated to me and to my son that a suit would be brought by the Government in a short time; that he had promises to that effect; a promise from the Attorney-General, who had said he would turn it over to Mr. Goode. The first fact within my knowledge was that Colonel Young said that. The next fact within my knowledge was that mankind, so far as I have known them, are generally actuated by interested motives in their pecuniary affairs, and if there was a suit pending—

Mr. EDEN. That is a speech.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not fact at all.

Mr. HALL. It is not a fact within your personal knowledge. Everybody knows it.

The WITNESS. It is a fact in my knowledge; I know that; I am only answering the question.

Q. This is a matter that bears on your own reasons for conduct and the propriety of your conduct.—A. It is a fact that mankind, having a suit, would wish to bring it to as rapid a conclusion as possible, as a rule, when they are interested in bringing it to a conclusion.

Q. Is it a fact that you wrote to the Tribune on September 29?—A. I did.

Q. Where is that letter?—A. It is in evidence.

Q. In that letter you state that the facts are true?—A. I state the facts are true. There might be something to be explained or dilated on in a concise letter.

Q. You speak of stripping Van Benthuyssen of his lion's skin by showing that he and his little company had been made a cat's-paw or stool-pigeon. What reason had you to believe they had been made a cat's-paw or stool-pigeon?

Mr. OATES. What facts?

Mr. RANNEY. I want to know if he had any good reason or facts, or if he made the thing up out of whole cloth.

A. I will tell you about the stool-pigeon, if I may give my reasons for it.

Q. In the first place give us the facts. I want to see if you have been making a malicious charge here.—A. Colonel Young told us that he had brought this plan before Van Benthuyssen. Colonel Young had been through this whole business from the beginning to the end, as one of my agents in promoting the interests of this company, and he had been sent out there by Senator Harris, so my son informs me, and this is my knowledge from my son. He said Senator Harris had told him he had sent Young out there. The next fact in my knowledge is that I had made application to Mr. Garland to bring suit for the Pan-Electric Company. Another fact is that Mr. Garland never acted upon my petition.

Mr. HALE. I renew my objection, as it is very clear this is simply a repetition of what he has stated heretofore.

Q. Did you make that sentence up out of whole cloth?—A. I made it all up out of the spangling truth.

Q. You had in your own mind reason to believe it true?—A. I had.

Q. And so it was not malicious?—A. No, sir; I do not swear to the thing. I think as a logician it is highly probable the things suggested there are true.

Q. I only want to know what facts are within your own knowledge and then whether they are true or not true, and whether you made up the statement for a bad purpose?—A. Oh, no; I don't manufacture anything but poetry, and I don't put that in evidence.

Mr. HALE. It is in evidence in this case.

The WITNESS. Is the poetry in evidence?

Mr. RANNEY. No.

Q. This is a very material matter, and I am anxious to get at the truth of it. I understand you to say you were not present at the Ebbitt House when Van Benthuyssen and Harris and others were there?—A. No.

Q. What knowledge had you that there was an interview?—A. I heard it in all directions. I suppose there was one. I believe it just as I believe anything I don't see.

Q. Did you have anything to do with, or had you any knowledge of, the withdrawal of Van Benthuyssen's letter after that interview?—A. No; but it is in the evidence in Lamar's court, and the fact that it was withdrawn—

Mr. OATES. We will get that in time.

Q. I am trying to discover facts, if there are any. You do not know, then, what the transaction was in regard to the referring of Van Benthuyssen's letter or the withdrawing of it, when it was withdrawn or why it was withdrawn?—A. All I know is what is expressed there—the probability.

Mr. RANNEY. If you do not know I will not ask you.

The WITNESS. I do not know; somebody will know.

Mr. RANNEY. If there is anything in that answer that is not responsive to my question and does not appear to be a statement of fact within the knowledge of the witness, I think it is proper it should be stricken out. I don't want anything stated as a fact that is not a fact.

Mr. EDEN. You asked him for facts, and he stated his opinion that these men understood it was going to be done.

Mr. RANNEY. I don't want it to be left so that it will carry a wrong impression.

Mr. MILLARD. You have referred to a certain brief; I wish you would bring it in.

The WITNESS. If I have it.

Mr. MILLARD. As to what was done in the Interior Department.

Mr. J. HARRIS ROGERS. It is already in. It will be found in one of the books I brought and submitted to Mr. Oates.

The WITNESS. We brought it in with our letters yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. If that is all, we will relieve the witness.

The WITNESS. Will I be required to-morrow?

Mr. RANNEY. We cannot finish your examination until these letters are put in. We will have to have the correspondence and examine you in connection with that correspondence, possibly.

The CHAIRMAN. We will give you notice.

Mr. RANNEY. I think we ought to have had the correspondence and examined it before examining you, but it was not convenient.

At this point the committee adjourned until to-morrow, March 18, 1886, at 12 m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Friday March 19, 1886.

The committee met at 12.50 p. m. All the members present excepting the chairman, Mr. Hale, and Mr. Hanback.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that before we proceed any further we ought to have here in evidence the correspondence which has been alluded to by Mr. Rogers. It was impossible to examine the Messrs. Rogers intelligently without those letters, and it will necessitate as the result a quite prolonged examination of the general question. It was said last night that you proposed to call Mr. Young to-day. That correspondence, as I have read it, refers largely to him. It would be impossible to examine him properly without having those letters in hand in the possession of different members of the committee. There is only one copy of them, and all cannot use that, while all have a right to examine the witness, and they ought to be put in and ought to be printed so that each member can have copies for the purpose of the examination of this witness.

Mr. OATES. I will state, in reply to that remark, that the subcommittee having charge of the matter has been at work very diligently upon it. I have been in the committee room with Mr. Hanback at work all the morning until I came down here and left Mr. Hanback and the clerk there still busily engaged. We have adopted our report in part, and hope to be able to report in full in the course of an hour about the matter. Mr. Hanback and the clerk are now going on with the work. The clerk has classified the letters, but Mr. Hanback is reviewing the classification with him and correcting it wherever he sees proper. We have examined the deeds and papers that were handed in yesterday, and are ready to report on them and on a part of the correspondence, and in the course of an hour or such a matter will have the entire report ready for the committee.

Mr. EDEN. The examination of Mr. Young, I suppose, can be deferred until after your report?

Mr. OATES. We want to complete the examination of Mr. Rogers, so that we may not scatter this evidence piece-meal, but have it all put in together.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not understand that the subcommittee appointed had anything more to do than collect the letters and arrange them, and then bring them before the committee, so that we could intelligently put them in evidence in a collated form. I did not suppose they were to pass judgment upon what should be received in evidence.

Mr. OATES. We will report everything back to the committee for their action.

Mr. RANNEY. I took that for granted.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose that is usual.

Mr. RANNEY. It was simply necessary in order to facilitate the examination.

Mr. OATES. I think the committee will be satisfied with the work when it comes in.

Mr. RANNEY. I don't question that, but I don't think we can go on with the examination of witnesses until we get them.

Mr. EDEN. Would you be in favor of deferring any other evidence until they are brought in?

Mr. RANNEY. That would be my idea; still I do not want to delay the examination if there is anything we can properly put in. I should dislike to go on with the examination of Mr. Young in any matter relating to that correspondence.

Mr. MILLARD. Can we not call Mr. Young for the purpose of showing the organization, &c.?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; we might go as far as that.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Young may want to finish up his testimony when he goes on the stand.

Mr. MOFFATT. We had better do it all at once.

Mr. HALE. I want to say to the committee that I will be compelled to leave this morning to go home to be gone a few days. I will not be here again until the last of next week.

Mr. OATES. That is with you. I suppose you can pair with one of the gentlemen if you desire to do so.

Mr. HALE. It has been suggested it is not proper to pair in a case of this kind. Of course the report will not be ready for some weeks yet.

Mr. MILLARD. I move that Mr. Hale be excused for a week.

Mr. RANNEY. In regard to the matter of pairing, it seems to me that while in the House, politically, men are often paired, yet in our committee, sitting judicially, presumably, and not as members of any political party, for the purpose of investigating a matter committed to it, apart from party, we can hardly talk about pairing. It would be like two judges on a bench pairing. The presumption would be they were opposed to each other.

Mr. OATES. In every committee I have served on members have paired whenever they wanted to, but that is a personal matter between the members.

Mr. MILLARD. That is on the theory that we are occupying hostile positions here.

Mr. OATES. If two members see proper to pair with each other that is nobody's business, I take it, as long as pairs are permitted. If the gentlemen does not want to pair with anybody, that is all right. It is a personal privilege. I don't think the committee has anything to do with it.

Mr. RANNEY. We are in a minority politically—I speak of political minorities. There is a great deal of labor in this matter, and I should not want to consent to throw the labor on to my associates, nor do I want them to throw it on to me. So far as the matter of voting is concerned I think the pairing would be of no consequence. If a man by pairing is to preclude himself from putting questions, I don't think that is right.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose it is a question of voting. That would be the only occasion for a pair.

Mr. OATES. That is all any pair relates to. As to giving Mr. Hale leave of absence he would have to get that from the House. This committee could not control that.

Mr. EDEN. If the committee was composed of an even number, without any reference to political matters, we might fail to get along, because we might happen to be equally divided.

Mr. RANNEY. If we are equally divided it ought to be on judgment independent of political relations. We cannot give Mr. Hale leave of absence. He can get it from the House.

Mr. HALE. I have obtained that.

Mr. MILLARD. We can count Mr. Hale as voting on his side of the question.

Mr. RANNEY. If he will leave that matter with any other member I will not object.

Mr. HALE. I will leave it with Mr. Eden.

Mr. RANNEY. If there is any gentleman on your side of the committee you are willing to entrust your vote with we will consent to the trust.

Mr. HALE. I will leave it with Mr. Eden.

Dr. JAMES W. ROGERS, who had been previously examined, appeared before the committee at his own instance.

The WITNESS. In my testimony yesterday there is a matter as to which I wish to make a small correction, if it would be proper.

Mr. OATES. You have a right to do that.

The WITNESS. To the question "Did Colonel Looney pay anything for his sixth?" I think I said in a drawling way, "Well, no," having in my mind that I would say before we passed to another subject that he only paid me some stock that proved to be worthless, and which at the time he didn't think worth much. I do not want it to appear that I concealed anything. He gave me $100,000 of the Florida Ship-Canal stock and $50,000 in what was called the Indus Mine, a gold mine in New Mexico somewhere.

Mr. OATES. Not in the Indies?

The WITNESS. No. You requested me to bring any other papers I might have. I found a note-book which contains a great many of the names of those who had stock. It had been lying about. I had a search made and some of the children found it. It has a good many pencil-marks; no book-keeping, but it gives a great many names I didn't give.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. If you have any memoranda that enable you to give any additional names on the subject of our inquiry, I wish you would do so.—A. There are a great many names in the book. I will hand it in as one of the papers for the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. Your memoranda may not be evidence, but you can use the book to refresh your recollection.

The WITNESS. I will say that all that is in that book is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. That only refers to parties to whom you gave stock?—A. Or sold it.

Q. In addition to any of those you have named, were any of them officers of the Government or connected with the Government in any way?—A. I am not sure; I think there are some.

Mr. RANNEY. If they are not officers, I would like to have you name them, for we may trace the stock. Those to whom you gave it may possibly have given it to officers of the Government.

The WITNESS. It was only to avoid any appearance of concealment that I brought this. I have not looked over it myself. I will read the names as I go along, and you will know better than I whether they belong to the Government. (Referring to book:) William W. Briggs, J. M. Keating of Memphis, Robert Klotz, Edward Klotz, Hon. Van Manning of Mississippi, General Frank Armstrong of Texas. I have it Texas here, but I understand this is his domicile.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Is he connected with the Government in any way?—A. He is in some employment as an Indian agent.

Q. In the Indian Office here?—A. Under the Government. I don't know what his office is. General Denver, Hernando D. Money.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Is that stock you disposed of yourself, or that was disposed of by the company?—A. That I disposed of. General Thomas Crittenden, General A. R. Upshur.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Is Upshur connected with the Government in any way?—A. I think he has some minor office.

Q. Here in Washington?—A. Here in Washington.

Q. Do you remember what office he holds?—A. He is a clerk in some Department; I don't know what it is.

Mr. RANNEY. He is chief clerk of the Indian Bureau, I believe.

The WITNESS. It might be.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Was he in office at the time he got the stock?—A. No; and I see there is a memorandum there that he got a great deal more than he did get. It occurs to me he took that stock to try and make sales of it. I don't know that he owned any in his own right. I don't remember exactly. My remembrance is that he returned the most of it, possibly all of it, to me. I see a list of the numbers that were given to him. That was for him to make sales, I remember.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Was Crittenden connected with the Government?—A. No; I think not. He was just a lawyer at the bar. Samuel T. Finley, of Gainesville, Fla.; Margaret Rogers; Martha S. Ashe; Duncan McRea; Col. R. F. Looney; Colonel Boudinot; Mrs. Fuller, Hume's clerk—just a memorandum; I don't know his name—Frank Royster; Col. R. C. Wintersmith.

Q. Was that the Wintersmith connected with the House of Representatives?—A. No, sir; not that one; it was his father.

Q. This was a son of his?—A. Yes, sir. J. D. Cook & Co.; A. J. Works; J. C. Vetrees; Col. J. B. Price, of Jefferson City. That was the gentleman I spoke of who sent to Eppa Hunton and Jeff. Chandler his claim for stock. Mr. Daniel.

Q. What Daniel?—A. He is a consul, I think, somewhere. He was here at the time, but he has since got some office abroad. I don't know what it is.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Was he in office at the time you sold him the stock?—A. No, sir; he was not.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. It was not Mr. Daniel, the member of the present House?—A. Oh, no; it is just "Mr. Daniel." His family lived here, but I understood that he went abroad and had some mission; I don't even know what it is. Mr. Kirk, of this city, an old citizen, told me one day he had gone abroad in some Government employment, but he had no employment in the Government at the time he got the stock. The Republic, the Chronicle.

Q. Newspapers here in Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. What is the Republic?—A. A weekly or monthly paper.

Q. Not the Republican?—A. The name of it is the Republic; it is a very admirable journal; I read it a good deal.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Is it a political paper?—A. Well, there is a good deal of politics sprinkled about it, but it is more of a literary journal, and a very excellent one.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Did you sell the stock to those papers or give it to them?—A. I sold it to them. I paid it as money for advertising.

Mr. RANNEY. I wish as you go along you would state what was gift and what was sale.

The WITNESS. Nearly all this was sold; that is, all that was not returned. Thomas Kendig; that was returned. Col. R. F. Brodt; he gave me lots in New Orleans for that stock. Joaquin Miller; that was presented to him. He is a literary genius. William Webster; Doctor Roberts; Dr. Jarnigan, Senator Jarnigan's son, of Atlanta, Ga. That was sent to him by a friend here, to dispose of some of the stock. I think he returned it.

By Mr. RANNEY :

Q. Was that sold to the senator from Georgia?—A. Oh, no ; his son simply took it on a commission to make some sales and returned it. I am confident that was returned. Colonel Klotz, treasurer of the company.

Q. What stock is that?—A. Most of it is Rogers Telegraph and Telephone stock. I haven't seen this thing recently, so I don't know what else may be in it. Major Conti. Colonel Klotz, for company, five thousand shares.

Q. That was the Pennsylvania Company?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Briggs. Walker & Wilson ; they were brokers, merely agents, and I think they returned it. I don't know whether they did or not. It occurred to me in connection with Mr. Money's and Mr. Manning's names that I might possibly have confused the giving of this stock with the American Postal. I said yesterday that I thought I had given them some of the American Postal, but I am not confident of it. If it is material at all, they can answer. They are gentlemen who would tell the truth, of course. I found a pamphlet in connection with that subject, which I will leave with the committee. The pamphlet has this bearing : I have been frequently asked here whether my associates contemplated legislation, and have always said no, not to my knowledge ; and I have generally said that in connection with those various companies ; but the American Postal, as this pamphlet shows, expressly states that it contemplated legislation. It went broadcast. I do not want to be put in the position of seeming to say I never wanted any legislation.

By Mr. OATES :

Q. Who published that?—A. I did.

Q. Legislation by Congress?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was you?—A. Me.

Q. Not the company?—A. Not the company. I published this. There is nothing wrong about it, I think, when you read it. It contemplated a bill to be put before Congress. It states that a bill would be put before Congress. It never was put before it.

By Mr. EDEN :

Q. What did the Pan-Electric Company have to do with that?—A. Nothing in the world. I was only afraid this thing might be confused with the other companies, and there would seem to be a contradiction, and I have stated that they never, to my knowledge, contemplated any legislation.

By Mr. OATES :

Q. Was that legislation relating to some of these derivative companies?—A. No, sir ; just the American Postal.

By Mr. EDEN :

Q. Your associates in the Pan-Electric Company had nothing to do with the publication of that pamphlet?—A. Nothing in the world, but some of them had some of the stock, at least I said I thought Mr. Money and Mr. Manning had some of it, but I am not sure of it. It would be as well to try and turn the sun from its path in the heavens as either of those gentlemen from truth and honor. They will tell you about it.

Mr. MILLARD. Suppose you leave those papers with the committee.

The WITNESS. I mean to leave them. Here is another I picked up in regard to the Washington Telephone Company. I don't know whether you have that among the papers. You requested me to bring some papers connected with the Cummings question and the $500 business. I did not find the contract, but I found a long letter upon the subject, which explains it nearly as well as the contract would. My son went to see Mr. Mitchell this morning, with whom I made the contract, and he said he was not acting for anybody connected with the Bell Company, and there was no man named Cummings connected with the transaction in any shape or form ; but $500 being the amount specified as something connected with a man named Cummings, and being the identical sum I had lately received from Mr. Mitchell, I was anxious to know whether there was a man named Cummings in the transaction. It was forfeited. I would be very glad if it was the Bell Company, for it is about the only thing that probably will ever be made out of them. I made the $500 clear. They forfeited the contract, and I still have the stock at my house.

By Mr. MILLARD :

Q. I want to call your attention to the stock that you have referred to as having been received from Mr. Looney, the mining stock and the other stock.—A. Oh, yes, sir ; I have that.

Q. Have you realized any value from it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has it any marketable value?—A. Well, it is not listed, like all this stuff. It may have value. I expect the Indus Mine stock would be worth something some day, but I don't think the other is worth anything—that canal business. It is a project that might—well, I don't know anything about it.

Q. As yet you have realized nothing from it?—A. Oh, no.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Did any member of the Pan-Electric Company ever buy or hold any stock in the American Postal?—A. I don't think any of them ever did. I don't remember it if they did. I don't see one of their names there. Most of the names are there of the persons who had it. No, I am confusing it again with the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone. I don't think they ever had stock in either of those. I don't know of a single instance.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. This pamphlet which I have relates to the American Postal Telegraph Company.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Capital stock five millions.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You say in it a bill will be presented to Congress asking appropriation of $10,000,000.—A. Yes, sir; that is the paragraph I refer to.

Q. To construct those lines as more economical than the purchase of the Western Union and Mackey's Telegraph, as now proposed, for $100,000,000. Did this postal telegraph company ever have for its basis any of these patent rights of your son?—A. No, sir. The chief thing in the patents was that of a New Yorker, Mr. Lyons, a system for sending messages, by a piano keyboard, very rapidly.

Q. Was it not the automatic system?—A. It was automatic, but it was a considerable improvement.

Q. I understood your son to say his patent rights involved an automatic system of telegraphy?—A. You spoke of the Pan-Electric Telegraph. This does, too. The pamphlet shows that; but it is a different kind of automatic arrangement.

Q. Still they were both automatic?—A. Oh, yes. That is the company that wanted to make an alliance with the Pan-Electric. I said in my testimony—either I did or my son—that they met at the Metropolitan Hotel to make an alliance, and made a proposition to the Pan-Electric Company. I think the proposition is among the papers. The Pan-Electric, after considering it, declined to make the alliance. The man Lyons, who had the chief patent, wanted $2,000 in money as one of the conditions of the alliance, but the proposition was in general terms that they take this institution in with the Pan-Electric, and let their officers retire, if they desired it, to give them absolute control, but they declined it.

Q. I see you were vice-president of this company.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And likewise one of the directors.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You circulated these pamphlets, did you not?—A. Oh, yes, sir; I circulated thousands of them.

Q. Did you not give them to the members of Congress or officers of the Government to whom you presented the stock?—A. I think so. I think I sent them to almost everybody. I sent them to a great many people. I think that is the pamphlet that I thought I sent to Cox, and he sent me word in his letter that I had neglected to inclose the pamphlet with the poem that I referred to in my letter to him, saying I therewith inclosed a pamphlet and a poem for him.

Q. This was the pamphlet?—A. This was the pamphlet which should have gone to him.

Q. Then, when you were presenting stock as a gift to Mr. Cox, you inclosed this to him?—A. Yes, sir; to explain about the enterprise.

Q. Why did you couple the two?—A. Because I wanted Mr. Cox to become a director in that. Those gentlemen wanted to retire.

Q. And you brought to his mind at the very same time as a part of the transaction the fact that you were asking Congress for legislation?—A. Yes, as he could see. It struck me then, probably, as it would now, that he could say, as any honorable man would, and as Senator Harris did, "If this thing comes up, I will announce that I am interested in it." It was a question whether I would take that risk or not.

Q. Did you send the same pamphlet to Mr. Beach?—A. I think I sent it to Beach; I don't remember certainly.

Q. Did you send the same when you wrote to Mr. Randall?—A. No; that was the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone.

Q. Did you couple this pamphlet with it?—A. No; it had nothing to do with it.

Q. Did you send this with the letter and stock which you sent to Speaker Carlisle?—A. No; that was the Rogers telegraph.

Q. To which one of these members of Congress to whom you sent so much stock did you send this pamphlet?—A. I think I only sent that to Beach and to Cox. I wasn't trying to buy votes. I would have had to bid higher and to have bought more men. Two votes wouldn't have done me any good.

Mr. RANNEY. I never said anything about buying votes.

The WITNESS. It has been said frequently.

Q. You were presenting the stock to those members of Congress accompanied by a pamphlet whereby you were going to ask Congress for an important piece of legislation?—A. Yes, sir; and I didn't want to lead to anything in the dark, but let them see precisely what I was doing, and let the whole world see it.

Q. You wanted legislation, and you were very generous in delivering the stock?—A. I was not generous. I gave them a very small amount. I would have given any of them a good deal more if they had persisted and gone in as directors. I wouldn't have given it to Beach, now I know him as I do; but I would have given Cox a million dollars.

Q. Why?—A. Because he was so illustrious a man, and his name stands like the sun in the heavens for integrity, and he would have helped me to sell this stock.

Q. Did it occur to you that he might possibly, if he had received such a large gift, be disposed to assist this project in Congress?—A. I don't think a million dollars of stock would seduce Cox.

Mr. RANNEY. It does not seem so, and I don't think it would either.

Q. Did it not occur to you that there was some impropriety in your making such large and munificent gifts to members of Congress, accompanied with a pamphlet saying that you were engaged in an enterprise that required action by Congress?—

A. Yes; I see from the newspapers that I am very obtuse in having done it, but I don't go to them for—

Q. I want to know your own idea.—A. My own action is my answer, that it was perfectly proper when I did it openly and avowedly, telling these gentlemen I wanted to explain the enterprise to them, and intended for them to move with me in an honorable sphere, concealing nothing, but presenting the bill boldly to Congress. A Congressman does not take the vow of chastity, poverty, and obedience. [Laughter.]

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You went upon that principle?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you send this pamphlet to every member of Congress?—A. No, sir; I didn't send it to all. I sent it to a good many of them.

A. Did you confine it to those to whom you made the presents of the stock?—A. No; just as you send circulars out. I don't think I sent it to but a few, however. I might have sent it to a great many; I don't know. It has been a long time.

Q. You did not seem to have a very high or exalted idea of a member of Congress, did you?—A. I did, sir. I know there were as true men in the Congress of the United States as live on the face of the globe, and many of them; and I believed at the time I sent them that the men to whom I sent them were such men, or I would have had nothing to do with them.

Q. It did not occur to you that there might be insensible influences?—A. I know all men might steal, but I didn't believe those men would.

Mr. RANNEY. I have not gone into your examination any further, but have only questioned you in reference to matters brought out this morning. I will reserve further examination.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You made a remark that suggests another question. You said there was a conference looking towards a consolidation of the Pan-Electric and this postal company that you have referred to?—A. Yes, sir; at the Metropolitan Hotel.

Q. Do you remember who were present at that conference?—A. Senator Harris, for he was ill. It was at his room, and I went up to get Mr. Garland, and I remember he must have been there, for I went for him to the Senate committee room and he either went down with me, or pursuant to the appointment did go. I met him there.

Q. Met who there?—A. Mr. Garland. I think Colonel Young was there, but it was during the vacation, and I couldn't say certainly. My son was there, and I think Colonel Looney, but I am not sure of that. I only know certainly Senator Harris and Garland were there.

Q. Are you able to fix the date of the conference?—A. I can by some papers in the book. The proposition is there dated.

Q. If you had the papers you could fix it precisely?—A. Yes.

Q. Can you fix it without reference to your papers, approximately?—A. I think it was some time in 1884; it must have been. This company was organized along in the summer, I think, of 1883, and I suppose it was probably the following year. That is as near as I can give you.

Q. Do you know of your own knowledge whether there were any bills introduced in Congress in pursuance of this request?—A. Nothing.

Q. Bills substantially as described in your pamphlet?—A. No; that was just a project which was published.

Q. Don't you know there were such bills introduced?—A. Nothing like that. There were bills for a postal telegraph introduced, and I was waiting to see the result of them, and intended for this bill to come in subsidiary, if they should pass; and this bill was never presented, as they did not pass.

Q. Were they not introduced in both branches of Congress?—A. I so saw in the papers. I don't know it.

Q. Subsequent to the conference you refer to?—A. I think about that time; and afterwards there was one in the Senate, Mr. Edmunds's bill, and I think there were two introduced in the House.

Q. I am not referring to that legislation to which you call my attention now. I am referring to a bill introduced in the House by Mr. Vance.—A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. And in the Senate by Senator Harris.—A. I didn't know Senator Harris ever introduced such a bill. I never heard of it before.

Q. Can you turn to your papers and ascertain just what was done in the matter?—A. No; I don't keep the files of the papers. I saw it in the newspapers, and it must be of record here. I have some personal engagements. Would it be necessary for me to remain here?

Mr. OATES. Not at present. How long do you want to be away?

The WITNESS. I want to go to New York to-morrow.

Mr. OATES. We may want to examine you on these letters.

The WITNESS. Well, sir, this is the first business with me now.

J. HARRIS ROGERS recalled and further examined.

By Mr. OATES :

Question. Have you seen the New York Daily Tribune of March 16?—Answer. I read the Tribune and the World every day, very nearly. I do not recall that number. I suppose I read it.

Q. Look at this article there relating to a supposed interview between you and the correspondent of the Tribune [handing a newspaper article to the witness].—A. Yes, sir; I have seen that.

Q. Are you correctly reported there?—A. Yes, sir; it is substantially correct. It is not a full report of it; it could have been made much fuller.

Q. It states as follows: "To a Tribune correspondent, after the meeting, Mr. Rogers said: 'As I was going to the subcommittee room I was told by a friend that Colonel Oates was the attorney for Senator Harris and Col. Casey Young.'" Did you say that?—A. I did.

Q. Who was that friend?—A. Mr. Hine. I saw him here this morning. I do not see him now; he has been here all the morning.

Q. What is his name?—A. I do not know his initials. I have known him by sight to talk to him for many years. He is originally from North Carolina, I believe. He is a newspaper man. He told me that you, Mr. Oates, and Mr. Hanback were attorneys for Casey Young and Senator Harris; that you were nothing more or less than attorneys, and that he had reported it in the press.

Q. Didn't you know that it was not so when he told you that?—A. No, sir.

Q. You believed that, did you?—A. I thought it was highly probable.

Q. You say you don't know the initials of his name. How does he spell his name—H-i-n-e?—A. I do not know; I suppose so.

Q. Do you know what paper he is correspondent of?—A. I do not. I have heard before this, though, at Bladensburg, indirectly, that you were backing Col. Casey Young in everything. I paid but little attention to it then, but when Mr. Hine told me that, and you came out so austere and went down without speaking a word, and from your subsequent actions, it led me firmly to believe that there was great reason to think there was truth in what he had said, and sufficient reasons for making that statement substantially.

Q. You gave your reasons here to this correspondent, did you?—A. I did, but not fully. I can go over the whole thing, if you want to hear it. I can enlighten the committee on it.

Q. What other reasons did you have?—A. The transactions that occurred in the committee room.

Q. What were they?—A. After reading some twenty letters, you turned to a letter on which you saw a number, and said "Look here, Hanback, here is a letter, No. 215, that is running way up beyond; do you feel like reading that trash over, or that stuff?" Mr. Hanback said, "No; I do not feel like it," and expressed his sympathy with you, and you said, "I don't. Now, I have got a suggestion to make. Suppose Mr. Rogers here (referring to me), who looks like an intelligent man (I thank you for your politeness), and my clerk here go over this thing. They can look over it and sift out the relevant from the irrelevant matters, and then we can look over the relevant letters afterwards."

Q. Will you swear that that is what I said?—A. I do most positively, substantially.

Q. Don't you know that I said that you could stay there with the clerk, Mr. Martin, and go over those letters in the way we had been doing, and make two lists of them?—A. Precisely.

Q. Naming only such as you thought were relevant, as we had been doing, and make your list, and we would go over them ourselves, Mr. Hanback and myself?—A. Yes, sir; such as we two considered relevant or irrelevant. But I said, "Mr. Chairman, I cannot think of taking that responsibility. It is a delicate position to ask me to pass judgment upon letters which I am interested in," and I declined doing it, and you said, "Oh, well, now, it is just here between ourselves." I said, "Suppose it should come up before the committee hereafter that I had discarded some letter that bore on the subject," and you said, "It is all private between ourselves here, and it never will be known out of this committee room."

Q. Did I not tell you at the time that what you were expected to do was not to decide the question, but to aid Mr. Martin in getting the letters in order?—A. You told me that you wanted me to assist him in that; you began in that way.

Q. Did you not state to that correspondent also that it was then agreed between me and Mr. Hanback to leave the classification to the clerk and that the sub-committee would return the next day and look over the letters?—A. I will answer that with an explanation. After you had urged me, you and your associate, three times, to go over these with a view of passing judgment upon that which was relevant and that which was not, I told you positively that I would not do it unless I was ordered to by proper authority—no, I did not use the words "proper authority;" but I said "I will not do it unless you order me."

Q. Don't you know that I told you that you were not required to pass judgment on them, but to aid the clerk in classifying them?—A. You stated three times to me that it would not be known out of the committee room, and I told you, "Mr. Oates, what I do is above board, and in sight; I do not do anything sub rosa. What I do is open to everybody in the world." And then you began to say, "You show my clerk here the order in which they come." I told you I had done that, and would do it with pleasure, but would not do any more. Then you went over them very carefully, and I referred you to a letter—I will tell the whole thing to the committee—when you insisted on that, I said, "To show you how delicate a position I am in."

Q. You say in this interview that I said, "Never mind; this is all private between ourselves, and nobody will know anything about it."—A. Yes, sir; substantially.

Q. Was not that in response when you said you did not like to remain there and have anything to do with it, because some one might call your motives or actions into account thereafter? Was it not in response to that that I said, "Well, this is private here in this room, and I want you to continue here to assist in the arrangement of these letters?"—A. I made that answer under the impression and firm belief, as stated by you, that I was to pass judgment upon the relevant and the irrelevant; that you gentlemen only wanted to look over those that were classified among the relevant.

Q. And you swear that I asked you to pass judgment upon them as to which were relevant or not?—A. I swear that I did have that conversation with you from beginning to end, as I have stated, substantially, and that was my belief at the time and subsequently.

Q. You state, in this interview, "I objected because I am specially interested and cannot take such a responsibility." Did I not tell you then and there, Mr. Rogers, that the committee were not investigating you at all, but were investigating officers connected with the Government?—A. I think you said that; yes, sir. Yes, you stated it, but I knew that beforehand.

Q. You also say, "When it had been argued for some time I took up one of the letters recently published in the Tribune, and which had been passed by as 'irrelevant,' and said: 'Now, gentlemen, this letter says that in the event of a postal bill coming before Congress, and the question of adopting a telegraphic system, no company but the Pan-Electric would stand a ghost of a chance. Suppose it should come out in the testimony hereafter that I and my associates had tried to influence legislation, would I not be under the additional imputation of suppressing a letter bearing upon the subject?' Mr. Hanback at once saw that the point was well taken and was for excusing me, when Mr. Oates said, coaxingly, 'Never mind; this is all private between ourselves, and nobody will know anything about it?'"—A. You did.

Q. Did I not say to you that we had read that letter; hadn't we read it and passed upon it ourselves?—A. Yes, sir; as irrelevant, and it is right there now. I said, "Gentlemen, here is a letter you have passed upon. Suppose I passed upon that letter?" and Mr. Hanback says, "Well, now, look here; since my attention was called to that letter, I want to see about it; I want it marked among the relevant letters." Now, I says, "There, gentlemen, you two are disputing among yourselves about these letters, and how can we two men go through them and divide these?" And you said, "Oh, well, I will convince Mr. Hanback that he is wrong."

Q. Can you show how or wherein the quotation from that letter made there is rele-want to any issue about which we are inquiring; and if so, what part of it?—A. I went out and said to my father, "This is a very singular procedure"—

Q. I am not asking you about that. Will you state wherein the quotation that you make from that letter is any proof of or in any wise relevant to any question?—A. I did not say it was relevant or irrelevant. Here is what I stated to you in substance. I said: "Here is a letter. I do not know that there is anything relevant in it at all, but suppose a witness was put on the stand, and he should testify that I and my associates were interested in putting our instruments into this or some other company, I aid would I not be placed under a doubtful imputation?" They were not my words, "that I would be placed in an embarrassing situation." I did not say that it had any bearing on the subject; I said that it might have in the future, and I say so now.

Q. It was a possibility, then?—A. Yes, sir; a possibility. Not that there would be any truth in my ever having anything to do with it, but the witness might testify to that effect.

Q. The point of your objection to the course we were pursuing was, was it not, that you wanted to be investigated and vindicated yourself, and for that purpose wanted these letters to go in?—A. No, sir; I thought it was a very improper procedure for a subcommittee to make, and it struck me as a very indelicate thing to ask the inventor and projector of these enterprises to pass upon those letters. That was my conviction; I may be wrong.

Q. Do you swear that anybody asked you to pass upon the question of the relevancy of those papers in the committee-room?—A. I swear most positively that you and Mr. Hanback asked me to go over and assort the relevant from the irrelevant ones. They were already arranged.

Q. Well, I ask you for myself: Did I ask you to do anything of that sort, to make any separation of the relevant from the irrelevant? Mr. Hanback can speak for himself.—A. Yes, sir; to assist that gentleman.

Q. You swear that that is what I asked you to do?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Didn't I ask you to merely arrange the letters in the order in which they came to me?—A. I told you they were already arranged, and they are arranged there now, if you have not disturbed them. I told you there was no use of my going over them, that they were already arranged. We had been a week or three or four days fixing them.

Q. I will ask you to state whether that is the letter of which you speak [handing a letter to the witness]?—A. I judge so from the bulk of it. I do not know whether it is all here or not.

Mr. OATES. I wish you would read it.

The WITNESS. I would like the clerk to read this.

Mr. OATES. I will ask you if that is the same letter?

Mr. RANNEY. Is it one of the printed letters?

Mr. OATES. It is.

The WITNESS. Yes; this is it (reading): "And the company we will be associated with will be the only one that will have the ghost of a chance to compete with him." That is the letter.

Q. Whose letter is it?—A. It is a letter from Mr. Casey Young. It is one that you passed upon as irrelevant. I told you a dozen times I was ready to show the gentleman anything about the order, but this whole controversy was as to whether I should go over them as a judge of the thing, so that you gentlemen would not have to do the work.

Mr. OATES. You may stand aside.

Mr. RANNEY. We will go on with Mr. Young's examination, so far as it relates to these books.

Mr. J. HARRIS ROGERS. In the package of letters that my father handed you this morning are some additional letters that he found. There are barrels of them, I suppose, and as fast as they come up I will present them to the committee. They are in an old closet in boxes and barrels. I never kept any letters in order excepting General Johnston's, and those on account of his name.

Mr. RANNEY. I want to examine any letters that you may have bearing on the subjects of this investigation.

Hon. CASEY YOUNG then came before the committee, and was sworn.

By Mr. OATES:

Question. What is your profession, and where do you reside?—Answer. I am a lawyer by profession, and my home is Memphis, Tenn.

Q. Have you any connection at this time, or at any former time did you have any connection, with what is known as the Pan-Electric Company or the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You can now proceed in your own way to state your connection with it, and inform the committee of the organization or organizations and issuance of stock, &c., connected with it. Being a lawyer, you know how to make your statement concisely.—A. I will try and make it as concise as possible. You have heard already from Dr. Rogers and his son about all I can tell you in regard to the organization of this company. Their statement is in the main correct. There are some inaccuracies, attributable, no doubt, to a want of memory, but their statement, as I remember it, about the organization of the company, is substantially correct.

Mr. RANNEY. If there are any important discrepancies you had better state those.

The WITNESS. I will state them as I go along.

Mr. RANNEY. Perhaps you might state them without rehearsing the whole story again.

The WITNESS. No; I prefer to testify about as I have had it arranged in my mind. I will come to it step by step and give you every fact about it, and they will agree with me about these inaccuracies and so will the committee; I have no fear about that.

In the winter of 1883, in February, I think—perhaps I had better go a little farther back to account for the connection that sprang up subsequently, and all the facts connected with this thing, for I take it that is what you gentlemen want, and there seems to be a good deal of public anxiety on the subject. I have known Dr. Rogers and his family connections from boyhood. For thirty years the most intimate relations existed between himself and me and all his relatives that I know anything about, the family on both sides, Mrs. Rogers' family and his family. His brother, who recently died, one of the most eminent surgeons of the South, was my closest friend. That embraces all his family connections, and himself, also, until a very recent period. I came to Congress in 1874. I found Dr. Rogers residing either here or in New York, I do not remember which. He had been away from Memphis several years, but I had heard from him frequently. I do not know whether he lived here or in New York. I met him here and possibly he lived here. I took a great interest in his inventions and in his son, whom I regarded as a rare genius, and I think so yet. I think he is an electrician of much more than ordinary merit. I took much interest in having him appointed the electrician of the House, although the doctor said I did not do it. At all events I did what I could in that way, and he was appointed, and remained in that position until I went out of Congress.

Q. What Congress was that?—A. It was the Forty-fourth Congress. Well, he was in the House as electrician, and I noticed, and he called my attention to a great many improvements that he had made that I thought were improvements, some very ingenious electrical inventions, one for counting the vote of the House. It displayed a high order of genius. I do not know that it was of any practical value, for they don't want the vote counted fast; but at any rate it displayed a good deal of inventive ingenuity. I was told by the architect, Mr. Clark, and others, that he had made improvements in lighting up the House, and discovered that some had been made. Mr. Clark talked with me frequently, and I heard it from other sources. I had something to do with putting in new machinery that he wanted, a dynamo or something of that sort, to make still further improvements, which I believe he was doing, and believe yet that he did do, as I have no reason to think to the contrary.

I went out of Congress in 1880. I was defeated. I remained at home practicing my profession. I heard during that time from the newspapers, or perhaps from Dr. Rogers' relatives in Memphis, that Harry Rogers had made some valuable inventions in telegraphy or telephony, perhaps it was telephony; it was more through the newspapers than in any other way, or perhaps it was from the doctor's cousin, with whom I was intimate. I was re-elected to Congress in 1882. I am not sure whether I heard anything of this telephone we got hold of subsequently, before or afterwards. I do not know whether the doctor wrote me about it or not, but I am inclined to think he did. I came here some time in February, and I saw Dr. Rogers very soon after I got here, and he told me something about this telephone and the inventions that Harry had been making, and he was very enthusiastic over it, and I suppose it was well warranted. I do not know whether at the first conversation he said anything to me about joining him in a company to develop these things; perhaps he did. But at some subsequent conversation he did, and it occurred about as he stated.

I do not remember seeing Senator Garland at his house. Perhaps I did; I cannot say. I did see General Johnston there, and Senator Harris took a number of his friends up to the laboratory and experimented with this telephone, talked through it. They had one end of it down somewhere about Sixth street, I believe, and the other up-stairs. I thought it was a very superior instrument, that it talked louder and more distinctly than any I ever conversed by, and that was the judgment of all the gentlemen there. But at some time during these different conversations (I was in the habit of going to his house very often) it commenced to take the form of a proposition for a number of his friends to join in developing these inventions, and he gave as a reason (which he would have given himself if he had thought of it) that he had been unfortunate in a previous organization of that sort, and he preferred to be associated with men on whose honor and integrity he could rely.

Mr. RANNEY. I think you had better confine yourself to testimony and not make an argument.

The WITNESS. I will tell it in my own way, and if the committee think it is wrong, they will correct me.

Mr. RANNEY. I think you had better state the facts.

The WITNESS. I am going to give you the truth before I get through, one way or the other, as near as I can understand it. Now it is said here in this contract that this is to constitute the Pan-Electric Association. That is my own nomenclature. I see it appears in these articles of the association that this association was to be known as the Pan-Electric Association. I believe that was my own idea. I claim priority of invention on that. I put that in; it seemed to me to represent better the idea I had gathered from all the parties than any other term I could conceive of, and therefore I put it in.

As Dr. Rogers stated, at that time it was intended to get an incorporation that would embrace all these things as near as possible; it was not in my mind to get two incorporations—one for a telephone and one for a telegraph company. I thought one charter or one incorporation would cover all these things. I had made no examination of any of them, and was not competent to form an opinion about it if I had, except in regard to the telephone and the telegraphic instruments and the electric light. I had examined all of them somewhat, and I thought at that time that the telegraphic instrument was a far more valuable one than the telephone. I changed my opinion afterwards because I was not then so well informed as subsequently. I thought the electric light that he showed me at his laboratory was a very ingenious thing. It seemed to be superior to anything I had seen, and from the explanation and description he gave of it to me I thought he had overcome to a great extent what had been considered to be the difficulties heretofore in electric lights previously invented. I had some comprehension of the value of those two things and of their practical utility. In regard to the other things enumerated here I did not have; I do not remember all of them. I remember there was another arrangement to talk through gas-pipes. I thought that was a very convenient thing in a large household, but I did not attach much value to it nevertheless.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. An invention to talk through a gas-pipe?—A. Yes, sir; to use it as a conductor for telephonic communication. I thought it was a very ingenious thing, and probably useful for a large household, but I did not consider it very valuable. I do not remember that I examined the other things enumerated here; I do not think I did, at any rate I did not understand them; but I did examine the telephone as far as I could by seeing it and talking through it, and I thought it a very superior one. I think to-day it is the most valuable telephone in existence, and far superior to any other that I know of in volume of sound, in distinctness, and in simplicity of adjustment, and all those things; I think that yet. At that time that was the general knowledge I had of these various inventions. I talked a good deal to Dr. Rogers and also, to his son, Harry, but I did not have any definite ideas, did not understand these things very well, and did not pay much attention to them. I drew up that contract, and its date shows it was on the 13th of March; it is set out here in the contract that the executive committee provided for were to assess themselves for $150 each to carry out the testing of these instruments and these other things; I suggested that sum myself, being one of the executive committee, or knowing I was to be one, as I supposed gentlemen would not like to place the power in our hands to assess them ad libitum; so, without any suggestions from any one, as nobody objected to it, I put it in that form. I went home, and I believe I came back to Washington and stayed here a day or two, and then returned to Memphis, and became very busy in my profession as soon as I got there.

I do not remember all that was said up there. What he states occurred, I suppose, and perhaps a great deal more. But some time in March, after the adjournment of Congress, it was agreed between us to meet in New York at a certain time. I had some other business there, and I do not know but that Senator Harris had also. At any rate we went over to New York and we talked over the matter still further, and it resulted finally in the drawing up of this agreement, which, I think, I have here with the papers. (After a search.) No, I do not find it, but I understand it was published the other day.

Senator HARRIS. I have a copy here which you can have the use of.

The WITNESS. Dr. Rogers says there was something said about terms. Perhaps there was; I do not recollect it. I do not recollect that any definite terms were agreed upon as to how much these gentlemen and myself should have, for I did not really give much attention to it. But this I do know, that there never was one word said at that time, or any other time until long afterwards, about this stock being a gift or donation to anybody, though I expect Dr. Rogers would have given it to us if he had had the stock issued and any of us wanted it, without any consideration, as that is about his way of doing things with his friends. But there was never a word said at that time that I ever heard about there being any gift or donation. It was understood that we were to form an association or joint stock company for the purpose of utilizing these inventions, just as all other patents had been utilized that have been granted from the Patent Office. When we went to New York it assumed something more of a definite shape and form. I talked with Dr. Rogers and talked with the balance of them, and there was a good deal of talk about it. The doctor had pretty enlarged ideas about what the enterprise was, and was more sanguine than I was about it; he gave it a more roseate tint than I would have given it. But finally it came down to this point, which I embodied in this contract, and which I understood to be about the meaning of the parties. That contract has been published, and I take it that the copy published is an accurate one, though I have not compared it.

Q. All the negotiations and propositions culminated in that agreement?—A. Yes, sir; and Dr. Rogers stated it as it was, and a good deal more occurred than he has stated or I could remember. We met a dozen times, I suppose. I do not know how often. When we came to write this I made some mistakes about these things, and Harry Rogers corrected it afterwards in our contracts. I confess I never did understand until I heard Dr. Rogers's testimony, which was given here so clearly, what his ideas were. He talked a good deal about it, but he stated in the outline about what I thought he understood and what I understood, only it was a good deal larger in its scope than I understood him to contemplate. I wrote this contract at the request of the gentlemen. When I came to draw it up I was trying as near as I could to guard against any future misapprehension or trouble. I knew there were a good many wild-cat concerns which had been organized all over the country, a good many companies of various sorts that had no real value, and I did not intend to participate in any such enterprise, and I know that that was Dr. Rogers's intention; but his ideas and mine differed, although it was an honest difference of opinion. It was never my idea that this stock should be issued and scattered broadcast upon the market. I believe it would destroy any business enterprise in the world, and I think any business man will agree with me in that view.

It did not occur to me, or any of us then, that charters of incorporation were to be had. After coming to Washington, and staying a day or two, as I say I went home, and after I got home was very busy at my office, and did not have time to give much attention to this thing. But in the mean time I received letters from Dr. Rogers occasionally in reference to it, and probably one or two from Harry Rogers, telling me how they were getting on with their experiments.

Mr. RANNEY. I prefer to have those letters, and let them speak for themselves.

The WITNESS. I will say now that I do not wish to go into the business of publishing personal and private correspondence, and I have not a letter in my possession that reflects in any way upon Dr. Rogers' integrity. I have not got them all, but possibly I have got some of them.

Mr. RANNEY. I simply object, Mr. Chairman, to the witness stating the contents of letters.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, if the letter itself can be had.

The WITNESS. If I have not got it I cannot produce it. If I can find them I will bring them up, and produce them afterwards. There is nothing I am going to say that will affect him in any way whatever.

Mr. RANNEY. We can judge about that.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. If you speak of a particular letter we can inquire whether it is in existence or not.

The WITNESS. It was a letter written to me; I heard frequently about these things; a letter in the fall of 1883; the first time I ever heard of any complaint about the charter, Dr. Rogers urged that it was time we were organizing, and I wrote back some of these letters and those you have.

Mr. RANNEY. We have your letters, but not his.

The WITNESS. Well, I would read them if I had them; they do not reflect upon his integrity.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. I understand you to say that you have some of those letters?—A. I think it possible I have some; when I discovered that the public were anxious to know about our matters, I wrote to my law partner at home to send me all my letter-books and all the letters he could find; he sent me a package of letters that came out of my room that he supposed related to telephone matters, and in that package are letters from Dr. Rogers, though I have not examined them since they came.

Mr. RANNEY. We would like all his letters.

The WITNESS. Very well, I will surrender them all with his consent; I will not do it without.

The CHAIRMAN. Do not refer to the contents of any letter which you cannot produce.

Mr. RANNEY. It was understood that you would go on and make a statement that would not involve the correspondence. We consented that you should go on with that view, and I should prefer, Mr. Chairman, that that is adhered to. The matter cannot be understood intelligently without the letters.

The WITNESS. I cannot do justice to myself, or Dr. Rogers either, without telling this story in my own way.

The CHAIRMAN. The witness understands the rule of evidence in that respect?

The WITNESS. I do perfectly, and I have a perfect right to testify in my own way, and if I cannot find a letter, if it is not in my possession, I have a right to give the contents.

The CHAIRMAN. That fact must judicially appear, of its loss or your inability to produce it, as well as its existence.

The WITNESS. I could testify to the existence of the letter at one time, but I could not say whether it is lost or not. If you think it important, you can adjourn the examination, and I will go right home for it.

Mr. RANNEY. We have already produced one side of the correspondence, and that is never fair unless you have the other side.

The WITNESS. You have not produced any correspondence in reference to these letters. It does no injustice to Dr. Rogers or anybody else. I just want to give you the facts in this letter.

Mr. RANNEY. It is not a question of what Dr. Rogers might prefer, but what the committee may decide it their duty to do.

The WITNESS. If the committee is going to decide in advance what I am going to say, and do not wish me to state it, I will not say it.

Mr. RANNEY. All we want is that you should not give one side of the correspondence while the other side is here, without first producing the letters of that correspondence.

The WITNESS. Well, I will have to stop, then, if I cannot tell it. I am going to have this whole story out, and have it out in my own way. If I can get it out, the whole truth shall be known.

Mr. EDEN. I presume it will be necessary for Mr. Young to make an examination and see what letters he has, and then those that he has that it is necessary for him to refer to, and introduce them, if they are relevant, and those that he does not find and cannot be introduced he can give us the contents of the letters.

Mr. RANNEY. Let him produce such letters as he has, and let them be arranged with this other side of the correspondence, such as we already have.

The WITNESS. I will surrender no private letter in my possession without the consent of the writer. If Dr. Rogers consents to it, I will surrender them; otherwise, not.

The CHAIRMAN. It would not be the surrender of private correspondence; it would be the production of papers under a subpoena.

The WITNESS. I have all the papers here, except the correspondence.

The CHAIRMAN. The subpoena prepared required you to produce all correspondence relating to this matter, so that you need have no scruples about the production of private letters.

The WITNESS. I say it will not do Dr. Rogers or anybody else any harm.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think Dr. Rogers would produce your letters without consenting that you should produce his; but whether he would or not, for myself I should insist upon it.

The WITNESS. That is a matter of taste.

The CHAIRMAN. You will produce what letters you have.

The WITNESS. Yes, all I have that have any reference to this thing. I have five hundred letters from him, perhaps. I have corresponded with him twenty years.

The CHAIRMAN. You need only produce those that relate to the matter of this investigation.

The WITNESS. There are only two or three that I desire to bring before the committee to explain about this matter of incorporation. It seems that we have offended somebody because we did not go on and patent electricity and every other element in nature. If that is wrong I want to explain it.

Mr. HALL. Have you reason to believe you have those letters and can produce them?

The WITNESS. I think it is likely I have them.

The CHAIRMAN. Then, as objection is made, you will have to exclude from your statement anything in connection with the contents of the letters.

The WITNESS. Then perhaps, as I am interrupted in the thread of my narrative, I will wait until I get the letters.

Mr. RANNEY. The correspondence had better be dropped. It was understood that we should go on, and those matters should be waived.

The WITNESS. Perhaps I had better go over that now and begin a little further on. I am trying to meet what I understand to be the points in the case. I have been charged with a great many bad things, and I want to show how all those things happened to be done. That was the first one, the organization of the company. I might explain here, without reference to Dr. Rogers, by referring to a letter of mine already in evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. No, we have not any of the letters in evidence. We want both sides in evidence when we get the letters.

The WITNESS. I do not see how I can tell the story honestly if that is the decision of the committee, unless I do my associates great injustice. I want the story fairly before the public so that we may be fairly judged, and I cannot do it unless I am permitted to do it in my own way.

Mr. RANNEY. It is a mere matter of propriety in regard to putting in the correspondence.

The WITNESS. I will produce all the letters I have and put them in.

Mr. RANNEY. And then when we have got all the letters from Dr. Rogers before us, the correspondence had better speak for itself, and then you can make any explanations you desire.

The WITNESS. I am going to make the explanations as I go along, unless the committee stops me.

Mr. HALL. I do not know what the rule is in regard to testimony before a committee of this kind. The witness has no process of authority by which he can get possession of papers, and it seems to me that the rule observed in courts of justice, in cases between contestants, to call on the courts to produce papers that are wanted, does not apply in a case of this kind. I understand that this committee has some two or three hundred papers relating to this correspondence. This witness has no control over or access to them, and it seems to me a very peculiar proceeding to say that he shall not refer to letters, in giving his account or history of the affair, unless he produces them.

Mr. MILLARD. He is now speaking of letters in his immediate control, in his possession.

Mr. HALL. No; he has left that point.

The WITNESS. If you will pardon me, I will make one suggestion.

Mr. HALL. They are so far before us that a witness has brought them, and the witness was about referring to some letters supposed to be before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. There could be no objection to his referring to the letters, but there is a strong reason for maintaining the rule here, as elsewhere, that the contents of those letters shall not be proved orally if the papers themselves can be produced.

Mr. HALL. The point I make is, that when the witness comes to points of that kind it is the duty of the committee to produce the papers, and not the duty of the witness. If the papers are possessed by him they ought to be produced.

The CHAIRMAN. It is only a matter of order or convenience.

Mr. RANNEY. We shall not deny any right that the witness has.

The WITNESS. I was going to suggest that it might, in such a matter as this, facilitate the work of the committee if you would allow me to take my own course in giving testimony, for this reason: I expect I have two hundred letters from Dr. Rogers; I have corresponded with him twenty years. Many of those letters have no reference to this thing, and it would do no good to publish them. The one I alluded to was to explain my action in reference to this incorporation; that is all. Only two or three of them have reference to that. The balance of his letters have no reference to these matters particularly, and will do no good to the committee or anybody else. I can bring all those letters up.

Mr. EDEN. I do not think it will be necessary for us to go through any part of the correspondence excepting that relating to this transaction.

The WITNESS. There may be fifty letters referring to the matter, but I was only going to call attention to two or three.

The CHAIRMAN. It would not be fair to require the witness to produce all the correspondence with Dr. Rogers. We will take his statement under oath as to his having papers relating to this matter.

The WITNESS. I have no letter from Dr. Rogers that reflects in any way on his integrity as a man, or on anybody else.

Mr. EDEN. If the witness says those are all the letters relating to this transaction from Dr. Rogers, that will be sufficient.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, because if there shall be any controversy on that subject, I have no objection that they shall be shown to the chairman, and he can determine it. I do not want to pry into anything relating to this matter. The chairman could decide, and that would preclude the disclosure of private matters.

The WITNESS. We shall not disagree about that at all.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS. You may publish all my letters if there is no poetry in them. [Laughter.]

Mr. RANNEY. We want facts, not poetry.

Mr. OATES. As some members of the committee object to going on until Colonel Young examines and brings up the letters he received from Dr. Rogers, which he thinks have reference to this Telephone or Pan-Electric Company, I move that the committee adjourn until 10 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. MOFFATT. Do you mean all the letters that he received from all the parties relating to this?

Mr. RANNEY. I desire any letters from any of his associates. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that he put in his corporate books. We want to go into the matter of the corporations and the stock they issued.

The WITNESS. Here are the books [pointing to a box full of books.]

Mr. RANNEY. Why can't you pass to them?

The WITNESS. Because I want to go out to the public fairly represented, which I cannot do unless I do it in my own way.

Mr. RANNEY. As Mr. Young prefers the other course of proceeding, I have no objection.

Mr. HALL. I may not have understood the witness, but I move that he be permitted to have access to the letters in possession of other parties that are supposed to be introduced, with a view of enabling him to give his testimony.

Mr. OATES. The subcommittee will make their report of them to-morrow.

The CHAIRMAN. You will have the letters here by that time, Mr. Young?

The WITNESS (pointing to the box full of books.) Here are all the letters and papers relating to the concern. I put them in evidence now to let the committee be responsible for them. I will turn them over to you all the books—[producing them].

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion to adjourn until to-morrow morning at 10 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee then adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Saturday, March 20, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 10.45 a. m.

Mr. J. HARRIS ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a correction in the testimony of yesterday. I am reported as having said that Mr. Hanback had been reported to me as being the attorney for Senator Harris and Colonel Young—

Mr. EDEN (interposing). I would suggest, inasmuch as Mr. Oates is not present, that the correction should not be made until he comes in.

The CHAIRMAN. It had better be deferred until that time. Shall we now proceed with the examination of Colonel Young?

Hon. CASEY YOUNG then came before the committee and his examination was resumed.

Mr. YOUNG. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, this would be a proper time to call attention to a statement in the testimony of Mr. Harry Rogers, which I have no doubt he will correct. It is printed on page 51, and is in the chairman's question, to which he assented. This is the question:

"Q. Would these companies have been entitled to any interest in the Pan-Electric Company or the Pan-Electric Postal Company had they been organized by virtue of their purchase of the interest in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company? They seem to have bought territorial rights of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.—A. Yes, sir."

I do not think he meant to say any such thing. If there was any Pan-Electric Postal Company, I never heard of it.

Mr. J. H. ROGERS. If I said that, I was mistaken; I never heard of such a company.

The WITNESS. That is what I supposed.

Mr. J. H. ROGERS. I would never intentionally use the title Pan-Electric Postal Company.

The WITNESS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I was instructed by the committee to produce this morning the letters of Dr. Rogers. I have looked over what letters I find; I expect I have a hundred more somewhere at my room; I have five or six large volumes of other letters put away in letter files; I have not had time to go through them all; I expect there may also be some scattered about. Here are a number of his letters that I happened to find, and these I will hand to Dr. Rogers, and if there is anything in them that he wants left out he can so signify to the committee.

Mr. J. W. ROGERS. I do not want them; I do not want anything left out that I have ever written.

The WITNESS. There is nothing in any of these letters that would reflect any discredit upon Dr. Rogers or anybody else. I do not think they have anything to do with this inquiry, but the committee can examine them. The letter I was about to refer to when I was stopped yesterday I have in my hand, and I will call attention to it directly. All of them have just as little reference to this investigation as those that have been already published, perhaps less.

Looking over the testimony this morning certain things occur to me that I overlooked yesterday. In my haste in making my statement, with the constant interruptions to which I was subjected, they escaped my memory. I will now go briefly over them again, in order that I may call attention to these things that I omitted yesterday.

The first knowledge, as I stated yesterday, that I had of this matter I probably derived through a letter from Dr. Rogers before I came on here, but I do not recollect about that. When I came here, in February, 1883, and had the first interview that I had with Dr. Rogers, the conversation occurred about as he stated it, and about as I stated it yesterday. I did not see him in company with these other gentlemen for some two weeks, perhaps, though I learned from him that he had conversed with them generally, about as he had with myself, in reference to the formation of a company or association to develop these inventions of his son.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What other gentlemen do you refer to?—A. I refer to Senator Harris, General Atkins, General Johnston, and Senator Garland. I do not know that he mentioned the name of Garland or of General Johnston; perhaps he did. But the conversation he had with me with reference to the gentlemen he proposed to interest with him was more in regard to Senator Harris and General Atkins than any of the balance of them. And I might say here that Senator Harris resides in Memphis, where I do, and his intimacy with Dr. Rogers was about the same as mine. General Atkins lives in a county west of us, and I do not know the extent of their acquaintance, but I presume they have been quite intimate for many years. So I spoke more particularly with reference to these gentlemen than I did the other two.

The impression I got—and the impression was authorized from the conversation we had—was that he desired our assistance to develop these instruments; and I think I suggested it to him that perhaps he could get better men than we were, men of higher business standing and more business capacity; that politicians were not the best business men in the world. In reply to that he said, as I remember, that he wanted us on account of our position and standing, great names and integrity; that he had formed a company recently before that with business men, and that he had been treated badly and had had trouble with them, and that he wanted to cut loose from them and associate himself with his old friends, in whom, as he stated yesterday, he could have implicit confidence.

In all these conversations if there was ever anything said about donations or gifts I never heard it; I do not think anybody ever conceived such an idea; it never entered my mind. But we have been educated a good deal since that time by gentlemen who seem to have a higher idea of official etiquette and ethics than we had. I do not think it would have been a great crime if we had done it, but at that time we had not been educated up to our present standard. I do not know but if Dr. Rogers had offered it to me, considering our relations at that time, I would have accepted it. I did not know at that time that it was so great a crime to do anything of that sort; that had not occurred to me. However, in all our transactions and in all our conversations there never was a word said by Dr. Rogers or anybody else about our using any official influence, about our taking advantage of our official positions to accomplish anything in connection with these matters.

There never was a word said that might not with perfect propriety have been published to the world without bringing reproach or discredit upon any man connected with it on either side. I do not think Dr. Rogers ever had it in his mind that there was anything corrupt or improper in the transactions which he contemplated, and I am quite sure that if he had wanted to corrupt any gentleman he would not have gone to any one of these gentlemen to do it. So I want to dissipate that idea that we gentlemen were the recipients of Dr. Rogers's bounty, or that his purpose in getting us was that our official influence might be prostituted to the furtherance of the interests of this association. It never entered his mind, and it never entered the mind of anybody else. It was never suggested—

Mr. RANNEY. I think you may state what entered into your mind, but I do not think you should state speculatively what other people thought or did not think.

The WITNESS. I am going to state it in my own way. I am going to meet these charges.

Mr. RANNEY. I am willing that you should speak of your own intentions, but I am not willing you should argue the case.

The WITNESS. I do not want to argue it. I am making a statement here in defense of myself, and I have a perfect right to meet in my statement every charge that has been made, and I am going to do that if I can. So much for that.

There never was a word said, there never was an act done that would authorize any such inference upon the part of anybody; and every intimation and every publication that suggests directly or indirectly that any of the men in this association were actuated by any corrupt or improper motive is an unfounded calumny, without any sort of truth to support it—everything, all and similar, each and every one of them. No man in the concern ever said one word that could be distorted or construed into an intention to do anything improper or corrupt.

Q. Allow me one question. I infer from what you say now, without repeating it, that you did not regard this allotment of interest in the Pan-Electric enterprise as a gift?—A. No; nor did anybody else.

Q. But as a joint undertaking upon the part of all the parties?—A. Exactly. A donation was never heard of or suggested by any one, until a long time afterwards, with reference to which I will direct your attention hereafter, and show all about it. If it had been, I should have thought it entirely proper to accept, but as a matter of fact it was not. Considering the relations between us, if he had offered it, no doubt I would have taken it. I do not know.

After these various conversations the first thing that occurred to me about the matter was that perhaps we were infringing the Bell patent. I had given some little attention to that, and I came very near being one of the original organizers of the Bell company; I was here at the time; it was a very unfortunate thing for me financially that I missed it. But, as I say, one of the first considerations that occurred to me was whether or not these inventions infringed those of anybody else. Harry Rogers explained to me the difference between his invention and the invention of others. I speak of the telephone now, because I did not suppose these other inventions infringed anybody. He explained to me the mechanical construction of his instrument and the points of difference that existed, as he thought, between that and the Bell telephone apparatus. Of course I had to risk his judgment about that; I did not know anything about mechanical apparatuses as affecting telephones; I had never looked into such matters. But he told me that in his judgment there was no infringement, and I think he said he had consulted probably some legal gentlemen on that subject. He was firm, however, in the belief that his mechanical apparatus was so widely different from that of Bell that there was no infringement between the two instruments. He suggested to me, I believe, that we would be free from trouble on that ground, unless it should be held that Bell's broad generic claim, which covered or undertook to cover every method of transmitting articulate speech by electricity was valid.

I thereupon undertook to examine for myself the law upon that subject, taking his judgment as to the mechanical construction of the instrument itself. I examined with some care the leading case of O'Reilly vs. Morse, where that question is discussed by the Supreme Court, as well as the four or five succeeding cases that follow and adopt that decision. I examined this broad claim of Bell's and his application, and I became satisfied in my own mind that that claim was too broad; that it came under the very same principle of law decided in the case of O'Reilly vs. Morse, in which the court laid down the doctrine that a claim as broad as that could not be maintained under a proper construction of our patent laws. I became satisfied that that was good law. Whether it was good law or not, the Supreme Court said it was, and so decided in four or five subsequent cases, in which they laid down the same doctrine that they had in the case of O'Reilly vs. Morse. The eighth claim of Morse, I believe that was the one, and the fifth claim of Bell were so nearly alike that I was not able to see wherein it differed from the decision in the case of O'Reilly vs. Morse. So I became satisfied, from Harry Rogers's judgment as to the mechanical construction of the instrument and from my own judgment as to the principles of law, that the Bell claim was too broad, and that our patent was good. So we went forward with the matter. Then we went to New York where this contract was drawn up. I want to call attention to its terms a little, so that some of you learned lawyers, who have been considering it, can see whether it is a donation or a contract; I thought it was a contract; perhaps my legal judgment was at fault.

Mr. RANNEY. Has that contract been printed?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; it is in the report.

The WITNESS. Oh, yes, it has been printed a dozen times; I have seen it in all the papers of the country. Dr. Rogers, Harry Rogers, Senator Harris, General Atkins, and myself were at New York for two or three days; none of the other parties were there. We discussed the whole matter for probably a day and a half, and it took form something like that set out in this contract. During all this time there was never an intimation from anybody that this was a donation or gift, or that we were the recipients of any munificence from Dr. Rogers or anybody else. And I say further, that at about that time, when I saw the form that it was going to take, I took the trouble to make a little examination to inform myself about how these companies were formed, and I ascertained, notwithstanding the fact that it is alleged that such great wrongs have been committed, that nearly every company that was ever organized in this country to utilize patents for inventions, was organized precisely as this company was organized; and this, notwithstanding the fact that we have been charged with such very great crimes. The Bell company was so organized.

Mr. MILLARD. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that a witness should be confined to the facts in the case.

The WITNESS. That is a fact that I am stating, an important fact; I know it to be a fact.

The CHAIRMAN. I can only say that I was not present when the examination of Mr. Young began, and that when I came in he was making his own statement, and so I thought the committee had concluded, in view of the fact that he had been a member of Congress, and is one of the parties affected by this investigation, and is a lawyer, that they would allow him to make his own statement and take the responsibility for it.

Mr. RANNEY. Great liberality has been shown Mr. Young in allowing him to make his own statement. Very early yesterday I cautioned him that he should separate his position as counsel from that of witness, and that while on the stand he should refrain from making arguments. So far as he wants to say anything about his own conduct I do not object to it, but it seems to me that he has thus far this morning gone into simply a statement as to other people, and has made an argument rather than a statement of facts.

Mr. MILLARD. If I understand it, what he is saying is very much in the nature of an argument in justification of the course that he pursued. A distinction should be made, according to the legal rules of evidence, between argument and statements of fact, when a legal gentleman is on the stand.

The WITNESS. I understand what the legal rule is. I have a right to explain my testimony and so has any witness. Any fact affecting a witness he has a right to explain. That is the right I insist upon, and that is all. I haven't got anything into my testimony yet but facts, and I am going to have facts in.

Mr. RANNEY. It seems to me that, although the witness may be stating facts as he says, yet he is rather expansive.

The WITNESS. I may be very expansive, but I cannot state these facts all in one breath.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed, but avoid argument.

The WITNESS. I am not going to make an argument; the gentlemen know that. I am simply explaining my testimony, and stating these facts and the influences that operated on my mind.

Mr. RANNEY. Give your testimony first and explanation afterwards.

The WITNESS. I will explain as I go along. I am going to state facts and explain them as I go along, so that there will not be any trouble hereafter. I am through with that part of it.

Q. Let me make one inquiry. You were speaking of making this written contract in New York. I have read that contract, and I call your attention to one feature of it. It seems that, as between the parties to the agreement, the valuation put upon this property was $1,000,000, and there was allotted to each one of the five parties one-tenth, to the inventor four-tenths, and one-tenth was retained, as we understand, for Mr. Hewitt or some other person, but was the property of the company. You then proceed to provide for the incorporation of the company with a capital of $5,000,000. I fail, however, to find, if I have rightly read the agreement, that there was any allotment of that stock or those interests to the several parties, but, on the contrary, if I am not mistaken, it was stated that that stock was all to belong to the company.—A. Yes.

Q. Why was that difference made?—A. That was a merely arbitrary value fixed. My recollection is that, for the purpose of fixing the interest each one of the parties should have—and I have no doubt Dr. Rogers will sustain my recollection, if he has not done so in his testimony—when we went to draw up these articles of agreement it was necessary to fix upon some sum in order that the respective interests might be allotted, and these interests were fixed by Dr. Rogers himself; I never had anything to do with it; I did not make any terms; there was no dickering between him and me; it was his own proposition, but I thought it necessary to fix some valuation; that was merely arbitrary; I do not think any one suggested anything about it. It was in contemplation afterwards to organize a joint stock company and capitalize at $5,000,000; but that was in no way obligatory upon us; we might just as well have capitalized at $10,000,000 or $2,000,000 if we had wanted to. It was fixed as a mere arbitrary amount by which we would be enabled to allot to each one his interest. General Johnston, Senator Harris, General Atkins, Mr. Garland, and I were to have one-fifth of it; Mr. Rogers was to retain four-fifths, and the remaining one-fifth was to be the common property of the company making up the $5,000,000 or the $1,000,000, as the case might be.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Was it not this way: In the formation of the joint stock company with a capital of $5,000,000 the allotments were to be made in these proportions?—A. I do not understand your question clearly.

Q. Was not the amount of it that a joint stock company was to be formed with a capital of $5,000,000, and that each one of you was to have his respective share designated?—A. Oh, yes; just as it is set out in this contract.

Q. Whether you called the capital $1,000,000 or $5,000,000, each had the same share?—A. Exactly; therefore I put it at $1,000,000, though we might as well have put it at $50,000,000 if we had wanted to.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I think you did not catch the drift of my inquiry, and although it may not be very material, yet I would like to call your attention to it again.—A. Certainly; I would be very glad to have my attention called to it again.

Q. In this agreement it is provided, first—

The WITNESS. What article is that?

The CHAIRMAN. That is the first article.

Mr. RANNEY. It is on page 8 of the printed report.

The WITNESS. Is it under the head of the second or the first clause?

The CHAIRMAN. The first clause, where you provide for the valuation as between yourselves. I will just read it:

"It is mutually agreed and understood by all the parties hereto, that, as among themselves, the value of said improvements, discoveries, and inventions shall be estimated at $1,000,000; that this amount shall be divided into ten equal parts or shares, four of which are to be held and owned by the said James Harris Rogers and one each by the said Joseph E. Johnston, Augustus H. Garland, John D. C. Atkins, Isham G. Harris, and Casey Young; and the remaining part or share shall be jointly held by the company, to be disposed of in such manner as the members thereof may see fit."

Then it provides for the incorporation.

"Third. It is also agreed that when the aforesaid persons are incorporated as a corporate body, as hereinbefore provided, the capital stock of said corporation shall be the joint property of this company."

Q. Why was that difference made as between the interest on the $1,000,000 valuation and the ownership of stock under the corporation?—A. The association was to transfer the stock to the corporation when incorporated.

Q. By virtue of what did you ever own any separate interest in the stock of the corporation?—A. We owned it jointly under this contract, but we intended, when the company was incorporated, to make a transfer, which we did, of all of this property to the corporation.

Q. To have the stock of the company transferred to the individuals?—A. Oh, no; to have this association transfer it to the company.

Q. But still you fail to comprehend my point.—A. I do not understand exactly.

Q. Under the first arrangement as to the ownership of the inventions you were to own one-tenth?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. After the company should be incorporated I fail to find any provision here that you were to own anything separately, but the company was to own the entire stock?—A. Oh, no; there was no provision to own anything, except by the corporation.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. If your associates owned the company, what belonged to the company belonged to you?—A. I take it that would follow as a logical sequence.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. But why put in a provision that the company should own the capital stock?—A. The law requires that, and we could not get along without it; individuals could not do it; you must transfer all the franchises to the company; that is what the statute requires.

Q. You obtained the franchise by the incorporation of the company?—A. Exactly; and they would not have anything to incorporate on unless it was by this transfer by this association, which was done afterwards. That was required by law.

Q. I do not see why you should provide that the company should own its capital stock. It may not be material, but it struck me as singular.—A. Under our decisions that I have examined on that subject it is necessary that they shall have the franchise before they can transact business. An association could not do it. We could not have gone on and transacted business as an association, under the authorities I have examined.

Q. You started out with a company owning its capital stock, as every company would at the outset, and that is the property of the company?—A. Yes.

Q. But you have made no provision for the transfer of that capital stock to individuals. By virtue of what authority did you become the owner of one-tenth of the capital stock of the company?—A. The only ownership we acquired was under those articles of agreement.

Q. There is no provision there that the capital stock was to be transferred to individuals in payment for these inventions?—A. No, sir; there is not.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Was not this it: That the "ground floor," as between your associates—A. I don't know anything about a "ground floor." You know more about that than I do.

Q. — was $1,000,000 as the estimated value, but that you put it into a corporation for $5,000,000, and the corporation was to be organized on the basis of a capital stock of $5,000,000, and the property was to be put in on that basis?

The WITNESS. Is that a question?

Q. Was it not a fact that the "ground floor," as between your associates, the syndicate, as we may call it, was $1,000,000, and the company was to have a capital stock of $5,000,000, and the patents were to be put in at that rate?—A. Oh, yes; we were to have it as it is set out in this article here.

Q. Was not that it, that while between your associates the price was reckoned at $1,000,000, yet the patents were to be put in the corporation at $5,000,000?—A. It is set out here in this undertaking; if it was not so it would not have been here.

The CHAIRMAN. My question is would your company have had any basis, any capital, except the inventions?

The WITNESS. That is a legal question whether they would or not.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You were incorporated under the law of New York, were you?—A. No, sir; under the law of Tennessee.

Q. Does that law require the payment of any cash on subscriptions at the time of the incorporation?—A. No, sir; none whatever.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You can put the patents in for the whole of the capital stock?—A. We can if we see proper to do so.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Then when the money came into the company it was divided; so that your company never had any working capital?—A. Yes; we did have some capital.

Q. What was it?—A. When I come to that, if it is proper subject of investigation, I have the books here, which will show.

Mr. RANNEY. He says the patents were to be put in on the basis of $5,000,000, but as between themselves originally it was reckoned at $1,000,000.

The WITNESS. The valuation fixed upon it on the paper was merely arbitrary.

Q. But if the capital was to be divided among those who were the owners of the inventions, and the inventions were the entire basis of the incorporation, there was never any provision by which the company could have any money; that is to say, there was no provision for selling any of its capital stock for money?—A. Oh, no; no provision for selling its capital stock.

Mr. RANNEY. The fact was that each man of the original number for $1,000,000 would get $5,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. But there was never any money in the corporation.

Mr. RANNEY. They expected to get money by sale of rights.

The WITNESS. If you gentlemen will let me tell my story you will understand it much more clearly.

The CHAIRMAN. You must permit us to inquire as to your meaning.

The WITNESS. To be sure.

Mr. MILLARD. Let the witness state the particular statute of Tennessee under which the organization was made, so that we may refer to it.

Mr. OATES. If the committee will suspend the examination at this point I would like to make a report from the subcommittee appointed to arrange the papers.

Mr. MILLARD (to the witness). Can you refer us to the statute of Tennessee under which you organized?

The WITNESS. I cannot by page, title, and section, but it is in the general corporation laws of Tennessee; I guess it is in the statutes somewhere from 1872 to 1878. You will find it under the head of "corporations" in the session laws. This contract was drawn up without any reference to the laws of Tennessee; it was drawn up hurriedly, and it was not expected to ever undergo the test of judicial examination or judicial decision. It embraces just what at the time occurred to me as representing the purposes and intentions of the parties. Now, I will read the second section: "it is further mutually agreed by the parties to this agreement that they will, as soon as the same can be done, procure a charter of incorporation, constituting themselves a corporate body under the name and style of the Pan-Electric Company."

I think that name was suggested by myself.

"Embracing in such charter of incorporation such objects and powers as they may deem proper"—

We had not decided then what those objects and powers would be—

"and as are allowed to incorporated bodies under the laws of the State of New York, or of any other State in which said charter of incorporation can be obtained."

I had not at that time examined the incorporation laws of any State, and I was not sure about it; I had not given the matter any thought and examination as to the extent of corporate powers we would endeavor to secure in the State where we would obtain the incorporation.

The third section provides this:

"It is also agreed that when the aforesaid persons are incorporated as a corporate body"—

We contemplated incorporating ourselves—

"as hereinbefore provided, the capital stock of said corporation shall be the joint property of this company, and it may issue, sell, or otherwise dispose of so much thereof as they may see fit, provided that no individual member shall dispose of any interest acquired under these articles of agreement at less than the face value thereof without the assent of the executive committee hereinafter provided for."

I thought that would meet every emergency that might arise in the future, that it would keep it completely under our control, so that nobody could be imposed upon by it, and that every man who became interested in this joint stock company afterwards would know exactly what he was purchasing and exactly what its value was.

"And all interests jointly held by the company which may be sold as aforesaid, and disposed of by direction of the aforesaid executive committee, shall be sold for the joint benefit of the company."

In framing that article I had it in my mind that this company should be incorporated with a capital stock to such an amount as we deemed proper, and I do not think that was an extravagant one, notwithstanding a great many of my friends who have written me on the subject have found out that it was. I provided in this article that we might incorporate with a capital stock of $5,000,000, thinking we had a right to do that, though I have found out since that we had not. I did not know at that time whether anybody would become interested with us or not, and I provided that if they did we might dispose of stock either to them or for the purposes of carrying on the business of this organization in any way we might see proper. I was very careful to provide that no individual member of this organization—and there is the root of all our trouble—should have the right to dispose of his stock without the consent of the board of directors or of the executive committee created by the board of directors. We had a right to restrain the disposition of the stock in that way. I did not believe that any organization could be conducted upon any correct principles if every member of it was allowed to go around and sell his stock to anybody and everybody and at any price.

Q. Your view of it, then, was that when the company should become incorporated with a capital of $5,000,000 the stock would become the property of the association in the same proportion?—A. Exactly, and to dispose of as they saw proper.

Q. Do you think that is good law?—A. No, I think there would have been some legal difficulty about it when the stock came to be issued.

The CHAIRMAN. My view is that the corporators are not the stockholders.

The WITNESS. That has been held lately. I believe the leading decision on that point was rendered since that paper was drawn up.

Q. Your inventions could not be made the basis of the company's capital without a sale or transfer of the inventions to the company by an agreement with it that the capital stock was to be paid for by the inventions, and that you could not do in many States, for many or most of them require a cash payment.—A. This association made an assignment, which I believe to have been in accordance with the law, to this company. I have not examined very carefully the questions of law suggested in your interrogatory.

Mr. OATES. As I shall not be able to be present at the entire session of the committee, I want to make this report from the subcommittee now.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it the pleasure of the committee to suspend the examination of the witness and receive the report now? The chair hears no objection.

Mr. OATES. I will read the report of the subcommittee:

To the committee specially appointed under a resolution of the House of Representatives of February 26, 1886:

Your subcommittee appointed to examine certain correspondence among the corporators and associates in the Pan-Electric, and companies issuing therefrom, together with certain other papers, beg leave to state that they have performed that duty, and herein report--

(1) That the bundle or package of papers herewith returned, and marked A, contain nothing which on the face of it appears even remotely to relate to any of the inquiries which the committee is directed to make. They appear to be titles to lands, &c., to one or other of the Messrs. Rogers, and do not refer to Pan-Electric matters. Many of them appear to have been made many years prior to the organization of the Pan-Electric Company.

(2) We submit herewith that which purports to be copies of two letters, No. 76 and 155, from J. W. Rogers to A. H. Garland, but the latter has no name to it, and is nearly a copy of No. 76; No. 98, Bates's letter, is already in evidence. All the letters from Attorney-General Garland found among those delivered to us are referred to on Exhibit B, and are five in number, and none of them are worth anything or throw any light on the questions before the committee, but we report them for examination if the committee desire.

(3) Your committee have examined two hundred and twelve other letters. Of these they report thirty-seven, which they think may have some relevancy, and one hundred and seventy-five letters and papers found in the letter-album of Mr. Rogers which they do not believe have any relevancy to any of the questions into which the committee is instructed to inquire. A complete list of each class and the letters are herewith submitted. The letter from Casey Young to Dr. J. W. Rogers, dated August 21, 1883, is reported as relevant, although we do not think it is. It does not throw any light upon any question into which the committee is directed by the resolution of the House to inquire, but we submit the question of relevancy to the full committee.

(4) We also report herewith a package containing some papers, propositions, &c., for a combination between the American Postal Telegraph Company and the Pan-Electric Company, and an application for a charter for the Pan-Electric Telephone Company in the State of New Jersey, which does not seem to have been acted on. We do not deem them important, since none of them seem ever to have been acted on or consummated.

WM. C. OATES.
LEWIS HANBACK.

EXHIBIT B.—Letters to and from Hon. A. H. Garland.

- No. 76. J. W. Rogers to Garland, May 24, 1885.
- No. 98. D. H. Bates to Garland, July 1, 1884.
- No. 155. J. W. Rogers to Garland.
- No. 105. Garland to ———. No date.
- No. 152. Garland to S. S. Cox and A. S. Hewitt.
- No. 153. Garland to "Dear D.," February 8, 1884.
- No. 174. Garland to Rogers & Son, March 25, 1884.
- No. 194. Garland to J. W. Rogers, October 4, 1883.

Mr. HANBACK. I want to state, Mr. Chairman, that I have given about thirty hours of hard work to this report. I have gone through all this correspondence, and it has been a very serious undertaking; and I desire to say that if there are any more letters to be examined, I hope some other brother will be selected to do the work.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Hanback has given more attention to this matter than I could myself personally.

Mr. HANBACK. I began yesterday at 10 o'clock and worked until half past 4 without stopping a minute. There is a great mass of correspondence on various subjects, poetry, &c. There are some letters missing, but so far as I can see, the memoranda accords wholly with the missing numbers.

Mr. RANNEY. You both agree about this report?

Mr. OATES. Yes; we agree in every respect.

Mr. MILLARD. And you report back all the letters?

Mr. HANBACK. Yes, every letter has been examined and every one has been numbered.

Mr. RANNEY. I move that the report be put into the record, and that the papers reported be put in custody of the chairman, subject to examination, and that those which they report as material be printed for the information of the committee.

Mr. OATES. Perhaps those we report as relevant the committee had better examine in executive session.

Mr. RANNEY. Whatever you report as relevant I should like to have go into the record and be printed, and the others we can examine if any gentleman cares to do so.

Mr. OATES. The committee can take such course as they think proper, but I think it would reduce the body of the testimony if they were to be examined beforehand. There are thirty-seven of them.

Mr. HANBACK. We found it very difficult to decide what should go in and what should not.

Mr. RANNEY. My motion was that the report itself go into the record, and then that the letters which the committee agree are relevant may go into the record and be printed. Those that you say are not relevant I do not want to have printed.

Mr. OATES. I understood the matter. I only wanted to suggest that perhaps if the committee in executive session would examine those reported as relevant, they would find they did not require more than half of them to be printed, and it would save printing to do so.

Mr. RANNEY. The object of my motion is so that the members of the committee may have a chance to read them in print.

Mr. OATES. Those that we thought even might be relevant we reported. There are thirty seven of them.

Mr. RANNEY. Each member of the committee to examine them must take the files and go over them for himself, whereas if they are put in print each member will have them before him. They have a mode of photographing such letters if it is necessary.

Mr. EDEN. If they are not relevant we can strike them out.

The CHAIRMAN. If they are to be printed in the record, I would suggest whether any letter should be printed without its being authenticated in some way, unless its genuineness is admitted.

Mr. MILLARD. Why not have them printed for the use of the committee outside of the record, and use such as may be necessary?

Mr. RANNEY. I say have them printed for the use of the committee.

Mr. HANBACK. I think Mr. Millard's suggestion is a good one, and I think we should instruct the stenographer to have them printed as he suggests.

The CHAIRMAN. It is moved by the gentleman from Massachusetts that the report of the committee, together with the letters reported as relevant by the subcommittee, be printed, not in the record as I understand it, but as a separate paper for the use of the committee.

Mr. EDEN. Before the question is put, I would like to suggest that as there are no parties to agree or consent that the letters are genuine, before they are put into the record their authenticity should be shown.

Mr. RANNEY. I think that is true, but the printing of them for the use of the committee would be very convenient. I think the report itself should be printed in the record, but not the exhibits.

Mr. OATES. Before the motion is put, suppose that these letters reported as relevant are printed for the use of the committee, then the originals have to be verified; we have to go over the originals any way; would it not be better, and probably it would be just about as convenient, to examine them before they are printed, because you have to prove the genuineness of them, and we could appoint some one to read the letters, and if they prove to be genuine, the committee can say whether they will print that one or not, and settle the question at once.

Mr. RANNEY. How many in number are there of those?

Mr. OATES. There are thirty-seven.

Mr. RANNEY. Are they long or short?

Mr. OATES. Some are long and some short; very short.

Mr. EDEN. At some period we have to hear the evidence as to the genuineness of the letters.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not imagine, as they are original letters, that there will be any controversy on that point.

Mr. OATES. I make the suggestion (merely because it would not help us along) not to print them for the use of the committee. You can decide first whether you want them to go into the record and print them right along.

Mr. RANNEY. If it was merely a matter of genuineness I should grant it; but as it is a matter of competency or relevancy, nobody can judge of that without reading them.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion now, as modified, is that the report of the committee, without the exhibits, be put in the record.

Mr. RANNEY. I will change that by suggesting that they be appended to the record. I do not know that we need put them in the body of it.

The CHAIRMAN. And not insert them in the record at this place. The motion now is that the letters reported as relevant to this inquiry be printed for the use of the committee and appended to the record instead of being included in the record at this time.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OATES. I desire to ask the committee what shall be done with this pile of papers here?

The CHAIRMAN. They may be returned to Dr. Rogers, if there is no objection.

There being no objection, the papers referred to were returned to Dr. Rogers.

The CHAIRMAN. The witness may proceed.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. The chairman submitted to me a legal question that I had not in contemplation before, the very difficulty that you suggest, as to whether or not it was within the power of incorporators to divide the stock out among themselves. I am aware that there is a good deal of conflict of authority on that subject. The latest decision that I have examined, and one rendered since the preparation of this article, would seem to decide it as against that proposition—the right of the incorporators to divide up that stock. That fact I have frequently called to the attention of my associates, and given it as my opinion that the way we were proceeding at that time was not exactly in conformity with the law. I will come to that hereafter. But at the time that this article was prepared (this contract) I had not made a careful examination of the authorities upon that subject, by no means so careful a one as I am in the habit of doing when I prepare legal documents, and if I had been preparing it for anybody else except myself I should have examined all there was in the law upon that subject; but I had not examined it up to that time as I have since, or so carefully as I would have done if I had not been treating it in great measure for myself. I had no authorities at hand; I wrote it at my room at the hotel with just a general knowledge of the laws that covered it, and that was my purpose.

Mr. RANNEY. It is immaterial whether it is the law or not, but, as a matter of fact, what you intended at that time was, that the patents should be put into the company as representing the five millions of capital stock.

The WITNESS. Our intention was that this association should constitute themselves an incorporated body, or a joint-stock company, with a capital stock of $5,000,000.

Mr. RANNEY. And that capital stock was to be represented by these patents.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; to be sure. There was nothing else in it except what money they might put in afterwards.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Let me ask you right there; you did have the Pan-Electric Telephone Company incorporated?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What disposition was made of the capital stock of those two companies?—A. I will come to that in a moment; it is the very thing I am coming to now. I may answer now, briefly, that nothing has been done with the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company. The Pan-Electric Telephone Company has its capital stock all in the hands of the company, except that part of it that went into the hands of Dr. Rogers, and has been disposed of as he has stated here.

Q. That suggests another matter. These moneys that you received for the sale of State rights seem to have been divided among the members. Was that divided in that proportion, as if you were the owners of that stock in tenths?—A. Yes, sir. Now passing from this contract, and the time it was prepared and signed by the parties. Immediately after that time I went home to Memphis with the purpose, I think, of looking into the law of the matter a little and ascertaining exactly what it was proper and competent for us to do legally under these articles of agreement. I intended to examine the law more thoroughly and ascertain exactly what character of incorporation it would be proper to obtain to carry out the purposes of this association as I understood it. I was not the counsel of the company, however, and I did not charge myself so particularly with the performance of that duty as I would have done if I had felt that the responsibility rested upon me as a lawyer to have advised these gentlemen as to the law of the case. Senator Garland had been selected as the legal adviser of the company, and I supposed as a matter of course that whatever legal advice would be necessary to be had would be obtained from Senator Garland. Therefore I did not examine it as closely as I otherwise would and perhaps should have done. After I got home I received a letter from Dr. Rogers, which I think was about the first one I had—

Mr. RANNEY. Have you that letter?

The WITNESS. Yes, I have.

Mr. RANNEY. You had better read it right in that connection.

The WITNESS. I will do it if I do not have to get the doctor to read it on account of the writing. I will see directly. I gave very little attention to it after I got home. I understood that General Johnston and Harry Rogers were to continue experimenting with these inventions, these instruments here, and these various things, and report to us from time to time, which they occasionally did, and I heard from them that they were prosecuting their investigations, making tests, &c.

Here is about the first letter I got from Dr. Rogers. I may have gotten others, but perhaps have mislaid or left them at home. This is dated February 3. There is nothing in it, and I only mention it to show that it is the first time I had heard of this matter, and what directed my attention to looking after the charter at home. The doctor called my attention to the fact that it was time we were organizing; that the experiments had been made by Harry and General Johnston, and were satisfactory; that the instruments were working well, and it was time we were getting out our charter, as he called it, meaning the articles of incorporation. I wrote back to him that I had made an examination of the laws of several States and was unable to find any of them that were broad enough to cover all the objects that he seemed to have in contemplation, and that seemed to have been the purposes of the company originally.

Then I got several letters of about the same purport from him, insisting that it was time to organize and go ahead. The idea was to issue the stock and sell it and go to making money. I was busy at home, and I replied occasionally to them substantially to the same effect, and finally I wrote to him (I think it is published there) that we could not do much at that dull season of the year; that it was the season for the cessation of active business operations; that I would be on here at the assembling of Congress, and then we could decide about what character of incorporation we could have. But he continued to insist upon it, and the articles of incorporation, which I have here, were sent to me either by him or by Senator Garland, I do not know which, in conformity with our statutes. It is a mere formal instrument. As the doctor said, he could have gotten a patent lawyer for $10 to draw it up, or I suppose he could have gotten a clerk for $1 to do it, for the statute lays down the form. This paper was sent down to me, having been prepared here in Washington City.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What paper is it; you say "this paper"?—A. I mean the paper I have in my hand. I do not know whether it was sent to me by Dr. Rogers or some other of our associates. But these are the articles of incorporation prepared in accordance with the formula laid down by our statutes, and in conformity with the law of our State.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. How is it executed?—A. The law requires that it shall first be recorded in the register's office of the county where the incorporators, or a majority of them, live, and that then it shall be put on record in the office of the secretary of state, and the great seal of the State attached to it.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. That paper you have, then, is the original articles of incorporation?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Is that signed by the parties?—A. No, sir; it is under the general incorporation laws passed by the legislature.

Q. Is it the articles of association, as they are generally termed, under the general laws?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then it is signed by somebody?—A. Yes, sir. It is signed by Dr. Rogers, General Johnston, Senator Harris, Mr. Garland, and Colonel Looney. Our law requires five or more persons to constitute a company that can be incorporated. I was not here at the time, and did not sign it.

Q. Under your general law you sign articles of association, and those are recorded in a designated place, and that constitutes you an organization?—A. Yes, sir; first in the county register's office in the county where the majority of the incorporators live, and second, in the office of the secretary of state.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. That is the identical "articles of incorporation"?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What is the capital stock named in that?—A. Five million dollars.

Mr. MILLARD. I suggest that the paper be read and put in evidence right here.

The WITNESS. This is exactly in conformity to our law.

Mr. RANNEY. I think it had better be put in evidence and go into the record.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. Do you know who it was prepared by?—A. I think it was prepared by Senator Garland.

The CHAIRMAN. Shall this go in evidence now?

Mr. RANNEY. This is the original paper, I understand?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Then I would like to have it go into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. I will read it to the committee.

STATE OF TENNESSEE,

Shelby County, City of Memphis, ss:

Be it known we, whose names are hereunto annexed, do hereby certify, that we have associated together for the purpose of establishing a company to carry on the business of telephony in the State of Tennessee, by constructing a line of telephonic wires from the city of Memphis to Collierville and other such wires in the various cities and counties of said State, to be used with suitable instruments and appliances for carrying on the business aforesaid; that the name assumed to distinguish such company or association and to be used in its dealings is "Pan-Electric Telephone;" that the operations of telephoning as aforesaid, of such association, are to be carried on in the town or city of Memphis, in the State of Tennessee, and in any and all towns and cities of such State; that the amount of the capital stock of the same is five million dollars, and is divided into fifty thousand shares, and the par value of each share is one hundred dollars; and the following are the names and places of residence of the share-holders and the number of shares held by each of them respectively: James Harris Rogers, of the city of New York, ten thousand shares; Joseph E. Johnston, of Washington City, D. C., ten thousand shares; Isham G. Harris, of the city of Memphis, ten thousand shares; Augustus H. Garland, of Little Rock, Ark., ten thousand shares, and Robert F. Looney, of Tennessee, ten thousand shares. And we do certify that such association will commence its operations on the fifteenth day of November next, and that it will terminate on the first day of November, in the year nineteen hundred and thirty-three.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto attached my hand and notarial seal.

[SEAL.]

D. A. NUNN,
Secretary of State.

The WITNESS (continuing). Previous to the time these articles of incorporation were obtained—I do not remember the exact date, but I think it was an extra session of our legislature which was called some time during the summer of 1883—we endeavored to get an amendment to our general law of incorporation so as to make it broad enough to embrace all these things contained in our contract drawn up in New York, but we failed to get it, and we came to the conclusion that that was about all that could be gotten under our laws and covered—about everything that a single incorporation could be made to cover.

Now, about that time I got frequent letters from Dr. Rogers, insisting upon the incorporation of the company being had, the leading idea of which seemed to be a wish to sell stock, and that idea did not strike me very favorably.

Mr. RANNEY. You ought to put those letters in.

The WITNESS. Well, I have them here; do you want me to read them? Here is one dated April 11, 1883, which is of no sort of use to anybody.

Mr. RANNEY. If the fact is material you had better read it. You have stated the fact, and here is the letter, you say.

The WITNESS. Yes, I have the letter; what shall I do with it?

Mr. RANNEY. Give it to the chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The letter can go into the record without being read.

The letter referred to is as follows:

(Show this to Senator H.)

GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL, New York, April 11, 1883.

MY DEAR COLONEL; I have just received a telegram from Harry, who had visited General Johnston (just returned from Danville, Va.), and found him "very gracious," "in high spirits about the inventions," "and confident of success in many of them."

Now, shall we have a charter? When? Several parties were anxious to buy stock, but until we get a charter such sales would have to be made prospectively, and it would be better, of course, to proceed regularly. We must, in some way, raise a large amount of money to utilize what is now perfect, but lacking machinery.

What do you say to my pet idea of building a telegraphic line to San Francisco? A short line would be crushed by the Western Union, and to utilize our cylinder, duplex, and quadruplex, and make the necessary machinery, would cost a vast sum of money. This would necessarily come from sales of stock. Then let us get to work, secure the charter, and put the stock on the New York Stock Exchange. Either this or sell the inventions, one after another, as they seem to strike the public mind.

I wrote you about the parties interested with me who would buy several if they could see them all tested on long lines, but even this will take a great deal of money, for, in order to test them properly, the finest machinery should be made, and I don't see how we are to get along without heavy sales of stock, even at a sacrifice of the first million dollars. How else can we realize the following?

Your friend,

J. W. ROGERS.

[Inclosure.]

We therefore propose to public consideration a powerful corporation to possess, a little in the future, vast laboratories, learned electricians, and skilled mechanics, standing ready to seize upon and develop whatever may be presented in the light of its influence, capital, and genius; nor would it seem extravagant to say that such a corporation, with its new methods, might convert great coal fields into torrents of electricity—that it might in time harness the very waves, clouds, water-falls, and winds to generate this mysterious agent of nature—and that busy marts and thoroughfares, with their bankers, tradesmen, and pompous fashions, may soon be seen thousands of miles distant, through the telemorphe, riding in carriages without horses, cars without steam, all lighted up by electric suns, in a new and enchanting civilization.

The WITNESS (continuing). Looking at that it, reminds me of a thing I intended to mention at an early period. There is a good deal said here about a pamphlet setting forth our organization, and that it was the basis of this contract. I observe here an extract, I suppose from the pamphlet alluded to. I have seen a good deal about pamphlets lying on the table before us all when we were discussing this thing, writing up the stock. I did see a pamphlet written by Dr. Rogers that I think this is an extract from. I do not know when it was written, but I saw it when I first came on to Washington. I think, perhaps, he sent it to me or handed it to me when I first came on to Washington in February, 1883. It was a rather poetical and high-drawn description of these various inventions in the doctor's usual florid style of writing.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Have you got that pamphlet?—A. No, sir; I haven't got it. It has been brought out in testimony here several times.

Mr. RANNEY. I object to the witness's characterization of it.

The CHAIRMAN. State if that is the pamphlet you have referred to as having seen on the table (handing a pamphlet to the witness to examine).

Mr. RANNEY. I have no objection to the pamphlet being put into the record.

The WITNESS (after an examination of the pamphlet). I do not really know whether this is the pamphlet or not. It was something similar to this, and I take it it was the same one, but I really could not say that; it was something like it.

Mr. RANNEY. If it is the same one, I think it should go in if you are to testify about it.

The WITNESS. I have no objection in the world. I will give you the point that I wish to make about it.

Mr. HANBACK. Is this the one? (showing the witness a pamphlet.)

The WITNESS. No, sir; not that one.

Mr. RANNEY. If that is the one, let it be identified and put in.

The WITNESS. I do not know, but I think it is the one.

Mr. RANNEY. Then let it be printed in the record.

The pamphlet is as follows:

PAN-ELECTRIC COMPANY.

[Capital stock, $5,000,000. Planted upon great electrical patents, and on the future possibilities of electricity.]

This company has been temporarily organized with the view of introducing into general use the several inventions described—belonging exclusively to the Pan-Electric Company, but more especially to develop others, as yet but partially advanced, as set forth herein, and to control by capital and foresight “the future possibilities of electricity.”

The patents and applications are as follows:

1. A new method of generating electricity by converting coal directly into electrical currents, and thus avoiding the cost (hitherto necessary) of acids or steam engines and dynamo-electric machines.

When electricity is generated by acids, only one-sixteenth of the force produced from one pound of coal can be gotten from one pound of zinc; but, per contra, the efficiency of the electric engine is four times as great as that of the steam engine, resulting in the ratio of one to one-fourth in favor of coal.*

It is well known that nearly 90 per cent. of coal is lost in propelling a steam-engine to generate electricity in a dynamo-electric machine, and hence the great value of a direct generation from coal only. To this end the Pan-Electric Company is working, and though not claiming ultimate success, can now show in its laboratory, No. 315 Four-and-a-half street, Washington, D. C., enough to promise great results in the near future.

2d. The company owns a new telephone system.

- (a) Telephone exchange.
- (b) Telephone transmitter.
- (c) Telephone receiver.
- (d) Telephone repeater.

Forming altogether a complete system for an opposition company; and when we consider that the stock in the Bell Telephone Company is $10,000,000 and sells at $192, it is evident that the Bell Company is worth about $20,000,000; hence, if the Pan-Electric Company had only its telephone system (without anything else), the capital stock would not seem extravagant at $10,000,000. But it has infinitely more, and is stocked at only $5,000,000.

ELECTRIC-LIGHT SYSTEM.

3d. This system is covered by two patents granted and one applied for; and if the Brush Company, the Edison Company, and the United States Company, &c., all sell their stock above par and some as high as 400, the Pan-Electric stock, embracing a field so much wider than mere electric lights, should command more than par value.

A TELEGRAPHIC SYSTEM.

4th. The Pan-Electric Company owns a system of rapid telegraphy, which saves the work of half the experts and more than half the wires of the old systems.

- (a) Transmitter.
- (b) Receiver.
- (c) Printer.
- (d) Duplex.
- (e) Quadruplex.

This system is astonishingly simple, and yet can send several thousand words per minute for mere delivery, and about three hundred a minute which repeat themselves—from any receiving station—even hours or days after being received. Commerce requires that very long lines shall be broken into sections. For example: Messages sent by the Western Union from Boston to New Orleans are repeated by experts at New York, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, and Memphis; for relays are useless, except when all the sections are worked simultaneously; and hence an enormous expense is incurred by repeating them; but by the new system, the words stop when required at any station, and as soon as the line can be obtained, spring forward without an expert. The well-known Rapid Telegraph saves line wire, but this advantage is, in a great measure, counterbalanced by the necessity of an expensive piano to set the messages up primarily, and then at each successive station the same expensive operation is required. The new system, however, while it saves thousands of miles of line construction by rapid transmission, also dispenses with costly experts at every repeating station. Hence this system alone will probably be worth more than the $5,000,000 at which the whole company is now estimated.

The company takes pleasure in appending, from a letter of the inventor, the following extract:

"Notwithstanding the many years and great outlay which I have given to perfect a cheap system of telegraphy, it is not presented as a new revelation. I have only improved what existed before. Each individual electrician realizes that, like the coral insect, he can only build on the edifice in which millions of his kind are entombed; charlatans may have perfectly original systems in science with which to revolutionize the world. I pretend to be only a very small factor; in an infinite series of much greater ones, reaching back through our own Henry's and Franklin's to Greek and Egyptian philosophers, who experimented with electron or amber; and my system only formulates, by combining their grand achievements with some trifling discoveries and devices, of my own; devices, however, based, as the Morse system was, on Prof. Henry's discoveries; and grateful for a noble friendship with which he honored me—as well as for his many kindnesses bestowed upon my father, when his pupil at Princeton. I lay this humble wreath upon his tomb."

* Rankine's Steam Engine and other Powers, p. 541.

Respectfully,

J. HARRIS ROGERS.

5. A new system of submarine and subterranean electric wires without insulation. This, since the patent was applied for, we have been advised by the Patent Office, has been partially anticipated in England; but still, circuits of great value, to work it—without which, it is impracticable, belong to the Pan-Electric Company, and, considering the present movement in every part of the country, to take all land wires from the poles in cities, it is evident that nothing could be of greater importance to telegraphy and telephony than such a system as the one indicated.

6. This company also owns a singularly cheap and effective gas-lighting electric apparatus.

7. Also, a burglar's-alarm, so simple that a child can put it in a house to indicate egress through any door or window, and announce it to every room instantly.

8. Telemorphe—so named, by the inventor, from the Greek words tele and morphe—from at a distance. By which persons many miles away can be brought in effigy into any social or business circle instantly.

This novelty of science, though as yet imperfectly developed, promises much—both to commerce and the social world.

9. The company also owns an electrical invention, by which fires, before they attain dangerous proportions, ring bells in every apartment of boats, ships, houses, and even the alarms of a city.

10. The company also own a singularly ingenious device by which servants and engineers, heating houses, hotels, &c., may see in the basement the exact temperature of every room in the building. This is of peculiar advantage to Government buildings, great hotels, colleges, &c.

11. A hotel annunciator.

12. An invention by which the vote of legislative assemblies may be taken by electricity, and every name recorded—electricity performing automatically the necessary addition and subtraction to ascertain the number voting; the majority and minority—all in one second, as against one hour consumed in "roll-call" or "tellers," saving to a country millions of dollars in the valuable time of great men!

Last, but not least—in fact above all—the company, without being visionary, is based upon a reasonable faith in "the future possibilities of electricity," and in the genius and capacity of a great and wise corporation to seize upon every new principle to be discovered hereafter. For each new principle, like the germ in the first acorn cup, is capable of infinite development.

For example—Rhumkoff's and Professor Henry's coils were each worth more than a $1,000,000 when invented, and yet were comparatively worthless until Morse and Berleiner applied them to telegraphy and telephony. Other examples might be given.

We therefore propose to public consideration a powerful corporation to possess, a little in the future, vast laboratories, learned electricians, and skilled mechanics, standing ready to seize upon and develop whatever may be presented in the light of its influence, capital, and genius; nor would it seem extravagant to say that such a corporation, with its new methods, might convert great coal fields into torrents of electricity; that it might in time harness the very waves, clouds, water-falls, and winds to generate this mysterious agent of nature; and that busy marts and thoroughfares, with their bankers, tradesmen, and pompous fashions, may soon be seen thousands of miles distant through the telemorphe, riding in carriages without horses, cars without steam—all lighted up by electric suns, in a new and enchanting civilization.

In one word—that the Pan-Electric Company will soon take a high place in the markets of the world, and enrich all who are wise enough to measure its grand conceptions.

J. Harris Rogers, late electrician United States Capitol, will be chief electrician of the "Pan-Electric Company." His "Secret Telephone," stocked in New York at $5,000,000, and his "Electro-Gas Telephone," stocked at $1,000,000, have already enriched himself and others; which past successes promise more to the "Pan-Electric Company," embracing so vast a field of invention and discovery. Several other prominent electricians, distinguished Senators, Congressmen, capitalists, and far-seeing, solid business men, have already acquired various interests in the enterprise, and there being, as the company believes, fortunes for hundreds of men. The object of this circular is to invite others to examine in practical operation several of the above-described inventions at No. 315 Four-and-a-half street northwest, Washington, D. C., that the strongest organization possible, and one commensurate with the vast project, may be formed. Some one of the electricians will always be at leisure to operate several of the various inventions described.

One-tenth interest will be sold, only to moneyed men applying for it, at a merely nominal price to construct machinery, and other interests will be sold at auction on the New York Stock Exchange for what it may bring; but it is confidently predicted that the stock will ultimately go greatly above par. It may require years to effect this result, for we depend in no way upon stock-jobbing operations, but upon a manly and scientific development of real values which stand on their intrinsic merits.

Parties investing must examine through their own electricians, experts, and lawyers, who will judge whether the inventions are valuable or not, so that if they should, by unseen possibilities, be less valuable than we suppose, or if thieves should creep in and get control, and cheat us all, no stockholder can plead the baby act. It is a venture for enormous profits or a trifle. The company has so ventured, and would rather keep its stock and take its own chances of profit and loss than to let babies in.

The WITNESS (resuming). All I want to say about that is that I have seen that pamphlet and I presume I read it; I do not remember. I know I did not see it on the table when I was writing the articles of agreement. I think I saw it at the house, and I think the doctor handed it to me probably before I came on. But what I want to say is, that this constituted no part of that contract, and was not referred to, that I know of, by anybody. When I prepared this contract this was not the basis of it, and was never thought of by me or anybody else that I know of.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I understand it had been prepared before your action?—A. Yes, sir; if this is the pamphlet, I saw it weeks before we went to New York, and that pamphlet there was prepared without any authority from us, and I never saw it for weeks afterwards. We never published any pamphlet, prospectus, or advertisement.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. The company did not?—A. Never.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. That was furnished before you went in?—A. Yes, sir; the one I saw. I could not say that it is the exact one; but I think it is. I have one here.

Mr. RANNEY. Don't let there be any mistake about the identity of it.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. I understand you say you have an extract there from it?—A. Yes; that was in the letter from Dr. Rogers, which I submitted.

Q. If the extract was compared with the pamphlet it would be easy to determine?—A. I think it is the same.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. I will ask you if that paper, or any one like it, was ever before the association and discussed by them?—A. Never that I heard of. It may have been present at some time during the talking at Dr. Rogers' house. I did not see it on the table, but I saw it, and I presume I read it. But at no board meeting was it ever discussed. Dr. Rogers wrote me some letters afterwards—months afterwards—having reference to this, in which he seemed to think that this was part of the contract, and perhaps he was authorized to think so. But this was not the principle embraced in it, and I did not have it in my mind at all when I was writing it. I do not see any clause in this pamphlet that corresponds with this extract from the letter, and it may have been a different pamphlet. Let me look at one I have here that somebody sent me. [Examining a pamphlet.] I do not see anything in that letter there that seems to correspond with the extract.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. The enumeration of the patents seem to be substantially the same in the contract and in the pamphlet?—A. That may be; I did not examine it with that view. But I do not find anything in it similar to that extract there from the letter, and it may have been altogether a different pamphlet. If the committee will bear with me a moment I think I can find one here. [After an examination.] No, I do not see anything in either one of these pamphlets that corresponds.

Q. Is the one you find the same?—A. No, sir; that is the one that Mr. Hanback handed me with our names on the back of it. The one I saw was before these articles were drawn up in New York, and I take it our names could not have been on that. Here is the extract from the letter: "We therefore propose to public consideration a powerful corporation to possess, a little in the future, vast laboratories, learned electricians and skilled mechanics," &c.

Mr. HANBACK. Here it is at the top of page 7 of the pamphlet.

The WITNESS. I see on this pamphlet the names of General Johnston, Senator Harris, Senator Garland, and myself. So far as I am concerned that is wholly unauthorized by me.

Mr. HANBACK. Does that extract speak of the telemorphe or riding in carriages without horses?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; the pamphlet given me by the chairman may be the one Dr. Rogers handed me first. That is the one, I reckon.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do I understand you to say that your association never published any pamphlet?

—A. Never, and never authorized any.

Q. I see in the letter of General Johnston, dated April 7, 1883, to Dr. Rogers, he says: "I have received your letter, via Danville, and engraved certificates of stock, also the printed pamphlet, intended as you say as a substitute for that printed by our association itself."—A. I will explain that. This is what General Johnston meant; I understand the whole business. Just wait a moment and I will show you what this is; what was the contract. Dr. Rogers insisted that that was to be substituted for that. [Exhibiting.] General Johnston was insisting that this was a contract and that nobody could change it except those who made it. His letter is calculated to mislead. I read it in the papers at the time, and to make one believe that General Johnston was saying that that pamphlet there was the contract. But this is the one he was talking about.

A. He is speaking of the printed pamphlet.—A. He is speaking of the pamphlet here in my hand [exhibiting]. That is the contract that General Johnston was talking of. That is the contract, and General Johnston called it a pamphlet, and said Dr. Rogers could not substitute another one for that without the assent of those who made it.

Q. That is not a pamphlet. It is a mere copy of the contract itself.—A. Yes; but it is just what he meant when he speaks of it. I know what he meant. I saw him.

The CHAIRMAN. That letter with the extract attached is in evidence, and also the pamphlet.

Mr. MOFFATT. Had not both pamphlets better be printed?

The WITNESS. I am not making any mistake. There was no pamphlet printed by our company; no prospectus or advertisement ever authorized by it.

The CHAIRMAN. As the witness has spoken of this pamphlet and said that his name was unauthorized, it had better go in too. The pamphlet which is now handed to the stenographer to be marked you say was not authorized by the company?

The WITNESS. Never authorized by the company, never by me; though of course I could not say whether General Johnston or Senator Garland authorized it, but I never authorized it, and there was no action of the company authorizing it.

The following is the pamphlet referred to:

PAN-ELECTRIC COMPANY.

To be incorporated under a charter; and now primarily organized by General Joseph E. Johnston, Senator Isham G. Harris, Senator Garland, Rev. John Rochford, O. S. D., Hon. J. D. C. Atkins, Hon. Casey Young, J. Harris Rogers.

Executive committee.—General Joseph E. Johnston, Hon. Casey Young, J. Harris Rogers.

Offices, 315 4½ street, N. W., Washington City, and 39 Broadway, New York.

This company has been temporarily organized with the view of introducing into general use the several inventions described—belonging exclusively to the Pan-Electric Company; but more especially to develop others, as yet but partially advanced, as set forth herein, and to control by capital and foresight "the future possibilities of electricity."

The patents, inventions, and applications are as follows:

A TELEGRAPHIC SYSTEM.

1st. The Pan-Electric Company owns a system of rapid telegraphy which saves the work of half the experts and more than half the wires of the old systems. It now operates between Washington and New York, an accomplished fact, from 39 Broadway, New York, to Four-and-a-half street, Washington City.

This automatic telegraph is astonishingly simple, and yet can send more than a thousand words per minute for mere delivery, by the Bayne system, and about three hundred a minute, which repeat themselves, from any receiving station—even hours or days after being received.

Commerce requires that very long lines be broken into sections. For example, messages sent by the Western Union from Boston to New Orleans are repeated by experts at New York, Pittsburgh, Cincinnati, and Memphis, for relays are useless, except when all the sections are worked simultaneously, and hence an enormous expense is incurred by repeating them; but by the new system, the words stop, when required, at any station, and as soon as the line can be obtained spring forward without an expert. The well-known rapid telegraph saves line wire, but this advantage is, in a great measure counterbalanced by the necessity of an expensive piano to set the messages up primarily, and then, at each successive station, the same expensive operation is required. The new system, however, while it save thousands of miles of line construction by rapid transmission, also dispenses with costly experts at every repeating station. Hence this system alone will probably be worth more than the $5,000,000 at which the whole company is now estimated.

The company takes pleasure in appending, from a letter of the inventor, the following extract:

"Notwithstanding the many years and great outlay which I have given to perfect a cheap system of telegraphy, it is not presented as a new revelation. I have only improved what existed before. Each individual electrician realizes that, like the coral insect, he can only build on the edifice, in which millions of his kind are entombed; charlatans may have perfectly original systems in science with which to revolutionize the world. I pretend to be only a very small factor, in an infinite series of much greater ones, reaching back through our own Henrys and Franklins, to Greek and Egyptian philosophers, who experimented with electron or amber; and my system only formulates, by combining their grand achievements with some trifling discoveries and devices of my own; devices, however, based, as the Morse system was, on Professor Henry's discoveries; and grateful for a noble friendship with which he honored me—as well as for his many kindnesses bestowed upon my father when his pupil at Princeton, I lay this humble wreath upon his tomb.

"Respectfully,

"J. HARRIS ROGERS."

2d. A half interest in a new system of submarine and subterranean electric wires without insulation. This, since the patent was applied for, we have been advised by the Patent Office, has been partially anticipated in England; but still circuits of great value, to work it, without which it is impracticable, belong to the Pan-Electric Company, and considering the present movement in every part of the country, to take all land wires from the poles in the cities, it is evident that nothing could be of greater importance to telegraphy and telephony than such a system as the one indicated.

3d. This company also owns a singularly cheap and effective gas-lighting electric apparatus.

4th. Also a burglar's alarm, so simple that a child can put it in a house to indicate egress through any door or window, and announce it to every room instantly.

5th. Telemorphe—so named, by the inventor, from the Greek words tele and morphe—form at a distance, by which persons many miles away can be brought in effigy into any social or business circle instantly.

This novelty of science, though as yet imperfectly developed, promises much; but time and experiments are required to render it practicable.

6th. The company also owns an electrical invention by which fires before they attain dangerous proportions ring bells in every apartment of boats, ships, houses, and even the alarms of a city.

7th. The company also owns a singularly ingenious device by which servants and engineers heating houses, hotels, &c., may see in the basement the exact temperature of every room in the building. This is of peculiar advantage to government buildings, great hotels, colleges, &c.

8th. A hotel annunciator.

9th. An invention by which the vote of legislative assemblies may be taken by electricity, and every name recorded—electricity performing automatically the necessary addition and subtraction to ascertain the number voting, the majority and minority—all in one second, as against one hour consumed in "roll-call" or "tellers," saving to a country millions of dollars in the valuable time of great men!

10th. A new method of generating electricity by converting coal directly into electrical currents, and thus avoiding the cost (hitherto necessary) of acids or steam-engines and dynamo electric machines.

When electricity is generated by acids, only one-sixteenth of the force produced from one pound of coal can be gotten from one pound of zinc; but, per contra, the efficiency of the electric engine is four times as great as that of the steam-engine, resulting in the ratio of one to one-fourth in favor of coal. (Rankine's Steam Engine, p. 541.)

It is well known that nearly 90 per cent. of coal is lost in propelling a steam-engine to generate electricity in a dynamo-electric machine, and hence the great value of a direct generation from coal only. To this end the Pan-Electric Company is working, and, though not claiming ultimate success, can now show in its laboratory, No. 315 Four-and-a-half street, Washington, D. C., enough to promise favorable results.

11th. The company owns a new telephone system.

(a)—Telephone exchange.

(b)—Telephone transmitter.

(c)—Telephone receiver.

It has long been known that a copper wire with steel core would, with the Bell telephone, convey articulate speech to a great distance, and Prof. Elisha Grey's first and most imperfect telephone was lately worked over it, from New York to Chicago; also the Bell; and Baxter's modification of the Pan-Electric telephone; but this wire costs $500 per mile, and the problem is to speak at great distances over common wires. This has been effected by the Pan-Electric Company, from New York to Washington City.

Their devices form altogether a complete system for an opposition company; and when we consider that the stock in the Bell Telephone Company is $10,000,000 and sells at $192, it is evident that the Bell Company is worth about $20,000,000; hence if the Pan-Electric Company had only its telephone system (without anything else), the capital stock would not seem extravagant at $10,000,000; but it has infinitely more, and is stocked at only $5,000,000.

ELECTRIC LIGHT SYSTEM.

12th. In one word, that the Pan-Electric Company will soon take a high place in the markets of the world, and enrich all who are wise enough to measure its grand conceptions.

J. Harris Rogers, late electrician United States Capitol, will be chief electrician of the Pan-Electric Company. His “secret telephone,” stocked in New York at $5,000,000, and his “electro-gas telephone,” stocked at $1,000,000, have already enriched himself and others; which past successes promise more to the Pan-Electric Company, embracing so vast a field of invention and discovery. It is a venture for enormous profits or a trifle—the company has so ventured, and would rather keep its stock and take its own chance of profit and loss than to be responsible for the many defects which exist in every new invention.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I understand you to say that that was a thing printed before you went to New York?—A. No, sir; that was another one.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Did not the association pay for the printing of it?—A. No, sir; except for the ones that Dr. Rogers and I burned up—the ones that were burned.

Q. There were certain pamphlets printed by the association?—A. Yes, sir, and burned up the next day.

Q. Why?—A. Because Dr. Rogers and I, neither of us, thought they ought to go out. I thought they should never be published at all, and they were never sent out.

Q. What was substituted in their place?—A. Nothing. We paid $25 for them, and Dr. Rogers and I talked the matter over, and we both concluded we had better not send those things out, and we put them in the fire.

Q. When were they printed?—A. It must have been in January or February, 1884.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I understand you to say that neither of the pamphlets in evidence is of that lot?—A. Oh, no. That was prepared by a friend of his, and we paid him $25 for it; and I thought it was not what it ought to be, and we put them in the fire.

Q. You may proceed with your statement.—A. These articles of incorporation bear date, I think, the 30th of October, 1883. About that time I came on to Washington, perhaps a little earlier, and soon after I got here, in the fall of 1883, I saw Doctor Rogers, perhaps the next day, and he urged that we should organize; and so on. In the mean time he had reported to me, and I also learned, what had been the result of these experiments and tests, more especially with the telephone, and I had recommended, perhaps, in letters I had written before, that inasmuch as the law of no State that I had examined was broad enough in its scope to cover all these inventions, we had better divide it and get articles of incorporation for a telephone company and one for a telegraph company. That was perfectly understood and assented to by everybody and no objection raised by Dr. Rogers or anybody else that I heard of; and the actual act of incorporation for the telegraphic company in New York I had nothing to do with, and never saw it. All I know about it is that I find the certificate showing that such articles of incorporation were obtained in New York, and his asserting that he obtained it in letters from Dr. Rogers. I thought that was perfectly agreed upon that we should get articles of incorporation for those two companies, and if in the future it was found necessary or practicable we might get further corporate powers to embrace anything else that might be covered in this original agreement; and I thought they were carrying out what was the understanding and intention in conformity to the wishes of everybody connected with it. That was the view I had. Well, we met here, and had the first meeting of the board. I will verify my statements by the documents as I go along. I find I will have to dissipate a great many of these stories that the newspaper folks have been getting up. I am sorry, but I will have to do it. I want to say to the committee that there has not been an i dotted nor a t crossed in these books since this investigation was agitated.

Mr. MILLARD. Have you the certificate of the organization of the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; I have it among my papers.

Mr. MILLARD. You need not stop now to search for it.

The WITNESS. It is a mere certificate. I do not know whether it is the law in New York that the actual articles shall be transcribed and delivered to the parties as it is in Tennessee.

Mr. MILLARD. The point I want to inquire about is whether the certificate complied with the law.

The WITNESS. I do not know. I never saw it until I looked over the papers in reference to this investigation.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Where is your charter for the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company?—A. I say I never saw anything but the certificate from one of the officers in the State of New York showing that such a charter had been obtained.

Q. Giving a copy of the articles?—A. No, sir; nothing but the certificate that I have ever seen.

Q. You have that among the papers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were there articles of association signed for the New York incorporation?—A. I never saw them.

Q. You never signed any?—A. Possibly I might; I do not remember.

Q. Do you know whether a patent or charter issued from New York?—A. All I know of is the certificate I speak of, and I talked with Dr. Rogers and the balance of them about it; but I presume there was.

Q. Where is that certificate?—A. It is among my papers. It will take some time to look it up.

Q. Is it in the form of a charter or patent?—A. No, sir; it is just in the form of a certificate that a patent has been granted. I am satisfied that there was such a one issued.

Q. Who would be the custodian of it?—A. I assume it is still in the office in New York.

Q. As I understand, you know nothing whatever of the terms of this charter obtained in New York?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. MILLARD. The certificate properly recorded and filed would be the organization of the company in New York, and that is why I asked you if you had it here.

The WITNESS. The certificate does not set out anything except that the patent has been obtained. It does not give the names of anybody. (The witness then produced the "record" book of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.) I find from this record that I have brought here, that on the 23d of November, 1883, we had a meeting, and that this company was organized—that is, the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. The record reads as follows:

ORGANIZATION OF THE PAN-ELECTRIC TELEPHONE COMPANY.

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 23, 1883.

At a meeting of the corporators and stockholders of and in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company held in the rooms at 419 Sixth street northwest, in the city of Washington, D. C., on the 23d day of November, A. D. 1883, there being present Joseph E. Johnston, Isham G. Harris, Augustus H. Garland, John D. C. Atkins, J. Harris Rogers, Robert F. Looney, and Casey Young, representing in the aggregate more than four-fifths of the capital stock of said company, when the following proceedings were had:

On motion of Mr. Robert F. Looney, Mr. Joseph E. Johnston was called to the chair to preside over the meeting, and Mr. Casey Young appointed as secretary.

The charter procured for the company from the State of Tennessee was read and approved and accepted. It was to organize the company under and in pursuance of its provisions, and to establish an office in the city of Memphis, Tenn., and one in the city of Washington, D. C.; therefore Mr. Isham G. Harris offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Pan-Electric Telephone Company organize by the election of a board of seven directors, who shall hold their office for a term of twelve months and until their successors are elected and qualified, and that the said board shall elect a president and such other officers as may be deemed necessary for the transaction of its business.

On motion of Mr. J. D. C. Atkins, the meeting proceeded to elect a board of seven directors, whereupon the following-named gentlemen were chosen to constitute said board to serve for a period of twelve months, viz: Joseph E. Johnston, Isham G. Harris, Augustus H. Garland, Robert F. Looney, John C. Brown, J. Harris Rogers, and Casey Young.

On motion of Mr. Robert F. Looney, the above-named board of directors proceeded to elect officers of the company for the ensuing year, whereupon the following-named gentlemen were chosen as said officers:

For president, Mr. Joseph E. Johnston.

For vice-president, Isham G. Harris.

For secretary and treasurer, Casey Young.

Attorney, Augustus H. Garland.

Electrician, J. Harris Rogers.

Mr. Casey Young offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed by the president of the board to prepare by-laws and regulations for the Government of the company and by which the business shall be conducted, and report the same at the next meeting; which being unanimously adopted, the following gentlemen were appointed as said committee: Mr. A. H. Garland, Mr. R. F. Looney, and Mr. Casey Young.

Mr. Isham G. Harris offered the following resolution:

Resolved, That a committee of three be appointed to confer with officers and representatives of the Bell Telephone Company in respect to the making of some arrangements with said company by which the receiver and transmitter of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company may be used in connection with the Bell telephone, and to make such other arrangements with said company as they may be able to effect for mutual co-operation in the telephone business.

The resolution was unanimously adopted, and the following-named gentlemen were appointed members of said committee: Mr. Joseph E. Johnston, Mr. Augustus H. Garland, and Mr. J. Harris Rogers.

On motion of Mr. Robert F. Looney the electrician was directed to place a telephone in the Congressional Hotel, Washington, D. C., for the purpose of exhibiting the workings of the same.

Mr. J. Harris Rogers presented a bill for the sum of $413.81 expended by him on behalf of the company, which was approved and ordered to be paid by the treasurer.

On motion the meeting adjourned, subject to the call of the president.

Read and approved.

J. E. JOHNSTON,
President.

CASEY YOUNG,
Secretary.

The WITNESS. In regard to that portion which records the appointment of a committee of three to make arrangements with the Bell Telephone Company to use the receiver and transmitter of the Pan-Electric Company, perhaps I had better explain what it means. At that time we had no idea of any conflict with the Bell Telephone Company. We knew that they had exchanges in the various cities and towns of the country, and thought we might connect our exchanges with their exchanges. That is what that had reference to. We were not so well educated in telephonic literature at that time as we have become since.

Mr. RANNEY. You mean since then you have come in serious conflict with the Bell Telephone Company?

The WITNESS. Oh, yes; very serious. There is where the Pan-Electric Company was born.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. When was that?—A. The 23d of November, 1883. That was the first meeting; that was the organization of it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You had become satisfied then that the Bell Telephone had an odious monopoly?—A. I had not become satisfied that it had become such a monopoly that it controlled the newspapers of the country and the courts.

Q. You wanted to join with them?—A. Yes, sir; if I had known it was such a big company I would have been more anxious to join them. Another thing, about the expenses in this matter: While I was at Memphis, before I came on here, preceding this meeting, I got a letter from Mr. J. Harris Rogers, or General Johnston, giving me an account—

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Have you the letters?—A. No, sir; and it is not necessary to have them, that is all there is about it. They drew on me, Harris Rogers or General Johnston, I do not know which, for, I think, $105, perhaps it was more or less. I know Harry Rogers wrote me a note that he had given me credit for $5 which I had paid out in New York for printing that contract. But they drew on me for that amount, which I understood to be the pro rata for each one of the parties for moneys expended in making these investigations. I sent that money on—I forget the exact amount, but I put it down on the books for $105—it was something in that neighborhood; Harry Rogers will know the exact amount. Now, after this organization, after the birth of this baby on the 23rd of February—

Mr. HANBACK. You refer now to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?

The WITNESS. Yes; to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. I believe at the same meeting, or at the next succeeding meeting, we organized the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company with the same officers and the same board of directors, and nothing else has been done in connection with that since, and I have that recorded in a book which I have not got here this morning; but that is the only entry in it—the organization of the company with the same officers. Now there may have been a paper issued to Dr. Rogers, some such paper as I will call attention to directly, embracing some of that stock. I do not know how that is, but I will find out as I go along.

Previous to coming on here it had been an idea in my mind in the beginning as I talked to a number of my associates; my idea was that, with our own means and our own money, we should establish an exchange. I wanted to put it up in Washington City, I said, where I lived, so that this instrument could be thoroughly tested and its utility thoroughly demonstrated. I was satisfied of its value working on single lines as I had seen it, but I had never seen it operating in exchanges, and I did not know how it would operate there. I was satisfied with the value of the instrument so far as I had examined it, but all my idea was, and I suggested it to a number of my associates, that with our own money we should establish an exchange and put this thing in operation, because, I said, if it operates successfully, if it is the instrument we believe it to be, it is an extremely valuable undertaking. And I wrote in reply to one of these two letters to Dr. Rogers (perhaps it has been published) that I recommended that course to be pursued. I estimated that $5,000 apiece from each one of us would accomplish that result. So that was still my idea when we had this meeting on the 23d of November, 1883, and those proceedings there were had, and I discussed it after that time. We had a settlement of some expenses that had been incurred, and, to go over your question and to disabuse these newspaper theories, it amounted, as the books showed, to over $400 each. Harry Rogers would incur expenses, and I found them correct always and paid them. There was something said the other day about my refusing to pay an account that was presented to me.

Mr. MILLARD. The $40 account?

The WITNESS. Yes; it was a small account. These things became a matter of extreme annoyance to me. I had not proposed to go into the business of a bookkeeper; I am not very well qualified to go into that business any way, and when they elected me secretary and treasurer it was under my protest, and I thought it was merely temporary and consented. But it got to be a very serious annoyance to me. I was a member of Congress and very busy, and sometimes accounts would be presented to me in the House or on the street, and this very account, as I now remember, was presented to me in the corridor of the Capitol. I said, "Bring it to my room and I will pay it to you." It was not, as Dr. Rogers suggested, because I did not have the money, for I had the money. He was fretted and provoked about it. I do not know what the man reported to him, but I did not repudiate it as an account. I simply did not think it was a proper place to present accounts, in the corridor of the House, such an account, and I said, "Come to my room and I shall be pleased to settle it." But I saw a note from Dr. Rogers to General Johnston about it, in which I saw he had taken offense. I met him and told him how the thing happened and he said it was all right, and that was the last I heard of it until now. I think it is barred by the statute now, and that is all I know about that thing.

After that meeting of November 23, it was still my idea that we should put up an exchange here and in Memphis, and I urged it, and very soon after that time, I do not remember the exact date, but I can come very near it by these papers, an attorney at Memphis, a friend of ours, General Wright, came on here and brought Mr. D. E. Myers, of Indianapolis, Ind., a gentleman who had been the agent of some capital stock in the west, I understood, in the purchase of lands down in our country, swamp-lands of Arkansas and pine-lands of Mississippi. I understood that he was a gentleman who had at his command a considerable amount of capital. He came here with General Wright, General Wright having previously notified us of their coming by telegraph.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Was that Marcus Wright?—A. No, sir; General Wright, of Memphis. He telegraphed to me that he would be here in a few days to negotiate with us about the telephone. It had been mentioned previously, too, by Mr. Looney, who was an acquaintance of Mr. Myers, and as Dr. Rogers said the other day that Mr. Looney had something to do with it in his testimony I think it is very likely. But they came on here and we had a conference with them, and they made an examination, I suppose, of the inventions and the law of the thing, &c. But just previous to that time, or about that time, we went to Mr. Marble, the former Commissioner of Patents, in regard to the matter. We were extremely anxious that nobody should be misled. As Dr. Rogers said, we desired that nobody should be deceived, and I determined so far as I was concerned that no man should be deceived; that nobody should be misled, and that we would be as perfectly certain as it was possible for us to be that we were not venturing upon any uncertain ground. So we went to see Mr. Marble and got from him a written opinion as to the validity of our patents in respect to their mechanical construction. That opinion I have here, and I want to put it in evidence. We went to him and obtained from him a written opinion in which he advised us that there was no infringement upon the part of the Rogers telephone, of the Bell telephone, or any other telephone. We thought he was competent to advise us on that subject and we went to him for his advice. I have his opinion here among some of these papers.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. Was he Commissioner of Patents at that time?—A. No, sir; he was out of office; was a practicing lawyer here.

Q. He was Commissioner of Patents in 1882?—A. Yes; but this was in 1883. We did not get him. Perhaps, if he had been Commissioner of Patents, according to the chronicles of the history of this matter, we would have got him.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You refer to Mr. E. M. Marble?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was interested in your stock, was he?—A. At that time?

Q. Yes.—A. Not to my knowledge.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Did he not become interested in some of it?—A. I understood afterwards from Mr. Rogers that he had given him some of the stock.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Let us see the date of that opinion.—A. I am looking for it now. I have it somewhere. Mr. Chairman, here are these letters, and I will turn them over and get them out of the way.

By Mr. MOFFAT:

Q. What letters?—A. They are the letters of Dr. Rogers called for. There is nothing in them which will throw any light upon this investigation at all, but I will put them in. [The letters were handed to the chairman.] I may have fifty or one hundred more just like them, but they have nothing to do with this matter. They do not prove any Credit Mobilier at all. [After a search.] I do not find that paper, but it is the opinion which he gave us.

Mr. RANNEY. I wish you would not state about the opinion unless you produce it.

The WITNESS. I am going to state every fact which I think will exonerate us from every improper imputation. [After a further search.] I do not find it now. Here is a subsequent opinion. Perhaps you might as well put these in here. [Producing two scrap-books full of letters.] I have about five volumes more.

The CHAIRMAN. We will have them examined.

The WITNESS. I will explain that that book there [referring to one of the scrap-books], contains the letters that I received from about January 1, 1884, up to May or June, 1884. At that time I went away, and the letters I received I received on the wing, and they are scattered about among other letters or destroyed or not kept at all. I have four or five volumes more like them which contain my private and political correspondence.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Do those relate to these matters?—A. Some of them. There are two letters there directed to Attorney General Garland (I know how happy these gentlemen may be to get them) after he became Attorney-General. One was from Mr. Strong, of Chicago, inquiring something about the Bell patents and titles. The Attorney-General just referred that letter to me without further notice, and the subsequent one in the same way. They were addressed to him as counsel of the company, one by Mr. Strong, of Chicago, and another by Mr. Skinner, of Baltimore. They were addressed to him and forwarded to me.

Q. They were not addressed to him as an official?—A. Oh, no, sir; one was an old friend of his, Mr. Burke, of the Helena World, who wrote to him about the status of this company. That letter was referred to me. I saw Mr. Burke afterwards. He got no answer from Mr. Garland, but when he got my answer he wrote me. Soon after Mr. Garland was made Attorney-General Mr. Skinner wrote to him, as the counsel of the company, about some stock he was entitled to, and that was forwarded to me, and I answered Mr. Skinner's letter. There are also private letters there that do not amount to anything.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. You did not find the opinion of Mr. Marble. Will you produce it if you do find it?—A. Yes, sir; I will produce it to the committee. As I stated before, it was my own idea—I don't know how far my associates participated in it—that we should put up this thing with our own means and develop it, and see how it was. But about that time Mr. Myers came with General Wright, as I said, and proposed to buy from us the right to use our telephone in the States of Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio, as I remember (here is the contract here), for $150,000. It was not $10,000, as Dr. Rogers stated. Of course he forgot about it. It was $150,000. We were to receive a stated royalty of $5 per annum for each telephone used, and we were to have a certain amount of the local stock of the company. That contract was prepared by General Wright, the attorney of Mr. Myers, in exact accordance, he told me, with the contract of the Bell Telephone Company with the local company in Memphis. We have been told that we did wrong and ought to be hung, but we had a good example to follow.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Didn't you have that opinion of Mr. Marble's in your hand awhile ago?—A. No, sir. I had one which I will hand you if you desire it, but I cannot find the other one. However, I will give you a copy of it. The one I have here refers to the National Improved Company. Here is the contract we made with Mr. Myers. It is a pretty long document, but in order to satisfy some of these gentlemen I will read it if they desire. Shall I read it, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

Q. What is the contract?—A. It is the first contract we made with Mr. Myers.

Q. State the substance of it, that is sufficient, and put it in proof if you can verify it.—A. Very well. It is a long document.

Q. What is the date of it?—A. It is dated the 15th of February, 1884. That is the date of the first contract made with Mr. Myers.

Q. That opinion of Mr. Marble must have been prior to that?—A. Yes, sir; these are the terms: For the State of Illinois, $50,000; for the State of Indiana, $25,000; for the State of Minnesota, $20,000. There has been a great deal of conjecture about these things, and I hope these gentlemen will get it right. Those are the terms for which these three States were to be disposed of. In addition to that we were to receive a royalty of $6 a year for each telephone, and 25 per cent. of the local stock. That was the first contract we made with Mr. Myers. Mr. Myers remained here several days, the contract was made, and then he left. We were to furnish him within thirty days (I think that was the time, or perhaps within twenty days) three hundred telephones, which he proposed to put in immediate operation.

It was set out in this contract that we had to do it within a certain time, because we were anxious to put it into operation to test its utility and value. He was to have three hundred telephones in this specified time. I sent Dr. Rogers and Harry Rogers to New York to have the telephones manufactured. They were gone some three weeks and we found we could not get the telephones (it was probably longer than that) and the time expired. Mr. Myers was telegraphing us every day about those telephones, to forward the telephones, but we were not able to get them. Then after a while the telephones came on here and they would not operate, would not work, and we kept writing and telegraphing Mr. Myers we would send them if we could, and he kept complaining, and then came on himself. But still we could not get them. His lawyer, Mr. Wright, said: "If I were not a friend of you gentlemen I would sue you for damages for your treatment of my client. You have involved him in great expense and he will now have to abandon the whole enterprise, because you have not furnished the telephones within the time agreed upon. The capitalists in Indianapolis who put up the funds have become disgusted with the whole business, and he will have to give it up." Mr. Myers made that representation through his attorney, and I said to him, "I admit that we have treated you badly; it is our fault and not yours that the contract has not been carried out, and, if you say so, we will cancel the whole contract." And we did so, and it is marked across the face of it "Cancelled." About that time some gentlemen in Saint Louis—one in Memphis and one in Saint Louis —

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. Before you go on with that I would like to ask you this question: Had any part of the $150,000 to be paid been paid, or when was it paid?—A. It was to be paid in instalments, $25,000 in thirty days, and so much more whenever so many telephones were furnished. There are various specifications in regard to the payments; it is a long paper. I got a young man to transcribe these contracts into the book, and he got them mixed up, and has not put them in the order in which they should come, and the book has not been indexed either.

Now, on the 14th of March, 1883, we made a contract with Dr. Harlan and Mr. G. A. Gustin, covering the District of Columbia at first—and while I am here at this point I want to say something about this negotiation with the Bell Company that was spoken of the other day. It is a little tangled up and muddled, and I want it straightened out as I go along. It was stated in the testimony of Dr. Rogers and Harry Rogers that there had been some negotiation between us and a man named Gustin in respect to selling out to the Bell Company. I want to explain that. Either Dr. Rogers or Harry Rogers, or both of them, told me they had a conversation with a gentleman who seemed to be very conversant with telephone matters, who seemed to have some relation with the Bell Company, and seemed to be informed about the matter; that he had some talk with them, and they gathered the impression in some way or other that he was a sort of agent or representative of the company.

They had another interview with him, and he led them to believe that he had such influence with the Bell Company, and especially with Mr. Vail, that he could make the most favorable terms between our company and the Bell Company. Dr. Rogers told me about that, but I did not have much faith in it, and I do not think he had either, but thought it was well enough to see what there was in the fellow, and what he did know. But I understood from him, and perhaps from Mr. Gustin himself, I do not know, that his relations with Mr. Vail were very intimate, and he also said that they were very anxious to get hold of our transmitter and receiver and telephone, and that a most favorable trade could be made with them, and it was Gustin's suggestion I think, that our stock should not be watered, but that the Bell Company stock should be watered sufficiently to enable them to give us three, four, or five millions for our invention. When that was reported to me, I did not have confidence in the statement; I didn't ever expect he had such power in the Bell Company, and did not think they would pay any such price.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What date was that?—A. On the 14th of March the contract was made with the parties, and that was along about the first of January or February, 1884.

Q. At the first meeting of your company, I believe you appointed a committee to confer with the Bell Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir; but that is entirely in regard to another matter. I am now trying to explain the testimony of Dr. Rogers given the other day, because I do not want this thing to go out to the country in a false light, and I don't intend that it shall. I intend that the whole facts shall go out, and I intend to stand on them. There will be no apologies offered to anybody. That was the conversation reported to me. I did not have any faith in it, and I do not think the doctor had much. But it resulted in nothing—that suggestion of Mr. Gustin's to water the Bell stock, not our stock, to enable them to give us three or four million dollars. I did not think it would pay them to do it, and did not pay any attention to it.

This same man Gustin and Dr. Harlan came to us afterwards, after this conversation occurred, and we made an arrangement with them by which we agreed to let them have the right to use this instrument in the District of Columbia upon their giving to us only one-quarter of their local stock. I thought it was a very poor trade, and I never would have made it. It was made in my absence. But Dr. Harlan thought he was something of an electrician and mechanic and knew something about these things, and we were anxious to have an exchange established somewhere, the primary object always being that we should have an opportunity of establishing the utility of, the value of, this instrument. These gentlemen agreed that within a specified time they would put an exchange in operation in the city of Washington, and that was the inducement to let them have it upon those favorable terms, that they should do that. Well, they did not do it, and there was some little complaint about it; I made some myself; and afterwards we made another agreement with them, suggested to me the first time I ever heard of it by Dr. Rogers. Here is a letter I received from Dr. Rogers which called my attention for the first time I ever heard of it, to a change of our contract with Mr. Gustin and Dr. Harlan, to enlarge it so as to embrace not only the District of Columbia, but the States of Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, and West Virginia. Here is the letter (reading):

315 FOUR AND-A-HALF STREET NORTHWEST,
March 9, 1884.

MY DEAR SIR: Dr. Harlan and associates propose to add to their territory Maryland, Virginia, and West Virginia, and offer for the same to the parent company one quarter of the stock and to manufacture (as manufacturers only) their own instruments. Both I and Harry would cordially acquiesce if the directors should accept this proposition. I believe they would carry the stock to par and we would be at no expense.

Yours, truly,

J. W. ROGERS.

The WITNESS. I thought that was a bad trade, and I would not have made it myself.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. That is the letter of March 9, which you have read?—A. Yes, sir,

Q. I understood you to say that the original contract was dated March 14?—A. No, sir; I think the original contract was March 4.

Q. I misunderstood you.—A. I did say March 14, but that has reference to this subsequent contract embracing all these States. I will explain it in a moment. I thought that was a bad arrangement, but my associates differed with me, because they said these gentlemen would put up the instruments, and it would utilize their advantages and get the thing going; the contract for the District of Columbia had been made previous to that time. I think it is dated the 4th of March.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is it material, in your view, to go into so much detail in regard to this particular contract?—A. Well, I do not know; I am meeting the case made in the newspapers; it is not made anywhere else. We have been charged by the press with all sorts of irregularities.

Q. Still I do not see the use of going into so much detail.—A. I will do as the committee desires. I am prepared to answer any charge made in the newspapers or anywhere else, and can show that our transactions are perfectly legitimate and lawful in every part and the whole of them. But if the committee does not desire to hear me—

The CHAIRMAN. You may make the statement in your own way; I merely make the suggestion.

The WITNESS. The reason I want to do it is that it has been charged that we made contracts and got $40,000,000. I want to show how much basis there was for that sort of a story and for these fabulous stories about our selling $40,000,000 of stock and swindling everybody in the country. We made this contract with these gentlemen to receive those States for which we never got a dollar; we have not yet. That was capitalized afterwards in a company known as the Washington Telephone Company, with General Bradley T. Johnson as president. That company was capitalized at $5,000,000. I said that was too much. They insisted it was not, but finally it was reduced to half that sum, and we got one-quarter of the stock, and here it is (pointing to a bundle of papers). I have all the stock here yet. We received one-quarter of the stock of that company, General Bradley T. Johnson being the president. They were to go on and establish an exchange at once, but they did not do it, and that contract is legally forfeited. We let those gentlemen go on because of their friendly relations to us, but legally the contract is forfeited, and was long ago under the terms of it. They have gone on and put up some telephones in Baltimore, but we have never received any money for it.

The next contract that was made was with General Boyle and Dr. Arrington, both of them known to us. They opened a correspondence with us as to the right to use the telephone in the State of Missouri. In the mean time we never had published a circular or prospectus or put an advertisement in the paper. They commenced corresponding with us, and it resulted in our selling to them the right to use our telephone in the State of Missouri. After friendly conferences here with us they brought their own lawyer here, whose name I do not recall, and Mr. Garland had in the mean time given an opinion in respect alone to this broad generic claim undertaken to be covered by the Bell patent, and nothing else. That is what he gave the opinion upon; I was with him at the time. That was never published by our authority.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Your company never published that opinion of Mr. Garland's?—A. No, sir.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I saw it in a pamphlet?—A. Well, we did not publish it.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. It was published in Pennsylvania, I think.—A. Very likely; but we never published it. I was helping look up the authorities solely in reference to the broad principle of telegraphy claiming to monopolize the whole field of electricity, and it followed the O'Reilly-Morse case, and all decisions on that point. These gentlemen came, and brought with them an attorney from Saint Louis; I do not remember his name, but a very intelligent young man. We talked together freely about it. I told him what I had learned in regard to it, and my views covering the broad claim which had been made; that I had based my opinion on Mr. Harry Rogers's statement of the mechanical construction, and subsequently on the opinion of Mr. Marble in that regard, and that he could examine these things, and I showed them all to him. These gentlemen were satisfied, and gave us $10,000, or were to do it. They did not pay quite that much in hand for the right to use our telephone in the State of Missouri, but were to give us 25 per cent. of the local stock and $6 a year royalty for each instrument that they used.

It was specified in the contract also that these gentlemen were to go right to work at once and erect an exchange in the city of Saint Louis and put the thing in operation. Soon after that time some friends of ours at home in the city of Memphis where they all lived—they had talked to me frequently when I was at home and had seen notices in the papers and had written to me about it—they commenced to correspond, but personally I had nothing to do with any of these things. I was consulted once or twice, but personally I had nothing to do with it, except that I signed the contracts as an officer of the company; but I did not negotiate these things and had nothing to do with it. Our own friends in Memphis, Mr. Oliver Moore, at the head of the very large manufacturing establishment of Mr. McFarland, and a number of gentlemen, reputable gentlemen, of Memphis, friends of mine, and who knew all about this matter, proposed to buy the right for the State of Tennessee for $7,500. The terms of the contract were that we were to have 25 per cent. of the local stock and $6 royalty a year, following in all these matters the contracts of the Bell Company, only cutting ourselves down 100 per cent. below their figures, and we thought we were doing all right until we were enlightened on that subject by repeated newspaper publications.

Next we disposed of the State of Texas to a son of Colonel Looney's and young Mr.

Hendricks. Dr. Rogers is greatly mistaken as to how much we got in that case. The books show that instead of getting $10,000 we only got $1,000, and they owe us $4,000 yet. We finally consented to let them have the State of Texas for $5,000, against my protest. They only paid $1,000 of that, and have not paid the balance yet. We have furnished them a number of telephones, and they are going on with their operations.

Next, we sold the State of Alabama upon substantially the same terms for $7,500 to General Upshur and Robert F. Looney, jr. Those are our sales of territory. In the mean time Dr. Rogers had applied to us for the State of Pennsylvania. He wrote a letter and I think it was referred to me. He said in his testimony that somebody objected to it. I never heard anybody object to it. I know I did not. I suggested to let him have it upon his own terms, and I was instructed to send him a telegram to that effect, that he could have the State of Pennsylvania on those terms, and he has stated what those terms were, and here is the contract recorded in this book. Soon after he commenced operations there—I do not know how far they got except from what he stated the other day, and I think that is correct—I learned something from Mr. Klotz about it; I think he stated all that was done there. A bill was filed against the local company there, which I believe was called the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Company—

The CHAIRMAN. Do you propose to go into the Pennsylvania suit and explain that?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; I have been put in a false light, and I want to straighten the whole thing out. The whole thing is muddled up and nobody understands it.

The CHAIRMAN. You may proceed.

The WITNESS. The bill was filed against us there in the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Filed against the Rogers Company?—A. Yes, sir; and against our company also. The bill said it was against the Rogers Telephone Company and the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. Was there any service against you?—A. No, sir; there was no service. When that was made known Dr. Rogers was anxious that the fight should be made there, and the moment I saw that a suit was brought I said I was glad it had been brought, because I wanted to bring this thing to an issue. In the mean time I had examined all the legal questions pretty thoroughly, and all the principles of law that I thought would govern and control this contest. I had made up my opinion on the subject, and, like all gentlemen who get loaded up on any particular subject, I was anxious to ventilate my learning about it. I wanted to try the case. I was instructed to go over there, but I did not propose to try the case in Pennsylvania myself, being a stranger there in the courts, and I of course saw the necessity of employing a local lawyer. So I went to an old friend of mine in the House (Judge Kelley, of Pennsylvania) and asked him to advise me as to who was a competent lawyer in Philadelphia to take charge of that litigation. I told him what it was about, and asked him to advise me. I told him I was a stranger to the bar there, and did not know any lawyer there but Mr. George M. Harding, a very distinguished patent lawyer, and he was on the other side of the case.

Judge Kelley gave me a letter to his former law partner, Mr. J. Warren Colston, of Chestnut street, Philadelphia, and I went and saw him and informed him of my business, agreed upon terms, and gave him a retaining fee. I got the papers, brought them to his office, and staid there two or three days, and we examined them. I said to Mr. Colston, "It occurs to me that they have not got jurisdiction of our company. I do not believe this court here has jurisdiction of the Pan-Electric Company, and that; this service, made upon an officer of the Rogers Telephone and Telegraph Company, does not bind us, as he is no agent or officer of ours. We are not transacting business here, and I do not think the court has jurisdiction." He differed with me about that; but he said, "Mr. Young, I do not know whether you have a good case or not; I will not undertake to say about that; but I advise you not to try your case here." And right here I wish to say that it was not because we had any suspicion of the integrity or honesty of the judges of Pennsylvania that we did that, but for reasons which are entirely satisfactory to me, and would be to any other lawyer.

I was familiar with the Dowd case and the Spencer case, and if you gentlemen are not familiar with them I will explain them so that you will understand the matter better. In the beginning of the controversy with the Bell Telephone Company, soon after it was organized, the Western Union Telegraph Company started a rival company, under the management of one Dowd, whereupon the American Bell Telephone Company filed a bill against that company, setting up that they were infringing their patents. They went on taking proof, and finally a contract was made between the Western Union Company and the Gold and Stock Telephone Company, or the New England Telephone Company, as it was then, by which the interests of all those companies were merged, and that suit was compromised and never came to a decision in the court. Afterwards the Spencer case was tried. The Dowd case was a collusive case; that is the true ground I put it on. Then the Spencer case came along, and the court held in that case, upon an agreed state of facts (it was not an arm's length litigation), that the Bell telephone patent was not antedated by the Reis invention, and if priority of invention could be claimed by Reis that telephone was inoperative.

All this, gentlemen, is in the record and is not denied. But the judge was imposed upon in the trial of that case, and he decided in favor of the validity of the Bell telephone patent. The next case that came along was the Dolbear case, and in that case was a stipulation or agreement by the lawyers that authorized the court to find just as they did find. That was another collusive suit. Mr. Colston said, "These cases all have been tried; I have examined the records, and Judges Gray and Lowell have made these decisions, and while nobody will impeach their integrity and capacity (for they were imposed on in these cases), yet under that rule of judicial comity which prevails in the circuits in the east our judges will follow those decisions; they have done it in that Maryland case in which I was the counsel, and they have done it in the Clay case, and it is a waste of your time and money to try these suits here, because the judges will pursue the rulings in the Dowd and Spencer and Dolbear cases." "Now," he said, "you gentlemen tell me you have exchanges in operation somewhere else, in Saint Louis, Memphis, and Texas. You let these gentlemen sue you there. Let it go to a new field where this thing has not been litigated; go where there will not be that reverence for judicial precedents and comity which prevails among our judges here, and there you will be more likely to have this whole question more fairly adjudicated." Never intimating that the Pennsylvania judges were corrupt or not learned, but simply putting it on the ground that they would feel called upon to follow the rulings of Judge Lowell and Judge Gray in the Spencer, Dolbear, and Dowd cases.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. All of them, you say, were collusive cases?—A. Yes, sir; because they were all decided on a state of facts agreed upon by counsel.

Q. That is what you mean when you say they were "collusive." If their facts were not right you could have put in the facts as they were, and had a real case before the court?—A. I do not know whether I could or not. It depends on the relation I sustained to this case. It is possible I might have compromised, as these gentlemen did, and that is not discreditable to anybody.

Q. Do you mean to say that you distrusted yourself lest you might enter into a collusion?—A. Oh, no sir; I was not afraid of that. I have a good deal of confidence in myself, and am not much afraid of myself in lawsuits or anywhere else. However, acting on the advice of Mr. Colston, we filed a plea in abatement in court on the part of the Pan-Electric Company; that, on argument, was sustained and the bill was dismissed as to our company, but retained as to the local company. Dr. Rogers, as I have stated, wanted to make a fight or contest at that time, and I had some difficulty in persuading him that it was not best to do that. He stated what his reasons were, and we finally concluded to let that suit go on, and let judgment go by default against the local company there, so that we might not be embarrassed when we came to try the whole issue in some new field of litigation.

Q. Right there let me ask you this: Were you not under obligations to defend your patent under your contract with that company?—A. Certainly, our contract shows that, but we were released from it by the action of that very company.

Q. You knew that an adjudication would be conclusive against that company in Pennsylvania?—A. Yes, sir; until reversed.

Q. And while you were under obligations to defend the patent you consented to allow a conclusive judgment to go against that company, did you?—A. No, sir; that does not follow as a legal conclusion. This is what I intended to do, and what I did with, their consent; I am answerable to them only, and not to Congress or to any one else, but I have no objection to telling the whole story. I did it after full consultation with a local lawyer, competent to advise in that regard, and after consultation with Dr. Rogers.

Q. What was the agreement that you made to pacify him?—A. I will tell you if you will let me get at it. I repeated to Dr. Rogers exactly what Mr. Colston had told me, and the same as Dr. Rogers has stated in his testimony, that I did not believe, on Mr. Colston's statement, that it was a wise thing for us to risk the whole question in a Philadelphia or other court that would be likely to follow the ruling in these three cases I have alluded to. I had some difficulty in convincing him that that was a proper course to pursue. But finally he consented to it, and his company held a meeting and passed a resolution authorizing that course to be pursued.

Q. As that destroyed his company and their operations?—A. That is a legal conclusion that you and I differ about. I do not hold that it does. I hold that when we defeat the Bell Telephone Company in the litigation which we have pending now, as we will do, it will relieve him from the injunction which he is under in Pennsylvania. I say that on my judgment as a lawyer, and I will discuss that question with you on the authorities if you desire. That is my legal opinion in regard to it.

By Mr. MILLARD :

Q. In this suit was there any point made about the service, whether they had competent jurisdiction; I mean where the judgment was entered by default, was that point raised that there had not been a legal service?—A. In Philadelphia? Oh, I raised the point that the court had no jurisdiction in the case.

By Mr. RANNEY :

Q. You agree with me that inasmuch as they got judgment against them it would be a conclusive judgment against them?—A. It would be until it is reversed.

Q. Then the only thing to make it inoperative against them was to defeat the Bell telephone patent in some suit upsetting the Bell telephone patent?—A. In some suit determining the question that was involved in that case over there. I hold that when we get a case decided which we have pending now against the Bell Telephone Company, when we win that case, as we will win it, it will relieve him from the effect of the injunction pending against his company in Philadelphia.

Q. Do you mean the Government case?—A. No, sir; I mean my own case that I brought against them myself. I can do very well without the Government.

By Mr. EDEN :

Q. These cases which you have referred to in Pennsylvania were not cases that were ever heard in the Supreme Court?—A. No, sir.

Q. They were tried by the circuit court?—A. Yes; they never went to the Supreme Court at all. There have been nineteen adjudications in favor of the Bell Company, but only two of them so far have gone to the Supreme Court. There is a case pending in the Supreme Court, a branch of the Dolbear case, which will be reached this term perhaps, which involves one branch of this controversy, and in the Drawbaugh case they have entered a motion for an appeal. I do not know whether it has been brought up or not, but that involves a totally different question from those I have had anything to do with. Those nineteen cases, I think, were all fraudulent and collusive suits, and I have charged that in the bill we have filed.

By Mr. RANNEY :

Q. You say that you have charged the Drawbaugh case as being a collusive one?—A. No, sir; that involves a different question as to the priority between Drawbaugh and Bell. There is another question involved. It is a large record, and I have gone through it carefully, and find that is the only question involved in that case.

Mr. OATES. Are you through with your statement now?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir, in that respect. I was giving a history of the Pennsylvania suit, and that is all I desire to say about that suit.

Mr. OATES. I simply desire to say that we are permitting you to go ahead and make your own statement, but when you get through we propose to cross-examine.

The WITNESS. Very well, I shall be happy to answer any question you desire to put to me. I saw by the papers that I was to be rigidly cross-examined. While I was there in conversation with the attorneys of the Bell Company I proposed to them that they should sue us somewhere where they did have jurisdiction. I said, "You gentlemen know you do not have jurisdiction here. Now, we have one exchange in operation in Memphis, another in Saint Louis, and several of them in Texas. You go down there and bring suit, and let us decide this question and be done with it." They said they would select their own forum, and they had a right to do that. So I then directed my attention, and so did the company, to having this matter adjudicated as quickly as possible. I became satisfied then that we were going to have a serious contest before we would be able to establish the validity of our patents; that this was a powerful corporation, having in its service the most accomplished patent lawyers in the United States, and that it was to be no child's play to fight such an antagonist as this in the courts. I said to our board that we must prepare ourselves for the most tremendous legal struggle that had ever been had in this country with this company before we could establish the validity of our patents, and I said to them "we had better stop right here and not dispose of any more territory. We do not know how this is going to result, and we had better stand on this ground and fight it out." There are the resolutions in the book [indicating] in which we resolved that no more territory should be sold and no more rights disposed of.

Mr. OATES. Will you take up the books as to each of those resolutions at this time?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. I mention all of this to refute some of these fine stories that have been so actively circulated, that I wanted Government suits brought and other suits brought in order to sell this stock to people. I will show you how much stock we have sold and what we gained by it.

Mr. RANNEY. I think you had better confine yourself to the facts.

The WITNESS. I know you do, but I don't. I think I had better explain as I go along. [The witness then read from page 45 of the minute-book of the company as follows:]

Pursuant to a call of the president of the board of directors of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company met at the rooms of the secretary, 606 Thirteenth street northwest, Washington, D. C., at 7.30 o'clock p. m., on the 7th day of April, 1885. Present, Joseph E. Johnston, J. Harris and J. H. Rogers, Robert Looney, and Casey Young. Mr. Harris represented by proxy, Mr. Garland and Mr. Brown.

The president stated the object of the meeting to be for the purpose of considering various propositions for the purchase of the right to use the Pan-Electric telephone in different localities in an exchange for the benefit of subscribers, and after discussion of the same, it was decided by the board that no more rights to establish exchanges should be disposed of pending certain contemplated litigation with the Bell Telephone Company unless ordered by subsequent motion of the board of directors.

It was decided, however, to sell telephones in pairs for individual use on private lines to such parties as may wish to buy them, and the secretary was instructed to furnish telephones on application for such, charging therefor the sum of $40 for each telephone complete, including transmitters, receivers, bell, coil, battery, and boxes.

Mr. Harris offered the following resolution, which was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That the secretary be, and is hereby, directed to give notice to the various parties to whom this company has sold right to use the Pan-Electric Telephone within certain States, districts, and territories, which contracts have by their terms been forfeited, that the company will, on a specified day, proceed by resolution to declare said contracts, and each of them, forfeited and annulled.

On motion of Mr. Harris the secretary was authorized and instructed to employ a person to write up the books of the company, and procure stock for issuance.

On motion, the meeting adjourned, subject to the call of the president.

J. E. JOHNSTON.

CASEY YOUNG.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. What is the date of that?—A. This is dated the 7th of April, 1885.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Right in that connection let me ask, has any more territory been sold?—A. No, sir; no more. A gentleman wanted to send me $5,000 in cash the other day for some, but I would not sell any. I have written a thousand letters to people that I would not sell any, all of which I will show before I get through.

Q. You may proceed.—A. Then I directed my attention to efforts to bring about a litigation with this company at some of these places where we had exchanges in operation. In regard to our company in Saint Louis, I will say for the benefit of my Republican friends that the president of that company, Mr. E. L. Adrian, is a leading Republican and formerly comptroller of the city of Saint Louis. He notified us that the company was organized, and sent us a circular published by the local officers of the Bell Company there and his reply, telling them that we would bring suit if they did not desist from using our telephone, and he did that under instructions from General Johnston and Senator Harris.

Mr. RANNEY. Dr. Rogers and his son keep sending us word that they have been told by the chairman that they can go, and that they desire to leave. We have not finished their testimony yet, and I desire to keep them in attendance.

Mr. OATES. I think it would be well to say to them that we will notify them when we want them again.

Mr. RANNEY. I think as this testimony of Colonel Young's relates to them chiefly they ought to be present and hear it.

Mr. OATES. That is for them to decide.

Mr. RANNEY. It relates to them entirely.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS. I only wanted to say to the committee that I have some engagements in New York, and I would like to go there if I could be excused.

Mr. RANNEY. When could you come back?

Mr. ROGERS. The latter part of next week.

Mr. RANNEY. This correspondence has not been read by us, and we reserve the right of examining you and your son when we get that correspondence before us, and as this testimony is designed to relate to yourselves, I think you ought to remain here and hear it.

The WITNESS. I think Dr. Rogers will corroborate anything I say.

Dr. ROGERS. The colonel seems to agree with me in nearly everything I said.

The WITNESS. Yes, I do. I hate to disappoint gentlemen who seem to expect dramatic scenes here, but I think Dr. Rogers will corroborate everything that I have said or will say.

Mr. OATES. About what time next week can you return?

Dr. ROGERS. About Saturday. I shall come home Saturday night.

Mr. RANNEY. You will be in New York subject to call.

Dr. ROGERS. Yes, sir. Telegraph me and I will come without subpoena.

Mr. RANNEY. We can telegraph you then.

Mr. MILLARD. Is your son going with you?

Mr. J. H. ROGERS. Yes, but if you will send the message to Bladensburg it will be forwarded to us wherever we may be, and we will come immediately.

Mr. OATES. Very well then. The committee will excuse you.

The WITNESS. I have just found that opinion of Mr. Marble's. Here it is [Producing a paper].

Mr. RANNEY. You had better put it in the record.

The WITNESS. I will put it in right now; here it is. That is the first opinion. I have a second one, but I have not got to that yet.

The following is the opinion referred to:

ROOM 37 LE DROIT BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., February 27, 1884.

Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS,

Vice-President of the Pan Electric Company, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your verbal request for my opinion as to whether the patent of J. Harris Rogers, No. 281560, dated July 17, 1883, infringes any patents theretofore granted, and particularly those granted to Daniel Drawbaugh, I have the honor to submit the following:

Infringements are of two classes, generic and specific.

Where a patent has been issued containing broad claim, covering any and every way and means of doing a particular thing, a subsequent patent operating on the same principle and being one of the ways to carry out the invention broadly claimed in the prior patent, infringes such prior patent generically, although the means by which the end is accomplished are substantially and patentably different from those shown and described by the first patentee.

A patent is specifically infringed when a subsequent inventor does the same thing in substantially the same way; that is, by the same means, or the well-recognized equivalents of such means.

The device covered by Mr. Rogers's patent, above mentioned, is a speaking telephone, by which articulate sounds are transmitted electrically by means of an undulatory current of electricity.

The principle or method upon which the instrument operates is covered broadly by the patent to Mr. Bell, numbered 174465, and dated March 7, 1876. So long as that patent, therefore, is sustained by the courts the invention of Mr. Rogers would be subordinate thereto.

After describing and illustrating his invention Mr. Rogers was allowed the following claims:

"(1) In a combination with the horizontal diaphragm of a telephone-transmitter connected to a battery and forming one pole of an electric circuit, as described, the flattened plate or button lying loosely and simply by its own weight upon the diaphragm, and connected to a line-wire and forming the opposite pole of said circuit, as set forth.

"(2) In a telephone-transmitter, the combination of a horizontal diaphragm forming one pole of an electric circuit, with a flattened plate or button forming the opposite pole, and resting on the diaphragm and adapted to receive sound-vibrations therefrom, as described, the said plate having a quantity of mercury in its upper part and a connection with a line-wire consisting of a dipping-needle, substantially as set forth.

"(3) In a telephone-transmitter, the combination of the horizontal diaphragm, the inclosing case, trumpet mouth-piece, the flattened contact-plate or button resting on the sensitive diaphragm, as described, the said plate or button being provided with a cavity in its top adapted to receive mercury, and the superimposed dome provided with a dipping-needle and a regulating screw, all substantially as and for the purposes set forth.

"(4) In combination with the horizontal diaphragm, forming one pole of an electric circuit, and the contact plate or button provided with mercury in its upper portion, as described, the superimposed dome having a screw, S, connected to a line-wire, and having a needle, n, as and for the purposes set forth."

This instrument, as well as the claims allowed, are distinctly different from any of the instruments or claims allowed to Daniel Drawbaugh.

The only patent thus far issued to him in which any feature embraced in Mr. Rogers's patent is found is the one numbered 272865. In that patent one of the carbon blocks or buttons is held in place by gravity, as is the carbon button on the diaphragm in the Rogers patent. In no other particular is any feature found like the Rogers device.

I herewith transmit copies of all patents thus far issued to Mr. Drawbaugh for telephones.

Upon examination of patents issued for telephones, other than those to Mr. Drawbaugh, I find only one which, in my opinion, bears a close resemblance to Mr. Rogers's patent above mentioned. I refer to the patent of E. Berliner, No. 222652, dated December 16, 1879, copy herewith. Upon examination of said patent you will observe that the diaphragm forms one pole of the electric circuit, and the carbon pin resting thereon by its own weight the other.

In Mr. Rogers's patent, the diaphragm forms one pole of the electric circuit, and the flattened plate or carbon button forms the other pole; said button being provided with a cavity in its top in which is a small quantity of mercury, and being connected to the line wire.

The operation of the two instruments is precisely the same.

The only substantial difference in their mechanical construction being the one above mentioned.

Without question Mr. Rogers's instrument is the most sensitive, and as a transmitter the most effective; in fact, I think that no instrument, so far as I have been able to find from the examinations of the patents granted, is so sensitive as that covered by Mr. Rogers's patent.

I think there is clearly a patentable difference between the instruments of Mr. Rogers and Mr. Berliner, but, as above stated, this difference consists solely in the formation and manner of adjustment of the upper electrode.

The Pan-Electric Company have nothing to fear, in my opinion, from any other telephonic instrument patented, so far as specific mechanical construction is concerned.

It is possible, and, in fact, somewhat probable, that hired mechanical experts will swear that the upper poles of the electric circuits in these instruments are the equivalents of each other.

I do not think, however, that such is the case technically, and hence the view expressed, that the instruments are patentably different.

Very respectfully,

E. M. MARBLE.

The WITNESS (resuming). Now, about the Saint Louis business I was talking about. We were notified—a circular was sent us by the president of the local Saint Louis company, that had been sent to the president of our local company—that they were going to bring suit against us. I went immediately to Saint Louis and employed the best counsel in the city, I think.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Have you got through with your statement in regard to the suit in Memphis?—

A. No, sir, I have not got to that yet. As I say, I employed the best counsel in Saint Louis, and perhaps it will not detract any from their reputation to say that they are both distinguished Republicans, and one a member of Congress with whom I served—Messrs. Pollard and Taylor, the leading counsel in Saint Louis. I employed them and paid them. I directed Mr. Adrian, the president of the company, to notify the local president of the Bell Company that I was in Saint Louis for the purpose of defending that suit, and that he would do us a kindness if he would institute the suit at once. I staid there a week and conferred with these gentlemen about our line of defense, and I have their written opinion and all their letters, and in this connection I will state that I expected Senator Garland to go and attend to that matter, as one of these gentlemen applied to us to send him there. He had been made the attorney of the company on the ground of being the best lawyer. Everybody west of the Mississippi River knew his reputation as a lawyer, and they wanted him to come there and advise them about that suit. But they could not get him to come; he was off at Hominy Hill, or somewhere over there, and wrote a letter saying that an important case at Little Rock needed his attention and called him there.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. When was that?—A. That was some time in 1884, after this Philadelphia business. I will give you the dates soon. He gave a written opinion to these gentlemen, but did not go there, and they commenced to write to me, and I wrote myself. When I got there and saw his opinion I did not like it. I did not think it was a sound opinion, and I did not think he understood exactly the relations between our company, the parent company, and the local Saint Louis company, inasmuch as he seemed to think that he was merely giving them an opinion as their lawyer, and not as our lawyer. He did not seem to understand that we were under obligations according to the terms of our contract to furnish counsel to defend any suits that might be brought against them in Saint Louis. So I sat down and wrote to Senator Harris a letter in which I criticised that and insisted that we were under obligations to defend that suit, and that Mr. Garland ought to take that view of it. I staid there a week or so trying to induce those gentlemen to bring a suit and have the question settled. It was not done, however.

I retained these lawyers, Messrs. Pollard and Taylor, and left them there on guard, telling them that whenever a suit was brought they should enter their name for us and telegraph me and I would come on and assist them immediately. No suit being brought there I went to Memphis. Being intimate with the local attorneys of the Bell Company there, I said to them, "Why don't you fellows bring a suit against us and stop this newspaper warfare? The newspaper is not the place to try your suit; the court room is the place to go for that. You are publishing these circulars and advertisements every day that we are infringing your patents, and you annoy us a great deal about it. Why not quit this newspaper fight and go into the court room? We are ready to meet you there whenever you bring a suit." But they did not do it, and still kept publishing these circulars every day.

Finally I saw one much worse than the others, saying that this was a sort of speculative corporation; that Dr. Rogers had imposed on some worthy gentlemen and got them to take his patents; that there was nothing in them, and they had better let them alone. I did not like that, and I wrote a reply which General Johnston signed, and published it in the Memphis newspapers in reply to the circular which they published in the same papers, saying that we did not believe we were infringing their patents and did not desire to do so; that if we were satisfied we were doing so we would abandon the field at once and suspend all our operations, but that the court was the proper place to test that question and not the newspapers; that we were there ready to go into the courts and decide the question as to the validity of our patents.

Well, no suit was brought, but these things continued to be published. I saw no resort then but for us to bring suit ourselves against the Bell Company. This thing had gone on then up to about May or June, 1885. I had been early in the spring of 1885 badly hurt, paralyzed in my arm, and was not able to go out of my room for several months and could not pay attention to it, but as soon as I was able I tried to set these things on foot. I went to Memphis and tried to get litigation there, but did not bring it, and I concluded that possibly we might sustain a bill against them.

I examined what is known as the Hurst cotton-tie case that came up from the circuit court of the United States in New Orleans, in which suit had been brought by one company, one patentee against another patentee, to restrain him from libelling his property, a very doubtful legal expedient not often sustained. The Supreme Court, however, sustained it. But the suit was brought in the United States circuit court in New Orleans and it was sustained there. I do not think it was the law and hardly think so yet, but the circuit court of Louisiana, decided that it was the law and strangely enough the Supreme Court up here affirmed it. So that I thought, under that case, perhaps I could sustain the bill against them. I had discussed that question with Pollard and Taylor at Saint Louis before, and we had gone over the authorities and prepared a brief, which I have here, which satisfied us that we could not maintain the bill; but thinking that the United States circuit court of New Orleans was a better judge of that matter than we were, and if that court was not, the Supreme Court of the United States was, I thought possibly I might by some means get action, and therefore acted on that theory with respect to that view of the case.

I concluded, also, that I might be able to sustain a suit against them under the sixteenth section of the patent laws, which authorizes them to file a bill in interfering patents to have one or both patents annulled. A suit had been brought of that character, reported in 3 Dillon, before Judge Tréat, of Saint Louis, and two cases in New York. Being unable to do anything else, we did proceed to file a suit against them in the United States circuit court for the western district of Tennessee at Memphis. That is the case of the Government suit we hear so much about, and here it is. [Producing a paper.]

Mr. EDEN. Is that the original?

The WITNESS. This is a copy.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Can you state, in a word, what the scope of it is?—A. I have already stated it.

Mr. EDEN. Do you wish to put that paper in the record?

The WITNESS. Yes, I do. I want to show the folly and nonsense of all this stuff that has been published about these suits.

Mr. RANNEY. Rather than put it into the body of the record, you can state briefly what the scope and prayer of it is.

The WITNESS. It embraces two features; that is, that we might sustain a bill against them to restrain them from interfering with our patent and libeling our property, and I find now I could come nearer maintaining it than I could then, because many English authorities, a Massachusetts case, and this New Orleans case have been discovered. It mainly goes on the ground that Bell's patent is invalid for the reason first that he is anticipated by Reis, by Van der Weyde, by Pickering, and by Drawbaugh, and two or three other inventors in this country, and by Boselle (?), a French inventor. Then we set out in this bill here that his patent is invalid for want of utility; that the patent of 1876 that covers his broad generic claim is not patentable for want of utility, for it won't operate at all; and we ask, under the sixteenth section, I think it is, of the patent law, that that patent be annulled upon the ground I have stated, and also the patent of 1877 being acknowledged as a patent that was inoperative.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. It embraced, then, the subject-matter of which you first spoke, restraining them from libeling you; that is in there too, is it?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. And then, likewise, to have the Bell patent vacated?—A. Yes, sir; under the sixteenth section, I think it is, which has a special provision. I have heard a good deal of nonsense about trying these suits, and I want to show what was done with that suit.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. When was that commenced?—A. That was filed on the 10th of July, 1885. Please bear that in mind, because it will have an important bearing on many matters before the committee and aid to straighten out a great many crooked things.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. That is the date of its filing?—A. Yes, sir; the date does not appear on the bill, but I have a telegram stating that it was filed on the 10th of July, and I know that was about the time. Now, I will pursue that lawsuit a little further; I have seen a good deal of complaint in the newspapers and other places because I demurred to the jurisdiction of the court in Philadelphia—

Mr. RANNEY. Please confine yourself to this case, and not to the newspapers.

The WITNESS. I want to get the newspapers right; they are a very useful institution when you can control them. Upon the filing of this bill, you will find the jurisdictional facts set out here on the face of the bill, the facts that we thought gave the court jurisdiction. I will not trouble you to read it.

Mr. RANNEY. Can you give us the basis of the jurisdiction? Just state that.

The WITNESS. I do not remember it distinctly enough to state it. Shall I read it?

Mr. RANNEY. You may read it.

The witness read as follows:

"To the judges of the circuit court of the United States sitting in equity for the western division of the western district of Tennessee, at Memphis:

"Your orator would respectfully represent unto your honors that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, your orator, is a corporation chartered by the laws of Tennessee, having its situs in this State, and whose charter of incorporation will, to the court, be shown at the trial of this cause, and is now made Exhibit A to this bill.

"Your orator further shows that the American Bell Telephone Company is a corporation chartered by the laws of Massachusetts, and that by provisions of its charter it has authority to do business in other States of the Union, and as a matter of fact is now doing business in the State of Tennessee. That it has an agent in this State who transacts business for it; that it sells telephones in Tennessee; that it collects royalty on other or the same telephones; that said agent represents said company in all of its business transactions in and about the telephone sales and the royalty on the same; that said agent reports to said company at its headquarters, and receives direction from said company; that the said agent (or agents) collects money due to said company, and transmits the same to its headquarters, and makes contracts for said company in this State. Your orator would further show that the defendant, the Cumberland Telephone and Telegraph Company, is a corporation chartered by the laws of Kentucky; that it has business offices in the State of Tennessee, and has agents in said State at different points in the State, at the city of Memphis, also at Nashville, and perhaps at other points; that said company does a large business in the State of Tennessee, sells and rents a large number of telephones, makes large and heavy contracts for materials and supplies, and expends and collects large sums of money."

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. In other words, they were doing business in the State and had an agent there?—A. Yes, sir. Then we got service on their local agent, Mr. Henry N. Cook.

Q. Did the court order service?—A. It is not necessary to get service; you get a constable to go and serve it on the party.

Q. But I want to know if it was done.—A. The local attorneys of the Bell Company came in and filed these pleadings here. I will read them if necessary.

Mr. OATES. State it if you can.

The WITNESS. I will do so.

Q. Did the company plead or demur?—A. They hardly did either. They moved to strike out. It struck me at the time as rather a novel proceeding, but I made up my mind at the time that they had done just enough to give jurisdiction if we hadn't it already.

Q. I don't care for your opinion about that state of facts.—A. I am stating the facts, and if you will allow me to read this it will show you. [Reading:]

“UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, “Western District of Tennessee:

“The Pan-Electric Telephone Company vs. The American Bell Telephone Company et al.

“I, C. W. H. Heiskell, hereby move to strike out and set aside so much of the marshal's return as purports to relate to the American Bell Telephone Company, and to dismiss the bill as against them for want of jurisdiction and for want of service; and in support thereof I refer to the annexed affidavits of Henry N. Cook and William H. Forbes, and I appear specially for that purpose only.”

They filed the affidavit of Henry N. Cook and the affidavit of William H. Forbes, the president of the American Bell Telephone Company, denying these jurisdictional facts which are stated in the caption of the bill, and that is the issue between us now. We have never been able to get this case brought to a hearing. I have been away, and the thing stands there now in the court at Memphis, and we are ready to meet these issues and try the case. That was the 10th of July. The bill was prepared some time before it was filed. About the 6th of July I went to Baltimore and saw General Bradley T. Johnson about a company there, and also went to Philadelphia, perhaps it was earlier than that, to see Mr. Colston, who was our counsel in the case there, about the order of the court to take proof in respect to damages.

I will state right here now that in compromising and settling this thing I was concerned to protect Mr. Klotz, who is a friend of mine and served in Congress with me, who was the only man who had a dollar in it, and I wrote to him and he met me in Philadelphia and was present at the conference between myself and Mr. Colston, and consented to the propriety of the course we pursued, and was perfectly satisfied with it, and he is the only man who has a dollar in it that I know of. I went there to settle up the matter. I did not want any bill of costs against Mr. Klotz. I knew it could only be nominal, because no telephone had been put in operation there. I was there and also in Baltimore to see General Bradley T. Johnson, and while I was there I picked up a newspaper and saw that on the next day a case was to be tried in the United States circuit court at Pittsburgh that involved the questions at issue between the Bell Company and other companies. I did not know who was on the other side at the time. They gave as the defendants a local company of Pittsburgh. I see a gentleman present who could tell me the name of the company, I think. Yes, it was the Western Pennsylvania. The suit was against them.

There is a good deal of discrepancy in Dr. Rogers's and Harry Rogers's testimony. They have forgotten that. I thought I would go there, as I might learn something. So I telegraphed Senator Harris from Baltimore, and he telegraphed back for me to go to Pittsburgh. I was not here and did not go off in a hurry without a carpet-bag, as they have said. I left Barnum's Hotel at Baltimore, where I was stopping, and went to Pittsburgh, and the next morning went into the court room, where I saw the walls strung up with wires and a lot of models, and the whole room looked like an exchange. I saw models spread out on the tables. I saw Van der Weyde's and Pickering and Reis's models and Bell's of 1876 and 1877, and there seemed to be a thorough preparation made for the trial of that case, just as I thought it ought to be tried and never had been tried.

I took my seat there to watch the proceedings of the court. The parties came in, and I heard the argument of Mr. Storrow, a very accomplished lawyer of Boston, one of the ablest patent lawyers in the United States, I think. I heard his argument, which lasted two days, and when he closed his argument, and the argument on the other side, by Mr. Von Briesen, had commenced, and he had spoken only about ten minutes, the district judge stopped him, and said: “This question has been decided, and I cannot hear argument on it. The Dowd case, and the Spencer case, and the Dolbear cases have already decided this question. My brother judges, Gray and Lowell, have decided these questions, and I won't undertake to reopen them.” Mr. Bakewell, of Pittsburgh, an excellent lawyer and accomplished gentleman, rose and protested most vigorously against that line of action by the court, insisting on a right to argue the case, inasmuch as all these preparations had been made, and said that he was there to demonstrate the fact that the Bell instrument was not operative and not patentable for want of utility, and that there were prior inventions, and so on. The court said, "If we are wrong, Mr. Bakewell, the supreme court will reverse us. You can take it up, but we will not depart from the rulings of our brother judges, and will not reopen this case," and there it ended.

By Mr. RANNEY.

Q. Who was the judge?—A. Judge McKennan was the circuit judge. I have forgotten who was the district judge.

Q. They sat together, did they?—A. Yes, sir; they put it on the ground that it would not do for one circuit judge to be reversing another, which is a very proper view to take of it, and one that all judges take.

Q. Was that an application for an injunction or for a final hearing on the merits?—A. That was an application for a preliminary injunction, and the order was granted.

Q. Which side brought the bill?—A. The Bell Company brought it to enjoin the Western Pennsylvania Company, which was a licensee of the National Improved Company that you have heard of.

Q. It was only preliminary and not on the merits?—A. Yes, sir; that was it.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. You say the judges heard the argument on one side?—A. Yes, sir; they heard argument for two days on the Bell side, but there was nothing new in that, and perhaps that may have been the view they took.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. The evidence had been put in by either side?—A. I take it that it had; I did not hear any of the evidence read.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. The application was made on affidavits, I suppose?—A. I do not know how it was; I know they did not test those instruments and the judge took no measures, that I saw, to satisfy himself about them at all; it was not an unusual thing, as every lawyer knows; but they heard Mr. Storrow.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. That has been the practice of judges when a patent has been granted by judicial decision?—A. Yes, sir. I do not know what the purpose was in hearing Mr. Storrow so long; he is a very entertaining speaker and accomplished lawyer and gentleman. This was the first of the Government suits we hear so much about. After this argument was over (I knew Mr. Bakewell very slightly; he is a most reputable gentleman), I went to his office and had some conversation with him about the telephone; he is one of the lawyers of this company, and a member of the firm of Bakewell & Kerr. Mr. Von Breisen, of New York, was the gentleman who undertook to make the argument, and it was Mr. Bakewell who protested against the action of the court.

So I went to Mr. Bakewell's office, and I had with me a book that we had had prepared (that I omitted to state as I went along) by one of the most distinguished and accomplished electricians of this country, and it was used in the defense of our case, or the prosecution of our suit against the Bell Telephone Company; I refer to Dr. Wellington Adams, of Saint Louis, one of the best electricians in this country; he is a mechanical electrician as well, and thoroughly conversant with the telephone and the laws that govern it. We employed him to write a book; I will speak of that after awhile. I had that book with me, and I thought it would be of service to those gentlemen, and I called at Mr. Bakewell's office and showed him the book; he looked over it a little; he is very conversant with the telephone question, and he pronounced it of considerable value.

After spending an hour with him, I went back to my hotel, and it was stated here the other day that I sent my card to Mr. Van Benthuyzen. That is not so. I came to my room at the Seventh Avenue Hotel with Mr. C. P. Huntington, and he sent his card to him. I had heard of him before. He is now president of what is known as the National Improved Telephone Company, and this Western Pennsylvania Telephone Company was a licensee of that company, and he was there defending it on that ground. He was a party in interest, of course. He came to my room, and I found him an exceedingly intelligent gentleman, a man of fine executive ability, with a strong will and much force of character—

Mr. RANNEY. Hadn't you better omit those personalities?

The WITNESS. No, sir; I think I had better bring them all out. There has been a good deal said about Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Mr. RANNEY. He may be obliged to you for advertising him, but I see no use in it.

The WITNESS. No, sir; he does not need advertising; he advertises himself as well as any man you ever saw. Well, we got to talking the matter over and I believe he made a proposition that we should join forces. I told him of a suit we had in Memphis, and while I was in Pittsburgh on the 12th or 14th of July, 1885, I got a telegram stating that a bill was going to be filed, I think. I told him about that and he told me he had a suit pending against the Bell Company at New Orleans, I forget the grounds of it, and I saw that he had accumulated a great quantity of material in the way of evidence, models, and mechanical structures that would be exceedingly valuable in the trial of any lawsuit with the Bell Company. We had spent a good deal of money in getting models up, but he had a large amount of testimony from Germany in respect to the Reis invention, which I thought was the strongest and most reliable ground on which we could base an attack on the Bell Company. He had gathered a large amount of testimony, and for those reasons, as stated by Dr. Rogers the other day (I do not think I said it was worth $75,000, but perhaps I did), we agreed we would join forces in fighting these two suits, and we drew up a written contract to that effect. I have telegraphed to Mr. Van Benthuyzen to send me that contract, and I expect it here to-morrow and I will submit it to the committee.

During our conversation there I saw that he had examined the authorities a good deal, and although he was not a lawyer, I talked with him more as a lawyer than I would ordinarily to a layman. I said to him that a bill had passed at the last session of Congress that conferred on the Attorney-General of the United States the right and made it his duty to file a bill to annul the patent. He said at once, "Well, why don't you get Garland to do it?" I said, "Mr. Garland is a member of our company, has been our counsel, and I would not ask him to do it. It would be a delicate matter, and I would not ask him." He said, "I will do it." I said, "You had better consider whether it would do you any good, and whether you would want such a suit brought." But he persisted that if there was such a law, he intended to have it executed, and said that he would apply to Mr. Garland himself, and have that bill brought. I said, "All right, you are at liberty to do as you please about it." So I left him and went back home. From a memorandum book I find that I arrived at Washington on the 30th of August.

In the mean time our bill at Memphis had been filed against the Bell Company. I wanted certain exhibits here and patents and certain applications for patents that were pending that we made exhibits in this bill here. I had written several times to Harry Rogers and to Mr. Marble to send them to me, but I could not get it done. I had a number of models of these things I had manufactured, and I came on here. Mr. Van Benthuyzen in the mean time had gone to Waukesha Springs, but we corresponded about this proposal to consolidate our companies, and we agreed to meet here in Washington City, I telegraphing or writing him, I do not remember which, that I would be here, and that our lawyer, Mr. Gantt, would be here with me, and that we would arrange the terms of consolidation for these two companies.

When I got here Mr. Van Benthuyzen I think was not here; perhaps he came the next day. He had with him his own lawyer, Mr. Von Briesen, of New York, and Mr. C. P. Huntington, who was a member of his company. They were at the Ebbitt House, and there we stopped. I went during that time to Harry Rogers's house to get him to go to the Patent Office and get these applications or these patents for a receiver that I had been writing for all this time, and that Mr. Marble had in his hands. I found him and his father at their home on Four-and-a-half street, but the family had moved out to Bladensburg or somewhere about there. I told him what I had come for. He took me in his buggy and we went to Mr. Marble's office. We saw Mr. Marble about this application, and Mr. Marble said the reason he had not gotten it out earlier was because Harry had not furnished him with some drawing or model he had promised he would give him, but that the patent should be issued in a day or two.

That was the time (not in July) that this conversation occurred, that Dr. Rogers and Harry told about when they said I told them that Mr. Garland had promised to bring suit. I had forgotten it and would never have thought of it again, and when Harry Rogers commenced to testify about it, I should have sworn I never had heard it, but when he mentioned the circumstance that he had talked with Major Gardner on the subject, I remembered that he had a conversation with Major Gardner, and that Gardner had told him certain things. The conversation was this and nothing more. I wish Dr. Rogers was here.

However, I am going a little too fast. On the 24th of May, 1884, Dr. Rogers wrote me a letter to Memphis, which is printed there among those papers, I believe, in which he said he had seen a decision by Judge Wallace, of New York, in what is known as the Gunning case, in which it was held that a suit might be brought by the Attorney-General of the United States to annul a patent. That was brought by Attorney-General Brewster, the case decided by Judge Wallace; I have seen it. He wrote to me, inclosing me a slip of paper, as he testifies, stating that this decision had been rendered, and he seemed to be greatly enthused over it, saying now is our time, and we must make Garland file a bill at once to annul the Bell patents, and wanted me to write immediately to Mr. Garland about it. Immediately upon the receipt of that letter I wrote to him that Mr. Garland could not file that bill, and that I could not ask him to do it, that it would be a delicate matter to ask him.

Mr. RANNEY. You are stating the contents of the letter. The letter will show for itself.

The WITNESS. I do not know whether you have the letter or not. I know I have not got it in my possession, for I sent it to him.

Mr. RANNEY. Have you a copy of it?

The WITNESS. No, sir; I have not a copy of it; I don't keep copies of my letters. That is the substance of what I wrote him, and I expect it has been published. The substance was as Harry Rogers testified and writes in two or three letters of his own, and in his letter to the New York Tribune he states what I told him. I wrote back to him that it would be an indelicate thing for me to ask Mr. Garland to bring that suit, and I declined to do it. When I had that conversation with him at his house, he alluded to this letter about his having written to me about Senator Garland's bringing this suit, and that he had written to Senator Garland to bring the suit, and that Mr. Garland paid no attention to it. I told him then in that connection of the conversation that had occurred between myself and Mr. Van Benthuyzen at Pittsburgh, and that Mr. Van Benthuyzen was here and had applied to Senator Garland to bring this suit under the bill that I supposed had passed.

Mr. OATES. You mean Attorney-General Garland; he was Attorney-General then.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; Attorney-General Garland. That letter was written on the 12th of July by Van Benthuyzen, and this was about the 1st of August. I got here on the 29th of July or the 1st of August, and it was about that time, not early in July, for I was not here. I told him what had transpired at Pittsburgh with Mr. Van Benthuyzen; that that letter had been written, asking Mr. Garland to bring a suit under this bill that I supposed had passed and become a law. We discussed it, and I said it would put Mr. Garland in an awkward position to have the suit brought. He was very anxious that that suit should be brought, and I said, "It is the law, and I presume if Mr. Van Benthuyzen insists on it, the Attorney-General will have it to do. I do not know how he can escape it; but under the law it was his duty, and," I said, "if Mr. Van Benthuyzen insists on it, I suppose he will have it to do, but we will take no part in it, and we do not want it."

I said to Harry Rogers (and that is the only thing that makes me remember it), and it is not likely I would tell him anything I did not want published to the world, because he publishes everything from the house-tops—I said to Harry Rogers, speaking of our proposed consolidation, at the Ebbitt House, with the New Orleans National Improved Telephone Company, who were here for that purpose—I consulted him about that and I did say to him: "I want you to go down there and hear this conversation, but I do not think you had better take your father there." I said: "He has had some quarrels with some of these gentlemen, and Mr. Huntington doesn't like him in consequence of a quarrel about the National Secret Telephone Company that he was interested in." He had a quarrel with him then, and for the same cause as with us, and I said: "Don't let the old gentleman go there, but you come yourself." I thought he went, but he says that he did not go; but in talking about this suit it occurred to me, riding up in the buggy with Harry Rogers, that perhaps it might get out that our company had something to do with it in some way, the thing we were talking about and contemplating then, and I said to Harry: "It is better to say nothing about this and the consolidation we were thinking of." That is all the conversation we had on the subject. We never had two conversations.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Conversation about what?—A. About the Government suit and the consolidation. That was in August and not in July.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you tell Mr. Harry Rogers or his father that Attorney-General Garland agreed to bring the suit?—A. No, sir; I have told you exactly what occurred.

Q. You heard the testimony of Dr. Rogers and his son?—A. Yes, sir. I had forgotten the circumstances until I heard their testimony. He came to me next day and said: "I find that Major Gardner knows all about our business here; somebody has told him." I said it didn't make any difference; perhaps I said General Bradley T. Johnson or Mr. Huntington had told him, because they were there and knew all about it. That is all the conversation I ever had with any one of them on the subject. I should have forgotten that but for this reference to Major Gardner, and the conversation which I had with Major Gardner about the matter some time afterwards.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you mean that you had forgotten about this conversation until you heard him testify to it?—A. Yes, sir; I had forgotten it, and I should not have remembered it then if he had not mentioned this conversation with Major Gardner, because, as I will proceed to explain in a moment, he could not have misunderstood it in that way. I must have been a fool——

Mr. RANNEY. Never mind ; you need not state that.

The WITNESS. Yes, I will explain it in my own way.

By Mr. OATES :

Q. Do you state positively that you did not tell either one of the Rogerses, in any conversation, that Attorney-General Garland had agreed to bring a suit against the Bell Company to annul their patent?—A. Yes, sir ; and I will state exactly what I did say at the time, and I am going to show to the committee why he was mistaken.

Mr. RANNEY. Don't go into any argument about it.

The WITNESS. I know you don't want to hear anything about it, but I am going to make one if the balance of the committee want to hear it.

Mr. RANNEY. I protest against a remark of that kind.

The WITNESS. I have a right to show any fact now that goes to my credibility or his credibility or as to our memory about these circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no objection to your stating any fact.

The WITNESS. I will not state anything improper. I know my rights in the matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Still you have to be controlled by the committee.

The WITNESS. Yes ; if the majority of the committee say I am not to speak at all, I have nothing more to say.

The CHAIRMAN. Just state the facts and leave us to draw the inferences.

Mr. RANNEY. You said a moment ago that you would make an argument whether we wanted it or not.

The WITNESS. Oh, no, sir. I say if the committee does not want to hear me I will stop.

Mr. HANBACK. That is an imputation against the committee I think.

The WITNESS. Oh, no, sir ; I will get it all right before I get through. I was going on to state some circumstances. On the 24th of May this letter to me was written——

Mr. OATES. Let me interrupt you. Is that explanation to be in regard to the last question you answered ?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. If you have the letter, let us have the date of it.

The WITNESS. I have just given it to you. I was just saying that the letter of Dr. Rogers of the 24th of May was the first I had heard of it.

Mr. RANNEY. You did not say who wrote the letter ?

The WITNESS. Well, Dr. Rogers wrote it to me. Here is a letter that the Saint Louis counsel wrote that I could not find awhile ago. [Producing a letter.]

By Mr. RANNEY :

Q. Have you the letter that Dr. Rogers wrote to you?—A. He wrote me a letter on the 24th of May, as I stated a little while ago, inclosing to me a newspaper slip that he testified to in reference to the decision made by Judge Wallace in the Gunning case, and in that letter asked me to write to Mr. Garland, as I stated.

Q. Have you that letter?—A. No, sir ; I stated awhile ago that if it is not published I have not got it. I kept no copy in my possession.

Q. I mean the letter——A. But I don't find that. I didn't keep all his letters. The books and papers connected with the Telephone Company are all here——

Q. You travel off a great way in your answers. I simply asked you if you had that letter of Dr. Rogers, which would be in your possession.—A. I have told you that I have not.

Q. Have you looked for it?—A. Yes, sir, I have, and furnished you with all the letters I could find, as I told you in the beginning.

Q. What has become of it?—A. I do not know ; I suppose I threw it away or tore it up ; I don't remember. It would be rather a difficult matter for me to account for every letter I have received in the last three years. I suppose I have received ten thousand letters in that time. I have ten volumes of letters.

Q. Your letter-book would not contain his letter, would it?—A. It might ; I put them in my books.

Q. I wish you would find that letter ; I would like it.—A. I will if I can. He testified to writing it.

Q. Yes, he says he wrote you.

Mr. HALL. And he stated what was in it, too.

A. There are one or two other things. If you will let me have those letters I will demonstrate that Dr. Rogers was mistaken—not on my testimony, but upon his own.

Mr. RANNEY. If you are going to demonstrate from his own evidence, that is mere argument. If you have any facts let us have them. Give us more facts and less argument.

The WITNESS. I will try and oblige you. I want the printed letters of Dr. Rogers.

By Mr. MILLARD :

Q. Have you the letters that passed between you and Van Benthuyssen in regard to the bringing of the suit?—A. I do not think but one letter ever passed between us on that subject. I do not know whether I have it or not. He wrote to me from Waukesha Springs. I may have two or three ; I do not remember.

Q. Will you look and see if you have, and if you find any bring them here?—A. Yes, sir ; I will. He keeps copies of all his letters, and can furnish copies of them, and he will be here.

Mr. OATES. I move that the committee adjourn until 12 o'clock on Monday.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Monday, March 22, 1886.

The committee met at 12.47 p. m.

Mr. HANBACK. In regard to the report of Colonel Oates and myself as to certain letters in the correspondence submitted to us that we deemed material, there was some understanding as to publication. It was understood that they should be published for the information of the committee. I presume the only way that can be done is for the clerk to have them transcribed. They are all numbered and should be published as soon as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. They are attached to the book in which they are, are they?

Mr. HANBACK. They are attached to the book. It is impossible to take them out, because they are pasted on both sides of the same sheet. We have tried to do it, but cannot do it. We cannot separate the letters from the pages of the book. The only way it can be done will be to have those thirty-seven letters transcribed and then have them published.

The CHAIRMAN. There will be no objection to that, I presume, as there is no other practicable way.

Hon. CASEY YOUNG then continued his statement.

The WITNESS. I have not seen the stenographer's official report of my testimony on Saturday, but I notice some inaccuracies in what purports to be a statement of it in the newspapers, which I would like to correct. I do not know how it appears in the official report. I notice in one of the papers I am made to say that very recently I was offered $75,000, which I declined to take, for an interest in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. I said $5,000 instead of $75,000. It is also reported that I gave very important testimony in this, that I stated a contract had been made between myself and Mr. Van Benthuyssen in reference to the prosecution of a suit by the Government against the Bell Telephone Company. I made no such statement, and no such contract was ever made. I stated that a contract was made between myself and Mr. Van Benthuyssen for the prosecution of a suit at Memphis instituted by us against the Bell Telephone Company, and for the prosecution of one at New Orleans instituted by his company. That was what my statement was, and I desire to make that correction. I have telegraphed for that contract, as I said before, and I presume it will be here shortly. I have a telegram that it is on its way. I have not a copy of it.

Here [producing paper] is a copy in blank of all the contracts we have made. I would like to put it in evidence. The contract is as follows :

This contract, made and entered into on this the — day of —, 188—, by and between The Pan-Electric Telephone Company, a corporation chartered under the laws of Tennessee, party of the first part, and —, of the —, and State of —, party of the second part :

And whereas the said J. Harris Rogers and others, his assigns, have conveyed and assigned said inventions, patents, and applications to the party of the first part:

For the considerations hereinafter mentioned the party of the first part hereby agrees and binds itself to convey and assign to such corporation as the said ——— may cause to be organized in the State of ——— all the right, title, claim, and interest that the said party of the first part has in and to the right to use the said telephonic inventions and patents, with all improvements upon the same made or hereafter to be made or acquired by the party of the first part, within the limits of said State, for and during the term that said patents have to run.

And in consideration of said agreement to convey the said ——— ——— agree and bind ——— to organize a corporation for the purpose of constructing telephone lines and exchanges and conducting a general telephonic business in the said State of ——— within the next ———, and that immediately after the organization of said corporation it shall pay the party of the first part ——— in cash, and shall give to the party of the first part 30 per cent. of its fully paid-up stock, which shall be non-assessable for any purpose whatever, and said corporation shall pay to the party of the first part a royalty of 50 cents per month for each transmitter with its receiver which it uses, and the royalty shall be paid to the extent of the cost of said transmitters and receivers when the same are delivered at the manufactory, and afterwards the royalty shall be paid in monthly installments of 50 cents per month. That is to say, if the actual cost of transmitter and receiver is $3.50, when that is paid on delivery of the instrument, it will be in full satisfaction of royalty for the first seven months.

Or at the option of said corporation it may pay to the party of the first part a bonus in cash of ——— at the time of organization in lieu of the cash bonus, and 30 per cent. of stock above provided for, but if the full cash bonus is paid the corporation will pay the royalty of 50 cents per month as above provided.

And it is further agreed that the said corporation shall have the right to sell telephones with the right to use them within the said State of ———, but to be used only in pairs, and by certain named persons and in certain named houses; and the contract of sale must stipulate that if said telephones are transferred from the persons or houses named without the written consent of the corporation selling the same, or if they are at any time connected with a central office or exchange, the purchaser shall forfeit all his rights as owner, and such telephones shall, after such transfer or connection with the exchange, pay to the corporation selling the same the same rental as other exchange telephones, and such corporation shall pay to the party of the first part from that time the same royalty as upon other telephones, and for each transmitter with its receiver so sold the corporation selling the same shall pay to the party of the first part $25 on delivery of the same.

And it is further agreed that within a reasonable time after demand the party of the first part, will furnish to said corporation transmitters and receivers at the manufactory in Washington, D. C., the corporation ordering paying at the time of delivery $3.50, supposed to be the actual cost, which will be credited on royalty account.

And it is further agreed that said corporation shall have the right to convey and assign all its rights to use said invention to corporations, associations, or individuals within the various cities, towns, villages, and counties in said State.

And it is further agreed that if said corporation shall elect to give its stock to the party of the first part, said corporation giving its stock is hereby prohibited from issuing bonds; nor shall such corporation allow to its officers salaries in the aggregate of more than ——— per annum without the written consent of the party of the first part, and that the party of the first part shall be represented by at least two directors in such corporation taken from the stockholders of the party of the first part, and that the books of such corporation shall be always open to the examination of such agent as the party of the first part may appoint.

And it is further agreed that in the event of any judicial proceeding against the party of the second part, or their assigns, upon the ground that said patents infringe any older patents or inventions, the party of the first part agrees and binds itself to defend such suit or suits with its own attorney, and at its own expense, and if said corporation shall be restrained from the use of said inventions by the judgment, order, or decree of any court, the royalty on such instruments shall cease during the time of such restraint.

And it is further agreed that if the party of the second part shall fail to organize the corporation above provided for in said State within the time specified, or if organized, said corporation shall fail to pay to the party of the first part the money or moneys and stock above provided for within seven days after organization, the party of the first part shall have the right by resolution of its board of directors to annul this contract.

In testimony whereof the said party of the first part has caused its seal and the signature of its president to be hereunto affixed and countersigned by its secretary, and the party of the second part has signed his name and affixed his seal on the day and date above written.

This form was used in the various contracts we have been talking about, made for the different States. It is the form of contract that we used in contracts of that sort. There have been more trifling alterations, interlineations, &c., but in the outline that is the contract we have made, and that is the one, as I stated, we understood to be substantially the same as that used by the Bell Telephone Company. In my statement on Saturday I proceeded a little out of order and I will have to go back in date of the events a little to state some facts that it may be important for the committee to know, and that I believe are embraced in this resolution. I speak in reference to the alleged sale of stock on the part of the company. After the company was organized, in December, 1883, we agreed at the first meeting, in pursuance of the third clause of the original contract, that no stock was to be sold by an individual shareholder, and that all stock, if any should be sold, should be sold under the direction of the executive committee, as provided for in the original contract, and in the subsequent contract under the direction of the board of directors.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. You are now speaking of the contract made in New York?—Answer. Yes, sir; I just allude to that in connection with the matter I am speaking of. You will find by that clause of the contract made at the first meeting in December, 1883, that we decided no stock should be sold except for the general benefit, and under the direction of the board of directors, and that the proceeds should go into the treasury. About the time of the first meeting Dr. Rogers made a transfer of $8,833 worth of stock—I think that was the amount—to Colonel Looney, and Colonel Looney came to me and wanted me to give him some evidence of his ownership of that stock. I told him he was present when the agreement was made that the stock should not be issued; but he insisted that he ought to have some evidence of his ownership; that Dr. Rogers might die or he might die; and that it should be put upon the books in some sort of shape. So he sat down and drew up a paper, a substantial copy of which I have here, and which was followed afterwards in similar cases. Perhaps I had just better read it.

The CHAIRMAN. It is suggested that you have not given the correct amount. You said $8,000.

The WITNESS (Mr. Young). I meant to say $883,330. He wrote substantial that paper which I hold in my hand. Shall I read it.

The CHAIRMAN. If you please.

The WITNESS (Reading).

“OFFICE OF THE PAN-ELECTRIC TELEPHONE COMPANY,
“Washington, D.C., July 5, 1884.

“This is to certify that L. P. Cooper is entitled to one hundred and eleven shares ($11,000 worth) of the capital stock of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, whenever it is the policy of the board of directors to issue the same, and to be charged to the account of J. Harris Rogers on the books of the company.”

Colonel Looney sat down at my table and wrote a paper something like that and asked me to sign it. I declined to do it at first, but he insisted upon it, and finally I did sign it and made an entry upon the books that he was entitled to that much of the stock when it was issued. I supposed, as a matter of course, that would be the end of it, and that this agreement we had entered into would be carried out; but very soon after that orders commenced to come in to me from Dr. Rogers, like this—

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Do I understand that you adopted that form shortly afterwards?—A. No, sir.

Q. That seems to be printed.—A. That was printed, but not by the company. That happened like this: Dr. Rogers had transferred to General Wright $10,000, or had given him an order to me like those I spoke of for $10,000 of this stock when it should be issued. General Wright came to my room and wanted me to divide it up into various certificates, and I told him I couldn't do it. I said, “You will go to selling and peddling this stock around town, and I won't do it.” He assured me he would not do so; he said he wanted to divide it between some of his children or among some of the members of his family. He brought me about a dozen printed certificates like that, and I filled out three or four or five of them for him, very much against my judgment. These were a few that were left—some half a dozen—and I used them; but nearly all the certificates that are down at my room (I will bring them up—perhaps they are here) were written by my clerk. When one of these papers would come to me from Dr. Rogers or Colonel Looney, I would hand it to a young man I had clerking for me and tell him to give the bearer of it a paper about like that.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Can't you give the name of the clerk?—A. Yes, sir; Eli Hirshfield. He is in the city. He wrote the most of them. He was my clerk at the time I was a member of Congress. I commenced getting these papers. They would be presented to me on the street, in the lobby of the House, and everywhere else. They would read something like this—differently worded—but all substantially the same:

Hon. CASEY YOUNG, Secretary, &c.:

Please deliver to L. P. Cooper a certificate for $11,600 of the Pan-Electric Telephone stock (say 116 shares) and charge to the account of

J. HARRIS ROGERS.

Here are a whole pile of them [indicating papers]. These papers commenced coming to me constantly.

Mr. RANNEY. I suppose we need not encumber the record with the papers.

The WITNESS (Mr. Young). No; I don't think it was important. As I say, these papers commenced coming to me constantly. It was in violation of our agreement and our understanding. I did not think it was a proper thing to do, but I did it to oblige Dr. Rogers. They kept coming and coming and coming, until it came to my ears that these papers were being peddled around town and being sold and transferred from one to another. I saw that that sort of business would necessarily ruin any company; that it was utterly inconsistent with any correct idea of business transactions, and I determined, so far as I was concerned, that I would withdraw from the company before I would permit that to be done any longer. I was in a fix where I couldn't resign, or I would have done it.

I spoke to a number of my associates and talked with Dr. Rogers and his son about the impropriety of conducting business in that sort of way; that no company could be carried on in that kind of way and have any credit and any standing. I insisted that we should keep the stock as it was, the property of the company, until it had some value and we had established the validity of our patents and their utility; but they took a different view of it. Finally, with the concurrence of most of my associates that I conferred with on the subject, I called a meeting of all the stockholders at the Ebbitt House. I forget the date of that meeting. It is in the minute-book. I think it was some time in February, 1884, that I called the meeting.

When they met there I stated to them the object of the meeting; that this stock had been peddled about town at all sorts of prices, and that I thought we ought to adopt a different mode of transacting our business, and they agreed with me. Dr. Rogers and his son were both there. Nobody dissented from that proposition that I ever heard of. Here are the minutes. They are too long to read. The committee can look at them. We agreed at that meeting, upon my suggestion, that all these outstanding papers I had been foolish enough to give should be called in, and that in lieu of them we should prepare another paper, which would be evidence to these gentlemen that they were entitled to so much interest in the company when the stock was issued, and should so show upon their face. I objected to these papers being peddled around, for the reason that they might impose on somebody who might think they had a greater value than they really had, and I didn't want any man to go into it without being thoroughly advised of all the facts. So I proposed that we should prepare a paper showing upon its face that it could not be transferred to anybody, and that when the validity of our patents was determined in any litigation for that purpose, they would be entitled to the amount of stock specified in the paper.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was any official action taken by the company to that effect?—A. Yes, sir; here it is.

Q. You have the minutes of the meeting before you?—A. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Had you not better give it in evidence?

The WITNESS (Mr. Young). Wait a moment, until I turn to it [taking up book of minutes.] Here is the meeting that I speak of:

"STOCKHOLDERS' MEETING.

"Pursuant to a call made by the president, the stockholders met at the Ebbitt House, in the city of Washington, at 7 o'clock p. m., January 26, 1885, whereupon, the roll being called, the following officers and stockholders were found to be present, namely:"

Shall I read them?

The CHAIRMAN, You may as well read them.

The WITNESS (reading): "Joseph E. Johnston, president; I. G. Harris, vice-president; Casey Young, secretary; J. H. Rogers, electrician; R. F. Looney, Robert Alexander, H. H. McNeil, P. P. Little, J. N. Denver, Marcus J. Wright, R. C. Winter-smith, Robert Klotz, C. G. Schneider, R. F. Crowell, William Helmick, J. W. Rogers, A. H. Garland, John C. Brown, Mrs. Pattie Collins, John D. C. Atkins, John Boyle, Mrs. Louisa Carlisle, W. G. Whitthorne, represented by proxy by Senator Harris."

None of the latter ones were there at all. Senator Harris represented them by proxy. Then there were a number of others represented by proxy by me.

(Continuing to read): "J. C. Neeley, Samuel Watson, L. P. Cooper, H. D. Money, Eli A. Marshfield, Mrs. L. C. Taylor, and Richard Contee."

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Was Senator Vest represented there?—A. No, sir; he was not represented by anybody and was not present.

"At the request of the president, the secretary, Casey Young, stated that the object of the meeting was to lay before the stockholders the condition and prospects of the company, and to suggest certain measures which he deemed important to secure the ultimate success of the same in its operations. He said a suit was already pending against the company in Philadelphia, and that others would no doubt be instituted"—

That was before this suit had been disposed of in Philadelphia—

"and that these suits would in the end involve a very large expense, and that it was necessary to raise by some means more money than was then in the treasury for the purpose of meeting these expenses. He therefore offered the following resolutions, setting out what he considered the proper method of raising the money:

"Resolved, That each stockholder in the company surrender 10 per cent. of the stock to which he may be entitled, which shall become stock in the hands of the board of directors with power to sell or otherwise dispose of so much of it, at such price and upon such terms as they may fix and as may be necessary to create a fund sufficient to meet the expense of any suit or suits that may be brought against the company to restrain it from selling, using, or operating its telephones and the successful prosecution of its business; but no more of such common stock shall be sold or otherwise disposed of than shall be absolutely necessary for the purpose above stated, and none of it shall be so sold or disposed of until after all the common stock now owned by the company, amounting to about $150,000 worth, shall have been used in the same way and for the same purpose; and should any of the common stock hereinbefore mentioned remain undisposed of at the end of the litigation, it shall be issued pro rata to the present shareholders; and should any money arising from the sale of the same remain in the treasury unexpended, it shall be paid to the shareholders as a dividend in proportion to the stock by them respectively held.

"Resolved, That in order that the provisions of the foregoing resolution may be carried into effect, each stockholder shall return to the secretary the evidence which he now holds of the amount of stock to which he is entitled, and the president and secretary shall then issue to him a certificate showing upon its face that there is now pending a suit touching the validity of the patents held by this company, and when that or any other suit instituted for the same purpose is decided in favor of the company, he shall be entitled to have issued to him the amount of stock specified in said certificate; but the certificates here provided for shall not be transferable by the holder without the indorsement of the president and secretary.

"Resolved, That the president and secretary shall issue certificates representing the common stock hereinbefore mentioned and provided for, for such amounts as the board of directors may order, which certificates shall show upon their face that the holder shall be entitled to have issued to him the amount of the paid up and unassessable capital stock of the company that is therein specified, which certificates shall be sold at such prices as the board of directors may fix, and shall be transferable by the holder."

That was a different character of certificate, as you will observe, for the purpose of providing for the sale of this reserved stock.

"These resolutions were unanimously adopted, whereupon the following agreement was drawn up and signed:

"We, the undersigned, stockholders in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, hereby agree to turn over to the board of directors of said company 10 per cent. of our entire stock for the purpose set forth in and in accordance with the resolutions adopted at a meeting of the stockholders of the company, held in accordance with a circular letter calling a meeting for certain purposes at the Ebbitt House, in the city of Washington, D. C., at 7 o'clock p. m., the 20th of January, 1885; and we hereby transfer to the said directors the 10 per cent. of stock so transferred for the purposes set forth in the said resolutions."

That was signed by all the persons present. It is not necessary to read the names again, I suppose. Senator Harris signed for Mr. Garland, Mr. Atkins, and others, and I signed for these friends of mine in Memphis.

"On motion of R. F. Looney, the president was authorized to appoint a committee to draft a form of certificate provided for in the preceding resolutions, whereupon the following gentlemen were appointed said committee: J. W. Rogers, Philip N. Dwyer, William Helmick, H. N. McNeal, and R. F. Crowell.

"On motion of Robert Klots, the president, secretary, and Marcus J. Wright were added to the committee.

"On motion, the board of directors were authorized and empowered to carry into effect the matters and things agreed upon at this meeting in such manner as may seem best for the interests of the company.

"On motion, the meeting adjourned sine die.

"J. E. JOHNSTON,
"President.

"CASEY YOUNG,
"Secretary."

That committee met and they agreed upon a certificate like this [exhibiting paper] to carry out the object of the meeting. Dr. Rogers met with us first, and finally he said to us, "You and General Wright and Mr. Helmick just attend to this business yourselves;" and we did. Here is the certificate that we prepared in accordance with those resolutions [handing book to committee]. In the book are the stubs of all the certificates that have been issued.

Mr. RANNEY. One of the certificates had better be put in the record.

The WITNESS. I will cut it out.

Mr. RANNEY. I would like to have the reporter insert, in that connection, from the stubs, the names, the amount of stock, and to whom issued.

The WITNESS. I can give that to you from the stock book. When that book was prepared I filled out the certificates, which you can see from the stubs have been taken from the book, and sent them to each man, and each man returned to me these little papers that my clerk had given him before, and that had my signature, showing that he was entitled to so much stock in that company whenever it was the policy of the board of directors to issue stock. They sent in those certificates to me and I gave in lieu thereof a paper taken out of that book. Most of them were receipted for in person, but some I sent by mail. You will notice on the stubs that those that were received in person are receipted for, while I got receipts by letter from those I sent through the mail. You will find a good many that I sent by mail. I have the receipts and letters acknowledging them, if I have not thrown them away.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Please, now, give a list of the parties to whom certificates were issued, the number of shares, &c.—A. I will do so. I have the stock book in my hands. Here [indicating book] is another book that I had probably better put in evidence. While all these transfers were going on, and Dr. Rogers was sending me all these orders every day, and giving me a world of annoyance, I would tell my clerk, who was keeping the books, to make an entry on the book here, and he improvised a style of bookkeeping himself to keep all these entries straight; to show to whom the stock went and from whom it was to be taken. For instance, if an order was given by Harry Rogers, it would be taken away from him on the book and credited to the other man. Here is the old stock book that shows those transfers.

After those certificates were sent around I intended to wind up and stop all that business of the stock being sold until a proper time, when the board of directors should agree upon it, at least so far as I could; but I had a little difficulty in stopping it; it was not stopped. I told my clerk, however, at that time to close up this old stock book and draw off the balance due to each man upon the new stock book, which I have here. Here is the old stock book. If you want it put in evidence you can have it, or I will submit it for examination. It contains the various entries. When I would receive an order from anybody to give stock to another man, I would enter the name and amount, and the name of the party to whom the stock was to go, so as to keep the account straight; but when the certificates were prepared and we agreed to stop all this business, I had a balance drawn from the old stock book and carried into the new stock book, and that shows the interest of every man in the company.

Here is the new stock book, and here is the list of stockholders. Every man who holds any interest in this company is named in this book—every man that I have any knowledge of, or whose name has been reported to me—to the number of fifty-one persons. I will go over this list of stockholders, if the committee will permit me, and explain how each man came by his stock, so far as I know, and I know pretty well about how it is (referring to book). J. D. C. Atkins, $450,000, the ten per cent. having been deducted from the original $500,000; Robert Alexander, four and a half shares, 450. I don't know where Alexander got his stock—not from the company; it must have been stock disposed of by other parties. W. T. Avery got his stock from General Marcus Wright, who got his originally from Dr. Rogers. He is a young man who lives in Memphis; a friend of ours. General Wright asked me to send it to him, which I did.

Q. How much did he have?—A. Five and two-fifths shares—$540. John C. Brown: That is Governor Brown, formerly of Tennessee, and to whom $100,000 was given, as has been testified to. He has 900 shares, or $90,000. John Boyle, of Saint Louis: That is General Boyle, who bought his stock from Colonel Looney or Doctor Rogers, or both. He has $9,000, or 90 shares. James Blake: I don't know about him at all. He got his stock from Doctor Rogers, and I sent that to him.

Q. How much?—A. Thirty-five and a tenth shares, or $3,510. W. W. Briggs is a gentleman who lives in New Orleans. I learned by correspondence with him—I sent the paper to him and got an answer—that he got his stock from Doctor Rogers also. I do not know what the consideration was or anything about it.

Q. How much stock has he?—A. Five and two-fifths shares, or $540 worth. C. Bankes Brookes: I just do know him. He lives in the city, I think. He has 52½ shares, which he got from Doctor Rogers or some of Doctor Rogers's assignees. John M. Bishop has 90 shares—$9,000. I do not know him at all. I think he got it the same way. Mrs. Carlisle and Mrs. Collins, ladies, and Alexander Elliot, jr., come next.

Q. Where do those ladies reside?—A. One of them, I think, resides in Memphis, and the other lives here. One of them formerly lived at Macon, in Mississippi, and removed to this city. She is a literary lady, and writes for periodicals, &c.—Mrs. Collins.

Q. Is Mrs. Carlisle in any way connected with the Speaker?—A. Oh, no; none in the world, that I know of; and not connected with anybody in this company, except by mere ties of friendship and social ties. Further along another witness will explain how those ladies happened to go in. Mr. Elliott has four and a half shares, $450. I do not know him at all; that is probably one of Dr. Rogers's sales. Here is A. N. Fletcher, a gentleman who did live in Philadelphia. His certificate has not been taken out of that book. It is in the book now. That was one of Dr. Rogers's transactions also.

Q. How many shares has he?—A. Forty-five shares, $4,500. Mr. Fletcher was formerly connected with the House of Representatives, in the Forty-fourth Congress. He lives in Philadelphia, I think, although I saw him here the other day. His certificate is in that book. He never got it. A. H. Garland, forty-five hundred shares, $450,000. A. S. Griggs, fifty-six and seven-tenths shares; I don't know him at all. That was stock that came from Dr. Rogers. E. J. Gray, four and a half shares; I don't know him. Isham G. Harris, 4,500 shares, $450,000. George A. Howard; he is a friend of ours from Tennessee, who bought $5,000 worth of stock, for which he paid $500, and has remaining forty-five shares with 10 per cent. off, $4,500. William Helmick, a magistrate of this city; he got his stock from Dr. Rogers; three hundred and sixty-four and a half shares. Eli A. Hirshfield, my clerk; I gave him $1,000 worth of the stock. He is a boy that I raised up in my office.

Q. Did he pay you anything for it?—A. Oh, no; he was my clerk, and I gave it to him; he is a boy I took in my office ten years ago and have kept ever since. Here are two little girls that were namesakes of mine, General Wright's little daughter, Casey Young Wright, and Casey Young Miller. I gave them $5,000 apiece; they did not pay anything for it. General Joseph E. Johnston, 4,500 shares, $450,000; D. T. Jones, 31½ shares; I don't know him; he is one of the parties Dr. Rogers sold stock to, or some of his assignees; I don't know about that; by reference to the stub his name and residence can be found; I think it is on the stub in each case as a general thing. Next is the name of Robert Klotz, the gentleman who resides at Mauch Chunk, in Pennsylvania; he was formerly a member of Congress. He got that stock from Dr. Rogers in the way Dr. Rogers stated in his testimony. He is connected with the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Company, and that stock was directed by Dr. Rogers to be turned over to him on the books, which I did. Robert F. Looney has remaining to his credit now $378,700, or 3,787 shares out of the 8,000 he had. That is still remaining to his credit on the stock books.

Q. So that Colonel Looney became a larger stockholder than any of the original parties except Dr. Rogers?—A. Yes; sir. He acquired his interest from Dr. Rogers, and I did not know, until the other day, exactly what the contract was. I did not know before that he was to sell stock until I heard Dr. Rogers testify to it. His share was intended to be one-sixth of the whole amount, that is, one-sixth of $5,000,000. H. D. Money, $9,000. This spring a year ago I was disabled and badly hurt. I was paralyzed in my arm and leg, and was not able to be out of my room for two months. Mr. Money is an old and very close friend of mine. I gave him this stock a long time after both of us were out of Congress. He attended me during my sickness, and looked after my correspondence and business, and when I went to make out the certificates, I just sent him a certificate for $10,000 worth, and that is how he happened to get it.

Q. That was after the expiration of Mr. Money's term in Congress?—A. Oh, yes. I will give you the date exactly. It was a long time after both of us were out of Congress. He is an old and very intimate friend of mine. He came to my room and staid with me, and assisted with my correspondence. He never asked me for it, and I said nothing to him about it, but just sent it to him. It was April 28, 1885.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the date of the stub.

The WITNESS. Yes; that is what the book shows. Thomas A. Mitchell, twelve and sixth-tenths shares; that is some more of Dr. Rogers' stock. Hector McNeil; that is another one of the same sort. He has two hundred and forty-one and one-fifth shares. J. C. Neely is a Memphis gentleman, having thirteen hundred and fifty shares. He is a friend of ours who resides at Memphis, that Colonel Looney sold to. I don't know what he got for it, or anything about it. It never went into the treasury, and I had nothing to do with it, except to send him a certificate when Colonel Looney requested me to do so. J. Harry Rogers has remaining to his credit on the books twelve hundred and forty-two and nine-tenths shares. Mrs. Cora E. Rogers, his mother, has nine hundred shares, or $90,000 worth. J. W. Rogers has twenty-seven hundred and ninety shares still remaining to his credit on the book. Mr. Charles Royce has seven and a fifth shares. He is a gentleman living in this city, and that stock came from Dr. Rogers. S. L. Snell has forty-five shares. I don't know where he got that, but I think from Dr. Rogers. W. C. Stout is a gentleman who lives in a little country town near where I live. Dr. Rogers transferred to him in payment of a debt a hundred and twenty-six shares, and I sent it to him. C. G. Schneider I have seen, but I don't know anything about that transaction. He got his stock from Dr. Rogers. I don't know what he gave for it. I think he lives in the city somewhere.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. There is a man of that name who is Comptroller of the Currency; is that the man?—A. I do not think it is that man. I think he is a groceryman of some sort in this city. I have seen him. Mrs. L. C. Taylor, four hundred and fifty shares. Her husband, Mr. Julius A. Taylor, is a leading member of the Memphis bar, an old friend of mine, a friend of many years' standing. When we were talking about this thing, before it assumed definite shape, he said he would like to go into it. I was at home and talked with him about it, and he proposed to me that he should take an interest in it. I said, "Well, if you wish to do so you may, and whatever I have to pay you can have the stock at." Time went on and Mr. Taylor got in bad health and went to South America, and I heard nothing from him for quite a while. When I next saw him he claimed that he was entitled to so much stock under this agreement; and without making any more talk about it I gave him the certificate for $50,000 worth, less the 10 per cent.; or, at least, I made it out in the name of his wife. He asked me to do so and I did so, and that is how that came about. Mr. Taylor is an old and intimate friend of mine at home. We have been associates for twenty-five years. He used to be in my office.

Q. He paid the full value of the stock, did he?—A. He was to pay it, but he did not pay it. I gave him the stock afterwards. Before I saw him again we had received considerable sums of money, and when we were making those dividends I sent him what he would be entitled to on that $50,000, deducting what he ought to have paid but had not paid up to that time. He would have paid for it. He was perfectly good for it, and if I had drawn on him at any time he would have paid it. He is here now.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. What you sent him represented the advance on what he was to have, did it?—A. No, sir; we had no definite agreement. I had a talk with him before the matter assumed definite shape, and he said, "I would like to go into that telephone company," and I said, "You can do it, and it shall not cost you any more in proportion than it does me." I saw no more of him for some time. He went off to South America, and when he came back, a year or two afterwards, I met him, and we got talking about it, and I just sent it to him. He asked me to make it out in his wife's name, which I did. They were very intimate friends of mine. The next one is W. H. Trainor, forty-five shares. I don't know anything about him; that is some of Dr. Rogers' stock, I suppose. Jacob Thompson, four hundred and fifty shares. That is the Jacob Thompson who was formerly Secretary of the Interior, and died recently. The stock was sold to him by Colonel Looney; I don't know anything about what he got for it. We had nothing to do with it. The next is George G. Vest. I know nothing personally about that, but it had been communicated to me how he got it, and the money came to my hands, and I have put the transaction on the book.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. He has made his own statement about that.—A. Yes, sir; and he has stated it correctly. I saw his statement, and so far as I know it is a correct statement. The money came to my hands, and I entered it on the books. Marcus J. Wright, $53\frac{1}{10}$ shares. He was formerly sheriff of my county and lived in my State. That was given to him by Dr. Rogers, I do not know for what consideration. R. C. Wintersmith: That was originally stock of Dr. Rogers, and he got it from him. He was formerly a resident of our city. I don't know anything about what he gave for it at all. The next is W. C. Whitthorne, who formerly represented one of the districts of our State. He has 9 shares, \$900 worth. The way he came by his stock was this: There were some business transactions between him and General Wright, by which General Wright had become indebted to him in certain amounts of money. I don't know how much, but in the payment of that debt he gave General Whitthorne an order on me, setting out in the order what it was for. I don't know whether or not the order is among the papers. It stated that he was indebted to General Whitthorne in some matter or other, I don't know what, and directed me to send this certificate to General Whitthorne when it was prepared, which I did, and that was the way he became possessed of the stock.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was he a member of Congress at that time?—A. Oh, no, sir; and had not been for a long time. He never paid anything for the stock; he got it in payment of an old debt. Samuel Watson, four hundred and fifty shares. He lives in Memphis and is a minister; an old friend of ours, who has lived there a long while. He got his stock from Colonel Looney, and I don't know what he gave for it. John F. Waggonman, six hundred and twelve shares. He lives here. I don't know anything about that stock; I suppose it came from Dr. Rogers or from somebody who got it from Dr. Rogers. Martin V. Webb, two and seven-tenths shares. I don't know who he is; I never saw him. He got that from Dr. Rogers or some of his assignees. L. P. Cooper is a lawyer who resides in my town, a highly respectable gentleman. Dr. Rogers owed him an old debt, somehow or other; I don't know just what the transaction was. I think his order is among the papers. He gave him an order for one hundred and seventeen and nine-tenths shares of stock in payment of the debt, and I sent the paper to him. Mr. R. F. Crowell; he is here in the city somewhere. I think he used to be connected in some way with the Post-Office Department, as auditor, or something of that kind. He got his stock from Dr. Rogers also.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. How much did he get?—A. Two hundred and twenty-five shares.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was he connected with the Post-Office Department at the time he got this stock?—A. I don't think he was.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What was his position?—A. I understood he was an auditor, or something of that sort.

Mr. MOFFATT. He was Sixth Auditor, or Deputy Sixth Auditor.

Q. Does he hold any office under this administration?—A. Oh, no; I think not; I don't think he was in office when he got that paper, either; I just heard from somebody that he had been connected with that Department.

Mr. MOFFATT. Judge Crowell was there until some time in May.

The WITNESS. Last May?

Mr. MOFFATT. Yes.

The WITNESS. Let me see when he did get it. [Referring to book.] He got it May 1.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. May 1, 1885?—A. Yes, sir; does that correspond with the stub?

Q. I do not find it here. You say you think he was not in the Department at that time?—A. I really do not know. I don't know that he ever was in the Department. I just mentioned that to identify the man. I saw him often about town. I saw him a few days ago. He is a very nice gentleman.

Q. Is he in the Department now?—A. Oh, I think not. I hardly think he was then, but really I do not know. I don't know that he ever was.

Mr. MOFFATT. It was just about that time that he was superseded; I don't recollect the exact date.

Mr. RANNEY. It made him so rich I suppose he thought he could afford to go out.

Q. Was he appointed by this administration?—A. Oh, no; not that I know of. They might have done it very properly. He is a very clever gentleman. Next comes

Mr. Philip N. Dwyer. He is an architect here, a young man. He has nine hundred shares. He got them from Dr. Rogers. Next comes Mr. Julius Lansburgh. I think he is a merchant in town here. He has twenty-seven shares. The next is Dr. J. A. Harlan, two hundred and sixty-five and a half shares. He lives here in the city. That completes the list. If there is anybody else that has any interest in the world in the company, I don't know it. It has never been reported to me, and I have never heard of it.

Q. You did not state from whom the last gentlemen you named received their stock.—
A. All of them from Dr. Rogers. I will show the committee the stock the company sold. The company never sold a dollar's worth of interest in this concern to anybody except Senator Vest, Mr. Howard, and those two ladies. That is all the stock or interest in the stock the company ever has sold to anybody.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Do you mean by that statement that all the other persons who received the stock of the company received it without making any compensation for it?—A. I do not know what they paid Dr. Rogers and Colonel Looney. I presume they did pay something for it. I do not know.

The CHAIRMAN. The statement of the witness is that the company itself disposed of stock only to these four persons.

The WITNESS. None of the proceeds of this stock ever came into the treasury of the company, except, as I have stated, and that is what I objected to. I did not propose to be an advertising medium for those gentlemen to sell their stock and get rid of it and leave us with the concern on our hands, to sell it to people who knew nothing about it. I do not know what they got for the stock. I know we did not get anything, or, at least, the company did not. That is the cash-book (indicating book), and if the committee desires to examine it I will put it in evidence. In the fore part of the book, as I told you in my testimony previously, is set out the amount of money that was received and the sources from which it came, and here is a statement of all the expenditures of the company.

Q. Perhaps you had better state it, so that we will get it into the record.—A. To go over all these expenditures would take two hours. There are about five hundred items.

Mr. MOFFAT. We should have the individual accounts of the various members. We would like that to show how much they received in dividends.

The WITNESS. I can go through that part of it directly.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. It was not kept separately?—A. No.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Is there not an account with each one of the stockholders to show how much he has contributed and how much he has received?—A. I believe there is. I am not an expert bookkeeper, and never was. This book was kept by my clerk from time to time, and it is not a model of bookkeeping.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Let me right there ask you a single question. Do you say these four persons are the only persons that received stock for which anything has been paid to the company?—A. Oh, yes; we never sold to anybody else.

Q. To nobody else?—A. No, sir; nobody at all. Nobody has any interest in it, either by gift or by sale.

Q. Did not the Pan-Electric Company transfer stock to the local company here?—
A. No, sir; not that I know of. There was no transfer of stock to the local company here. The local company here gave us stock.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. They were licensees, and you transferred the right to them?—A. We sold the right to use the telephones, but did not give them any stock in our company.

Q. You gave them a limited interest in the patent rights?—A. Yes, sir; in a certain territory.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. What did they give you in return?

The WITNESS. Which one? You see they gave different prices.

Mr. MILLARD. The company here in Washington.

The WITNESS. When they organized the company in the District of Columbia, under the first contract we made, Dr. Harlan was to take charge of it and attend to the manufacturing here, as we supposed that he knew more about electricity and was more of an electrical and mechanical expert than we were.

Mr. RANNEY. Suppose you leave that until it is reached in regular order. That is another branch of the inquiry.

Mr. MILLARD. Very well.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In regard to a matter about which you have testified, you stated that a certificate was issued to Mr. Klotz, of Pennsylvania?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it issued to him in his individual capacity, or as treasurer of the Mauch Chunk company?—A. He holds it as treasurer of the Rogers Telegraph and Telephone Company. There are a number of papers in my possession that relate to that matter, but they are simply legal papers about the transfer.

Q. I see by the stub that the certificate was issued to Mr. Klotz as treasurer.—A. That is the way it appears here, but possibly I did not state it that way. He holds it as treasurer of that company. There were some stipulations and agreements about it between him and Dr. Rogers; I don't know what they were. Mr. Millard asked me something about the individual accounts of members. I will turn to them. I wanted to refer to them, any way, and might have overlooked it.

Mr. MOFFATT. Perhaps it would be just as well for the colonel to indicate to the clerk these accounts, and let him copy them off and put them in the record.

The CHAIRMAN. The accounts are not long, are they?

The WITNESS (Mr. Young). Oh, no. I don't believe I have got the book here that has them in it. If I have, it is not indexed.

Mr. MOFFATT. I noticed them in some of those books the other day.

The WITNESS. Here is the book. I will turn to the account of one of these parties. They are all counterparts. All the accounts are the same. They expended the same amount of money, and received the same amount of money.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. They received, of course, according to the number of shares of stock they held—did they not?—A. I mean these original incorporators. They are the only ones that paid any money in. These accounts are kept with the original parties to the organization.

Q. State also what money was received.—A. That would not involve an account with each member, because money came from these associations we sold rights to. That is in the fore part of the book. I will call it off if you desire, but I will go through these accounts first. Here is the account of General Johnston. By the first assessment he paid $105. I am not sure I have that exactly right. That is the only entry I have made in these books since the inquiry has been commenced.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Was that money received, or paid out?—A. That was an assessment against General Johnston. I do not know that that is exactly correct. It may be a few dollars less or a few dollars more. That was paid over by General Johnston to Harry Rogers, and never passed through my hands, and therefore I never put it on the books until the other day, in order that I might get the whole facts before the committee. Then there was an assessment made November 26, 1883.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. An assessment upon what?—A. Upon General Johnston.

Q. Upon his stock?—A. Not upon his stock exactly, but to pay expenses. We had agreed, under the original contract, to experiment and test these instruments, or these various inventions.

Q. That was an assessment upon him as an individual?—A. You may call it upon his stock or upon him as an individual. It was assessed in proportion to his stock.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In proportion to his interest?—A. Yes, sir; that is about $105. I am not sure that is the exact amount. That was in October. That was October 24, 1883. Then on the 26th of November, 1883, General Johnston was assessed again, $65.60; then on March 6 he was assessed $116.37; on April 25 he was assessed $23. That is what General Johnston paid in; something over $400.

Mr. HALL. Suppose, without dwelling on all the items, you turn to Mr. Rogers's account. He had a large account, and that will give us a relative knowledge of the matter.

Mr. RANNEY. Give the aggregate of the sums paid and received, and that will do.

The WITNESS. It was a little over $400 that each one of the original incorporators paid in if my figures are correct. He paid in a little more because he held more.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. How much did he receive in dividends?—A. I will go on and state it. General Johnston's account is a counterpart of all the others, except Harry Rogers's. He received in dividends on June 4, 1884, $298.17. On June 6 he received $788.90. On July 25 he received $750. That is a counterpart of the account of all except Harry Rogers and Colonel Looney. As they had more stock, their accounts would be a little larger.

Q. Those who contributed the same sums received dividends in similar amounts equally?—A. Yes, sir; General Johnston, myself, Senator Harris, Mr. Atkins, and Mr. Garland. The accounts are exactly the same—the same amounts paid out and the same receipts.

Q. Mr. Garland received no more than the rest of them?—A. No, sir; just the same. We never could get him there. He would not go, or pay any attention. He was never at but two meetings. We could not make him attend. He ought not to have had anything; that is the truth about it. Now about the dividends: When the company was first organized they made me the secretary and treasurer without my consent and against my protest. I had no idea it was going to be more than a temporary affair, and never dreamed I was going to have so much trouble about it. When this money came into our hands, I was personally opposed to the distribution of it, and the only thing that reconciled me to it was that I wanted to get it out of my hands. I was the treasurer, and I did not want to be troubled with it. I preferred that they should have it instead of me. So far from Mr. Rogers wanting it for another purpose, I think he was just as anxious to get it as anybody else, as his letters will show. I think everybody else was entirely willing, except myself and General Johnston. Personally, we opposed it. Out of the whole sum received by us, about $24,000 (I have not added it up, and I couldn't give the exact sum), was distributed in that way, with the understanding on the part of these gentlemen when they received it that if it should become necessary in carrying on our operations, this money was to be refunded by them, and I was glad enough to get it out of my hands, because I didn't want to be troubled with it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do I understand you to say that $24,000 was the whole amount received?—A. Oh, no; I say that much of the amount received was distributed among them. It was not nearly so big a thing as the imaginations of some gentlemen have caused them to represent it to be. The whole amount received was $35,000.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. From all sources?—A. From all sources, as shown by these books.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. When you say from all sources, do you mean to include money received from sales of rights?—A. All the money that ever came into our hands.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Does it include the contributions by the members?—A. Everything. Here is the cash book, which shows all the receipts, and that is the aggregate as footed up here. If my figures are correct, and I have gone over them pretty carefully, and I think they are, that represents the full amount received, $35,002. Of that sum, about $24,000—I have not made a careful calculation, but have calculated hurriedly in my head—was divided among the different stockholders. The balance was expended as shown here in the items of expenditures. They are too long to read them all, for there are four or five hundred of them—expenditures in the prosecution of the enterprise. We paid to an electrician that was recommended to us—that was against my advice also, but they decided to do it—$1,000 for the preparation of a book that was to be used in the prosecution or defense of any suit we might have in respect to the telephone. He was quite an accomplished electrician and knew a good deal about the law of telephones. He was raised in the Patent Office. The gentlemen who made the agreement thought it would be valuable. I did not think so myself. He prepared the book and we paid him about $1,000 for that; and altogether the preparation of that book cost us a little over $2,000, as appears from the various items—publishing the book, &c. The balance was expended in preparations for trial, making models, &c., and the money that was not expended remains in the treasury.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Preparations for trial where?—A. Wherever it might occur.

Q. In no specific place?—A. Not at that time. We knew we were going to have a trial, and we wanted one somewhere, and we were preparing ourselves for it, wherever it might occur. We had a book prepared a little larger than that volume there [indicating book], called The Telephone Case. I don't happen to have a copy of it here. It embraced the grounds that were necessary to be gone over in a litigation affecting the validity of the Bell patent.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. How much money remains in the treasury?—A. I have not added it up; something like $3,000 or $2,500. I have not laid a finger on these books for some time.

Q. I gather from your testimony you received about $35,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And divided $24,000 or $25,000?—A. About that.

Q. And there remains in the treasury about $3,000?—A. Say about $2,500, perhaps.

Q. And the rest was used for the expenses of the company?—A. Yes, sir; under the orders of the directors. Well, perhaps all my expenses have not been passed upon by the company. I don't know but what they may catch me up on some of them. In some cases I have taken the responsibility of making expenditures I thought proper.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Were any expenditures made in the way of development of patents?—A. The expenditures were made in the publication of this work, in the preparation for trial whenever one should come, and for my traveling expenses also. I have been traveling about a good deal, and have charged my expenses to the company; nothing more. I have never received a dollar of salary from the company, nor a dollar for any professional service, but I did charge them with my traveling expenses, which appear on the books here. Then there were expenses for construction of models and various things that will appear.

Q. Models prepared for the purpose of the trial?—A. Yes; models of the Reis telephone, &c.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. It has been suggested by Mr. Harris Rogers that the first payment by the stockholders was repaid.—A. Oh, yes; that is all true; but I find I have made a mistake here of $100 in these assessments.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What do you mean by that; that the sums that were assessed upon them were subsequently repaid?—A. When they were paying these assessments only $298 of the money passed through my hands. The balance had been paid to Harris Rogers before I came on here. He had expended some money of his own with General Johnston in fixing up things here. I don't know exactly what they were doing, but it was some proper expenditure. He gave me the account afterwards, and I found the money had been expended. He drew, or General Johnston drew, on us for our pro-rata share of the money that had been expended, and as it did not go through my hands I have not entered it on the books.

Q. Are those items which were repaid embraced in the items which you gave—the money received by them?—A. The money that was assessed on them they paid.

Q. And it went in your book and you have given us the items. Then you have given us the items of money paid to them?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do those items embrace the repayment?—A. I see the point, and I want to explain it. All that passed through my hands went upon the books; but when I came to make this calculation about how much each man was entitled to I got another gentleman, who was better at figures than I am, to make the calculation, and I left out altogether $300 which had been sent to Harry Rogers, and only calculated the $298 which had passed through my hands. That $298 was paid back—

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Do you mean that the $300 was never entered on the books?—A. Never until the other day. I put it on for the purpose of this investigation, to show how much money had passed through my hands.

Q. Did that transaction occur before you became the secretary and treasurer?—A. No, sir; I was secretary and treasurer then; but I was at home and they were here. I was in Memphis. That is the way it was. When I came to estimate what each man would be entitled to, I only figured on this $298 which had come through my hands; and so the company really owes those gentlemen $300 yet, though it did not occur to me until I went to fix up this thing the other day.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. There is a charge to one of these parties that you spoke of, or a credit to him, of $400, which he contributed in dividends.

A. No; that was an assessment of $400.

Q. Those assessments, of course, were credited to him on his account?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then there was eighteen hundred and odd dollars of dividends?—A. Yes, sir; something over that.

Q. Does that eighteen hundred and odd dollars include any of this money that was paid back?—A. It embraces $298 of it, all that passed through my hands. All of the assessment that came through my hands was embraced in these figures. This $100 that went to Mr. Rogers I did not include, because it had not come through my hands, and escaped my attention. I only embraced the $298 of the assessment that passed through my hands. That which went through his hands I did not think of at the time, and did not take it into account until the other day. Those were the money transactions we had, and these are the reasons that governed us in doing as we did. There has been a great deal of comment about our dividing this money, just as if there was some crime involved in it. I did not want to be charged with the responsibility of keeping the money myself. I was the treasurer, with no bond or anything of that kind, and it was a good deal of annoyance and trouble to me; and these gentlemen wanted the money, and it was given to them with the express understanding that if it was required for any purpose connected with the transaction of the business of the company it was to be refunded by them, and that is all there is about it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Have you any record to that effect?—A. No; there was no record.

Q. No articles of agreement?—A. No; it was just the understanding at the time when we received the money. I did not want to keep it. It was a great annoyance to me.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. You and General Johnston opposed the distribution of this money?—A. Personally we were opposed to it. I did not say very much about it anyhow.

Q. It was against your judgment?—A. I thought possibly it would be better to leave it alone. In addition to that we have owing to us about $12,000 that I have not tried to collect. I have not needed it and I have not tried to collect it. I got a letter the other day from one of the gentlemen who owes a part of it, saying that he was ready to pay it whenever we would draw on him for it; but we have not needed it, and I do not care to get any more in my hands or to do anything that will involve making calculations for dividends. I am tired of it.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. The parties to whom you refer are not Congressmen, I suppose?—A. Oh, no; I am the only Congressman who ever had anything to do with it one way or the other. Something was said the other day about my drumming up Congressmen to go in with us. I want to explain about that.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Right there, before I forget it: Was Mr. Atkins a member of Congress at the time he became interested in this matter?—A. He was not a member of Congress at the time this contract was drawn up. I don't know how long previous to that he had talked about it. I never spoke to him about it until after he was out of Congress. I talked to Dr. Rogers about it myself before the adjournment of Congress. I was a Congressman-elect then—not in the House; but I talked to him about it often before I came on here. General Atkins went out on the 4th of March, 1883, and this contract was entered into on the 13th of March.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. His successor had been elected in November, 1882?—A. Oh, yes; Mr. Taylor was already elected, and is in Congress still. Now, about selling stock to Congressmen: They were not the sort of people I wanted to sell stock to. That grew out of a conversation something like this: Before we had made any sales, and before we had any money in the treasury excepting what we put in ourselves (we contributed a thousand or so—at least we made a note which Senator Harris and I indorsed, and got the money on it, and put it in the treasury)—we were talking about the ways and means by which we would put this thing in operation, and, as I said yesterday, I was always in favor of doing it with our own money, and proposed that we contribute $5,000 apiece and put it up. Nobody objected to it particularly, but it was not done, and before we really had time to do it these gentlemen commenced to negotiate with us to buy these rights.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What gentlemen?—A. The gentlemen in Saint Louis and Memphis and other places that we finally sold rights to—General Boyle in Saint Louis, for one.

Q. You said "these gentlemen," and I wanted to know to whom you referred.—A. I spoke of the ones we had sold these rights to. We were talking about selling this common stock that belonged to the company, and I said that a good many people had applied to me and wanted to buy it; I had talked with I don't know how many members of Congress, and never offered to sell a dollar's worth to one of them in my life, and I don't know as one of them ever offered to buy a cent's worth of it.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Did you offer to give it to them?—A. No, no. I thought more of it than Dr. Rogers did. I did not want to "scatter it around so fluently," as my friend Cox would say.

I did not want it scattered around the way they wanted it scattered. I suppose fifty members of Congress spoke to me about it, as I said to Harry Rogers; I don't know how many. They were not exactly the sort of people I wanted to sell to. I have had enough of that sort of men. I don't think Congressmen are worth much in a business enterprise of this kind. I wanted to put it upon a business basis; and I never offered to sell a dollar's worth to a member of Congress and no member of Congress ever offered to buy a dollar's worth from me. I talked with them about the telephone very frequently.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. You never offered to give them any?—A. Oh, no; to nobody except my friend Money; and after a while I thought too much of it, considering the trouble it had given me and the money it had cost me, to give it away.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You did say, as has been testified to, that a great many members of Congress had spoken to you about buying it?—A. I think it is likely I did; I don't remember—no, not that any member of Congress wanted to buy it; I never said one of them wanted to buy it.

Q. Wanted to get in?—A. Oh, no; I couldn't say that they wanted to get in; my colleagues talked to me generally about it.

Q. What was the talk about at the time Rogers mentions?—A. I don't remember exactly what the talk was. I don't think it was at a meeting of the board that this conversation between Rogers and myself took place. I expect likely it was at some time when we met on the street. All I remember about it is that I said, perhaps, a number of people had come to me and wanted to buy stock, and we talked about it in some way, and wanted to know what we should charge. I heard Harry Rogers say that I thought about $10, and he thought about $20. My recollection is the reverse; that I wanted $20, and he suggested $10. There was never anything definite done about it. It was a mere informal conversation between ourselves, either at a meeting or at some accidental dropping in at our room, or in some such way as that. Mr. Dunn, of Arkansas, talked to me about the matter once. He said he was about to trade with Dr. Rogers or Colonel Looney—I don't know which—a house at Forest City for some of this stock, and asked me what I thought of it. I said to him, "Keep your house and let the stock alone." I have advised at least five hundred men not to buy it until its value was established.

Q. You cannot tell what members of Congress spoke to you about it?—A. I cannot remember. If the committee deems it important that I should tell the men I have had conversations with casually I will try and think of them. I talked with Mr. Dunn, and I think with my colleague, Mr. Taylor, and Mr. MacMillin, and I don't know how many—I expect fifty, at least. I talked with Mr. Hopkins.

Q. Have you mentioned all you talked with?—A. Oh, no; I couldn't mention all of them.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. They were not offering to buy and you were not offering to sell?—A. Oh, no; there was never any proposition to buy or sell. They were men of no account to us. We wanted no legislation, and never dreamed that Congress would have anything to do with our telephone; and I know enough of politicians to know as a general thing they are worth very little for anything else than politics.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. What was the general nature of the conversations you had with these members?—A. I have just stated that it was in reference to the telephone generally, what I thought on the subject, and what we were going to make out of it, and if it was a good invention; conversation like that. I talked to a great number of them. The way it happened was this: One of our telephones was put up in my committee room. I belonged to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and Dr. Harlan, who had the contract for the District of Columbia, put up the telephone in the committee room and connected it with some other point, and gentlemen would come in and ask me about it, and I talked to them about it—members of the committee and others. I suppose I talked with fifty members of Congress; I don't know how many.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. They seemed to know all about it, did they, before they talked with you, or did you tell them about it?—A. I have never found a fellow yet up to the present day that knew all about it. They seemed to know nothing about it at all.

Q. How did they happen to inquire about it?—A. If some of them are called before the committee I expect they will tell you. I cannot call to mind how the conversation came up. I have given you the names of half a dozen gentlemen, and if it is deemed material I will talk with them and try to ascertain how the conversation did come up, or you can summon them here and make the inquiry of them. I have mentioned Mr. Dunn, Mr. MacMillin, Mr. Taylor, and Mr. Hopkins, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Hopkins was a member of my committee, and I remember speaking to him about the telephone there, and also Mr. Stockslager, of Indiana, the chairman of the committee. If you will summon those gentlemen perhaps they can enlighten you.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. From the conversations you had did you gather that they wanted to get an interest in the company, or were they merely speaking of the character and merits of the invention?—A. Oh, they were merely talking about the instrument as I used to hear them talk about the Bell instrument when it was first put up here. I was here then, and talked about that. I expect I could have sold stock to some of them if I had tried. I could have sold to a great many people, but I declined to do so. In order to satisfy the committee perfectly of what our purpose was, I will state that I have at my room probably five hundred letters from people who wanted to buy either the right to use this telephone or wanted to buy the stock or the telephone itself, and to all of them I have written uniformly—I don't think there is an exception—advising them not to do it; that it was in litigation, and there would be a lawsuit, and when the lawsuit was over we would be ready to negotiate with them. I will give the committee, if desired, a list of my correspondents, and they can summon them all. There are three stenographers that wrote my letters. I think they have got their note-books, and if the committee want them they can have them. I can show the letters I received, and some of them will show the nature of my reply. I have all the time advised people not to invest their money in it until they were satisfied.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I understand the inquiry is directed more particularly to Congressmen.—A. That is all that Congressmen ever had to do with it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. How did they learn anything about the Pan-Electric Telephone?—A. I am unable to tell you that.

Q. Did they get it from you?—A. They possibly might; I don't think I ever did mention it to a man in my life, unless it was called out by some other circumstance or incident. Dr. Rogers kept the papers full of it all the time, as he said, with his advertisements and his circulars; we never published a circular.

Q. What I want to know is whether these Congressmen learned about your interest in it, and that you were engaged in the enterprise, from you or otherwise.—A. It would be impossible for me to call to mind now what brought about these various conversations, for I attached too little importance to them. It ought to be sufficient that the fact is that although the books show every man interested in this enterprise, no member of Congress has any interest in it whatever.

Q. Did you explain to them or did you conceal from them what you knew about it?—A. I told them all I knew. I didn't know much to tell. I never withheld anything from anybody in connection with it. Any information I have had I have given, perhaps a little too freely. I have never withheld any fact in my possession connected with the telephone. Very often men with whom I would converse would understand the subject better than I did. I would not perhaps understand it all myself. It is a subject that requires long study.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Was there any secret about the fact that there was such an enterprise?—A. Not at all; everybody knew it, and Senator Garland was known all over the country as its counsel. There was no secret about its operations or its meetings or anything else about it. Nobody ever dreamed that we were not engaged in a perfectly proper and legitimate enterprise, and we have not dreamed of it yet. I have no apology to offer and no excuse to make on the subject. I have shown here the minute book. If the committee desires I will put it in proof, also the contract book, the old stock book, the new stock book and the cash book. Those are all the books we have. I have this to ask of the committee: That I would like to have an opportunity to explain any part of these books that is to be put in the printed testimony, if there is anything that appears by the committee to need explanation. I would like also to look at the letters that I wrote that have been published, and be given an opportunity to explain them. I see some of them that are liable to be misconstrued, and I would like to explain to the committee the circumstances under which each one of these letters was written, and the motives which prompted me to write them. I have got copies of them in the newspapers, but I do not know which of them have been put in evidence. I have got all that were published, but I do not know what has been the determination of the committee as to their relevancy.

Mr. HALL. I suggest that you go on and make your narration, and when you come to a date or an event upon which any of those letters bears, that you make any explanation that may be necessary.

The WITNESS. A good deal has been said about legislation, I don't know whether in the letters published, but certainly in the printed publications, about our trying to secure legislation in furtherance of the interests of this company. I want to show that legislation. I happen to have it here. There never was a bill introduced by me or by any of my associates that I know of, or advocated, that related in the remotest degree to this enterprise. If any of them ever had such a thought, I never heard of it. If any such bill was ever introduced or ever advocated by them, I never heard of it; and certainly I never did myself. I have seen it published that we had introduced a bill authorizing the Attorney-General to annul a patent.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Let me ask you a question just there, as affecting Mr. Money. It seems that he holds $10,000 of this stock. If I recollect aright, he received it last May?—A. Last June, May, or April. I think the date is on the stub.

Q. Some time during 1885?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was he at that time a member of Congress?—A. Oh, no.

Q. It is stated here that he was the chairman of the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.—A. That was long before he got this stock, and I wanted to say a word about that.

Q. To your knowledge had he any interest in this company at the time he was a member of Congress?—A. None whatever. I talked with him about it fifty times, I suppose, and he never intimated to me that he wanted any interest.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Was the interest which he acquired obtained from the company?—A. No, sir; I gave it to him myself. He staid with me during my illness. He is a very close and intimate friend of mine.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Did not Dr. Rogers testify in regard to selling some stock to Mr. Money?—A. That was different stock.

The CHAIRMAN. That was some stock in the Pennsylvania Company.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I understand this stock was not given for any money consideration existing or coming into existence when he was in Congress?—A. Oh, no; I gave it to him myself, individually; the company had nothing to do with it. I don't suppose any of the company knew it until I mentioned it to them. I never mentioned the subject to him until I sent it to him. He staid with me, as I said, during my illness, and attended to my correspondence and looked after my business for me. I got very badly hurt in front of the Capitol here, and my arm and leg were paralyzed. I was not able to get about at all, and have not got over it yet. Now, about the legislation we were engaged in. I have seen it continuously published that we had a bill introduced for our benefit to enable the Attorney-General to annul patents. Here is the bill [exhibiting bill]. It was introduced in the Forty-sixth Congress, long before this company had any existence. I never heard of the bill until it was brought up on its passage in the House and read at the Clerk's desk.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you know the date of its introduction?—A. The date is on the bill itself, June 9, 1880.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Is that the only bill you know of, of that character?—A. The only one I ever heard of, and this bill has been offered in every Congress since; first in the Forty-sixth, then in the Forty-seventh, and then in the Forty-eighth; it is identically the same bill offered by Mr. Vance.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Who introduced it originally?—A. This bill was offered by Mr. Vance; and I think a bill similar to it, perhaps identical with this, was offered in the same Congress by Mr. Herbert, of Alabama.

Q. Is the bill you hold in your hand the original bill of 1880?—A. Yes, sir; it appears to be.

Q. Offered by Mr. Vance in the Senate or in the House?—A. Mr. Vance of the House. I don't know whether he originally offered it or not, but it was reported from the committee by him, and I think it was his bill. He was the chairman of the Committee on Patents, and I think he offered it, and also reported it from the committee.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. He was the chairman of that committee also in the Forty-sixth Congress?—A. I think in the Forty-fifth, Forty-sixth, and Forty-seventh Congresses. I don't remember who was the chairman in the Forty-fourth Congress, but I know he was in a number of Congresses. I was here at that time, and I never heard of the bill in my life until it was read at the Clerk's desk; and it is a singular fact that I am the only man in the House of Representatives, that I know of, that opposed it.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. At what date did you oppose it?—A. I opposed it when it came up on its passage. I don't remember the date now.

Q. What Congress was it?—A. It was in the last Congress. I was not in the Forty-seventh Congress. It came up on its passage at the last session of the Forty-eighth Congress. I heard it read at the Clerk's desk, and it struck me that it might be a dangerous bill, that it might be construed into an exclusive remedy; and I see lately that very eminent lawyers have taken the same view I took hurriedly when hearing it read.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is the Mr. Vance who introduced this bill the gentleman who is now Assistant Commissioner of Patents?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Is it your impression that this bill passed in the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress?—A. I know it passed the House. I thought it became a law.

Mr. MOFFATT. I think you will find it was passed January 24, in the first session. The WITNESS. No; I think not.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you say you made a speech in opposition to it?—A. Oh, no; I spoke to Mr. Vance, the man who offered the bill.

Mr. MOFFATT. It was passed the 24th of January, 1884.

The WITNESS. It may be; but my impression was all the time it was the last session, though I have not examined the record to see. I know I never heard of it before.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What is the date of its passage?—A. I think it was on the 24th of January, 1884; the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. I think you must be mistaken about that, though I have not looked.

Mr. MOFFATT. It was reported from the committee, I know, the 11th of January.

The WITNESS. It may be; I do not remember; I have forgotten a good many things that occurred there. I thought it was in the second session. But I had the impression that it was a law, and I did not know any better until a period that I will call the attention of the committee to, and introduce another witness to prove it, so that you need not take my own word for it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I only want to understand you. You say you were the only man who opposed it. Did you oppose it on the floor of the House?—A. No, sir; I had no opportunity to oppose it on the floor of the House. There was no vote taken. A witness will come before you after a while and show you how I opposed it. I went to Mr. Vance, who had the bill in charge, and I said to him: "It looks to me like a dangerous bill; you had better examine it carefully before you pass it," and he said: "Oh, no; that is all right."

Q. What Congress was that?—A. It was in the Forty-eighth Congress, the last Congress I was a member of.

Q. Did you vote or speak against it?—A. No, sir; I did not have a chance to speak against it. It was a rising vote, and there is no record of it. I thought I voted against it; I was under the impression I had voted on it, but it seems I did not. I thought another gentleman would remember about it, but he tells me he has forgotten it. I met Mr. Vance the other day, and he laughingly said to me, "It is singular that you would have a bill introduced there when you were the only man in the House who opposed it."

Q. Did you confer with Mr. Garland in the Senate about it, after it had passed the House, or write him a letter about it?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection of writing him a letter, or of talking to him about it. But I did think from the reading of it that it was a dangerous bill.

Q. Why, if it authorized the Attorney-General to bring a suit in the name of the United States, did you think it was dangerous?—A. If the committee will pardon me, and will not say it is argument, I will give you the legal reasons I had for opposing this bill—and two of the most eminent lawyers in the United States have since taken the same ground. It occurred to me, from hearing it read at the Clerk's desk, being familiar with the patent law, that it might be construed into an exclusive remedy by excluding all other remedies, and if the Attorney-General should see proper to bring suit under this bill (and there seemed to be no compulsion about it) it would deprive anybody else of the right.

Q. You mean it would authorize the Attorney-General to vacate it and nobody else?—A. Yes, sir; that was my idea. It seemed to me that it might be construed to be an exclusive remedy. But it was a very hurried thing with me, and I do not think I thought about it afterwards until I went to Pittsburgh.

Q. Won't you try and recollect whether you went to the Senate to see about it afterwards and saw Mr. Garland or wrote him a letter?—A. No, sir; I am sure I never wrote a letter about it. I should have recollected if I had. I did not think of that bill any more until July, 1885, supposing all the time it had become a law. At Pittsburgh, as I stated to the committee the other day, I remarked to a gentleman there that such a law had passed at that session of Congress. He asked me, as I stated, why I had not applied to Mr. Garland to bring the suit. The reason I gave was that it was a delicate matter to engage Mr. Garland in, and I had still another reason, which I explained frequently, and which any lawyer will understand. I did not think if that was the law it was exactly what we wanted brought. I knew the ground on which the Bell patent could be vacated, if at all, at the instance of the Government, and the effect of such a decree would be to open the telephone to the world and let everybody come in, and I knew that would not do me any good.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Explain that a little more particularly, if you please?—A. This bill provides now—

Q. I do not mean in that direction. But in the first place you were representing a telephonic patent yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were anxious to preserve the monopoly that would result from the ownership of the patent?—A. Yes, sir; to the extent to which a patent confers a monopoly.

Q. And your idea was that if application was made in the name of the Attorney-General, for the Government, that it would affect yours as well as the Bell patent?—A. Yes, sir; that it would wipe us all out. I want to explain about the Government suit, what kind of a suit I wanted. To use a popular phrase, we should have got "hoisted on our own petard," and got one we did not want. Any lawyer will see that. When I talked to Mr. Van Benthuyzen about it, and he was wishing to bring that suit, I said to him "I do not think so. That is not the kind of a suit we want," under what I supposed was the law. I supposed that had become a law. He insisted that he was going to apply to the Attorney-General. I left Pittsburgh and went home, and he went to Waukesha Springs and then to New York. As I say, I went home, and I heard from some source that he had applied to the Attorney-General to bring that suit. There has been a good deal of misapprehension about when our bill was filed. In the meantime we had filed a bill at Memphis on the 10th of July. That was filed when I was at Pittsburgh, a bill prepared by Mr. Gantt. I went home and saw that bill had been filed, and saw it was necessary that we should have certain patents for which we had an application pending, especially one for a receiver, and certain telephonic models which we had here, in order to make them exhibits to that bill. It is set out there in the bill itself. I came on here for that purpose, among other things, and to meet Mr. Van Benthuyzen, who in the meantime had written to me that he was going to press this Government suit, for he said if it was the law he intended to have it done whether Mr. Garland was Attorney-General or not.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Have you that letter?—A. No, sir; I have looked for it, but I cannot find it. But that is the substance of it. I have written to him personally to see if he can find it. All the letters and books of the company and the files I kept them in were here in Washington and I was at home. I had some correspondence, which will be shown by letters we have got, about 'consolidating the two interests. However, while in Pittsburgh he told me that he had brought a suit against the Bell Company in New Orleans for infringing one of his patents, he claiming that he owned the patent which covers the principle used in the Bell receiver, that he owns the McDye receiver, and that is the one used by the Bell Company. We had also brought a suit in Memphis against the Bell Company, and upon comparing notes we concluded to join forces in fighting these two suits—not in fighting the Government suit, as was published in the newspapers, and we made no such contract as that. We entered into a written contract by which we agreed—

Q. We want that written contract.—A. I will state it to the committee, and will produce it if I can find it.

Q. I would rather you would not state it until we have it.—A. I do not know whether you can get it. I have a duplicate of it, but the contract is in the possession of Mr. Van Benthuyzen. I have telegraphed him to send it to me, and I have his telegram that he has sent it.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. Has he already sent it?—A. Yes, sir; he has mailed it. It is on the way here.

Mr. HALL. I do not see any objection to the witness stating in a general way the object of the contract.

Mr. RANNEY. I think the contract would be the best evidence.

Mr. EDEN. He can state the fact of the making of the contract. I understand him to say he has sent for it and it will be here.

The WITNESS. I think it will be here to night.

Mr. HALL. My only object is to make progress.

Mr. HANBACK. But we want to make it as regularly as we can.

Mr. HALL. If he can state that such a contract was made and the object he had in making it, then if we have the contract itself afterwards, I see no objection to that.

The WITNESS. It has been stated that we made the contract in reference to a Government suit, and I want to state that we did not. I want to correct that false statement which has been made in the newspapers.

Mr. RANNEY. We cannot undertake to contradict outside newspaper statements.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. I understand you to say that you made a contract, you representing the Pan-Electric Company, and this Mr. Van Benthuyzen representing the company called the National Improved Company. You did make a contract?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did that contract relate to? What was the subject of it?—A. It related to a suit pending in New Orleans of the National Improved Telephone Company against the Bell Company, and to a suit pending in the city of Memphis, about to be instituted in the city of Memphis—

Mr. RANNEY. That is going into the papers.

Q. I will ask you if at that time you or this gentleman made or entered into any contract relating to a suit to be brought by the Attorney-General on behalf of any company?—A. Oh, no, sir; we made no contract about it.

Q. I do not ask you for the contents of any paper.—A. Well, I say I did not make any. We did make a verbal agreement though, but there was no contract about it. I do not know whether you would call it a contract or not.

Mr. HALL. I am not asking anything about the contract. You can proceed in your narration.

By Mr. MOFFATT. Do you recollect the date of that contract?—A. I think, since I have been sitting here, that instead of making it at Pittsburgh I made it at Washington some two weeks later. We made an agreement at Pittsburgh, but I do not think it was reduced to writing until two weeks later in Washington. That is my recollection now.

Q. About what time would that be?—A. About the 1st or 2d of August. That just occurred to me at this moment. I think now that it was made in Washington. My recollection is not very distinct on that point.

Mr. HALL. Now proceed. What transpired afterwards?

The WITNESS. I came on to Washington City to see him, not to have a suit brought, but to keep a suit from being brought in that way. My idea about the suit was, and the one I wanted—

Mr. MILLARD. Please state that again.

The WITNESS. I came to Washington City, not to get him to bring that suit as he proposed to bring it—

Mr. MILLARD. You say you were opposed to the bringing of a Government suit?

The WITNESS. No, I do not; I say I was opposed to the bringing of the suit that he wanted to bring, and for these reasons, which I will give to the committee: That suit would have destroyed us as well as the Bell Company, and I did not want to do that. But I did want and advised him that if the suit was brought by the Government it should be brought by the Government at our relation, so that we could control the suit, and it would not undermine us together with the Bell Company.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have stated that you made no agreement with Mr. Van Benthuyzen in regard to the bringing of this Government suit?—A. Not at the time this contract was entered into. Subsequently, I suppose, it might be called an agreement.

Q. Was it in writing?—A. No, sir; we never had any writing.

Q. State it when you come to it.—A. When I got here he was here with his attorney at the Ebbitt House

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. Who was his attorney?—A. Mr. Von Briesen, of New York, was one attorney; Mr. Beckwith, of New Orleans, was another, and I am not sure whether Mr. Bakewell, of Pittsburgh, was here or not; possibly he was; I am not sure about that. I stated the other day that I got here on the 1st of August; my memorandum-book says so; but I have looked at the register of the Ebbitt House and see that I got here on the 31st of July. So I made the mistake of one day. These gentlemen were here, and we discussed that question, and I insisted to Mr. Van Benthuyzen that he was making a mistake. I said to him, "If you bring that sort of a suit, and it is successful, you will open up the whole question of telephony to everybody, and everybody can come in and put up and use a telephone. But," I said, "if you have a Government suit at all you should have one at our relation, so that we can control it." And that was the reason, or one of the reasons, that we were forming this consolidation, so that we alone could fight this suit, and leave the balance of the companies out in the cold, so to speak, and not destroy ourselves, as well as the Bell Company. That was one of the reasons, and this record shows it, why that letter was withdrawn from the Interior Department at that time. That was done on my advice.

Another thing was the other remedy we talked about pursuing. I insisted that if we got a suit at all it should be brought at our relation in the name of the Government—the only way we could bring it. I think that would have been a proper suit, and I believe the authorities sustain it, although it is a legal question as to whether they do or not. At that time I thought that was proper, when we reached this agreement about July, and did not withdraw it then because I thought that bill had become a law. He did not know it, and I did not know it either.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. You thought it was the law?—A. Yes, sir; and so did he; and he did not know any better until I told him. The indorsement of that letter may lead to the conclusion that he knew it on the 31st of July, when it was indorsed on that letter to the Commissioner of Patents, that he wished to withdraw it. But he wished to withdraw it for the reasons I have given you. He writes from New Orleans on the 23d of October, after learning that the bill had failed to become a law in the Senate, withdrawing it—

Mr. RANNEY. You are justifying what another man did, and saying what another man's motives were.

The WITNESS. Well I helped to do it, and I know about it.

Mr. RANNEY. State all the facts, and let him state what his motives were.

The WITNESS. I am stating what my motive was. I was an adviser in that matter.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Have you that letter that he wrote you then?—A. I am talking about a letter that he wrote to the Commissioner of Patents which is in this record here [indicating] of the inquiry before the Commissioner of Patents. He did not write to me. About the first or second day of August, I think, thinking this bill had been passed and become a law, having persuaded Mr. Van Benthuyzen that he had better withdraw that, I came up to the House of Representatives to get the bill and see exactly what it was. It had been insisted upon down there that I was mistaken; that my view of the law was not correct, and I came up to the House to get that bill and went to Mr. Harry Smith, the file clerk.

Mr. HALL. Were you still laboring under the impression that it had become a law?

The WITNESS. Oh, yes, sir. I went to the file clerk of the House and asked him to give me the bill, one that had become a law, in regard to the filing of a suit to annul a patent, and he looked about and said he could not find it. I was in a hurry at the time, and I said to him, "I will be back here this evening, and I wish you would hunt it up for me." I came back later in the evening, and he said to me that that bill had not become a law. I insisted that it had. He said it had passed the House, and he had traced it to the Senate, but he could not find it there, and that it had not become a law. That was the first time I knew that the bill had not become a law. Then I told the gentlemen at the hotel what I had ascertained, and said that it was not necessary for them to give themselves any more trouble about that bill for there was no such thing there.

But before I ascertained that fact, I think that was probably about the 30th of July, these gentlemen there were at the Ebbitt House, and they asked me to introduce them to the Attorney-General. I declined to do so. Mr. Van Benthuyzen insisted that he was going to have that suit brought. I said, "Mr. Garland will not bring it." "Well," he said, "I am going to make him bring it; he has got to do it; that is the law, and this suit has got to be brought, and I am not going to leave this city until it is done; if Mr. Garland will not do it I will go to the President, for I am going to have it done." They started to go out, and it occurred to me that perhaps they might in some way mix up our company with their proposed suit, before Mr. Garland, and I said to them, "Gentlemen, I will go over with you." I went there and introduced them to Mr. Garland; they were all strangers to him. Mr. Von Briesen had an affidavit in his hand, which is published in that book there [indicating], in reference to the Gray patent. He stated what they had come for, and Mr. Garland said, "Gentlemen, I am interested in a telephone company; I am the counsel for it, and I cannot talk to you on that subject."

Q. State as briefly as you can just what he said.—A. Well, that is exactly what he stated. Mr. Von Briesen had in his hand an affidavit, and he said, "Mr. Attorney-General, I have come over here as attorney for Mr. Van Benthuyzen to present you this affidavit, and ask you to institute a suit against the Bell Telephone Company." That was the substance of it, and I believe his exact language.

Q. To institute a suit on behalf of the Government?—A. Yes, sir; in the name of the Government. Mr. Garland said, "Gentlemen, I cannot talk to you on that subject. I have been the attorney of a telephone company and am interested in it now, and I cannot talk to you." Mr. Von Briesen insisted again upon reading his affidavit, and Mr. Garland said, "I cannot hear it; I do not want you to read it to me; I can have nothing to do with it." Mr. Van Benthuyzen got up excitedly and said, "I have a right to have this suit brought. If the law requires you to bring this suit, I want it brought, and am going to see that it is brought." He spoke with some little warmth. Mr. Garland waved his hand and said, "Gentlemen, I cannot talk with you on that subject," and he retired. That interview lasted about five minutes.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Can you fix the date?—A. That was somewhere between the 30th of July and the 2d or 3d of August, 1885. I think it most likely it was on the 31st of July, or somewhere along there.

Q. That is the day you arrived here?—A. No, sir; I arrived on the 30th of July, as I see the register shows. You gentlemen have examined it, no doubt, and I have looked at it.

Q. Was it before or after the time when you came up to the House to get the bill?—A. I think it was before I came up to the House.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Was it before you learned from Mr. Smith, the file-clerk, that this bill had not passed?—A. I think it was. I came up, perhaps, the next day. These gentlemen went off with the impression that they were going to have their suit brought under this bill, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen swore that he would have it brought; that he would go to the White House about it, if necessary. He said he was not going to have his rights imperiled by the fact of Mr. Garland's interest in a telephone or anything else. He was a pretty strong-willed fellow, and said he was going to have it brought, even if he had to go to the White House about it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Had you at any time prior to that had any conversation with Mr. Garland with reference to the bringing of a Government suit?—A. No, sir; never before or since. I never wrote him a letter or spoke a word to him before or since that day about this telephone suit.

Q. Do you know of any person else, within your knowledge, having seen him about it?—A. No, sir; I do not know of anybody. I understood that Mr. Van Benthuyzen went and made a fuss about it a few days afterward, but I do not know it.

Q. I mean anybody connected with the Pan-Electric Telephone?—A. No, sir; I do not know of anybody who ever mentioned it to him before or afterwards, and have no reason to believe that they did.

Q. Did you say anything to the Attorney-General on that occasion indicating that you wanted a suit brought?—A. Not a word. There were four gentlemen besides myself present: Mr. Gantt, Mr. C. P. Huntington, Mr. Von Briesen, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen. I did not speak to him except to introduce these gentlemen. I intended if they had in any way referred to our company to say to the Attorney-General that they had no authority to do it. That is what I was there for.

Now, there was something said about our efforts at legislation, and I want to show the committee what that was. While I am on the subject of the conversation with the Attorney-General, here is the only letter, in this package (producing a pile of letters), that he ever wrote that I know of in connection with our company. The fact is, we never could get him to do anything. He never attended but two meetings, and would pay no attention to it at all; and when we had a suit at Saint Louis, when it was certain to be brought there, we tried to get him to go there and attend to it, and he wrote a letter to a lawyer there, and if the committee wants it they will see all the action he ever took about this company—all that he ever did. There is a copy of his letter, and a copy of a letter from the president of the company there, and a letter I wrote to Senator Harris, which I happened to find among the papers in reference to that matter. That is a copy of the Garland letter, and a copy of the letter of the president of the local company to us, and also a copy of the notice served on us by the local Bell Company at that place.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I find among these letters which you have just handed me one from you to Senator Harris.—A. That is in reference to the letter which Mr. Garland had written. I do not know that any of them are of any importance. I just want to show the committee all that he did do about this company.

Now here is a matter published in the newspapers and testified to by Dr. Rogers in regard to that underground cable or wire. That has been testified to by Dr. Rogers. Here is the bill he spoke of. It was introduced in the Senate by Senator Mitchell. It grew out of this report here, and that grew out of a resolution offered in the Senate by Senator Mahone instructing the Commissioner of Public Buildings and Grounds to make an inquiry about the propriety of having an underground system of cables for telephones and telegraphs, and the cost of it to the Government, and this report was made. When that was introduced in the Senate I saw a notice of it in the paper somewhere, and I met Dr. Rogers at my room door one morning, and I said to him, "I see there is a bill introduced into the Senate about a telephone; you had better look at it." That is the conversation I had with him about it, and here is the bill. So far as my shaping it for or against the Bell Company, or introducing any bill or amendment, that is purely imaginary. I never wrote a line of it.

Q. Do you know who it was that proposed to put those wires under ground?—A. That is shown here in the report.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. That is the report of the committee?—A. Yes, sir. It was some company.

Q. Was it not Mr. Waring, of Pittsburgh?—A. Yes, sir; I think so. I talked with him about it, and he came to see me two or three times. I asked him about this cable, and how it worked, and all that sort of thing. I paid no more attention to that bill, and never offered an amendment or wrote a line of it. It came over to the House and was referred to my committee—the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds—and I went into the committee room one morning, and Mr. Hopkins, the chairman of the committee, who was standing up, said: "Here is a telephone man, and we will refer it to him." I looked at the bill, and I said: "No; you will not refer it to me. I will not have anything to do with it." And that is the last I know of it. I never looked to see what became of it. If the committee will summon Mr. Hopkins he can tell all about it. That is all I know about that legislation, and all I ever had to do with it in any way whatever. The first I ever knew of it was a notice I saw in a paper or in a Congressional Record that this resolution had been introduced into the Senate by Senator Mahone. Here are the papers in regard to it, and if the committee wants them they can examine them. Something has been said about forty millions of stock that the newspapers said we got from these local companies, but it is something short of that—about a million—but that is not much difference.

The CHAIRMAN. A million short, or a million in all?

Mr. HANBACK. You had better confine yourself to what is testified to here. The newspapers you speak of have not been put in evidence, and we do not know anything about them.

The WITNESS. Dr. Rogers testified to a much larger amount, and I want to show the committee what the facts are. Here (indicating) is the stock we received from the Missouri Telephone Company. That was capitalized for $1,000,000, and we got one-third of that stock. We never have sold a dollar of it, and I have it all here now. Some members of our association have wanted this divided, but we refused; and one reason was we thought it might be sent there, and put on the market where they were, and do them an injury.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Who wanted that done?—A. Colonel Looney, I think was one; and, perhaps, Dr. Rogers. But we could not distribute it the way we had received it. We received it in single certificates, and never sent back to get them changed. We never made any effort to sell this stock or our stock.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What stock are you talking of now?—A. The stock of these local companies. I say we never sold any of the stock of these local companies.

Q. Have you named all the local companies?—A. No, sir. There was the Missouri company with 20,000 shares, and the Texas company, from which we got 40 per cent., which was capitalized at one million, and that would make it forty thousand.

Q. Have you a certificate for that?—A. Yes, sir; there are eight certificates of five hundred shares each.

Q. That is Pan-Electric too?—A. Yes, sir; Pan-Electric Telephone.

Q. Texas Pan Electric?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How many shares are there?—A. Four thousand shares—$400,000.

Q. That is one hundred dollars a share, is it?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. Now, let me have the others, please.—A. Here is Illinois, 10,000 shares. Those shares are $25 each, I believe, which would make $250,000, one-quarter of the one million at which it was capitalized. I have here the old certificates of the Washington Company. Since the reorganization they have not filed their certificate. There is some little trouble between us.

Q. How much should you have?—A. That is an open question between us; and then as to how much we ought to have. The company has been reorganized, and there has been some misunderstanding about it. The original contract was for one-quarter, and they capitalized at $5,000,000, the 5 States here. I told them the capitalization was too high, and they reduced it one-half.

Q. Then you are entitled to one-quarter of how much?—A. To one-quarter of $2,500,000.

Q. I mean in the original contract.—A. The contract specified that they were to give us one-quarter of the original stock, and they capitalized at five million dollars.

Q. They were to give you one-quarter of the five million dollars?—A. Yes, sir; but we didn't get that; they reduced the capitalization to two million five hundred thousand.

Q. So that you have one quarter of that?—A. Yes, sir. Now, here is Tennessee. That is capitalized at one million. I have a number of certificates of that. There are six of these certificates at fifty thousand, and that is three hundred thousand. We got 33 per cent. of the capital stock, and that was capitalized at a million dollars.

Q. Is that the one you have been heretofore talking about?—A. Yes, sir; the same one. It is a licensee of ours. They have a local company in Memphis. We have but one company in Tennessee. They have several local companies in Tennessee under licenses from us, but I do not know anything about them or where they are. These books refer to the parent Pan-Electric Company, and this Tennessee company was operating under a license from us. We sold them the right to Tennessee.

Q. How much did you get?—A. One-third, or 33 per cent ($333,000).

Q. That is the number of shares reduced to dollars at par value?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How much stock do you hold of these subordinate companies?—A. I cannot turn to it just now. It is on the book.

Q. You gave us Missouri, Texas, Tennessee, Illinois, and the Washington companies?—A. You have all but the Alabama company, and that was the same as the Tennessee. The capitalization is $1,000,000, and we have one-quarter, or $250,000. I think that is the capital stock of it. It does not appear on the face of the certificate what the capital stock is. It does not give the capitalization.

Q. There are 1,500 shares here?—A. Yes, sir. Now, I believe I have given you all the facts that occur to my mind under the scope of the resolution. I would like to examine the letters written to me which have been printed—I mean all those which are to be put in evidence—so as to explain any of them that I think necessary.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. You said something on Saturday about an opinion which Mr. Garland had prepared, and that you would obtain it. Did not Mr. Garland prepare an opinion on this subject?—A. Yes, sir; two opinions.

Q. Have you that opinion here?—A. I handed one over just now.

Mr. RANNEY. The one given to Mr. Myers you put in?

The WITNESS. Yes, that was one.

Mr. RANNEY. What was the other?

The WITNESS. The other was given to the Saint Louis Company. In reference to that Saint Louis matter here is another paper, and I will state what it is. We employed counsel there whenever suits were threatened, and advised our licensees to go ahead with their operations; and I have his opinion here.

Mr. HANBACK. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that as the record of Colonel Young's examination of Saturday has not as yet been published I think perhaps we had better adjourn now and continue his examination when the record is in print. I think we had better adjourn till Wednesday, and by that time the letters will be printed.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Do you know where either of these original opinions of Mr. Garland's is?—A. I do not. I do not know that I ever saw them. I know that I did not see the one that went to Saint Louis.

Q. You are custodian of the company's papers?—A. Yes, sir; they may have been given to me, but that one I do not recollect. It has been published a dozen times.

I have seen it in the papers, but I really do not know where it is. I have received a telegram from Mr. Van Benthuyssen's clerk saying that it has been sent on.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Were there not three opinions of Mr. Garland's?—A. No, sir; I think only two; one went to Saint Louis and the other to Mr. Myers.

Q. And there was another one given to the New Orleans man?—A. I do not know anything about that.

Q. I have one printed in the New Orleans paper, which would make three.—A. Yes, if that would be considered an opinion. I saw it published in the papers; it was a short note, I think.

Mr. MOFFATT. As books and papers have been introduced in evidence, I think the committee should determine what portion of them should go into the record.

Mr. OATES. The better way to determine that, it seems to me, is by a subcommittee.

The WITNESS. It might perhaps be well for me to give more in detail our connection with this Government suit.

Mr. RANNEY. We will give you an opportunity to do that.

The WITNESS. And then if there is anything I have omitted I can state it.

Mr. RANNEY. Is there any further statement you desire to make?

The WITNESS. Nothing, unless the committee desires it. Yes, there is one thing I desire to explain about these books. Dr. Rogers has testified about the $170,000 of stock that he had a right under the original articles of agreement to dispose of. I thought, until the other day, that had been furnished. I find I was mistaken, and that he is entitled to a part of it yet. I find I made a mistake of $30,000. I thought it had all been issued, but it seems not, and he is entitled to that. That will appear when you come to look at the books. It was my mistake, and not his. In regard to these stock books, Mr. Looney came in one day when I was absent and set my clerk to filling them out. I found him doing it and stopped it right off, and there was no certificate taken out of them.

Mr. OATES. I move that the committee now adjourn until 12 o'clock Wednesday.

The motion was agreed to and the committee adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday, March 24, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.26 p. m.

Mr. RANNEY. Are the letters from Dr. Rogers to Casey Young printed in the appendix which has been laid before us this morning?

The CHAIRMAN. I do not know whether they have been or not.

Mr. HANBACK. You will find an index in print, which will give you the information you want.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not see some of the letters that Mr. Casey Young produced, which he had received from Dr. Rogers.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. Those are in my testimony.

Mr. RANNEY. Have we all that Mr. Young produced?

The CHAIRMAN. I think some of them were produced just before the adjournment of the committee, and were handed back to Mr. Young and he put them in his pocket. We will resume the examination of Mr. Young.

Hon. CASEY YOUNG then came before the committee and continued his testimony as follows:

The WITNESS. I would like to call the attention of the committee to my testimony given on Saturday, in order to have some corrections made. One of these pamphlets put into the record on Saturday starts out by speaking of the Pan-Electric Company, showing that it was organized before this pamphlet was published; then the other pamphlet shows upon the back of it the names of General Johnston and others. I never saw either one of these pamphlets before the organization of the company; I may have seen the substance of them. I saw simply the pamphlet with some parts of the correspondence, some passages of which are in these pamphlets, but it was not the same one that I see on page 128. The pamphlet speaks of the Pan-Electric Company; no Pan-Electric Company had been formed until we got to New York. Here on page 132 you will see the pamphlet sets out "Pan-Electric Company, to be incorporated under a charter, now primarily organized by Gen. Joseph E. Johnston." That was published after the meeting in New York, and was not the pamphlet I allude to as having seen at Dr. Rogers' house previous to the organization. It may have contained in substance the same things, and I think it probable that it did.

The CHAIRMAN. I understand from you now that the pamphlet you saw at Dr. Rogers' house is not embraced in this record—is not in evidence up to this time.

The WITNESS. Not the whole of it. Some parts of it seem to be embraced in these two pamphlets that are included in the record, but it is not the identical pamphlet because both appear to have been written after this organization in New York. But I think the substance of them is very much the same, perhaps entirely so; I do not know; there may be some alterations; unless I had it to compare with them I could not tell.

The CHAIRMAN. Have you now concluded your general statement?

The WITNESS. Yes; I have a number of other things to state, but perhaps they may be brought out in my further examination by the members of the committee, and if I think of anything more as we go along I will state it.

Mr. MOFFATT. I think you said on Saturday that you wished to make a further, statement in reference to your connection with the Government suit.

The WITNESS. That was day before yesterday.

Mr. RANNEY. He did make one statement about that.

The WITNESS. That will come out in the course of my examination by the committee; if I think of anything more that I think will aid the committee in their investigation I will tell it without being asked. I have not examined my testimony of day before yesterday, and I do not know what corrections I may want to make in that. I have just received it, but have not had time to read it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Will you allow me to see your cash-book?—A. It is in the box.

The CHAIRMAN. The box is here.

The witness produced the cash-book, and handed it to the chairman.

Q. I observe on the fourth page of your cash-book an account purporting to show the moneys received by the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. Does this include all the money received by the company?—A. All the money that came into my hands as treasurer.

Q. From all sources?—A. Yes, sir. I do not think there was any received by the company that did not pass through my hands.

Q. You say you think that all the moneys passed through your hands?—A. Yes, sir; I do not know of any that was received by the company that was not turned over to me and entered by me on that book.

One other matter I had better state here, which I had forgotten. When I was calling over the list of stockholders day before yesterday, I stated that that embraced everybody who was interested as a stockholder in the company. I remember now that we agreed to give our attorneys in Memphis a certain amount of stock, but I did not put their names on the book for the reason that we had not agreed exactly upon what amount they should have. Our attorneys there were Gantt & Patterson, Wright & Foulkes, and Taylor & Carroll. We were to give them, as fees, a certain amount of the stock, and they declined to accept what we offered. That is an open question yet, so that I did not put it on the book. That comes out of the stock of the company.

The CHAIRMAN. I would like to have page 4 of this cash book copied into the record.

The extract referred to is as follows:

Q. Did you, in your statement, give the amount of money received by Harry Rogers in the way of dividends?—A. No, sir; but it is in the book there.

Q. It has not yet been given?—A. I just gave General Johnston's as a counterpart of the five. I can go over the book and state the amounts if desired.

The CHAIRMAN. No; I do not care about going all over it.

The WITNESS. Harry Rogers and Mr. Looney received more than the others for the reason that they owned more stock. I do not remember the exact amount.

Q. I see General Johnston's account is not an exact counterpart of the others. On the 4th of June General Johnston received a dividend of $298.17, while Senator Harris received only $56.77.—A. That came from this fact—you will find it set out in the book—he had received some money which he had not paid over to the company, and I charged him with that, leaving a balance due him of $56.77. That is how that came about.

Q. Are the other differences to be accounted for in the same way?—A. I don't remember; it may be.

Q. For instance, I see Mr. Atkins received as a dividend, June 4, $275.—A. I think that occurred in this way: That Senator Harris had paid General Atkins's assessment, as General Atkins was not here, and I paid it back to Senator Harris; the amount was $23, or something like that; at least, it was the difference between $275 and $298.17; that difference was the amount due to Senator Harris that he had advanced for General Atkins. That accounts for that.

Q. And it appears from this book that you received $348.81?—A. That was an excess that I had paid over and above the money in bank. I had sent my own individual check for $300 to Harry Rogers in New York when I did not happen to have on hand the company's money.

Q. That $348.81 was not all dividend?—A. No, sir; not all. It covered the money we had paid out. The first dividend was intended to cover all the money that had been expended by each one of the parties. They had expended $298, and there were some other little expenditures for small matters, for which I gave my individual checks.

Q. On page 202 I see that Robert F. Looney received, March 6, 1884, first assessment, $194.78; June 4, first dividend, $200; June 6, $1,300; July 25—these are all dividends—$1,227.54; June 17, check No. 16, first series, $234.75.—A. That was the amount of money due him for some money he had advanced for expenses of the suit at Saint Louis.

Q. These amounts were paid to Mr. Looney, were they?—A. Yes, sir. I have receipts for all the money on that book.

Q. Here is the payment of an amount to J. Harris Rogers, on page 206, November 27, 1883, $176.10—it does not state upon what account paid—December 12, $100.—

A. That is some money that we advanced him for various things. I think I gave him $100 at one time, when he was sent over to Baltimore to attend to some business there.

Q. February 4, 1884, expenses to Richmond $81.00; February 29, $300?

A. That was money I sent him to New York, I think.

Q. April 26, expenses $446.—A. That was money I sent him to Philadelphia; it was a balance due him; he had been paid some.

Q. July 3 he was paid some small amount, and June 4, first dividend, $774.50.—A. That was the amount found due to Harry Rogers at that time. He owned more stock than any one else.

Q. June 6th, second dividend (which includes J. W. and C. A. E. Rogers' stock) $1,640.10.—A. Yes; he represented that much stock.

Q. July 26, third dividend, $1,386.10.—A. That was the amount of stock he represented at that time, and was in proportion to what the others received. He owned more stock than the balance of them, and therefore got a larger dividend.

Mr. MOFFATT. Would it not be well to put in the accounts of all these parties?

The CHAIRMAN. They are in substantially, because he has given one, and said the others are counterparts.

Mr. MOFFATT. Would it not be best to have them in? You see there is some variation.

The CHAIRMAN. I see no objection to it. He gave in the amount of General Johnston, and stated that the others were similar, differing only a few dollars.

Mr. OATES. As between these parties?

Mr. MOFFATT. No, sir; the receipts and amounts of dividends received according to the original incorporation, on the books.

The CHAIRMAN. The account I have put in from page 4 shows all the money received.

Mr. MOFFATT. For instance, General Johnston and Senator Harris—

Mr. RANNEY. They were put in the other day.

Mr. MOFFATT. They are not in the record; there was only one put in really.

Mr. RANNEY. He put in one, and said the others were all like it.

Mr. MOFFATT. The amounts as they stood on the book.

Mr. OATES. What have we to do with that?

Mr. MOFFATT. I think we have something to do with it, to ascertain how much Mr. Garland got out of it, and how much Senator Harris got out of it.

Mr. OATES. I do not think so. We have something to do as to the amount of stock they received, but I think we have nothing to do as to any settlement among themselves.

Mr. MOFFATT. I would like to have it appear in the record just how much each of these gentlemen got out of this institution, and what the property was worth.

The CHAIRMAN. That ought to appear when the testimony of Colonel Young is taken.

Mr. MOFFATT. He testified in regard to one account, and said the others were substantially the same. Now, it seems that there is some variance, and it seems to me it would be better to have them all put in.

The WITNESS. If that is done, gentlemen, I must go back to that book and explain how it happens that one got more than another. It was a transaction purely between us, but if you put in the whole book, I want an opportunity to explain.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. The amount that each one got is not posted, is it?—A. Yes.

Mr. MOFFATT. That is what I wanted to get in the record.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, I am unable to see the relevancy of the method of their book-keeping, or how their accounts stood one with another.

The WITNESS. I have never heard any complaint about the accounts in any way. If there is anything wrong, I ought to be allowed to correct it.

Mr. OATES. There is no objection to the statement going in of the whole amount they received on their stock and for sales of State rights.

Mr. MOFFATT. Colonel Young testified the other day in regard to one account, and said all the rest of them were similar to that. There was no objection made, and it is just as relevant for all to come in as it was for one.

Mr. OATES. I know; but that probably was irrelevant, and letting in one irrelevant matter does not form a basis for letting in a number of other irrelevant matters.

Mr. MOFFATT. It seems to me it is relevant to get those amounts on the record to show how much stock there was and what they got out of it.

The WITNESS. We have never sold any stock, and I do not know what it is worth.

Mr. MOFFATT. The value of the stock might be judged of to some extent from the dividends paid.

Mr. EDEN. I understand there is no objection to the amount received going in.

Mr. OATES. It is objected to unless I can see its relevancy.

The WITNESS. It would be publishing our whole transactions to the world. If the committee think it important, under the resolution, to inquire into those things, let it be done, but I prefer not to publish the transactions between ourselves. I do not see any necessity for it. But if you deem it proper for the public information or the public interests, there is the book.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it is already in evidence substantially.

Mr. MOFFATT. If it is in substantially there cannot be any objection to putting it in in detail.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any objection?

Mr. OATES. The only objection I have is that this record is being encumbered with a great many things that we have no right and no business to inquire into.

The WITNESS. If the committee wants it, I can furnish a receipt for every dollar I have paid out, and can explain every item, although it would take me two or three days to do it.

Mr. RANNEY. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, the witness having said, when he put in one, that the others were about the same, if you put in the others, the differences ought to be explained.

The WITNESS. What I meant by that was that each one had received the same amount, and it appears in different parts of the book how they received it. For instance, Senator Harris owed the company money that he had collected somewhere, and I just charged him with that and gave him credit for the balance; I think it was $57.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, all the witnesses who have testified, have testified that there was no quarrel, no difficulty, or dispute among them as to the distribution of what they had received. They agree, as I understand, that that had been distributed in proportion to the amount of their respective interests; and I cannot see any reason or necessity for our going into the question of bookkeeping and the balancing of each one's account.

Mr. MOFFATT. That I care nothing about, but I would like to have it appear on the record how much each one received.

Mr. OATES. You cannot learn it except by looking at the books.

The WITNESS. Each one received precisely the same amount in proportion to his stock.

Mr. RANNEY. It is already in.

Mr. MOFFATT. It is in in a general way. He stated the amount for General Johnston, and said the rest of them were substantially the same. That is all that appears on the record. It seems to me there is nothing improper in showing how much each gentleman has received in dividends.

Mr. RANNEY. The book shows how much was paid as assessment, and how much was paid as dividend to the same person. Those who had the same amount of stock would pay the same assessment and receive the same dividend. But I do not object to its going in again if it is necessary.

Mr. MOFFATT. I move that it be included in the record.

The WITNESS. Have what in the record?

The CHAIRMAN. The individual accounts.

The WITNESS. Then I would have to have an opportunity of going through the book and explaining.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing requiring explanation.

Mr. OATES. I object to it. I am unable to see any relevancy.

The WITNESS. As it would appear that I paid one man $58 and another $298, I should want to explain that, if it is deemed proper.

Mr. RANNEY. You explained that the other day.

The WITNESS. They each got the same amount, but it does not appear exactly how it was paid.

The CHAIRMAN. As I understand the gentleman from Michigan, he does not care to go into any settlement between these parties.

Mr. MOFFATT. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. You want to see how much each one of these gentlemen received from this company.

Mr. MOFFATT. In dividends?

Mr. RANNEY. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that when it comes Mr. Moffatt's turn to examine the witness, he can ask in his question for any of these things.

The CHAIRMAN. That you can do.

Mr. MOFFATT. With that understanding I withdraw my motion.

The WITNESS. My statement was that each man has received precisely the same amount in proportion to his stock, and that is the fact.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have stated that the principal difference between the Messrs. Rogers and other persons concerned in this company was this: That they desired the incorporation of the Pan-Electric Company, and that the stock should be issued and put upon the market; is that correct?—A. I never heard of any other cause of complaint than that the stock had not been issued.

Q. And the others of you were opposed to that?—A. Colonel Looney was in favor of issuing it, but all the balance of us were opposed to it.

Q. You, Senator Harris, Mr. Atkins, General Johnston, and Senator Garland were opposed to the issue of the stock?—A. Whenever it was discussed at the meetings of the board every one of them agreed to it.

Q. Will you state the ground upon which you opposed the issuance of that stock?—A. Yes; I can state the reasons that influenced my own mind, and I suppose they were the reasons of the balance of them. It is what we discussed together. We thought it was proper, before issuing this stock, to ascertain the precise value, as nearly as we could, of these various inventions, and to demonstrate their utility. We thought it was not a proper business method of carrying on these enterprises to flood the whole country with stock before we knew what its value was going to be, and we did not desire that it should fall into the hands of parties who did not have all the information about it which we possessed. It was purely to protect the public against any sort of imposition or mistake or liability to be misled. There was a difference of opinion between us as to how the business of the company ought to be transacted, they thinking one way and we thinking the other.

Q. The company did sell territorial rights—rights to set up this telephone and use it in certain States?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What distinction do you make between selling the stock of the company itself and putting others in a position to sell stock of their local companies, which stock was based upon the same inventions?—A. The only distinction I know of is this: we wanted to utilize these patents; of course we wanted to make our enterprise profitable; we wanted to have exchanges established; and all of these gentlemen to whom we sold these territorial rights agreed in their contracts that, within a specified time, they would erect exchanges and put the telephone in operation. Of course, after we sold the territorial right to a party, we had no power to control the disposition of their stock, except that part of it which came to us, and that we have held in our hands ever since. Another reason was that every company of which I have any knowledge, and I took some little pains to learn their methods of conducting business of that character, has conducted its business in just that way, and every patent that has been granted in the United States was sold to different parties to use in different territories. So we pursued that course, and the gentlemen to whom we sold these rights were thoroughly advised of everything connected with the matter. Some of them sent their lawyers here, and we conferred with them and gave them all the information we had in our possession. And when we found that we were going to have litigation certainly, we passed that resolution which I read the other day, in which we decided to sell no more territorial rights and to proceed no further until all these questions had been adjudicated. Everybody agreed to that—everybody who was present or who was represented by proxy.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. When you say everybody agreed to it, do you mean the subordinate companies?—

A. Oh, no; we did not consider that the subordinate companies had anything to do with the management of our affairs, and we did not consult them on that subject at all. I do not know what they did with their stock; I do not know that any of it has been sold. Most of them wrote to us and asked us not to put their stock on the market, because it might be sold at a price that would hurt their operations very much. I remember that three companies did that—the Saint Louis, the Texas, and the Memphis, and perhaps all of them did. We never did sell any of it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Dr. Rogers stated in the course of his testimony that you had spoken with twenty members of Congress who wanted in this company, on the ground floor; have you any recollection of a conversation of that kind?—A. Oh, yes; I recollect a conversation on that subject—not exactly that conversation, but I remember a conversation out of which that proposition grew; and there may have been more than one conversation; I don't know.

Q. You may state it.—A. This is the substance of the conversation as I remember it; my recollection is not distinct about it, because I attached no importance to it at all: I think at an informal meeting at my room—I do not think it was at a meeting of the board—these gentlemen were present. I remember on one occasion, and there was a conversation about disposing of stock, and about people wanting to buy stock, and we talked about members of Congress in that connection. I remember now why I talked to some of them about that. Mr. Ranney asked me that question the other day, and I did not remember at the time. I spoke to Mr. Calkins, of Indiana, to ask him about the solvency and reliability of two or three gentlemen who wanted to purchase the right to use our inventions in Indiana. That was about all I said to him. I just wanted to ascertain about those parties, and I don't remember what he told me. Then I spoke to Mr. Ryan, of Kansas. I had great numbers of letters from Kansas, and get them yet; and some of the parties wanted to purchase the right to use our inventions in that State.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not understand that you are answering the question.

The WITNESS. I hope the committee will allow me to tell the whole conversation and why I did it. I think that is fair to me.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not object to it, if you will confine it within such limits that we may know whether you are stating your version of the conversation to which Mr. Rogers testified.

The WITNESS. I cannot state it all in a breath. I have necessarily to say a number of things in order to state the facts, and it is but just to allow me to do so. If the committee rules that I must be confined to answering yes and no, then I shall have to submit.

Mr. RANNEY. Oh, no. He said you had that conversation in which you stated that you had talked with twenty members of Congress on the subject.

Mr. OATES. Colonel Young is stating a conversation, and at the same time stating the circumstances out of which it grew, as he goes along.

The WITNESS. I could not state a conversation so that it would have any sense to anybody unless I did that.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

The WITNESS. I have talked to those members of Congress for that reason, and I was stating those facts generally. A number of other members of Congress had talked about buying and selling, and we were discussing the propriety of selling, at what price, &c. I don't remember that anybody said anything about coming in on the ground floor; I don't remember any such remark. If anybody wanted to come in at all, I presume he did want to come in on the ground floor. But I do remember distinctly that I never sold a dollar of stock to any member of Congress; I don't remember that any one made a direct proposition to me to buy stock; and I never proposed to give stock to anybody; and no one ever did get it, either by gift or purchase.

Q. Recurring to the former question, can you state the conversation, or the substance of it, to which Dr. Rogers seemed to refer in his testimony?—A. I have stated it. That is about the substance of it, as I remember it.

Q. I did not understand you as stating a conversation; I thought you were stating the facts out of which it grew.—A. I had it with gentlemen who were present. I don't know how many were there, but that is about the conversation that occurred on that subject, so far as I remember. I may have had more than one conversation; I don't remember.

Q. Have you any recollection of any number of members wanting to get in this company on the ground floor or otherwise?—A. I never knew of one wanting in on the ground floor or on the top floor.

Q. The testimony of Dr. Rogers, as I understood it, was that you had stated that there were twenty members of Congress who wanted it on the ground floor?—A. I have no recollection of stating any such fact. The conversation that I remember is substantially as I have stated, and that is all there was said about it.

Q. You state that that is not the fact—that there were no members that wanted in?—A. No members that I know of ever wanted in on any floor.

Q. Were you at any time instructed by the company, or by any members of the company, to make sales of the stock to members of Congress?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or to any other person?—A. In this general conversation it may be that somebody said to leave it all to me; I don't remember whether that is so or not. I attached no importance to it, and had forgotten all about it until I heard it mentioned here.

Q. Dr. Rogers stated also that he knew of no offer by the Bell Company, or any person for it, to buy stock of your company, except something that he had heard indicating an offer made to you for your stock by the Bell Company or by some one for it. Did you ever have any dealings with the Bell Company?—A. Never.

Q. Was there ever an offer made to you by the Bell Company or by any person for it?—A. Not that I am aware of. I think I can state the incident out of which that grew.

Q. You may do so.—A. When I was at Hot Springs last year, 1885, one of our local companies wrote to me from Saint Louis, inclosing me a slip from a Saint Louis paper, in which it was stated that the Bell company, or an agent of the Bell company, was in Saint Louis trying to make a compromise or some sort of settlement with our company there, in order to get control of that company, or to make some sort of consolidation with us. I wrote him with reference to that, that if the Bell company wanted to make any compromise I had no objection to a compromise. I suppose it grew out of that. Or I may have mentioned that to Dr. Rogers; I don't know. I have often had men come to me and want to buy stock, and I had no reason to suspect that they had been sent by the Bell company; I had no fact in my possession to induce me to believe that. A great many people wanted to buy our stock, but I never sold any to anybody. I gave some away, as I stated the other day.

Q. Have you any recollection of calling the attention of Dr. Rogers to a bill introduced in Congress in regard to laying underground wires to the Smithsonian Institute and other places?

Mr. RANNEY. He testified as to that.

The WITNESS. Yes.

Q. Have you testified as to that?—A. Yes; I explained how that was. There was a resolution introduced in the Senate in regard to that matter by Senator Mahone, and I did call his attention to that about as the chairman stated it.

Q. Was Dr. Rogers present at the interview at the Ebbitt House when Van Benthuyzen and these other parties were here?—A. No, sir; at least I never saw him there.

Q. He says in his testimony:

"The general drift of the conversation was relative to that which I related yesterday—not, of course, going over the same ground, but merely adverting to it as a thing we well understood.

"Mr. RANNEY. What thing?

"The WITNESS. That the Government had promised us, or Mr. Garland had promised, that it should be brought, and that it would be undertaken by Mr. Goode."

Was there any conversation of that kind at the Ebbitt House interview?

Mr. RANNEY. He did not say that that was at the Ebbitt House interview.

The WITNESS. It was at his house.

Mr. RANNEY. He said he would not go because his father was not liked, or was not wanted; he was not there.

Mr. HILIARD. That was at his house.

The WITNESS. I can state what the conversation was at the Ebbitt House with the other gentlemen who were there, if it is desirable.

Mr. HANBACK. Mr. J. Harris Rogers testifies to that.

The CHAIRMAN. He testified to the fact, whether it was there or not; let me read the context:

"The colonel had sent out for my son to come in. I drove in with him in a buggy.

Upon meeting the colonel he was in very fine spirits about the prospects of this Government suit. I don't remember the words exactly, but I know the general tenor of his conversation was that the Pittsburgh people had had experts in many parts of Europe, and that they had accumulated about $75,000 worth of testimony, which, in fact, he had referred to in the previous conversation, and that they wished to put that testimony against what they supposed to be some little influence which we might have. His way of expressing it 'some little influence,' impressed me, for I had an idea that although the $75,000 was a very material thing to us in the depleted state of our treasury, yet I thought our influence ought to be worth a very great amount to that company, and that the colonel was very modest in saying 'some little influence which they supposed we might have.' The general drift of the conversation was relative to that which I related yesterday—"

That is not the conversation at Dr. Rogers's house.

"not, of course, going over the same ground, but merely adverting to it as a thing we well understood.

"Mr. RANNEY. What thing?

"The WITNESS. That the Government had promised us, or Mr. Garland had promised, that this suit should be brought, and that it would be undertaken by Mr. Goode."

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; that relates to what Goode had told him in a previous interview.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not so understand it.

Q. If you were at the Ebbitt House after Dr. Rogers and his son had come into town, had they any conversation with you at the Ebbitt House or elsewhere?—A. I don't think they had any interview with me at the Ebbitt House.

Mr. MOFFATT. My recollection is that that conversation occurred at Colonel Young's office, or where Colonel Young was, and that Harry Rogers testified that he learned that they did not want his father to come to the Ebbitt House, as they did not like him.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. HANBACK. Neither Dr. Rogers nor his son went to the Ebbitt House, and they both so testified.

Q. Was there any conversation between yourself and Dr. Rogers or Harris Rogers with regard to bringing a Government suit?—A. Yes.

Q. And was it stated there that the Government had promised you, or that Mr. Garland had promised, that a suit should be brought, and that it would be undertaken by Mr. Goode?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was there anything said about Mr. Garland in that conversation?—A. Yes, sir; I started to state it the other evening, when Mr. Ranney stopped me; I will try to state it now, if the committee will allow.

Q. Proceed.—A. I came here on the 30th of July, as appears from the register of the Ebbitt House. I thought, as I stated the other day, that it was about the 27th of July to the 1st of August, but I find that it was the 30th of July. One of the objects that I had in coming here was to obtain some patents, or one patent especially, that Harry Rogers had applied for upon his receiver. I had grown a little doubtful whether the receiver we were then using was not an infringement of the Bell receiver, and we had filed a bill. Dr. Rogers said we had filed a bill, but he was mistaken in his date. It was filed on the 10th of July. I came here to get that receiver and some other things, and went to his house. I don't remember that I sent for him; I don't think I did. I went to his house and found him there, but the family had gone away. I remember that I could not get in the door, and he opened a window and let me in. I stated to him what I had come for, and told him and Harry Rogers in that conversation that Mr. Van Benthuyzen, president of the National Improved Company, and C. P. Huntington, a stockholder in it, with their lawyer, Mr. Von Brierson, of New York, were at the Ebbitt House, and that I had had a conversation with them about a consolidation of our two companies; that had first been talked of at Pittsburgh. I told them about the proposition to consolidate these two companies.

In that conversation, after going over all the conversation that had occurred at Pittsburgh, I stated to them that Mr. Van Benthuyzen had addressed a letter to the Attorney-General from New York, asking him to institute suit in the name of the Government, and that that letter grew out of my having said to Mr. Van Benthuyzen at Pittsburgh that a law had passed the preceding session of Congress authorizing the Attorney-General to bring suits to vacant patents, and making it his duty to do so in certain cases; that when I had stated that fact to him he had declared his intention of writing to the Attorney-General and had done so; that that letter was then in the Department of Justice or somewhere; I didn't know where it was.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You say you told this to Rogers?—A. I told Rogers that. I am giving the conversation to you that you would not allow me to give the other evening.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not object to it.

The WITNESS. You stopped me.

Mr. RANNEY. You wanted to make an argument; I told you you might state facts.

The WITNESS. That was a fact I was stating—a conversation that occurred.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

The WITNESS. I stated to them that this application had been made by Mr. Van Benthuyzen to bring suit. He then referred, as I recollect, to a letter which he himself had written to the Attorney-General on the 24th of May preceding that, about which he had written to me, asking him to bring suit. I said to him that Mr. Van Benthuyzen was insisting upon his rights, under that law, to have the Attorney-General bring suit, and that it was a delicate matter, and that our company could take no part in it. I stated most distinctly that our company could have nothing to do with it; that it was a matter that Mr. Van Benthuyzen himself must attend to. That is about the substance of the conversation which I had with him. In addition to that, when I said it was a delicate thing for Mr. Garland, I said, "If Mr. Van Benthuyzen insists upon it, and that is the law, and it is the Attorney-General's duty under that law, I do not see any escape from it, and I suppose he will have it to do." That is my exact language.

Q. What day was that conversation?—A. That was some time between the 30th day of July, 1885, and the 1st, 2d, or 3d of August, somewhere along there; it may have been on the 31st of July; I think probably it was, for that was the next day after I got to Washington. I went to see Dr. Rogers and his son immediately after I got here; that was the business I had; I wanted to get this patent receiver here, and went with Mr. Harry Rogers to Mr. Marble's office to get it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you say to Dr. Rogers that the Attorney-General had agreed to bring suit for any other company?—A. Oh, no; for no company. I told him that neither the Attorney-General nor any body else could do it, and ought not.

Q. Had the Attorney-General at that time made any agreement to bring suit?—A. At that time I don't know whether I had seen him or not; I did see him about that time; but whether I had seen him when that conversation occurred, or whether it was the next day or the same day, I do not now remember. But the Attorney-General never did promise me or anybody else that I know of to bring any suit.

Mr. RANNEY. (To the Chairman.) He testified to that when you were not present; but I do not object to your calling his attention to it again.

Q. Do you know when Mr. Garland left the city for Arkansas?—A. No, sir; I do not. I heard that he had left, and I will tell you all about it before I get through, if you want to hear it.

Q. Had you any conversation with him about his going to Arkansas?—A. I never spoke to him but once about it in my life, and that was on the 31st of July, or 1st of August, somewhere along there, as I detailed the other day.

Q. In that conversation, or in any other conversation, did he speak to you about leaving the city to go to Arkansas?—A. Never. He never mentioned it to me, and I did not know he had left the city until at Cincinnati, when on my way to Washington, I picked up a morning paper and saw that he had gone. I think possibly I heard from somebody that he was going away, but I never heard him say anything about it.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with Mr. Goode, the Solicitor-General, in regard to the absence of the Attorney-General from the city?—A. I never spoke to Mr. Goode about it but once in my life, and that was after the Attorney-General had gone; and then I did not ask him if he had gone, for I already knew it.

Q. Do you know, or have you ever heard from any of these parties, that the Attorney-General was to leave the city, and leave this matter in the hands of Mr. Goode?—A. I have seen it published in the newspapers.

Q. Was there anything said about it between the parties?—A. None of the parties that I know of. I never had seen any such thing until I saw it published in the newspapers.

Q. Do you know who made application to the Solicitor General to institute the Government suit?—A. It was made first to the district attorney for the Western district of Tennessee, Judge W. H. McCorry, as will appear from the record of the proceedings before the Interior Department, which I see Mr. Ranney has in his hand.

Mr. HALL. Do you want to see it?

The WITNESS. Yes, if I may be allowed to see it; I wish to direct the attention of the committee to that part of it. The first application was made by Mr. Van Benthuyzen, who wrote a letter from New York on the 14th of July.

Mr. RANNEY. It was the 12th of July.

The WITNESS. I thought it was the 14th; I am mistaken; I see it in the record, but I never saw it until I saw it there. That is the first I heard about bringing suit, except the letter which Dr. Rogers told me he had written to the Attorney-General on the 24th of May previous. The next application that was made was made by Mr. W.

H. McCorry, the United States district attorney for the Western district of Tennessee, upon the petition of J. R. Beckwith, W. Van Benthuyzen, George Gantt, and C. P. Huntington.

Q. Had you anything to do with having that application made?

A. No, sir; I did not write it and did not sign it. I knew it was being made, but I took no part in it.

Q. When was that done?

A. The date is shown in this Interior Department record here. August 26, 1885, it seems the memorial was addressed to him. I knew that was being done.

Q. That was addressed to the district attorney?—A. Yes, sir; that was addressed to the district attorney, Mr. McCorry. It came about in this way: When we were at the Attorney-General's office, the only time I was ever there, and the only time I ever spoke to Mr. Garland about it, Mr. Van Benthuyzen was insisting upon his having a right to have suit brought by the Government under the law that he supposed had been passed.

Q. When was that?—A. That was about the 1st of August or 31st of July, I don't remember exactly. Mr. Van Brierson, of New York, was present, and he maintained, I remember, that no suit could be brought unless it was brought at the instance of the district attorney in the district where the suit was to be instituted, and he advised Mr. Van Benthuyzen, in my presence, that he would have to get his district attorney to make application to the Attorney-General. I was present at that conversation, and that is the way it came about.

Q. Did you have any part in setting on foot that application?—A. I did not open my mouth when they were talking to the Attorney-General, except merely to introduce these gentlemen, and I did not say a word in addition to that.

Q. I mean afterwards, when the application was made to the district attorney at Memphis. Had you any part in having it made?—A. I was there at the time, and I knew it was being made; but I did not want that sort of a suit. Let me tell the whole story. I did not want the sort of suit that was afterwards brought. I did not read this memorial to Judge McCorry; I never saw it until afterwards; but I did see Judge McCorry, and I had a conversation with him, in which I wanted him simply to ask the Government for permission to bring suit at our relation in the name of the Government. Mr. McCorry said, "I will do nothing of the sort." He said, "You gentlemen might take a notion to do exactly what you charge Bell with doing—you might get up a collusive suit, and I could not consent to that; but the Government will bring suit—if it does at all—in its own name, and will retain control of it."

Q. Can you give any reason why Memphis was selected as the place to bring suit?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Van Benthuyzen was going to New Orleans to have suit brought there. He stated to me in conversation that Judge Billings was up in Connecticut or New Hampshire or somewhere at that time, and that Judge Pardee, I think, was in Texas, and that the term of office of the district attorney had nearly expired, or at least it was supposed that he would be superseded in a few days, and so he finally concluded not to bring suit through him, but through Judge McCorry.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. The district attorney at New Orleans was a Republican, was he not?—A. I do not know whether he was or not; it is very probable he was. But it would have made no difference. The gentleman who drew this memorial was a New Orleans lawyer who had been United States district attorney there for eight years under General Grant; he was a strong Republican, and a very able lawyer. Mr. J. R. Beckwith is the man who wrote that petition, and it was on his advice, as well as upon the opinion of Mr. Van Benthuyzen, that it was decided that suit had better not be brought at New Orleans.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. So far as you know, was there any design to make this application during the absence of the Attorney-General?—A. No, sir; there was not. I knew that it was the intention to have it presented to him; I knew that as a fact.

Q. To the Attorney-General?—A. Yes; and I will tell you why it was not, if you want me to.

Q. You may.—A. When Judge McCorry sent this petition on to Washington, I came on here shortly afterwards or about the same time with Mr. C. P. Huntington. Mr. Huntington was coming here to look after that matter; that was his business here. I had in my pocket at that time a letter which I had written at the request of Mr. Van Benthuyzen, addressed to the President of the United States. It was his purpose, when we left Memphis, to refer it to Mr. Garland directly, we supposing that he was here, and we knew that Mr. Garland, from his former declarations, would not take any part in it. Mr. Van Benthuyzen had declared his intention, if the Attorney-General refused, to appeal to the President, and I had in my pocket a letter written to the President.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Have you that letter here?—A. Oh, no; it was never sent. I may have it among my papers.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. I thought you said you had it in your pocket. What letter did you refer to?—A. The letter to the President of the United States from Mr. Van Benthuyzen, written upon the assumption that Mr. Garland would refuse to have anything to do with it, and he intended to appeal to the President, as he told Mr. Garland.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You say you thought the Attorney-General was then in Washington?—A. Yes, sir; we all thought so, but when I got to Cincinnati, I picked up a morning paper, and saw that he was not there, and I said to Mr. Huntington, "You are having your trip for nothing; he is not at Washington." Mr. Huntington said he would come on here anyhow.

Q. Were you coming on to take part in the application?—A. No, sir; I was coming to attend to some other business, but, if necessary, I should have done it. I had written that letter at the request of Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. What became of that letter?—A. I do not know.

Q. I understood you to say you had it in your possession?—A. I had written it before I left home, in my office, upon the assumption that the Attorney-General would not act, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen intended to appeal to the President and have all the papers referred to him; that was the purpose.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you meet Mr. Van Benthuyzen by arrangement to come to Washington?—A. No, sir; he came to Memphis. When we got down there they were discussing the whole matter, whether they would go to New Orleans or proceed somewhere else, and he telegraphed his attorney, Mr. Beckwith, or wrote him, one, to come to Memphis, and they held a consultation there in my office—no, in Mr. Gantt's office—as to whether or not they would go to New Orleans. Mr. Van Benthuyzen was strongly inclined to go there. He said he wanted to stay at home, where he could look after the matter himself. Mr. Beckwith came up and stated these facts that I have stated to the committee, and advised that he commence right there. He then telegraphed or wrote for a large number of models which he had which had been used in the Pittsburgh suit, models of the Reis telephone, the Pickering telephone, the Van der Weyde telephone, and the Bell telephone of 1876, and put them there, strung them up in the building, and they were a whole week experimenting with them, and they sent for Mr. McCorry to come down and witness those experiments, as he states in his letter, and he was there for several days witnessing them, and I was there frequently.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Who penned this letter to the President?—A. I wrote it myself.

Q. From Memphis?—A. Yes, sir; I wrote it and Mr. Van Benthuyzen was to sign it. I wrote it at his request.

Q. At Mr. Van Benthuyzen's request, at Memphis?—A. Yes, sir; his name is attached to it, not mine.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Did you ever deliver that letter?—A. Oh, no, sir; because it was not necessary. Mr. Van Benthuyzen went to Waukesha Springs, and Mr. Huntington came on here. He was largely interested in the Van Benthuyzen Company.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Had you prior to that time had any conversation with Solicitor-General Goode in regard to this matter?—A. I never mentioned it to him.

Q. When you came and found the Attorney-General absent, what steps did you take?—A. Nothing, except to call at the office of the Solicitor-General and ask him if those papers had reached him, and he said they had, I think; probably they reached him while I was there. I staid about five minutes and then left. That was the only conversation I had with him about it until afterwards. I have talked with him within the last two or three weeks.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. I would like to ask a question right there in that connection. Didn't you and Mr. Van Benthuyzen go up and see Mr. Goode and ask him if he had received the papers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did not Senator Harris go along with you?—A. Yes, sir; and we were present about five minutes.

Q. What was Mr. Goode's response?—A. I asked him if he had those papers, and I think he sent out and got them while we were there. Perhaps he said he did not have them, and I walked out and returned the next morning.

Q. You returned the next morning?—A. Yes, sir; I believe I returned the next morning, and asked him if those papers had come and he said they had. Senator Harris was not there then. He said the papers had come, but I do not know whether he showed them to me or not. I did not talk with him five minutes. I intended to have said, when I went there, my purpose was—

Q. You need not tell what you intended to say.—A. I think I had better state why I went there.

The CHAIRMAN. That is material, I think.

The WITNESS. I intended to say that if this suit was brought at all, to have it brought, not by the Government, but at our relation, so that we could control it. That was my idea all the time.

Q. Do you remember what Mr. Goode said to you when you went back the second time?—A. He just said they had come; that is about all.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Can you give us the date of that?—A. That was about—

Q. You cannot give it exactly?—A. No, sir; cannot. I was just thinking. It was some time late in August or in September; I don't remember which.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In either of these conversations with the Solicitor-General did he agree to order the bringing of a suit?—A. When I called on him the second time he was writing a letter to Mr. McCorry then about the suit.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you know the date of that?—A. No, I do not remember the exact date. The letter itself will show. I think it was about the 1st of September. I have a memorandum book, may be, that I can tell the exact date from. [After an examination of the book.] No, I cannot find it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you know that the Solicitor-General intended to write that letter?—A. No, sir; I did not know anything about it until I saw him writing it.

Q. Had he said anything to you previous to that by which you understood he was going to order the bringing of the suit?—A. No, sir; except that the papers had not come. I did not stay two minutes in his room. I intended to have talked to him when I went the second time, and ask him to bring the suit in the way I desired; but I thought perhaps it would not be the proper thing, and I did not do so.

Q. You found him ordering the suit brought?—A. He was writing, and he told me he was writing a letter to Mr. McCorry. I did not see the letter, but I saw the papers, some papers lying on the table which I discovered were the papers which had been sent up.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. He was writing to the district attorney?—A. Yes, sir; to Mr. McCorry. Previous to this time I had looked up the authorities on the subject, and found they supported my view of it, and that these suits had been ordered when they were asked to be ordered by the Attorney-General. Seventeen of them had been gotten up since 1874 by Attorney-General Brewster and others. I had looked up the authorities.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. Suits where the United States was the sole party and not on the relation?—A. Yes, sir; my recollection about it is that in every case where suits were brought they were brought in the district where they were asked to be brought and special counsel appointed, as the authorities will show.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was anything said at that time as to the practice of referring applications of that kind to the Interior Department?

The WITNESS. By Mr. Goode?

The CHAIRMAN. By Mr. Goode, Mr. Huntington, or yourself?

A. Oh, no, sir; there was never such a thing done before. The authorities do not show that such a thing was ever done. I see it has been stated so since, but it is not true; at least, I cannot find any authority.

Q. As the result of your investigation, you say, then, it has not been the practice to do so?—A. I never saw but one or two cases. I have collated them in my brief, and if the committee will look at that they will see the course pursued, and that they were invariably brought in the district where they were asked to be brought, and special counsel appointed, just as in this case. I do not consider it an unusual practice, but a very proper one, and I would have asked for it except for the delicacy of Mr. Garland's situation. I felt that I had a perfect right to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Ranney, you may proceed with Colonel Young's examination.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Then you went to New York and entered into that contract? Have you examined those patents?

The WITNESS. Do you mean the first contract?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; the written contract.

A. No; I do not think I had. I had seen the telephone operating. Do you mean the printed patent from the Patent Office?

Q. No; I mean the instrument.—A. Oh, yes; we examined the models of the electric light, the telegraphic instrument, the telephone instrument, and the telephone that talked through the gas-pipe—I do not know what they call it—and perhaps one or two others. Those are the ones he called my attention to particularly.

Q. Did Senator Harris examine them?—A. He was there when these instruments were being made. Harry Rogers had a telephone with one end of the line at the Sixth street depot perhaps, and one end at his laboratory, and we talked over that frequently.

Q. Was Mr. Garland there?—A. I have no recollection of seeing him at Dr. Rogers's house, though perhaps I may have done so.

Q. Did he know anything about it before the contract was signed?—A. I presume he did. I never spoke to him about it, but I heard how he came into it, as stated by other parties.

Q. You had nothing personally to do with that?—A. No, sir; but I heard how it was done.

Q. From whom did you hear it?—A. From Senator Harris and Mr. Atkins; I had a conversation with them about it.

Q. Had Mr. Atkins looked into it?—A. Yes, sir; I saw him there too. He was there several times when I was there, but not often as Senator Harris.

Q. When was the first proposition made to give these men $100,000?—A. I never heard the proposition made as was testified to here. It may have been made, but I never heard of it.

Q. You were not cognizant of the fact, then?—A. No, sir; I didn't know anything about it. There was no particular sum offered to me.

Q. When you formed that contract you contemplated forming under an act of incorporation, organizing under the New York laws?—A. I cannot say that we determined to organize under the New York laws. I had not examined them. I thought we would organize under the laws of some State the most favorable for the purpose. I had not examined the laws of any State at that time.

Q. The contract specifies New York?—A. Yes, or some other State.

Q. Did you take any steps for incorporation in New York?—A. No, sir. I did examine the law there; I had forgotten that. General McMahon was stopping at the hotel where we were; he is a lawyer residing there, and I talked to him about the incorporation laws of New York, and he brought a book to my room and I examined it.

Q. But you did not take any further steps than that?—A. No, sir; nothing further.

Q. Will you produce again that large book of certificates you had here the other day?—A. Yes, sir; here it is [producing a book].

Q. Where was that book gotten out?—A. It seems to have been done in New York.

Q. At the bottom of it does it not say "Organized under the laws of the State of New York"?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who had it printed?—A. Dr. Rogers. I never saw it until he gave it to me.

Q. When did it come into your possession?—A. I think it was about October or November, 1883, or perhaps January, 1884.

Q. Then some of you did proceed so far as to get a certificate book, designed to be used in the issuing of certificates in a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York?—A. No, sir; except this. That is all I know anything about.

Q. Well, so far as to do that?—A. Dr. Rogers got that.

Q. That is the certificate book of a corporation purporting to be organized under the laws of the State of New York?—A. Yes, sir; but I had nothing whatever to do with it.

Q. Just look at this, and see if it is the same as those in the certificate book? [Handing a certificate to the witness.]—A. No, sir; it does not correspond with these at all. I never saw it before.

Q. You say that is a certificate purporting to be a certificate of stock issued in a corporation organized under the laws of the State of New York?—A. It seems so; but I never saw it before.

Q. Were there two certificate books?—A. No; not that I know of Mr. RANNEY. I simply want this certificate marked by the stenographer for identification.

The CHAIRMAN. You do not want it put into the record?

Mr. RANNEY. No; it need not go into the record, but simply be marked for identification.

Q. Will you look and see if you have a book of certificates of that kind?—A. I will, but I know I have not. These are all the books I have.

Q. Is there not one in your box?—A. No, sir.

Q. Won't you look and see?—A. (after an examination). If it is in there I never saw it. Here is a Pan-Electric Telephone Company certificate book, very much like it.

Q. Is not that the same?—A. Oh, no, sir; this is the Pan-Electric Company, and that is the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

Q. The one I handed you for identification is what?—A. That seems to be the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. That was a certificate issued by the Pan-Electric Company of New York?—A. Yes, sir; these are all the books I have [pointing to a box of books]. I will look at my room; it is possible the book may have been handed in by Dr. Rogers, but I have no idea it was.

Q. Can you give any reason why a certificate book like that gotten up for a corporation should be obtained in the State of New York if you never proceeded so far as to take steps to organize it?—A. If I did not get it, I could not; I could not give any reason for it. There is no authority for it that I know of.

Q. When did this certificate book come into your possession?—A. Either in November or December, 1883, or January, 1884; about that time; I think it probable it was in January, 1884, but I could not state. I never used it, never took any certificates out, and never had any occasion to look at it.

Q. You just conferred with an attorney to see whether you could or would organize in New York, did you not?—A. Well, hardly that. I talked with General McMahon about it. I knew nothing about the incorporation laws of New York.

Q. What was the difficulty about it?—A. I don't remember now what the difficulty was. It occurs to me, however, that we concluded that the incorporation laws of New York were hardly broad enough in their terms to get such a charter as was contemplated. That is my recollection.

Q. Was not the trouble this: that if you organized under the laws of New York, you had to pay in some of the capital stock?—A. That may have been.

Q. And you could not put patent rights in in payment of the capital stock?—A. I do not remember; that may have been one of the reasons. I know that was one of the reasons why I did not get it in the District of Columbia, because we had to pay some in. We talked about that.

Q. At any rate you concluded it was not best to organize in the State of New York?—A. I cannot say that I reached that conclusion. We determined to look into the matter, and I think Dr. Rogers went into New Jersey to examine the laws there.

Q. I will come to New Jersey in a moment. You concluded not to do it in New York?—A. No, sir; I cannot say that we concluded not to do it. I do not think we came to any definite conclusion about it at that time. We talked about it frequently.

Q. Who had charge of the organization of the company in New Jersey?—A. I don't know that anybody had charge of it specially. I think Dr. Rogers went over there and made some inquiry about it, and I think I got a letter from him.

Q. Didn't you all sign a certificate of organization for New Jersey?—A. I do not remember; perhaps we did.

Q. Do you remember whether you signed one?—A. No, I do not; but we may have done so. We did a great many foolish things, I see now, but I do not remember that we did that particular thing.

Q. Just look at that paper (handing a paper to witness).—A. Well, I see this paper is signed by J. Harris Rogers, J. E. Johnston, A. H. Garland, and J. C. Brown, and those signatures seem to be genuine.

Q. They are acknowledged, are they not?—A. I see the acknowledgment of General Brown—yes, it seems to be.

Q. Do you know why you did not go on in New Jersey with it?—A. I have no recollection of ever seeing this paper before.

Q. You see that that is a certificate of organization under the general law. Please hand it to the reporter, and let him mark it for identification. (The paper referred to was marked Exhibit B to Mr. Young's testimony.)

The WITNESS. I see my name is not signed to that paper, and I don't recollect ever seeing it. Oh, I do recollect that Dr. Rogers wrote me a letter about getting a charter in New Jersey, an organization, and we suggested some difficulty. What it was I do not remember. I think it is possible that the letter may be among those I handed in the other day. I say if I ever saw the paper before, I do not remember it. I presume I would have signed it if it had been handed to me. It is dated the 26th of September. I was not here then, and that was one reason I did not sign.

Q. Here is another paper. Will you see if that is not the same, with an alteration in pencil?—A. I could not tell without comparing the two together. This looks something like the other.

Q. In whose handwriting are those alterations in pencil, and in whose handwriting is the signature?—A. There is no signature to this one.

Q. Yes, there is; look at the end of it.—A. Oh, the signature is "Augustus H. Garland."

Q. Look and see if it is not the same paper that was prepared for the corporation in New Jersey, with an alteration making it suitable to be presented and filed in Tennessee.—A. If you will hand me that paper back I will look at it and see if it is the same, or if some gentleman will read it I will assist in making the comparison.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. That signature has been erased, has it not?—A. The signature is marked out, but it looks to me like the signature of Mr. Garland.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Look at the body of the instrument and see whether the changes in pencil from what was originally in ink are not in Mr. Garland's handwriting.—A. It looks like his; I couldn't swear positively.

Q. What is your best judgment about it?—A. It looks like his handwriting.

Q. It is your best judgment that it is his handwriting, is it not?—A. If I were to see it anywhere else I don't know that I would say it is, for I am not very familiar with his handwriting; but looking at the signature here and having a general knowledge of his handwriting, I should say that was his handwriting. Of course I do not speak positively. I don't believe I ever got but one or two letters from Senator Garland in my life, and they were mere notes.

Q. It seems, then, that you, without consultation, concluded not to organize a corporation in New York, and then the proposition was to go into New Jersey, and that was abandoned?—A. Well, it don't seem so to me, because I didn't know anything about it; but those papers would seem to indicate that some steps were taken in that direction by somebody.

Q. You knew the talk was, after abandoning New York, to go into New Jersey, did you?—A. Oh, yes; we talked about New Jersey and New York and Maryland and Connecticut. I think I remember now that Senator Harris asked Senator Eaton, or wrote to him, about the laws of Connecticut.

Q. I see in the paper for New Jersey that the capital stock was put at two millions, and when you went into Tennessee it was five millions.—A. I didn't notice that.

Q. Look and see if it is not so.—A. I never saw this paper before and don't know what it is. [Examining paper.] Yes; this is two millions. I see it is interlined in pencil above, and it looks as if it was intended for a 5, though it is not written out.

Q. In the original certificate for New Jersey it is two millions, is it not?—A. Yes; and that seems to have been written over, too. The "2" seems to have been written over some word; what the word was I can't say.

Q. In the paper I handed you, which is the completed, signed paper, you will see the amount of capital stock is two millions.—A. I had not observed that.

Q. And the other paper purports to be a copy of that, with these alterations?—A. I presume it is a copy; I don't know.

Q. Was not the difficulty in New Jersey that you could not form a corporation there unless you paid the capital stock in?—A. I don't remember whether it was or not. If that had been the law I should have esteemed it a difficulty; but I don't know whether it was or not.

Q. You would have ascertained it, would you not?—A. I think I should have done so, and I don't think I would have gone there.

Q. Was not the printing of that book of certificates paid for by your company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. For the New York corporation?—A. Yes, sir. Dr. Rogers sent the bill. I happen to remember that, because he sent it for too much at first, and afterwards he sent a note to me saying he had charged more than he had paid for it.

Q. You know Dr. Rogers got those certificates printed, and your company paid for the printing?—A. Oh, yes; he had the book printed over there.

Q. You would not have paid for it if it had not been done by your authority or by authority of the company?—A. Oh, yes; we paid for a great many things Dr. Rogers did without our authority directly. We recognized his right to do those things.

Q. You did not repudiate it?—A. Oh, no.

Q. As not done under authority of the company?—A. No; I don't know as there has been any repudiation about it. I paid very little attention to the book, because I didn't intend to use it, as far as I was concerned, until the validity of these patents was established by judicial decision.

Q. Do you know what the expense of printing that book of certificates was?—A. I don't remember; the accounts are in this book (indicating book). Dr. Rogers arranged it, and wrote to me when he wanted the money; and afterwards wrote to me that he had sent in too large an account, I know, and gave me what he said was the true sum. A gentleman in New York had misled him about it in some way or other.

Q. The next State you went into was Tennessee?—A. That was the only one I had anything to do with, because this conversation—

Q. Did you attend to the organization of a company there?—A. The only attention I gave to it that I remember is that the articles of incorporation were prepared here and sent to me at my home (I was at home), and I took them to the register's office and had them registered, as the law requires, and then sent them to the secretary of state and had them registered there.

Q. Who prepared them here?—A. I do not know. I understood Senator Garland did; but I do not know.

Q. That was your understanding?—A. I have no doubt he did.

Q. Did you receive them from him?—A. I don't recollect; I don't think I did. I think Dr. Rogers sent them to me, may be; but I have no doubt Senator Garland prepared them.

Q. You attended to the details of the organization in Tennessee?—A. That far I did.

Q. Who looked up the law of Tennessee to see whether that was better for you than the other State laws?—A. I presume I did it myself; I don't remember, though. Senator Garland is a very industrious law student, and it is likely he did it himself.

Q. You don't remember who did it?—A. I don't remember; probably both did it.

Q. If I recollect aright, I have seen in some of the letters something about you thinking it would not be advisable to organize under the laws of Tennessee, as in that event there might be some question about financial standing.—A. That was an objection I had, and I preferred some other State.

Q. Why did you make the objection?—A. On account—

Q. Where did you make the objection?—A. I suppose I wrote that letter from home; I don't know where. The letter is there.

Q. Then you must have been conferred with about organizing in Tennessee?—A. Oh, of course I was. You did not allow me to answer your former question as to why I thought the State was financially objectionable. That involves a little political history, which I will give the committee if the committee think it is necessary. I had just been a candidate for Congress, and I had a difference with a large portion of my fellow-citizens in regard to the State debt—part of the Democratic party. I had taken a pretty active interest in discussing the matter on the stump, and the course things had taken down there did not impress me with the idea that a charter obtained in Tennessee would have very much financial standing abroad, on account of the position of the State with regard to its debt.

Q. You did not want to organize there because you thought it would not give you a good financial standing before the country?—A. I thought it would perhaps present a better appearance to the world, as we intended to conduct it in a perfectly legitimate manner, if we got the charter somewhere else for this company. That was my judgment.

Q. In organizing that company in Tennessee was there any subscription for the stock?—A. None whatever.

Q. There never was any subscription made?—A. No, sir. I will say further in answer to that question that at that time I was not the law adviser of the company, and did not charge myself with the duty of advising them; but afterward I got to looking at the law on the subject, and I discovered that we perhaps had not proceeded exactly in accordance with the law, and I intended—

Q. I would much prefer to have you confine yourself to answering my question, and afterwards, if you want to explain, you will be given an opportunity to do so.—A. What is the question?

Q. My question was whether there was any subscription?—A. I said there was not, and then I went on to explain.

Q. The capital stock was put in as $5,000,000?—A. I insist on explaining how that was, and I think I have a right to do it.

Q. You may. You have answered as to the fact. Now explain.—A. I was not the law officer of the company; the law adviser; and if I had been, I was not very well informed about the law in respect to the formation of joint stock companies, because I had had nothing to do with things of that sort except as a lawyer, and those questions had not been presented very often in our courts; but upon examining the law afterwards I discovered that perhaps we were not proceeding exactly in conformity with the law, and I told my associates about it and that when we came to issue this stock we must conform to the requirements of the law in that respect; and I intended to have that done by the subscription of stock.

Q. You say there was no subscription of stock.—A. None whatever; everything that was done appears on those books.

Q. Was anything paid in as capital stock?—A. Nothing at all, except the money that I have already specified.

Q. There was not, in fact, a single dollar of capital stock put into that company when you organized under the law of Tennessee?—A. No, sir; and our law does not require it.

Q. Did those who signed the contract in New York convey to that company the patent right?

The WITNESS. Do you refer to the Pan-Electric Company?

Mr. RANNEY. The Pan-Electric Telephone Company in Tennessee.

A. Yes, sir. Here is the assignment. [Producing paper.]

Q. Did you and your associates—I mean by your associates those who signed the contract in New York—convey to them all the patent rights which you contracted for with Mr. Rogers?—A. All we had.

Q. You made an actual conveyance?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you that paper?—A. Yes, sir; I think it is among the papers here. I have brought all the papers I have. I suppose it is here. I have the original. This is it. [Exhibiting paper marked Exhibit D.]

Q. From your recollection, you and your associates, you say, conveyed everything you had?—A. I know we did, unless something was omitted accidentally. Here is the paper.

Mr. RANNEY. The paper will speak for itself.

Q. As you understood it, you conveyed the whole thing?—A. We intended to convey it all, and I presume all the patents are in there. I have not compared it to see.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Do you mean to say that you conveyed all the rights to all the patents that J. Harris Rogers transferred to the original company?—A. Certainly.

Q. Were there not a number of other inventions having no relation to telephones?—A. Yes, sir; a great many of them. I presume they were all put in this paper.

Q. If you conveyed all these rights to the telephone company, what was the telegraph company based upon?—A. I will look and see. The telegraph company was based upon one instrument alone. Let me look at this paper a moment and see. [Examining paper.] I did not write the paper I have before me.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. In whose handwriting is it?—A. I don't know the handwriting. It seems to be the handwriting of some clerk.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Who signed the paper?—A. J. Harris Rogers, Isham G. Harris, Joseph E. Johnston, and all the original incorporators.

Q. It embraces them all?—A. All the incorporators.

Q. It has been stated that there was a telegraph company organized in New York?—A. It was not organized at all, except here; it was incorporated in New York, and we had the first meeting here. When we organized the Pan-Electric Telephone Company we just selected the same officers, at the suggestion of somebody, for the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company, and that was all that was done.

Q. I understood you that there was no corporation organized in New York?—A. It was not organized in New York; it was organized here; it was incorporated in New York, but it was organized here in Washington; we had the meeting here in Washington and organized it here.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. After looking at that paper, do you say all these inventions were transferred to the telephone company?—A. When I come to look at it I see only the telephonic inventions are embraced. I never looked at this paper carefully. I did not write it. The patents are put down here by numbers, and I would have to make a comparison in order to be certain about it. I desire the committee to understand that I do not recognize any right on the part of Congress to make any inquiry into these matters, and I do not think they are embraced in the scope of the resolution; but still I am ready to answer any question that may be asked. This is a private matter that Congress has no right to inquire into; the courts are the place to settle any matter of this sort; but I have no objection to giving any information I have in my possession. This paper seems to embrace the telephonic patents, but I cannot say exactly without comparing it with the other papers, because the patents are mentioned here by numbers.

Mr. RANNEY. The papers will show for themselves.

The WITNESS. I can make the comparison when I go to my room.

Q. The Tennessee company was organized on the basis of a capital stock of five millions, as you now think, embracing all the patents, subject to verification, with no capital stock subscribed for, and nothing paid in as capital stock?—A. That was in accordance with the Tennessee law.

Q. And you then proceeded to allot to those parties on your book their respective interests represented by the number of shares of stock on that basis?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you gave them certificates accordingly?—A. No; I did not give them certificates. I gave them papers, as I started to explain the other day. I never intended at first that—I did not contemplate the enlargement of this thing—any more people should become interested in it until we got it under way. A thing I omitted to state I will state right now, lest I may be misunderstood. Dr. Rogers at that time had no interest in it. He was merely acting as the attorney for his son. After this organization, and after the stock had been allotted to the original parties to this agreement, Dr. Rogers became interested to the amount of $500,000, transferred to him by his son, who, up to that time, was the only one known upon the books. Then one or both of them transferred to Colonel Looney about $883,000—one-sixth of the $5,000,000. I supposed it would stop there. I supposed the organization would not be enlarged until after we had put the thing in operation and were satisfied it was all right; but, as I told you before, the moment that Colonel Looney got this transfer from Dr. Rogers, he prepared a paper, about like this, and brought it to me: "R. F. Looney is entitled to $833,000 of stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company whenever it is the policy of the board of directors to issue it." That was about the substance of it. I refused to sign it. I told him I did not want any of those things to go out, and that I would enter the transaction on the books without signing the paper.

Q. What did you give Senator Harris?—A. Let me answer the other question first. I declined to sign it and said "I will just enter this as a memorandum on the book to show you are entitled to so much." He insisted that he wanted some evidence of ownership; and finally, to oblige him, I signed that paper and handed it to him. Then I intended, before it went any further, to examine the law carefully and conform to a leading decision that had been made in New York on that subject, which I had read, and to give to Dr. Rogers or to Harry Rogers $2,000,000 worth of this stock for the patents, and to allot the balance of the stock by subscription, as was indicated in the decision which I had read. I don't remember now the exact points. At any rate, within a day or two, before I could do anything of that sort, these orders commenced to come in to me from Looney and from Dr. Rogers. I have handed the orders to the committee. They just came pouring in on me every day and almost every hour, wherever I could be caught, on the street, or in the house, or in the lobbies, and it kept up until, as I said the other day, I saw it would ruin the whole concern, and I determined I would have no more to do with it, and I called this meeting at the Ebbitt House.

Q. I believe you honored the orders you produced the other day, and issued certificates for them?—A. My clerk at first would write a paper showing that John Smith was entitled to so much stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company when the board of directors saw proper to issue it, and to be charged to the account of Dr. Rogers or Harry Rogers. I directed my clerk to do so.

Q. You gave the form of paper the other day?—A. That form was a printed one that was brought to me. I never had one printed at all. I have given you the form I used.

Q. The form of paper which you read the other day, I suppose, is in the record?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you gave papers of that sort to Dr. Rogers, or others, for all those orders?—A. I did not give them to him, but to the parties to whom he gave the orders; every one of them.

Q. All of them?—A. All of them, until I got tired of it, and stopped.

Q. I want to know what you gave Senator Harris to show for his interest?—A. I did not give him anything. He never asked for anything.

Q. You gave him no paper?—A. Nothing at all at that time.

Q. Did you ever give him any paper?—A. After we had this meeting at the Ebbitt House I was directed by the stockholders to get up this certificate, and when I got it up I sent them to everybody that had any interest in the company, as will appear by the stub-book.

Q. Then you gave certificates to Senator Garland and Mr. Atkins and Senator Harris?—A. Yes, sir; of the same sort; all but General Johnston; he would not take his; it is in the book now.

Q. He has never taken his?—A. No; he wouldn't have it.

Q. Did you give Mr. Atkins his?—A. I sent it to him by mail.

Q. Did you give Mr. Money his?—A. Yes, sir; I think I sent it to him by mail also.

Q. All those transactions are detailed in the stock-book, on the stubs, are they?—A. Yes, sir; they are on the stubs of that book.

Q. And you have given to the committee a list of all the stock you issued?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that all those parties but General Johnston hold, so far as you know, the certificates, or did have them?—A. All, except Mr. Fletcher, of Pennsylvania. He never sent to me, and I didn't know where his post-office address was. It is in the book yet.

Q. What was done with the stock in that Tennessee company that your associates did not take? They had $500,000 reserved. What became of that stock reserved originally for Mr. Hewitt?

The WITNESS. Do you mean under the original contract at New York?

Mr. RANNEY. Under the original contract there was a certain number of tenths allotted, and then there was a certain other fraction originally designed for Mr. Hewitt, which he did not take.

A. It was not designed especially for him.

Q. When you made the division of the stock in Tennessee, what became of the interest originally designed for Mr. Hewitt?—A. I didn't make any division in Tennessee.

Q. I refer to the allotment on your books.—A. I didn't make any allotment there. I simply allotted it to the original incorporators here in Washington. Tennessee had nothing to do with it.

Q. That is what I want to get at. On your stock-book I see you have carried to the credit of the individuals a certain amount of stock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What I want to know is whether that stock that you carried to the credit of each of the individuals on that book embraced the whole of the $5,000,000?—A. You mean to inquire about the reserved $500,000 in the original contract, what became of that?

Q. I do; yes.—A. That is charged upon the book, as you see, to the common stock of the company now.

Q. Belonging to the company?—A. Belonging to the company.

Q. In other words, then, your company in Tennessee took to itself stock in its own company to the amount of the reserve?—A. We had no company in Tennessee. Do you mean the local company?

Q. Yes.—A. That was here in Washington. That belongs to the company. It is common stock of the company.

Q. I designate it as the Tennessee company, because it was organized under the laws of Tennessee.—A. I thought may be you were confounding it with the local company of Tennessee.

Q. Not at all. The company I have been speaking of is the one to which I refer. I have not come to the local companies yet.—A. That stock still belongs to the company—so much of it as has not been disposed of. Some of it has been disposed of.

Q. You allotted their shares to the respective associates?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And then the amount reserved was allotted to the company itself and held as the stock of the company?—A. Yes, sir; it belongs to the company yet; all that has not been disposed of; some of it has been disposed of.

Q. In other words, your company, which was organized with a capital stock of $5,000,000, allotted to itself a certain portion of its stock, owned by itself, and which nobody had paid for?—A. Yes, sir; they had paid for it with these patents. That was the only pay there was.

Q. Had the company paid for that stock; and if so, how much did it amount to in all?—A. I could tell you by looking at the books. It amounted probably to nearly $700,000.

Q. In the original allotment of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, organized in Tennessee, how much was allotted to the company?—A. Five hundred thousand dollars under that agreement; but I was going to explain, if you would allow me, how it didn't happen to be that much.

Q. You may do so.—A. That contract provides that Dr. Rogers was to have the right to dispose of $170,000 of stock to persons that he had previously made contracts with. An order came to issue that stock—

Q. And that was taken out of it?—A. No; just hear me a moment and I will explain it. When we came to issue that stock it was a question, under the terms of that agreement, whether or not it should come out of Dr. Rogers's $2,000,000 of stock or whether it should come out of this $500,000 of reserved stock. Dr. Rogers was not present at the meeting, and Senator Harris said: "It appears from the terms of this agreement that it should come out of Dr. Rogers's stock; but we will give him the benefit of the doubt, and we will take it out of the common stock," which was done. I intended, and I thought I had given out $170,000 in accordance with that agreement; but when I came to look at the books the other day I found I was mistaken, and Dr. Rogers was entitled to $30,000 more of that stock than I had given him. I didn't know it until I looked at the books the other day.

Q. You said you found that organization was illegal?—A. You misunderstood me. I did not say anything of the sort.

Q. What did you say?—A. I said we had organized the company, as I understood it, exactly in conformity with the laws of Tennessee, where it was incorporated; but after that time I began to have some doubt whether or not we could allot the stock to each stockholder without subscribing for it, and without receiving some value for it. There was a decision in New York on that subject, which you are familiar with, I suppose. So I intended to allot to Harris Rogers $2,000,000 for his patents, valuing his patents at that amount.

Q. What you mean is, you found it was illegal to allot to the company?—A. No; I did not find it was illegal. I say I had doubts about it. I do not say yet it was illegal. I think, in all probability, it was entirely correct, and that I can sustain it in any court; but still it is a question.

Q. You say, as a lawyer, that the laws of Tennessee at that time authorized the formation of a corporation with a capital stock of $5,000,000 without the capital stock being paid in?—A. Yes, sir; I say it as a lawyer and as an individual. If we are to discuss the law points I want the authorities here, and I think I can maintain my position. I have been in the habit of doing it on the authorities.

Mr. HALL. I object to the range the testimony is taking. I do not think it is at all proper to go into these matters.

The WITNESS. If my capacity as a lawyer is to be called into question I am willing to discuss the subject with Mr. Ranney. I may be at fault; lawyers sometimes are.

Q. You believe it was lawful?—A. Yes, sir; I think so; that is my opinion.

Q. To organize a corporation without any subscription to the stock and without paying any money in?—A. Yes, sir; I think under the laws of our State we had a perfect right to organize it just as we did; and I am not clear that we had not the right to do it under the general law. There are some statutory enactments in different States which require a different procedure; but I am not quite sure I could not maintain the perfect legality of this transaction in any court. That is merely my legal opinion.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Was there not something paid in?—A. I will explain what was paid in. We paid in so much money to develop these patents.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. And you paid in the inventions?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Were not the patents transferred as a consideration for this stock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Those patents belonged to individuals before that?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You treated the capital stock as paid by the transfer of the patent rights?—A. Yes, sir; they belonged to the association until they were transferred to the company.

Q. That is to say, the patent-rights which you had bought in New York, or taken an interest in under that contract, and which you reckoned as worth $1,000,000 as between yourselves, you put into the corporation at $5,000,000?—A. Yes, sir; and I think we had a right to put it in at $100,000,000 if we had wanted to.

Q. That is the law of Tennessee?—A. I think it is the law of New York or Massachusetts, or anywhere else. I think it is the law everywhere that a company may be capitalized as high as you please, unless there is some limitation placed upon it by statutory enactment.

Mr. MILLARD. That is not the law of New York.

Mr. RANNEY. Nor of Massachusetts, nor of New Jersey.

The WITNESS (Mr. Young). I have not examined the law; there may be some statutory limitation upon the amount.

Mr. HALL. There should be no controversy here about what the law is as to these matters.

Mr. RANNEY. If your opinion about the law of Tennessee is not better than your opinion about the law of Massachusetts, I might be inclined to doubt it.

The WITNESS. Lawyers will differ, you know. Perhaps I might have the same opinion about you; lawyers will differ; I find you at fault very frequently. If you want to discuss the law, I will discuss it with you.

The CHAIRMAN. I suppose there would be no limitation unless there was a statutory limitation.

The WITNESS. That is my view.

The CHAIRMAN. But there would be a restriction, perhaps, in requiring a certain amount of money to be paid in on each share.

The WITNESS. I presume so.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the way it is in Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANNEY. I don't care for any discussion on the law.

The WITNESS. I have no disposition to discuss it unless you wish to.

Mr. RANNEY. I have all the answer I desire on that subject and have passed from it.

The WITNESS. The courts are the proper judges of that matter.

Q. I want to know if your associates and yourself—I mean by your associates Senator Harris, Senator Garland, Mr. Atkins, and General Johnston—who formed that association in New York were men of capital and means?—A. Well, I never made any inquiry about their private means. If you want to know the extent of mine I will give you the information.

Q. I want to know whether you were capitalists, having money to put into the enterprise?—A. I am not a capitalist, but I could have put in all the money that would have been necessary. I will give the gentleman—

The CHAIRMAN. I don't think we should go into that.

The WITNESS. I suppose, Mr. Ranney, that I—

Mr. HALL. You need not answer as to that matter. You have some rights here.

The WITNESS. Mr. Ranney has asked a thousand other questions just as bad. I will give a schedule of my property, if it is wanted.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. RANNEY. Dr. Rogers says he took these gentlemen in, not as capitalists, but for their position and well-known integrity and reputation, and I want to know whether that is so or not.

The WITNESS. You had better ask him. If you want to impeach a witness that is not the way to do it.

Mr. RANNEY. I am not impeaching any witness.

The WITNESS. I do not know whether that was the object of Dr. Rogers or not, and so I cannot say.

Q. I want to know what the fact is. Were they men of large means; capitalists?—

A. What would you call men of means? How much money would it require?

Mr. OATES. I object.

The WITNESS. I perceive the gentleman's object, and I am willing to meet it.

Mr. OATES. I object to the question as highly irrelevant.

The WITNESS. We are not quite as rich as the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. MILLARD. It may be highly material to know whether these gentlemen were taken in for their influence or for their money.

Mr. OATES. If the gentleman will look at the resolution he will see that we are directed to inquire in reference to the consideration for this stock. That is proper. But as to what these gentlemen are worth—

Mr. RANNEY. An important element is whether this stock was given to these gentlemen because of their official position or because of their capital.

The WITNESS. Dr. Rogers has stated it was not, and I have stated it was not—

The CHAIRMAN. Allow the committee to determine this question.

The WITNESS. To be sure.

Mr. OATES. I submit it is immaterial to inquire what these gentlemen are worth. It is material to inquire of the witness what was paid for the stock. That inquiry has been made, and it has been answered time and again that no money was paid for it. What the gentlemen were worth and what they owned is a highly immaterial question, I submit. It is proper to show whether the stock was given them because of their official influence, or for any other consideration; but it is not proper to show what these gentlemen were worth, or to go into their private affairs.

Mr. EDEN. The resolution says, "What money, service, or influence."

Mr. OATES. What they paid for the stock or what they gave for it.

Mr. RANNEY. The question is whether Dr. Rogers gave this stock to these individuals because of their position or influence, or whether he gave it to them because of the money which they would put into it.

Mr. HALL. If he gave it to them it probably was not for their money, because that would have been a pretty dear gift.

Mr. RANNEY. I ask for a yea and nay vote on the question.

Mr. OATES. On the question of bringing out what these gentlemen were worth?

Mr. RANNEY. On the question which I put. My question is: Were these men men of capital or means to any extent?

Mr. OATES. I object to the question. I do not think we should inquire what they were worth or what property they owned. I make the objection simply on the ground that the inquiry is not material.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair thinks the objection is well taken.

Mr. RANNEY. I would like to have a yea and nay vote on it.

Mr. MOFFATT. I wish to say in explanation of the vote which I shall give in favor of asking the question, that I do so on the ground that the answer will show whether or not these people were interested as capitalists or for some other reason.

Mr. RANNEY. It is for that purpose I ask the question, and not with a view of prying into the private affairs of any man.

Mr. EDEN. The inquiry is not exactly as to their means, but whether or not they were capitalists.

Mr. RANNEY. Simply whether they were capitalists.

Mr. HALL. I have no objection to asking what the consideration was.

Mr. RANNEY. I would like a yea and nay vote on the question.

The CHAIRMAN. The chair will state that the propriety of a question of this kind rests with the gentleman who puts it; but we all recognize as practicing lawyers that questions of this kind are not to be put so as to expose the private means or condition of men unless it becomes necessary in the course of the investigation. The chair does not think this inquiry is necessary in this investigation, because, whatever may be the means of these gentlemen, it is nowhere provided, and it is not alleged by anybody, that they were to contribute their means to this company or that they were to pay anything for the stock they received. It seems to me to be an immaterial matter.

The WITNESS. I want it to go on the record, Mr. Chairman, that I am willing to answer the question.

Mr. MILLARD. I want to say before voting, that I do not understand the inquiry of Mr. Ranney to be with a view of trying an issue as to the amount of their property and the amount of money they are worth. It is upon the point as to what Dr. Rogers expected would be contributed by these men; whether they were to contribute money, or whether they were to contribute their influence.

Mr. OATES. That is not the question put.

Mr. MILLARD. I conceive it to be, and upon that ground I will vote as I do.

The CHAIRMAN. Those who favor the allowance of this question will vote aye and those who oppose it will vote no.

Thereupon the roll was called, and the vote was as follows:

Ayes—Messrs. Ranney, Millard, Hanback, and Moffatt. Noes—The Chairman and Messrs. Oates, Eden, Hale, and Hall (Mr. Eden casting the vote of Mr. Hale).

So the question was not allowed.

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a statement.

The CHAIRMAN. You may do so, if it is relevant to the inquiry.

The WITNESS. I think it is.

Mr. RANNEY. I shall object to your making any statement on the point which the committee has ruled out, unless I can have the privilege of pursuing my inquiry.

The WITNESS. I simply want it to go on the record in justice to myself. I have heard this whole thing discussed before—

The CHAIRMAN. It is immaterial.

Mr. RANNEY. If you go into it, I shall want to go into the whole of it.

Mr. HALL. I understand it is entered of record that the witness is willing to answer. That is proper.

Q. In the arrangement entered into in New York, I perceive that all your associates were to do was to contribute certain sums called for to the extent of $150 each.—A. That was the limitation fixed in that paper.

Q. None of you undertook to pay or agreed to pay any money for the interest in these patents which you obtained, except that you were liable to be assessed to the amount of $150 each, and no more.—A. And such further sum as the executive committee might fix, as you will see by looking at the paper. They were to be assessed more if the executive committee decided upon it. They could not be assessed more without consent.

Q. There could be no further assessment without whose consent?—A. Without the consent of the executive committee.

Mr. OATES. I object to this examination on the ground that the paper speaks for itself.

Q. By the figures which you gave I see you assessed these men to that extent?—A. We assessed them for over $400.

Q. But that they all received back, and something more?—A. Oh, yes; we thought we had a right to do that.

Q. When you bought these patents they were already in operation, were they?—A. I can't say that they were in operation.

Q. The telephone patents were in operation?—A. No; not in operation. There were two telephones put up and we had talked through the two telephones at a short distance; probably a mile or two.

Q. Did you pay anything for going on and developing the patents?—A. General Johnston and Harry Rogers continued their experiments and tests, however. I was not here, but it was reported to me from time to time. I was here when we got the use of a wire from here to New York, and talked over that. Then they went to Richmond and made arrangements to get a wire from Richmond to Washington, and talked over that. We made various tests of the telephonic instruments and a good many of the telegraphic instruments. Those I did not witness very many of; but we got an expert, Mr. Maynard, I think, to make some examinations and tests. General Johnston can tell you more about it than I can. I was not present.

Q. How much money was paid out in perfecting the inventions, if any?—A. We paid out about $400 apiece, the original five of us, and Harry Rogers and Dr. Rogers paid in proportion to the stock they owned.

Q. As a matter of fact this interest in these patent rights was a gift to you and your associates, if that is all you paid for it?—A. No, sir; it was not a gift and nothing like a gift.

Q. Was it a purchase?—A. That contract shows exactly that it was a contract; and you will permit me to say that every company ever organized for the development of a patent was organized the same way. You cannot find one that was not.

Q. There is a difference between developing a patent and developing a corporation, is there not?—A. Well, there may be some difference. It depends upon what the corporation is for. A corporation don't need any developing that I know of, except—

Q. That written contract expresses the whole of it, does it?—A. That expresses it all.

Q. Then we will not dwell on it.—A. Just as you like.

Q. Were you a member of this Washington company?—A. I see my name as one of the directors and incorporators; I did not know it until afterwards; I see I was.

Q. This company in Washington embraced the District of Columbia, Maryland, and Delaware?—A. And Virginia and West Virginia; four States and the Territory.

Q. You sold that corporation the right to use those patents in the States you have named?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you say you got for it?—A. Our contract with them shows that they were to put up exchanges in those different States and localities and organize a joint stock company, and we were to have one-quarter of the stock.

Q. That was all they were to pay you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. One-quarter of the stock on the basis of a capital of how much?—A. Five million dollars originally; it was reduced to $2,500,000.

Q. And you got your certificate for that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That company was organized here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you attend the meetings of the directors?—A. I do not know as I did. I believe I was at one of them. I was not here much.

Q. Did you have any capital stock of your own in that company?—A. No, sir; except what was allotted to me as director. I had $50,000 as a director, I believe.

Q. In order to be a director you had to be a stockholder?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You, as a stockholder, had $50,000 of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you get that?—A. From the company.

Q. What company?—A. The Washington company.

Q. Was it a gift to you?—A. Yes, sir; it was given to me for my services as director under their by-laws.

Q. You paid nothing for it. Then you had your interest in that company as a member of the Pan-Electric Company of Tennessee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you the books of that company?—A. Oh, no; I never had them.

Q. Can you tell who the stockholders are?—A. Oh, no; I can't tell anything about it. The secretary is right there behind you. I expect he can tell.

Q. Did you ever sell any of your stock?—A. No, sir; I never sold a dollar's worth of the stock to anybody.

Q. Did you ever transfer your stock in the Tennessee Telephone Company—not the subordinate company, but the original Pan-Electric Telephone Company?

The WITNESS. No; individually?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. Never a dollar, except—

Q. Did you ever pledge it?—A. Never a dollar of it; it was not necessary. I could have put up the whole thing with my own means.

Q. You gave away some of it?—A. Yes, sir; I stated how that was. I gave some of it to two little girls that were named after me. Right there I wish to correct a mistake; I see the official report of my testimony is incorrect. It is stated that I gave some of the stock to a friend of mine who was in distress; that is a mistake; he is about as far from being in distress, financially, as any man I know of. I didn't state it that way. He was an old friend of mine, and I talked with him, a long time ago, incidentally, about our company, plans, &c., and he proposed to go into it and to pay for the stock what I had to pay for it, and I told him he could do so.

Q. Who are you speaking of?—A. Mr. Julius Taylor. The stock appears in the name of his wife. I want it to appear that he is not impecunious and not in distress.

Q. What stock was that?—A. Stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

Q. You spoke the other day about the amount of stock you took from the subordinate companies. Were there not notes besides that?—A. Well, there were notes given in payment for what they were to pay us. They did not pay us the full amount in cash. We got some notes.

Q. Do you know how much you got in notes?—A. I don't remember. I could tell by looking. The notes are down at my room. I think the amount is $4,000 from the Texas Company, and probably $2,000 or $3,000 or $1,000 from the Alabama Company. I don't remember without examining the notes.

Q. You got notes from the Texas Company?—A. Yes, sir; we got $4,000 in notes from them.

Q. The certificates which you issued afterawhile have this restriction about testing the patents?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How soon did the idea arise to make the issuance subject to that?

The WITNESS. With me?

Mr. RANNEY. The idea that you would make your certificates subject to the test of the patents as to their validity?—A. That arose with me the moment I found anybody was disposing of the stock.

Q. Do you mean that you and your associates conferred together, and that you would not consent to a form of certificate of stock unless it contained that provision?—

A. Yes, sir; at a meeting of the board, and Dr. Rogers was there, and Colonel Looney.

Q. Why was that?—A. I have stated that the reason was that we did not want to have this stock go out until we had established the validity of our patents by a judicial decision, so that we might impose on nobody and nobody might lose by investment in it.

Q. You were aware that those companies to whom you sold and which were organized were putting out certificates in the usual way, were you not?—A. I was not, and don't know yet that they did it at all, except what they gave us.

Q. Did you suppose the certificates they gave you were any different from those they were giving other parties?—A. I didn't suppose anything about it, because I didn't know they were giving them to other parties. I never had any information that they were.

Q. Did you ever inquire?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you ever take any steps to see that the companies to whom you sold, and that were organized, did not put out certificates in the ordinary form?—A. We had no authority over those companies at all.

Q. Did you ever take any steps to ascertain whether that was done?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you make any such condition in your transfers to them?—A. That they weren't to transfer the stock?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir. We made the condition in the transfer that they were not to issue bonds beyond a certain amount, but we had no sort of control over the issuance of stock.

Q. Can you see any difference in the propriety of the two things? Was there any greater propriety in subordinate companies with the capital of $5,000,000, more or less, putting out stock on the public in the ordinary form than that the original Pan-Electric Company should do it?—A. Do you want my opinion on that as a matter of propriety, or is that an inquiry directed to a matter of fact?

Q. Do you see any difference between the two?—A. I do.

Q. You can state it.—A. I had no right to control the movements of other people. I did have a right—

Mr. HALL. I think this inquiry ought to be limited.

The WITNESS. We have gone all through it before. I do see a difference. I had no right—

Mr. HALL. I object to the line of inquiry. I do not want to be captious about it, but it seems to me it ought to be confined to facts. We can form our own conclusions.

Mr. RANNEY. He testified to it before. Why didn't you object when the chairman put the question?

Mr. HALL. He did not put any such question.

The CHAIRMAN. I put a question very similar. That was my purpose.

Mr. HANBACK. The witness was questioned on that subject and answered.

Mr. HALL. The question now is as to his distinction between one method of procedure and another method of procedure.

The WITNESS. I have explained that very question very often to the Bell attorneys.

Mr. RANNEY. I insist upon my question.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the question is proper. It is about the same question that I asked this morning. It is the same in substance.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Hall thinks it is competent for you and not for me.

Mr. HALL. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Hall was not here this morning when I put the question.

Mr. HALL. I object to the question in order to save time. Whether the chairman put such a question as that or not I think the question is immaterial, and can only tend to prolong the examination.

Mr. RANNEY. Let us go on.

Mr. HALL. Very well; only I insist that I shall have the same right to ask immaterial questions hereafter.

Mr. RANNEY. Certainly.

The WITNESS. The question is not put in the exact form I have been in the habit of answering heretofore. I would like to hear it read. [Question read by reporter.] That question proceeds upon the hypothesis that they did do it. I do not know that they did do it. If you want the question answered upon a hypothetical case, I will give you my opinion about that. I do not know that they issued any stock at all except what they gave us. If you want me to answer the question on the theory that they did, I will do it. Do you desire it?

Mr. RANNEY. Answer the question as you please. I do not want to dictate your answer.

The WITNESS. You have been dictating all the while, and I supposed you wanted to this time. If you assume they did issue stock (which I do not admit, because I do not know), my opinion about the propriety of the matter is this: They were local corporations. People were presumed to know who they were, what their responsibility was, and how far they would be able to meet their obligations. I had no right to control them, and I made no effort to control them. I do not know that they ever did issue any stock. I had a right, however, to control myself and to use my exertions in a proper way to control the corporation of which I was a member; and I did not think it was proper for the corporation of which I was a member, either upon the ground of correct business transactions, or upon the ground of public morality, to issue stock and allow it to fall into the hands of anybody who might chance to purchase it without their having an opportunity of knowing exactly its value and what they were doing.

Q. You say you were a director in the Washington company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. With a capital of $5,000,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That you were paid $50,000 for being a director in that company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And that you were a director in that company and do not know to this day whether they ever issued any stock or not?—A. I do not. I only attended one meeting of the board that I remember, and I don't think that question was discussed at all; but if it had been discussed I should have said they would have had a right to issue their stock if they wanted to. That was a corporation I had no right to control except to the extent of one vote; and I think if it had been suggested to me I should have voted against it.

Q. I simply ask you whether you say now you do not know whether or not they ever did issue any stock?—A. Of course I do. I do not know whether they did or not. I never looked at the books. I think I only attended one meeting, and I was made a director, I think, without being consulted. I don't remember that I was consulted.

Q. Were you present when they voted to reduce the capital stock from $5,000,000 to $2,500,000?—A. I think I was. I don't know exactly what action was taken. I know I suggested, when it came to my knowledge it had been capitalized to that amount, that that was too much, and General Johnston agreed with me. I don't know really as the change has been made on the books. My understanding was that it had been reduced. I see the secretary is here. He can tell.

Q. Did you not, before that was done, ascertain how much stock was outstanding?—A. No, sir; I made no examination of the books at all. I was only here, I think, at one meeting. At that time I was confined to my room, and I went away immediately afterwards on account of my health, and didn't come back here again for months.

Q. Do you know anybody who holds stock in that company except yourself?—A. I haven't examined the books to see. General Bradley T. Johnston is the president, and I presume he holds stock. Dr. Henkle I see present. He was a stockholder, as I heard him say. I think Major Gardner is a stockholder, and I have heard of a number of others, some Baltimore merchants, whose names I do not recall just now. A Mr. Ray, a merchant here in the city, is a stockholder and a director.

Q. Did you ever sell any of the stock in that company?—A. No, sir; not a dollar's worth of any sort.

Q. Have you here the certificate of your $50,000 worth?—A. No, sir; I have not a certificate of that many shares. The book will show how much I have. I gave $10,000 of this stock to Mr. Money, and I gave my clerk $1,000—

Q. I am referring to the Washington company.—A. Oh, I misunderstood you. I don't believe I ever did have a certificate for that stock. I know I never got one. It was never issued to me.

Q. Do you know who holds any of the stock in the Alabama Company?—A. No, sir; I do not, except ourselves. I understand Mr. Upshaw does, and young Mr. Looney, and Mr. Enoch Insley, a gentleman of large wealth in our State. I understand he is a stockholder. I believe he told me so.

Q. Do you know any members of Congress who hold any?—A. Oh, no; I never heard of any.

Q. Did you keep the books of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, the parent company?—A. My clerks did. I sort of supervised it. I am not a very accomplished book-keeper.

Q. Is this record book in your handwriting or in whose?—A. In the handwriting of different clerks of mine. I don't think a single one of the entries is in my handwriting.

Q. Who were your clerks?—A. I have had a half a dozen. A young man named Hirshfield and a young man named Tucker wrote most of them, I see.

Q. When were the entries made?—A. At the time they purport to have been written up. The minutes of one meeting are not on that book, I see; the last one we had.

Q. Why was that?—A. I wrote them off in rough, and this investigation was talked of, and I have made no entry on the books since. That was the last meeting that was had.

Q. How many meetings have the directors of the Pan-Electric Company had since the first day of last June?—A. I do not think we have had any except one. The books will show. There was no occasion for it that I know of. I was not here. I don't know whether they had any or not. I do not see a record of any.

Q. You say there has been one?—A. There was one about three or four weeks ago—that celebrated knocking out scene that you were all so anxious to hear about the other day. That was the only one we had. It is not on these books.

Q. Do you know who attended that meeting?—A. Yes, sir; Senator Harris and myself, Mr. Atkins, Colonel Looney, Dr. Rogers, and Harry Rogers. Nobody else was there.

Q. Was General Johnston there?—A. Oh, yes; he was there.

Q. Look at your record-book and tell me the date of the last meeting that is recorded.—A. (Examining book.) The last meeting recorded is Monday, May 4, 1885.

Q. Do you mean to say there has never been any meeting of the directors or any official action since then?—A. No. There have been frequent meetings of different members of the board of directors, but no regular meeting of the board of directors except the one I spoke of, and that could hardly be called a regular meeting of the board. This meeting was held just before I left the city, in the spring of 1884. My health was very bad. I got badly hurt, and I was not able to sit up when that meeting was held.

Q. You said 1884; was that 1884 or 1885?—A. 1885. I went away and did not come back again for many months.

Q. Who acted as secretary in your absence?—A. Nobody that I know of.

Q. There was no assistant secretary?—A. No, sir.

Q. Have you mentioned all the clerks you had?—A. Oh, no; in 1883-'84 I had a young man named Eli A. Hirshfield; he has been in my office for many years. When I came on here I appointed him clerk to my committee; he did some writing for me; then later I had William C. Ingraham; I see this is in his handwriting.

Q. Did you ever have a clerk by the name of Nathaniel Hill?—A. No, sir; he was never my clerk; Colonel Hill was about my room very frequently, but he was never an employé of the company; he was about my room very often, and did writing for me very frequently; he assisted in making some of these divisions.

Q. These records were made up in the regular way?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. They are not in your handwriting, but those of your clerk's?—A. I could not write at the time; my arm was paralyzed.

Q. Did you know of the resolution offered in the House by Mr. Robinson in regard to the appointment of Mr. Rogers as electrician?—A. Yes, sir; I know all about it.

Q. After it was introduced by him it was referred to your committee, or the committee on which you were?—A. Yes, sir; I think it was.

Q. Do you remember what that resolution was?—A. No; I do not. I think it was to declare him appointed electrician, and his brother along with him. I know that was talked about. I talked with Dr. Rogers about it.

Q. Did you have anything to do with recommending him?—A. I think I recommended him. I would have done it if I had been asked to do it. I will state all about what I did have to do with it.

Q. You may answer it in your own way.—A. When I was at Hot Springs in 1883, after I had been re-elected to Congress in 1882, I received a letter from Dr. Rogers in reference to having his son appointed the electrician of the House. I don't remember all that was in the letter, but some reference was made in that letter to the probability of General Atkins being elected Clerk, and wanting me to write to Atkins, or to speak to Atkins, to see about his son's being appointed electrician. I wrote back to him in substance, as I remember, that it would not be a delicate thing to say to Mr. Atkins, and I declined to mention it to him at all, and never did mention it to him. He may have written me more than one letter. He seemed anxious that his son should be appointed. I have seen a letter published that I had forgotten writing, but I presume I did write it. It is about what I would have written—that I being a member of Congress, and Senator Harris being a Senator, it would not look very well, and it would hardly be the proper thing to do for us to try to secure his appointment as electrician; and I see I remarked in that letter that it would look something like the Credit Mobilier.

When I came on here I had several conversations with Dr. Rogers, and he was anxious that his elder son, Harry, should be appointed electrician of the House, and also that his youngest son, Mr. James C. Rogers, should be appointed as his assistant. We had a number of conversations about it, as detailed by Mr. Rogers the other day in his testimony; and a conversation occurred something like what he stated, as I remember, at one of our meetings. He said he would like to be appointed. It was not put on the ground at all that he could be of any special service to our company, but that he had been removed under the former administration, and that, as a Democrat, he wanted to get back. He remarked at that meeting that he cared nothing about the salary, that that didn't make any difference, but that he wanted to get back; and Senator Garland said something like what was testified to—"Well, if you don't want the salary, we will take it;" something like that. That was all that was ever said at any meeting of the board of directors that I have any recollection about. I know Dr. Rogers spoke to me several times afterwards about it.

Mr. OATES:

Q. Is the letter to which you referred the letter of November 4, 1883?—A. Let me look at it. (Examining letter.) Yes; I presume I wrote that letter. That is about what I should have written; but that is not what I was alluding to. The first one I wrote, as I recollect, was while I was at the Hot Springs, and I wrote from there. This letter appears to have been sent from Memphis. I spent most of that summer at the Hot Springs, and my recollection is I received one letter while I was there.

Mr. RANNEY. I think the letter of August 21, 1883, is the one to which you refer.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; that is from Hot Springs.

Mr. RANNEY. Now, I will put in that letter here. I want the whole letter put in. The original is here, I understand.

The letter is as follows:

HOT SPRINGS, ARK., August 21, 1883.

MY DEAR DOCTOR: Your letter of the 16th instant, forwarded from Memphis, reached me here this morning, where I have been for a week past. Senator Harris is in Texas, where I understand he will remain for some time. I cannot therefore know the contents of your letter to him only as I gather it from what you write me.

I agree with you perfectly in the conclusion that we should be "up and going." The present disturbed condition of the telegraphic world presents a peculiarly favorable opportunity for us to put our system before the public, but we should be careful to do it in such a way as would start it on a solid basis, so [far] as commending it to public confidence is concerned. It seems to me that we might make most favorable terms with the "American Postal Telegraph Company," for these reasons:

If Harry's repeating system is what we think it is, and can be put into practical operation, the American Postal Telegraph Company could, by cheapening the cost of telegraphy so much as that would enable them to do, compete upon more equal terms with the Western Union than if the Government (as it certainly will) should establish a postal telegraphic system of its own. It would be in a better condition to sell to the Government its plant, improvements, &c., than any other company, or if it should not sell to the Government and conclude to keep its lines operating, no other company could successfully compete with it. I think I see what Gould proposes to do. He sees that the days of the Western Union are numbered; that it must go. Hence his indifference to the strike which at one time reached such formidable proportions. He is therefore switching off on the telephone, and is every day engaged actively through his agents in buying out all the different exchanges in the country and putting them under one management. One of his agents bought all in this State a few days [ago]; and, by the way, they have gotten hold of some invention by which they can talk over long lines, and are now putting Little Rock in communication with nearly every town and village in the State. I talked from here to Little Rock yesterday. What is this? Perhaps they are infringing Harry's patent.

But to resume on Gould: He sees plainly enough that the next Congress will establish a postal telegraph, and he is arranging to sell the plant of the Western Union to the Government for that purpose, and to accomplish this object he will put in the field the largest lobby army he has ever had in Washington, and the company we may be associated with will be the only one that will have the ghost of a chance to compete with him. So it seems to me that if these views were presented to the American Postal Company they would at once see the importance of joining forces with us. I impressed all this on Colonel Looney before he left, and supposed he would have laid it before the company at once.

I hope Colonel Looney will be able to raise the necessary amount of money as easily as he thinks he can, but I am afraid he will find it a more difficult undertaking than he at present imagines. While he is possessed of great energy, fine business capacity, and most engaging manners, yet you know he is a most sanguine man, and is so happily constituted that everything to him has the tint and perfume of the rose—every cloud has a silver lining. Hence he sometimes gets in the clouds. I on the contrary see things “as through a glass darkly” (vide Saint Paul, I believe), and walk more in the shadow than the sunshine. Hence I take a more conservative and realistic view of things.

In respect to the interest in the matter which he should have, that is a matter, so far as I am concerned, which you are at perfect liberty to determine as you see proper. I am indebted to your generosity for what interest I have in it, and am willing that you should manage the entire matter just as you please, and my personal feeling would lead me to extreme liberality with Colonel Looney. But to present the question in a practical business point of view, is not the amount suggested in my letter to General Johnston a most liberal donation as a retainer? If Colonel Looney should succeed so well as he anticipates, it could be increased to an amount commensurate with the service he may render to the association. But suppose he should fail, would we not need all our available resources to enlist the services and influence of some one else? Would it not be safer as well as juster for his interest to be contingent? These suggestions present themselves to me as reasonable precautions, such as ordinary business prudence would dictate.

What is Colonel L.’s programme? How does he expect to raise the money? I think your suggestion practical to start some one of our contemplated enterprises and sell enough of the stock to put the others afloat. The telephone is the quickest and easiest method of doing it. If Harry can by any possibility invent any kind of a telephone system that will not be a palpable infringement of any existing patent, we can start it on a small scale and dictate terms to Gould. For such a purpose I could in this town before sundown to-day get subscribed half a million of dollars. Everybody is looking to the telephone as the coming means of rapid communication. I am of opinion that we had better incorporate as soon as possible, and if you deem it necessary for that purpose I will come to Washington City by 1st September. We will have to go [to] New Jersey, Connecticut, or Maryland. I know of no other State where the laws on that subject are broad enough to cover all we want.

Has Colonel L. seen Ewing? I think it important for him to do so. Tell Harry to put his telephone wits to work. That is the broadest thoroughfare to fortune. Let me hear from you. Will be here for some time longer.

Your friend,

CASEY YOUNG.

The WITNESS. I suppose I wrote it. I don’t know. To which one of these letters is my attention directed now? When I was asked the question I remembered writing one from Hot Springs, but I had forgotten writing one from Memphis. I see it here.

Mr. OATES. That is not the one you referred to in which you said it would be something like the Credit Mobilier?

The WITNESS. No; I thought I wrote it from Hot Springs, but it seems that I wrote it from Memphis.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Take, first, the one written from Hot Springs. I have put that in first. The date is August 21, 1883, and it is No. 13 of the letters. At the same time I want to put in the letter of November 4, 1883, No. 15, and also No. 18, dated January 24, 1884. I first call your attention to the following paragraph from letter No. 13:

“But to resume on Gould: He sees plainly enough that the next Congress will establish a postal telegraph, and he is arranging to sell the plant of the Western Union to the Government for that purpose, and to accomplish this object he will put in the field the largest lobby army he has ever had in Washington, and the company we may be associated with will be the only one that will have the ghost of a chance to compete with him. So it seems to me that if these views were presented to the American Postal Company they would at once see the importance of joining forces with us. I impressed all this on Colonel Looney before he left, and supposed he would have laid it before the company at once.”

A. Now wait a moment until I find the letter that was in reply to. I received one or two letters from Dr. Rogers about the American Postal Telegraph Company. At that time I didn’t know exactly what sort of concern it was. Here is one of the letters. I will read it if the committee please.

Q. Is that the one this is a reply to?—A. Not this particular one perhaps, but I received several, and this is the only one I find.

Q. I prefer to take this up in topics. If there is any letter that bears on the letter in question, you may read it.—A. I have a letter here before me similar to others he wrote, and I can recall their contents by reference to that letter. He had written me two or three times about a proposed contract with the American Postal Telegraph Company.

The CHAIRMAN. I see this letter of August 21 was in reply to one of August 16.

The WITNESS. I do not find that letter of August 16, unless it may be among the letters I handed in. If among the letters I handed in there is one of August 16, that would be the letter.

The CHAIRMAN. I think those letters were returned to you.

The WITNESS. No; I left them all here with the committee, every one I received. I received several letters from Dr. Rogers in reference to a contract that the American Postal Telegraph Company had proposed. There is the contract which they proposed [indicating paper]. Just about that time there had been a strike of the telegraph operators all over the country, and there was a good deal of popular prejudice against the Gould system of telegraphs, railroads, &c. It was regarded as one of the heartless monopolies that people are always warring against. He had written me several letters about that, and this letter was in reply to a letter in reference to the contract which is set out here. I did not know then exactly what it was, but he had told me that he had some sort of charter over in New York for a postal telegraph company. I did not know how it was organized or who its president or secretary were at that time. I learned afterwards.

This letter was written in reference to that. There were frequent newspaper paragraphs going over the country, that in consequence of these strikes Gould wanted to give up his telegraphic property, and that the Postal Telegraph Company would take the place of it. He had told me frequently about the great value of this telegraphic instrument of his. I did not understand it very well, but he represented it to be one of very great value, and I presume from this letter I thought—I don't remember what I thought at the time—that if some competing company had control of that instrument perhaps it would be a public benefit and at the same time a matter of profit to those who might own it, to compete with the Western Union Telegraph Company. That was my idea at the time. I see this paragraph is italicized. I don't know whether the italics are mine or not. Possibly they are; but I wrote it in view of this contract lying here, and the frequent letters I had received from him about a consolidation with that company. That is all I recollect about the matter.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you the original letter?—A. I have here a letter which embraces the contract.

Q. The original letter of August 16?—A. I have not unless it is among the letters I handed in the other day.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Now, I want to read to you the two preceding paragraphs:

"I agree with you perfectly in the conclusion that we should be up and doing. The present disturbed condition of the telegraphic world presents a peculiarly favorable opportunity for us to put our system before the public, but we should be careful to do it in such a way as would start it on a solid basis so far as commending it to the public confidence is concerned. It seems to me that we might make most favorable terms with the American Postal Telegraph Company, for these reasons:

"If Harry's repeating system is what we think it is, and can be put into practical operation, the American Postal Telegraph Company could, by cheapening the cost of telegraphy so much as that would enable them to do, compete upon more equal terms with the Western Union than if the Government, as it certainly will, should establish a postal telegraphic system of its own. It would be in a better condition to sell to the Government its plant, improvements, &c., than any other company, or if it should not sell to the Government, and conclude to keep its lines operating, no other company could successfully compete with it. I think I see what Gould proposes to do. He sees that the days of the Western Union are numbered; that it must go. Hence his indifference to the strike which at one time reached such formidable proportions. He is therefore switching off on the telephone, and is every day engaged actively, through his agents, in buying out all the different exchanges in the country, and putting them under one management. One of his agents bought all in this State a few days ago; and, by the way, they have gotten hold of some invention by which they can talk over long lines, and are now putting Little Rock in communication with nearly every town and village in the State. I talked from here to Little Rock yesterday. What is this? Perhaps they are infringing Harry's patent."

Then follows the paragraph which I read. I want to call your attention to this letter, and deal fairly with you. Does not that look like having something to do with Congress in this matter?—A. No; it does not to me. I don't know how it looks to you. I will explain as far as I remember why that letter was written. At that time it was supposed that an American Postal Telegraph Company of some sort would be organized. Dr. Rogers had written to me that they had offered certain terms, which I thought we ought not to accept. I thought they ought to offer more than is set out in this paper, and I presume I called his attention to the advantages that would result to that company in competing with Gould or anybody else, providing they had the instruments of Harry Rogers, which he conceived to be so valuable. I didn't know its value then, but from his representations to me I thought it would control all telegraphic operations, and that the American Postal Telegraph Company or any other company who had that instrument would be able to compete successfully with Gould; and if the Government did buy any system of telegraph, or establish a postal telegraph system, which I supposed at that time in all probability they would do, it would enable the American Postal Telegraph Company to sell their plant or to sell their instruments to the Government at a greater advantage, if they had ours, than they would otherwise have; not that we wanted to sell ours to them, but if they had our patents, which he wrote to me they wanted, it would make their company much more valuable.

Q. You were contemplating at that time that the Government would establish a postal telegraph?—A. I thought it very probable they would.

Q. And you were contemplating competition with them?—A. No, sir; I was not on our part. It was the American Postal Telegraph Company.

Q. Did you not speak of uniting with them?—A. Let me see what the letter does say. This letter was written several years ago, and I don't remember all the ideas I had at that time. The letter says: "But to resume on Gould; he sees plainly enough that the next Congress will establish a postal telegraph."

Q. Read the whole paragraph.—A. Let me explain as I go along, my dear friend; I have a right to do that. I had seen in the papers that it was in contemplation at the next session of Congress to pass a postal telegraph bill. That was discussed in the papers all over the country, and seemed to be a favorite idea. Everybody seemed to think that project would be brought before Congress and would pass.

"He sees plainly enough that the next Congress will establish a postal telegraph, and he is arranging to sell the plant of the Western Union to the Government for that purpose"—

I heard that from some source; perhaps from the newspapers. I don't know—"and to accomplish this object he will put in the field the largest lobby army he has ever had in Washington, and the company we may be associated with"—

That is, the American Postal Telegraph Company—

"will be the only one that will have the ghost of a chance to compete with him."

I don't know what my idea was. I think I had reference to selling this instrument to them, because I didn't suppose we could compete successfully with him. I was writing to him that this company ought to offer us better terms than are embraced in this contract.

"So it seems to me that if these views were presented to the American Postal Company, they would at once see the importance of joining forces with us. I impressed all this on Colonel Looney before he left, and supposed he would have laid it before the company at once."

Q. Joining forces with them on the lobby?—A. No, not on the lobby. I had no idea of joining forces to lobby any bill through Congress. My idea was to sell our instruments to this company.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. To Gould?—A. To the American Postal Telegraph Company.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I want to be perfectly fair with you. You say, "He is arranging to sell the plant of the Western Union to the Government for that purpose, and to accomplish this object he will put in the field the largest lobby he has ever had in Washington, and the company we may be associated with will be the only one that will have the ghost of a chance to compete with him." So it seems to me that if these views were presented to the American Postal Company they would at once see the importance of joining forces with us. I impressed all this on Colonel Looney before he left, and supposed he would have laid it before the company at once." What did you mean by that other than joining forces with the lobby on Congress?—A. Perhaps I might have selected better language to express my idea.

Q. Does that permit of any other interpretation?—A. That is a matter of judgment between you and me. You are not the only judge. I am giving you my views of it; I have no doubt you will put your interpretation on it. As well as I can remember now, that had reference alone to the sale of this instrument to that company. I see

I said "join forces with us." I had no idea of becoming their partners. My only idea was to sell this instrument to them. I had no idea of our becoming a part of that institution, as I remember it now.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. You mean you were simply presenting this as a sort of scarecrow to induce them to do it?—A. No, sir; I was presenting it to them as an advantage that would result to them in buying the instrument.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Did you have any interest in the American Postal Telegraph Company?—A. No, sir; none whatever. Here is the letter about the contract they sent us, and it was all in reference to that I was writing. Perhaps I had better read that now. Shall I read this letter?

The CHAIRMAN. If you please.

The witness read as follows:

GRAND CENTRAL HOTEL,
New York, April 17, 1883.

Executive Committee of the Pan-Electric Association:

GENTLEMEN: I am authorized by the American Postal Telegraph Company, of this city, to negotiate for your rapid system on sheet or tape metal. The American Postal Telegraph is a chartered institution, out of debt, owning several valuable inventions, and stocked under the telegraphic laws of the State of New York at $5,000,000, and having $1,000,000 stock as working capital.

It proposes simply, as the name implies, to unite the present mail or postal facilities with telegraphy, especially on very long lines, in such a way as to deliver telegraphic letters, through post-offices, in advance of the mails; but contemplates no legislation by the Government to absorb the telegraphs.

It owns several inventions, but its main one is a copper wire composed of sheet copper and asbestos, which it is claimed has a resistance of less than 6 ohms to the mile.

They are willing to give you, and so authorize me to offer, for the embossed system $800,000 in free stock and $200,000 in the company's working stock, making $1,000,000, and also in addition $1,000 in cash; and further to stipulate, if you so desire, that three members of your association shall, in order to watch your interests, become members of their board of directors.

I think that such an arrangement might be of great advantage to the Pan-Electric Company for if we are to carry out the programme of the pamphlet, it will take a vast sum of money, and perhaps the best way of raising it would be in selling a portion of the American Postal Telegraph stock thus acquired, in which case the Pan-Electric Company would have a voice in its deliberations, would still retain (in its stock) one-fifth interest in the inventions sold, and one-fifth interest in all the inventions now belonging to the American Postal Telegraph Company. Of course, all the other inventions of the Pan-Electric Company would remain untouched and might be developed by sales of stock as suggested.

This stock has been engraved without regard to cost for the New York Stock Exchange, not only according to the requirements of steel plates costing several hundred dollars, but the devices alone which adorn it cost, I am told, over $1,000. The directors are all men of well established and unblemished reputation, some of them strong financial men.

But more than this I cannot say, for the simple reason that I have an interest in the American Postal Telegraph Company as well as in the Pan-Electric Company, so that neither I nor Harris could even advise, but we will acquiesce in whatever you may determine on.

I wrote to Colonel Young, and herewith inclose his consent to a sale of this one thing or others if desirable.

I understand that General Johnston was written to in relation to this subject, who answered promising further correspondence.

The American Postal Telegraph Company awaits your reply.

They expect an immediate answer or will feel at liberty to withdraw the proposition

Respectfully,

J. W. ROGERS.

The WITNESS. This circular was sent to all of them, and hence it was sent to me. That is the one I received.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What is the date of it?—A. April 17, 1883. All this correspondence after this time had reference to this letter and this proposed contract. I do not know that this company ever had any bill before Congress, and I do not think it ever did have. When I came on here and found there was a bill before Congress by some other gentlemen, I was opposed to it, as some members of the committee will be able to testify. I was opposed to all that sort of legislation, and always have been. When I wrote this letter I never had it in my mind to secure any legislation by Congress for our benefit directly or indirectly.

Mr. RANNEY. Are you through now?

The WITNESS. Yes, with that part of it.

Mr. RANNEY. (Continuing to read.) "And the company we may be associated with will be the only one that will have the ghost of a chance to compete with him"—that is, Gould, who was going to have a lobby here. Have you any other answer to make or any further answer to make?

The WITNESS. No, sir.

Q. It was to compete with him in the lobby; to compete with Gould in the lobby he would have in Washington?—A. I did not propose to compete with him in his lobby. Perhaps that sentence, hurriedly written under the circumstances, might give such an inference as that; but I never dreamed of attempting any legislation in Congress, and never talked to my associates about it. In fact, I was opposed to the bill.

Q. The rest of the letter refers chiefly to Colonel Looney and the giving him a general donation as a retainer?—A. Yes, sir; he was a liberal man; a man of large ideas, like Dr. Rogers, but I did not participate in all their ideas about its value. Colonel Looney wanted to identify himself with it, and wanted to go to Mexico and Canada, and have these things patented there, and some correspondence arose between himself and other members of the company and Dr. Rogers in reference to it, and I suggested, I think, to pay him $50,000. That was before he became interested in the stock by his trade with Dr. Rogers. He had no stock in the company at that time.

Q. I will call your attention to the last paragraph of this letter, which says: "I think your suggestion practical, to start some one of our contemplated enterprises and sell enough of the stock to put the others afloat. The telephone is the quickest and easiest method of doing it." Did you not at that time contemplate selling the stock to put it afloat?—A. Yes, sir; I presume I did when I wrote that letter, but my views changed afterwards when I saw Dr. Rogers was not selling the stock to put the money in the treasury and develop the enterprise, but for his own individual benefit.

Q. I now come to the letter of November 4, 1883, printed on page 5 of this pamphlet. That seems to be in reply to a letter of Dr. Rogers to you. Will you be kind enough to produce that letter?—A. I handed in all the letters I have got from him.

Q. I should like very much the letter to which that is a reply. This is number 15, which is in reply to a letter from Dr. Rogers.—A. I don't know where they are. I left them all here last Saturday with the committee.

Q. We cannot examine you intelligently without them.—A. It is not my fault. I left with the committee all I had.

Mr. RANNEY. My request was to have all those letters printed.

Mr. OATES. Your motion to print was to print these thirty-seven letters in this pamphlet.

Mr. RANNEY. Very well; as we have not those letters and probably shall not find them, I will call your attention to your letter [reading]:

"I think your suggestion a good one, but there might possibly arise this objection to it: somebody might say that too many officers of the Government, Senators, Congressmen, clerks, electricians, &c., were interested in the Pan-Electric; that we were getting up a ring to run things—a kind of Credit Mobilier. There may be nothing in this, but I make the suggestion that you may consider it. If this is not in the way, I think your suggestion a most important one, and that it will bring about the most valuable results. I do not think there would be any difficulty in bringing it about. There is little doubt in my mind that General Atkins will be elected clerk, and he has the appointment, though it would not be proper to speak to him about it now. Indeed, I do not think it would be well to discuss the matter at all until after the organization of the House. Then, if we think it desirable, we will, I think, have no difficulty about it."

That letter of Dr. Rogers related to the appointment of your son Harry as electrician of the House, did it not?—A. Oh, evidently that is what the letter was about.

Q. You were to be a member of the coming House?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And were here?—A. Yes; I was here when Congress met.

Q. Did you speak to any one about Mr. Rogers being appointed electrician of the House?—A. I did.

Q. To how many?—A. I spoke to Dr. Rogers himself and to Harry; I spoke to Mr. Clark, the architect, and to one or two members of my committee.

Q. About getting it?—A. Yes. Now I will tell all I said.

Q. One moment. Did you recommend him?—A. No, sir; I did not. I will tell you what I did do—you may call it a recommendation.

Q. State it in your own way.—A. I did this. I do not remember if that was in the letter which Dr. Rogers wrote to me, but it was evidently in reference to having his son appointed electrician of the Capitol, and desiring Mr. Atkins to have the appointment made.

Q. I don't want you to go into the details unless you produce the letter.—A. Do you want me to say yes or no to that question?

Q. I want you to explain what you did on the subject.—A. Yes; and that is all I wish to explain. I ask the committee if a witness circumstanced as I am, with letters shown me written a year ago, has not a right to explain all the circumstances connected with them? There is no court in Christendom that would refuse that opportunity to a witness.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not object to that.

The WITNESS. I started to tell the circumstances and you stopped me.

Mr. RANNEY. You referred to a letter.

The WITNESS. I have to refer to it to tell what I did. I cannot make a connected story unless I tell all I did about it.

Q. Have you that original letter of Dr. Rogers's?—A. I have told you half a dozen times that I have not, unless it is in that bundle of letters I handed the committee the other day.

Q. You saw that letter of November 4th published in the newspapers?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you saw that it was used as bearing on this question we are now investigating?—A. Yes; like a hundred others.

Q. Didn't you have curiosity enough to inquire what it related to?—A. Not the slightest. I found my reputation was above anything of that sort, and that I had the power to make a vindication without it.

Mr. RANNEY. We shall save time to let the witness go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. Here are the letters which Colonel Young left with the committee the other day.

The WITNESS. Yes; they are the letters. Those are all I have, except one or two I have in my pocket. I had no fears about those letters then, and I have no fears about them now.

Mr. RANNEY. Nobody intimated that you had. Please answer what you did do about getting him that position.

The WITNESS. I am going to do it. This letter was written in reply to a letter evidently written by Dr. Rogers to me, asking the appointment of his son as electrician of the Capitol. He wanted my influence with General Atkins to induce him to make the appointment. I suppose I wrote this one in reply to that letter. I don't know what that letter contains; I simply remember his writing me a letter, and pointing out the advantages of it, I think, suggesting the amount of money he had saved to the Government, and I have no doubt he mentioned it would be an advantage to our company if he was the electrician of the Capitol so as to develop it.

When I came on, Dr. Rogers applied to me to have his son appointed and I applied to Mr. Clark. He put it on the ground that his son had been discharged by a Republican administration, and that as a matter of right he ought to be put back, and wanted a resolution introduced into the House declaring him the electrician. I declined to do it. I said it was a delicate matter for us to have him appointed electrician of the Capitol, because it might give rise to the suspicion that we were doing it to benefit our interests. He stated that his son had made all these improvements and saved the Government money, and I had a number of conversations with him, and he got provoked with me because I did not push the matter. I went to Mr. Clark and asked him about the man in the place; asked him if he was fit for it, if he was a good electrician, and he said he was. I asked him if he was better than Harry Rogers, and he said he was not; that Mr. Rogers was a good one and the best one he ever had, but that he could not recommend his appointment, because he got a little dissipated. That was all I said to Mr. Clark, and I reported the conversation to Dr. Rogers, and he wanted a resolution introduced into the House, which I declined to do, and Mr. Robinson introduced it.

In the mean time I had told all these things to the doctor, stating the delicacy of the position I occupied. He stated his son was competent, and ought to go in because he had been turned out by a Republican administration, and had saved the Government this money, and ought to be appointed. I said to him, "If your son is competent, I have no right to stand in his way, and if you can have a resolution introduced in the House and referred to my committee I will have a competitive examination made, and if he is the most competent man I will throw no obstacle in the way." I suppose I wrote him this note to come to my room. The resolution was referred to the subcommittee. I had nothing to do with it except to state that I believed that he was competent. In the mean time I did get a letter from Dr. Rogers, who was in New York, in which he says that he did not want his son sneaking in on his merits, but wanted him to be put in on his rights. I showed that to Mr. Reese, and said, "I will have nothing more to do with the matter;" and that is all I ever did. But I would have recommended him, because I thought he was competent, and I would do it now. I had no improper motive in view.

Q. Did you see the resolution before it was introduced?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. RANNEY. I will read what I find here: On January 24, 1884, the date it was introduced, Mr. Robinson introduced a resolution which purports to read thus, as copied in the newspapers: "Resolved, That J. Harris Rogers and James C. Rogers, late electrician and assistant electrician of the House of Representatives, be reinstated in their respective positions, and that they be permitted to introduce, at their own expense, a system of electric lighting and telephonic exchanges to all parts of the House, to be paid for hereafter, or not paid for at all, as the House of Representatives may determine after a fair test and use of the same; and, further, that said electrical department shall hereafter be placed exclusively under the Speaker of the House."

Now, that was referred to the same committee, I understand, to your committee, and you wrote this letter to the doctor:

"DEAR DOCTOR: The resolution has just been sent to our committee. We do not meet again until Tuesday, and in the mean time we have a good deal of work to do. Come to my room at 7 o'clock to-night. I want to see you about it.

"Yours, truly,

"CASEY YOUNG."

Did Dr. Rogers come to your room?—A. I do not remember. I presume I wrote that note, but I have forgotten it. I would have written it under the circumstances, and would do it again if necessary.

Q. I think you had better simply answer the questions.—A. I am trying to do that.

Q. I only want facts.—A. I don't remember whether he came to my room or not.

Q. In your letter of November 4 you say:

"I do not think it would be well to discuss the matter at all until after the organization of the House. Then, if we think it desirable, we will, I think, have no difficulty about it."

Q. You did not see any objection to getting him in, did you?—A. I did, from the fact that I wrote to him; I did not think it was proper to ask Mr. Atkins, because, as I said in the preceding part of the letter, it would not look well, it would look like a Credit Mobilier. I think it occurred to me that it would not be, perhaps, a very proper thing, and when I came on here I intended, if there was anything improper in it, not to do it, and I concluded then, and I would conclude now, that I would have no right to keep him out of a place that he was fitted to fill if no improper action in the matter could be imputed, and no improper motive because he was a member of our company.

Q. You also say, "I think your suggestion a good one, but there might possibly arise this objection to it: Somebody might say that too many officers of the Government, Senators, Congressmen, clerks, electricians, &c., were interested in the Pan-Electric; that we were getting up a ring to run things—a kind of Credit Mobilier. There may be nothing in this, but I make the suggestion that you may consider it. If this is not in the way I think your suggestion a most important one, and that it will bring about the most valuable results. I do not think there would be any difficulty in bringing it about."—A. Yes; that may have been in reference to his appointment. I cannot remember now. He may have set out a good many advantages about it.

Q. Did not Dr. Rogers write to you that his son was a Democrat, and he claimed it on the ground that he was a Democrat—did he not say that?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you saw Dr. Rogers and his son, did you not say you were sorry that he did that, because you had been talking with the Republican members of the House and they were well inclined, and if he had not put it on the ground of politics, he might have succeeded?—A. Yes, sir; I did. I was a civil service reformer then. I have reformed on that subject since. I thought at that time it was an unwise thing to introduce a resolution into the House to remove one man and put in another man simply because he differed with him in politics. Dr. Rogers also brought a lot of poetry, and I did not think that was the proper thing to present.

Q. Have you got that poetry?—A. No, sir; I did not keep any of his poetry.

Q. My question is this— A. I understand your question perfectly.

Q. Whether he did not claim it on the ground that he was a Democrat and you were sorry he did it, because you had been talking with the Republicans and they were inclined to do it?—A. Yes, sir; I said that.

Q. You did say that?—A. Yes, sir; but I want to explain why I said it. I had talked to Mr. Reese about it. I think I told him all about my connection with him. I talked also with Mr. Milliken, a friend of mine on the committee, and told him that this young man was competent, and perhaps more competent than the other one, and if the resolution was introduced in our committee and he proved to be more competent upon competitive examination than the other man, I would like to have him vote for him. Dr. Rogers declined to submit to that test, and I declined to submit the resolution because the man was a Democrat and the other not; I did not think it was a wise thing, and did not think it would pass the House.

Q. You did not report anything, you say?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Did your committee?—A. No, sir; when I got this letter from Dr. Rogers saying that he did not want him to get in on his merits, I handed it to Mr. Reese, of Georgia, and the matter dropped.

Q. Did you have anything to do with getting a letter from Attorney-General Garland to Mr. Cox and Mr. Hewitt commending him?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Do you know anything of letters being written?—A. I heard Harry Rogers's statement that Mr. Garland did not know what he was giving them for.

Q. You did what you could to elect Mr. Atkins Clerk?—A. Yes, sir; I voted for him.

Q. Didn't you make yourself busy about it?—A. Yes; I generally make myself busy about anything I want to do. I did all I could to elect him.

Q. Mr. Atkins was at that time the owner of one-tenth interest in all these patent rights?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the Clerk would have an important influence?—A. You know what his influence would be in the House. I do not know that he would have any telephonic influence. I never heard that he would.

Q. There is one other clause of this letter of August 21st where you use this language: "I am indebted to your generosity for what interest I have in it, and am willing that you should manage the entire matter just as you please." That is true?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It is true that you were indebted to Dr. Rogers?—A. Yes, sir; and I will explain how I wrote that letter.

Q. You may do so.—A. Yes; I have a right to do it. Dr. Rogers had been an old friend, and I always have regarded him as an extremely liberal man. If he had a million dollars now I expect he would give it away.

Q. He was not a man of large wealth or much property, was he?—A. No; and I do not think he ever will be. He would give it all away. He has been a man of ample means.

Q. His liberality consisted in giving you this interest in these patent rights?—A. No, sir; that is your construction of it.

Q. But what would you say?—A. You asked the question why I wrote that letter, and I asked the privilege of explaining why I wrote it.

Q. Now, the question I put to you is———A. But you don't wait until I answer one question before you put another. Let me answer one at a time.

Q. Take your own way.—A. As I said, Dr. Rogers had been an old friend of mine, and was a very liberal man. I regarded this arrangement that he had made about the stock as a liberal one. I did not invite it; it was his own proposition. I found afterwards that he was dissatisfied, and did not like the way it was being managed. I was entirely willing to get out of it and let him have his own way. I wrote to him "if you are not satisfied with this thing, so far as I am concerned, you can take all my interest in it and do what you please with it, and just let it go." That is the reason I wrote that letter.

Q. I don't ask you so much why you wrote it as I do if there is anything in that letter that is not true?—A. No, sir; there is nothing untrue in it. I do not write anything that is not true. I was indebted to his liberality for being in it at all. If he had not invited me in, I should not have been there.

Q. Didn't he assist you in gaining your election that fall?—A. Yes, sir; I will come to that. Where is that letter; just read that. Now I will tell you how that came about.

Q. First get the letter and read it?—A. I am trying to find it.

Mr. RANNEY. It is on page 12, No. 172.

The WITNESS. The whole of the letter is not here. There is no date given to it. Of course the gentlemen who published it want to represent me fairly, and just give a little of it, and give no date.

Mr. RANNEY. I will read it:

"* * * Not yet all in, but enough is known to assure me that I am returned by a majority of about 1,500. Your efforts in my behalf were not thrown away upon your old friends in Fayette County, and I shall always remember it with gratitude and friendship. Until I see you, believe me,

"Very truly, your friend,

"CASEY YOUNG."

The WITNESS. Yes; I wrote that letter.

Q. He was pretty anxious to get you into Congress, wasn't he?—A. I presume he was at that time.

Q. And you at that time had received this liberality; he had shown this liberality in this interest that he had given you?—A. That is what you assume, and that is what was intended to be assumed when this letter was published, but it is not true.

Q. Your contract in New York was before that time?—A. Oh, no, sir; you will find you are mistaken; there is a slight mistake.

Q. Please state when that letter was written?—A. It was written in 1877, and under these circumstances: I want to show you how the whole business has been brought up here, and show what a fraud it is. This letter was published as though it related to the Pan-Electric Telephone matter.

Q. I want the original letter.—A. Let me tell my story. I want to explain how I came to write that letter in 1876 or 1877. Previous to that time, his son had been appointed electrician of the Capitol, and a younger son appointed as assistant to him. I was down at home, and while I was there Dr. Rogers's brother, who was one of the closest friends I had, asked me what was the matter between me and Dr. Rogers—if there had been any falling out. I said no, there was nothing, and he said he had seen a letter somewhere about a coolness between us. When I came back here to Washington I asked the doctor about it, and he told me frankly that he had written some letters to some of his friends down there about me, and I told him he had done me a great injustice, and then he wrote a great number of letters and sent them to his friends—I think it was in 1877—and when the election came on his friends took a great interest in my election, and then I sat down and wrote him this letter, No. 172, in which I say "your efforts in my behalf were not thrown away upon your old friends in Fayette County, and I shall always remember it with gratitude and friendship."

Q. How do you fix the date?—A. Only from my recollection of this little quarrel, and his writing those letters to his friends.

Q. Is it not true that in your election in the fall of 1883 Dr. Rogers was active in your behalf?—A. I do not know it; but I have no doubt he was.

Q. Did he not take the stump for you?—A. No, I do not think he was there. He would have done it if he had been there, and I think he would do it next time, too. I expect he wrote some letters for me; all his relatives are my friends, anyhow.

Dr. ROGERS. If the committee will allow me, I can give you the date by another record I have. When I wrote these letters Col. Joseph W. Mosby, a prominent politician, wrote back to me that he could not vote for him, and he gave his reasons.

Mr. RANNEY. When was that?

Dr. ROGERS. It was away back beyond, as Colonel Young has stated.

Mr. HALL. This was before there was any talk of any invention?

Dr. ROGERS. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. You corresponded after this contract in New York, between that time and the time this matter arose with Senator Harris, did you not?—A. Not very much. I was here all the time after I came back in the fall.

Q. Did you have letters from him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have one from Senator Garland?—A. I never got a letter from him in my life that I remember, except a long time ago I got a letter about a matter concerning which we had quarreled fifteen years ago.

Q. Did you have any from Mr. Atkins?—A. I do not think I ever got but one letter from Mr. Atkins.

Q. Where are those you did receive?—A. Some from Senator Harris should be in that book I handed in.

Q. Have you kept the correspondence with your associates whatever it was?—A. Some I have, and some I have not. Sometimes I would get a letter when I was off traveling and tear it up. I did not get many letters.

Q. You had some letters?—A. Well, Dr. Rogers and Mr. Looney were old friends of mine, and I was more intimate and corresponded more with them than any body else.

Q. Have you letters from any other of your associates?—A. Yes, sir; from General Johnston and Senator Harris.

Q. Did you keep all you received?—A. No, sir. I have some at my room. I will look and see. I never got many from either of them.

Mr. OATES. I move that the committee now adjourn until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday, March 25, 1886.

The committee met at 12.25 p. m.

HON. CASEY YOUNG came before the committee and his examination was resumed:

By Mr. RANNEY:

Question. Referring to the efforts to get Mr. Rogers appointed electrician, I wish to inquire on what committee you were.

The WITNESS. I would like to make a request of the chairman before the examination is proceeded with in regard to a matter connected with the examination. On yesterday I was asked to explain certain letters that I had written to Dr. Rogers. I did not read the letters. I saw them published in the papers, but I did not read them; I glanced over them. I did not suppose Dr. Rogers would publish my private letters at all; but when he did publish them I did not suppose he would publish anything I didn't write, and I do not know that he did. But I see a great number of letters here that have been submitted to the committee, written by me, that I think it would be fair to allow me to examine, to see whether or not they do not refresh my memory in respect to the letters about which I have been examined. I see some letters have been published in the papers that seem to relate to the same subject that the letter relates to that was read yesterday, in which the italicized sentence occurs in respect to our association with the American Postal Telegraph Company. I have seen several letters published in the papers that referred to that subject. I take it other letters were written by me in reference to the subject that would, perhaps, enable me to refresh my memory, so as to connect this correspondence and see the circumstances under which I wrote. I think it would be fair to allow me to examine the letters. I have never seen any of them since I wrote them, and have no recollection in the world of them. Some of them evidently refer to the same subject.

The CHAIRMAN. I presume there will be no objection.

The WITNESS. If it pleases Mr. Ranney I would prefer that the examination about the letters be deferred until I can have an opportunity of examining the letters, and thus be enabled to explain them more intelligently and satisfactorily, to myself, at least. A good many of them no doubt relate to the same subject; I see some of them do, and it would enable me to connect the correspondence so as to do justice to myself. If there is no objection to that course I would like to have an opportunity to look over the letters and see how far they refresh my memory in regard to those letters I have been examined about, or will be examined about.

The CHAIRMAN. How long will it probably require?

The WITNESS. If the committee will allow me to have them this evening I can examine them to-night.

Mr. RANNEY. The letters I have been examining you about are those which the clerk of this committee has had printed from the originals, and not from newspaper publications.

The WITNESS. I suppose that is so; but I notice from the list of letters a great many of them were not considered relevant by the subcommittee who examined them, and I would like to see whether or not they have any relation to the correspondence about which I am being examined, in order that I may explain the whole line of correspondence. I think that would be a just thing to me.

Mr. RANNEY. I am examining you now on specific letters, as to the genuineness of which there is no controversy; and I am examining you from the printed copy of the original in each case. The originals are here.

The WITNESS. I think the copy is correct, but I simply want to see the whole correspondence, to see whether or not there is such a connection between them as will enable me to explain them properly. I have no objection to Mr. Ranney going on and examining me about the letters, provided I have the opportunity hereafter to look at them and make any explanation that will be proper.

The CHAIRMAN. There will be no objection to that.

Mr. RANNEY. No.

The WITNESS. I wish to state one thing further. I did not expect, of course, to discuss legal matters here yesterday, and I had not refreshed my mind about them. I found among my papers a fragment of a letter which I wrote to General Bradley Johnson, giving my legal opinion in reference to the organization of this company and issuance of the stock. I would like to put that in evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. I think not in the course of my cross-examination.

The CHAIRMAN. We will give you an opportunity to put it in after Mr. Ranney has finished.

Mr. RANNEY. I prefer to have my examination go on consecutively.

The WITNESS. Very well; you can strike out all I said; I don't care, though; let it stay in.

Q. The question which I put before you began with your explanation was as to what was the committee on which you were acting at the time it was sought to get

Mr. Rogers appointed electrician of the House?—A. I was a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I was chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department. I believe those were the only committees I was on.

Q. And one of those committees had charge of the appointment of the electrician, had it?—A. No, sir; it did not have charge of it. Under a law of Congress which I wrote myself some years ago it was put exclusively under the charge, I think, of the Speaker and the Architect of the Capitol. The committee had no control of it whatever.

Q. How happened the resolution introduced by Mr. Robinson to be referred to your committee?—A. I don't know but that I suggested it, as I stated yesterday.

Q. Is that your best recollection?—A. No; I cannot say it is. I do not remember how that came about. I think it is probable that I suggested it to him for the purpose of having a competitive examination. That course had been pursued in 1874 and 1875, and our committee had something to do with it.

Q. To whom did you make the suggestion?—A. I made it to Dr. Rogers, if I made it to anybody.

Q. That the resolution should be referred to your committee?—A. If I made it to anybody. I have no recollection that I made it to anybody, but if I did, I presume I made it to him. I never spoke to Mr. Robinson about it that I know of. I stated yesterday that I declined to introduce that resolution. I did not do it alone upon the ground that I thought it would be an indelicate matter for me to do it, but because I did not believe such a resolution could be passed through the House. That was another reason.

Q. But you say that, according to your best recollection, it was upon your suggestion that when it was introduced it should go to your committee?—A. No; it is not according to my best recollection. I have no recollection about it. I just suggest that as a probability.

Q. On what do you found it as a probability?—A. I found it upon this fact: That in 1875, when I was a member of that committee, they had charge of the lighting and heating and electrical apparatus of the House, and that question was referred to us by the clerk and we did examine it, and it occurs to me now that there was some competitive examination between the different applicants. I know we had a letter from Professor Henry as to the competency of Harry Rogers, and I think it was in reply to a letter I myself wrote on that subject; but I don't remember how that was. If I made that suggestion at all, it grew out of that fact; I don't know that I did make it.

Q. It seems the application to have Mr. Rogers appointed was first made to Mr. Clark.—A. I think I spoke to Mr. Clark about it first; I am not quite sure whether I did or not.

Q. What was his relation to the House?—A. He was and is the Architect of the Capitol.

Q. The appointment was vested in him, was it?—A. In him and the Speaker. I think the law puts it in the hands of the two; that is my recollection of the law; I wrote it.

Q. And you found Mr. Clark would not appoint him?—A. Well, I don't know that he said he would not appoint him. He stated what I told you yesterday—that his habits were dissipated.

Q. And he was disinclined to appoint him?—A. He was disinclined to appoint him.

Q. And thereupon the suggestion was made that somebody should introduce the resolution?—A. I think Dr. Rogers suggested the introduction of the resolution himself, though I don't know but what I said something about the proper reference of it; but I didn't think any such resolution would pass the House.

Q. Did you get anybody to go and see Mr. Clark besides yourself?—A. No, sir; nobody but myself that I know of; I don't remember anybody else, and I never saw him but once, I think.

Mr. RANNEY. I will put in here the letter of Mr. Garland to Messrs. S. S. Cox and A. S. Hewitt, found on the bottom of the nineteenth page of the appendix, and dated January 18, 1884. It is as follows:

DEAR SIRS AND FRIENDS: Permit me to introduce to you Messrs. J. W. Rogers and Son, accomplished and scientific gentlemen of this city, who desire to speak to you on some business. Please show them all proper attention, and command me when you will.

Your friend,

A. H. GARLAND.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not wish to make any objection, but I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Massachusetts why he introduces this letter in the testimony of Colonel Young.

Mr. RANNEY. Because it is a convenient place, and I want to examine him about it.

The CHAIRMAN. I have no objection.

Q. Did you know of the presentation of that letter?—A. No, sir; I knew nothing about it, and never heard of it until I saw it published.

Q. Did you know of the existence of it?—A. I think the first time I ever heard of it was when I saw it published in the papers.

Q. Did you know of anybody else except yourself seeing Mr. Clark about getting Mr. Rogers appointed?—A. Not to my knowledge; I never heard of anybody else speaking to him.

Q. Did you see the resolution that Mr. Robinson presented before he presented it?—A. I don't recollect whether I did or not. I think I did. I think substantially the same resolution was handed to me.

Q. By whom?—A. I think Dr. Rogers.

Q. Do you know who wrote it?—A. No, I do not; I don't remember.

Q. When and where was it handed to you?—A. Oh, I don't remember now. I talked to Dr. Rogers about it frequently.

Q. In your committee-room?—A. No, I don't know that he was ever in my committee-room at all during the whole session. He may have been.

Q. After it had been referred to your committee and you had written the letter, which I put in evidence yesterday, to Mr. Rogers, asking him to call at your room at 7 o'clock at night, did he call?—A. I really don't remember whether he did or not. He may have done so. I know what I wanted to see him about. I don't know whether he called or not. I think it is likely he did.

Q. Have you any recollection so that you can state whether he did call or not?—A. Oh, no; I cannot state certainly whether he did or not.

Q. You don't know whether he called or not and you don't know what occurred between you?—A. I know what I wrote the note for.

Q. I have not asked you that.—A. I am trying to answer your question. I have no recollection of whether he called at my room or not.

Mr. RANNEY. We will get along better if you will confine yourself to answering my questions.

The WITNESS. I think we will get along better if you will ask proper questions.

Mr. RANNEY. I will be the judge of that.

The WITNESS. And I will be the judge of the propriety of my answers.

Mr. RANNEY. We will see about that.

The WITNESS. We will try it, anyhow.

Q. The question I put was this: Whether you remember as to his having called or not.—A. I answered you distinctly that I did not.

Q. And then I said, or was about to say, if you did not remember whether he called or not, you would hardly be able to remember what was said.—A. Oh, I suppose not. I saw him somewhere about it, but I don't remember whether it was at my room or not. I talked with him about it frequently.

Q. Do you remember having an interview with him after writing that letter in reference to the subject on which you wrote it?—A. Yes, sir; I had several.

Q. Where was the first one?—A. I couldn't tell where any of them occurred; perhaps it may have been in the lobby of the House, or it may have been in my room, or on the street; I don't remember; I talked with him several times.

Q. Did you tell him what conclusion had been reached on behalf of your committee?—A. The committee never reached any conclusion at all, that I know of.

Q. On the resolution of Mr. Robinson?—A. There was never any report made that I know of.

Q. You dropped the subject?—A. Yes, sir; as I told you yesterday, I showed Mr. Reese a letter which Dr. Rogers had written to me, that he didn't approve of the course which I proposed, and I dropped it right there.

Q. In your letter of November 4, 1883, to which I again refer, you said something about so many officers of the Government, Senators, Congressmen, clerks, and electricians being interested in the Pan-Electric Company. How many officers of the Government were then interested?—A. Senator Harris—

Q. He was not an officer of the Government, was he?—A. He was a Senator.

Q. How many officers of the Government, not Senators or Congressmen, were interested in it?—A. None whatever that I know of. I had reference to those when I said officers of the Government. That was my idea, and those were the ones I referred to.

Q. Then, there were no officers of the Government connected with the company except Senators and Congressmen?—A. None that I know of or ever heard of. I gave a full list of everybody the other day that was ever interested in the company, so far as I know. I never heard of any others.

Q. Was not Marcus J. Wright then connected with the Government?—A. He was a clerk in the War Department, but he was not interested in the company at that time that I knew of.

Q. He did have an interest in the company at some time?—A. Yes, sir; I think he did have an interest at that time, but I don't think I knew it. I think he was one of the persons whom Dr. Rogers was to give, or did give, a part of this $170,000 of reserved stock. He told me so afterwards.

Q. Then your recollection is now that you did not at that time know of any other officers of the Government?—A. I know I did not know of any.

Q. How many Senators were there?—A. Two Senators; Senator Harris and Senator Garland.

Q. How many other Congressmen were there besides yourself?—A. I am the only one that ever did have any interest in it.

Q. And you thought two Senators and one Congressman might be considered too many?—A. No; I don't know that I considered them too many. That letter was in answer to a letter in which it was proposed to make the electrician of the Capitol out of one of our company, and I did not consider it an exactly proper proceeding, thinking perhaps it might provoke some little comment. I did not think there was anything improper about it, otherwise than that it might be improperly criticised.

Q. In the letter of General Wright, dated February 14, 1883, on page 7, I find this paragraph: "I was very glad to receive your note, and am greatly obliged for the stock in the Electric Company."—A. That note was not to me. I don't know anything about it.

Q. It seems he got his stock in 1883.—A. I presume he owned it at that time, but I don't know that I knew it.

Q. You do not know whether he owned it or not?—A. I am quite certain he did. I think perhaps Dr. Rogers had told me; but that was the only way I knew it.

Q. Before leaving that line of inquiry, I want to know one thing more. Was not this Washington Telephone Company incorporated under the laws of Tennessee?—A. I really don't know whether it was or not; it is probable it was. The secretary is right behind you, and he can tell. I don't know.

Q. Was this Washington company, which embraced the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and Delaware, and which had the right to put stock— A. Not stock; these patent rights.

Q. I mean, which was granted the right to use these patents in those States. Was that company organized under the law of the State of Tennessee?—A. I do not know. I am not certain. It is probable it was.

Q. Did you not have anything to do with it?—A. I have no recollection of having anything to do with it. It is possible I did. I don't remember. The incorporation papers will show.

Q. Do you know why a local company like that was should be organized away down in Tennessee when Tennessee had nothing to do with it?—A. If I had organized it I could give you a reason, but as I did not I cannot.

Q. Although you were a director in the company you do not seem to know much about it?—A. I did not know I was a director until after I saw the articles of incorporation.

Q. You knew it when they gave you $50,000 in stock to pay for it?—A. Oh, yes, I knew it. I never got the stock. They told me that $50,000 had been set apart to me for my services as director. I never saw it and never got it, but I understand I am entitled to that much.

Q. You received $50,000 of the stock in consideration of your being a director?—A. I did not receive any. I am told I am entitled to it on the books, but I never received it.

Q. Did you not try to earn the stock by discharging your duty as a director?—A. I discharged my duty as a director the only time I ever was at a meeting. I don't remember that I ever attended but one.

Q. You were interrogated yesterday in relation to the Pan-Electric Company in New York, and certain certificates purporting to be issued by such a company. You were going to look to see whether the interest in all the patents which you obtained by the contract executed in New York was transferred to the telephone company or organized under the laws of Tennessee. Please state the result of your examination.—A. The telephone patents were transferred, as far as I have been able to examine. I have not got all the patents in my room. Those patents are referred to by numbers, and I cannot tell what they are without seeing the patents themselves. I only had a few of them at my room, as I found when I came to look, and all of those related to telephony in some way.

Q. You transferred to that company all the telephonic patents?—A. As far as I have been able to examine, I discover that to be so.

Q. What has become of the electric patents?

The WITNESS. Whose patents do you refer to?

Mr. RANNEY. Those not embraced in what you designate as telephonic patents.

A. We have them yet.

Q. Have you ever transferred them to any company?—A. No.

Q. You still retain the interest which you got in them by the original contract made in New York?—A. The only assignment that we ever made that I know anything about was made to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. No assignment has been made of the other patents, that I know of.

Q. Then the patents which constituted the consideration for the capital stock of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company only embraced a portion of the patents which you got under your contract in New York?—A. Only the telephonic patents, or the patents relating to telephony, I think.

Q. Is it not true that there was a Pan-Electric Company formed in the State of New York, and a certificate filed with the secretary of state?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Have you no such a certificate among your papers?—A. No, sir; I have never seen any such certificate. I looked last night in my room to see if there was anything of that sort, and I have never seen any such book. There may have been, but I never saw it, and had no connection with it.

Q. Your original contract embraced a proposition to form a company which should control all of the patents, did it not?—A. There is the contract before you. You can read it.

Q. I supposed you were familiar with it, and so I asked you.—A. If you will hand it over here I will read the clause that has reference to the patents. It was the purpose at the time to obtain an incorporation somewhere that would embrace all of these inventions, and, as I stated before, we were not able to find any State where I thought the laws were broad enough to cover it. I find some letters that I wrote on that subject published in the papers.

Q. Coming to the year 1885, you knew that Dr. Rogers had filed with Mr. Garland an application desiring him, on behalf of the Government, to bring a suit to vacate the Bell patents, did you not?—A. I learned it from a letter Dr. Rogers wrote me.

Q. Have you found that letter?—A. No, sir; I have not. I have not looked among the papers I handed in yesterday, and don't know whether it is there or not. I have not had the papers in my possession.

Q. I wish you would produce that letter.—A. The committee has all the letters I have. I handed them to the committee. I don't remember any such letter among them, if there is such a one there. I should have forgotten that letter if I had not seen it published in the paper by Dr. Rogers that he had written such a letter.

Q. You know there was such a letter filed somewhere about May 24, 1885?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you heard it by letter?—A. I knew from Dr. Rogers; in no other way.

Q. How soon did you hear of it after he had sent it to the Attorney-General?—A. I presume I got this letter very soon afterwards. He testified to it. I don't remember.

Q. I suppose the original will be found with the Attorney-General. A copy was furnished here.—A. I cannot tell about that.

Q. You have not produced his letter?—A. I have no control over the Attorney-General's Department.

Q. I mean the letter of Dr. Rogers.—A. I have told you all I can tell you about that a half a dozen times.

Q. The letter is as follows:

“WASHINGTON, D. C., May 24, 1885.

“Hon. AUGUSTUS H. GARLAND,

“Attorney-General of the United States:

“DEAR SIR: I have the honor to represent to you that I am the owner and holder of $500,000 in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, which would to-day be worth more, in my judgment, than par value were it not for a fraud practiced upon the United States by one Alexander Bell in procuring a patent for the art of telephony, when in fact publication of said art had already been made in the United States, and when telephonic instruments invented by Philip Reis, in Germany, were in the Smithsonian Institute in this city, imported by Professor Henry from London, England, four years prior to said Bell's application. The said Bell also claims to be the discoverer of a continuous current of electricity as a necessity of telephony and the first inventor of its application in said art, and made other fraudulent claims, and imposed upon the United States authorities by fraudulent statements in this behalf. The said fraud is rendered more apparent by a volume on telephones deposited in the Medical Library of this city several years before the said Bell procured his patents, and by the very phraseology of his application, which shows that when writing it and describing undulatory currents, he had before him, or in his memory, the lectures of the aforesaid Reis, and practiced a deliberate and barefaced fraud upon the public.

“A company in Boston, Mass., styling itself the American Bell Telephone Company, purchased said patents and has greatly damaged the said Pan-Electric Company by lying circulars denouncing said company as guilty of infringing the said Bell patents.

“As a citizen of the United States, with interests aforesaid, I request you to instruct a United States district judge to take immediate action in the premises, being individually too poor to fight this monopoly, and yet suffering by the indiscreet action of the United States authorities in granting the aforesaid preposterous patents. Find herewith two articles from the Post and Chronicle on the subject."

When he wrote you he sent you a copy of that letter, did he not?—A. I think he did. I don't remember whether he set out what he had written to the Attorney-General or not.

Q. He sent you a copy of what he wrote, did he not?—A. If he did I have no recollection of it. I don't think he did.

Q. Do you know what he did say to you in that letter?—A. I started to answer your question and you declined to hear me. I will state now, as near as I can remember, what he said.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you the letter?—A. I have stated here so repeatedly that it is hardly necessary to ask me the question again. I have not got it.

Q. You said you had a great many more letters, as I understood?—A. They don't relate to that matter at all. I have private letters.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Why is it you have not kept the letters of Dr. Rogers on an important matter like this?—A. I presume I have kept the most of them about the telephone company. I got a great many letters from him about other matters, having no relation to this business.

Q. You knew at that time that it was claimed that your patents were infringed, or that they infringed the Bell patents?—A. Oh, yes; but I did not consider the opinion of Dr. Rogers so valuable on the subject as that it was necessary to keep it. It was worth no more than my own. I knew the facts he stated.

Q. Why have you kept some of these letters and not the others?—A. I can give no other reason except that it was accidental. I have picked up all I could find. I am willing to have Dr. Rogers state what he wrote.

Q. Did you take any notice of that letter?—A. I think I answered it.

Q. Did you answer it by letter?—A. He says I did, and I take it for granted I did.

Q. Where is the answer you sent to him?—A. Ask Dr. Rogers. He can tell better than I can. I did not keep any copies of my letters.

Q. Do you know what you answered?—A. I have a general recollection of what I answered, which I can state. I answered about this: That I was aware before then——

Q. The letter which I have read is on page 9 of the printed copy, and is No. 155. I will put it in evidence now.—A. I have a general recollection of what my answer was, and will state it.

Q. I ask you as to the letter in reply to the letter written by Mr. Rogers informing you of his action, which you say was soon after that action was taken.—A. I will state my recollection of my answer to the letter of the 24th of May. My recollection is that I wrote about this: Dr. Rogers seemed to think that it was a new discovery that the Government possessed such power, or that the Attorney-General had power to order such a suit. I think I wrote back that there was nothing new; it had always been the law. He had written me that Attorney-General Brewster had ordered the suit. I wrote back to him not only that it had always been the law, but that I could not ask Senator Garland to bring such a suit, as it would be a little indelicate; that I could not make that application to him. That is my recollection, and that is what he testified I wrote, and I presume that is correct. It corresponds with my recollection.

Q. He did not ask you to make an application. He said he had made the application?—A. To be sure; and I think his letter asked me to write to Garland on the subject. I wrote back to him I could not do it; it would be an indelicate thing for Senator Garland to bring a suit for his own company, or something to that effect. He testified about what the letter was.

Q. Have you searched through your papers to ascertain whether you have that letter of his?—A. I have; yes, sir.

Q. Are you able to swear you have not got it?—A. I searched last night and was not able to find any more letters that referred to the telephone. I found several letters from Dr. Rogers about private matters; notes that he wrote me. When I received letters in Washington I generally kept them in the letter file, which I handed in, and all those letters came out of there. When I received letters at home I sometimes tore them up, and sometimes left them about my room; but I kept no letter file of the telephonic letters there. Sometimes I brought them back here.

Q. Were you in Washington or at your home when you received this letter of Dr. Rogers, or where were you?—A. I don't remember whether I was at home or whether

I was at the Hot Springs; I was at Hot Springs a good deal about that time. I don't remember whether I was at home on the 24th of May or whether I was at the Hot Springs.

Q. And yet you are able to say what you wrote him in reply?—A. I perhaps would not have been able to say exactly what I wrote him if I had not heard his testimony; I would have forgotten it.

Q. Then you have no memory on the subject at all?—A. Oh, yes; I have now. His testimony refreshed my memory, and I remember now the substance of what I wrote.

Q. Is not your memory refreshed as to where you were at the time?—A. Oh, no; I can't tell where I was. I was traveling about a good deal at that time. The probability is I was at home.

Q. How soon after May 24 did you see Dr. Rogers?—A. I saw him again some time, I think, about the 1st of July.

Q. Fix the date as nearly as you can.—A. Perhaps I can do it by a memorandum book.

Q. If your memorandum book will give you dates I would be glad to have you keep it at hand. I want to inquire of you as to several dates.—A. I have not a very distinct recollection as to the date of these various things. The only way I can fix it at all is by an account of my traveling expenses, which I have here. I will see whether I can determine that point. [Consults memorandum book.] I find from this memorandum book that on the 3d of July I was on my way to Washington. I can tell what day I got here, perhaps. I got here, it seems from this memorandum book, on the 4th of July. It seems that I arrived here on that day; I am not certain that is exactly accurate: it may not be the precise date, but it was about that time. This is simply a memorandum book that I kept. I find I came from the depot up to the Ebbitt House on the 4th of July.

Q. Then, you were here in June?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Did you see Dr. Rogers at that time?—A. I presume I did.

Q. Where?—A. I couldn't tell; perhaps at his house or at my room. I saw him frequently. I was going to Philadelphia then.

Q. Can you not fix any time when and where you did see him at that time?—A. Oh, no.

Q. Can you state what occurred between you?—A. No, I don't remember anything that occurred between us.

Q. Do you remember whether you alluded at that time to the fact that he had made an application to the Attorney-General to bring a suit or have it brought?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection about it at all. I left here on the 7th of July and went to Philadelphia.

Q. You were here from the 4th to the 7th?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In that interval will you swear whether you met Dr. Rogers or Harry Rogers at all?—A. I presume I did. I generally met them when I was here.

Q. Do you recollect any conversation you had with them?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection of any conversation I had with them at that time, or even that I saw them, though I presume I did, because I saw them every time I came here.

Q. Did you see Senator Harris?—A. Yes, sir; he was here, because I have noticed a telegram I sent him from Baltimore on the subject.

Q. Did you see him and have an interview with him?—A. I presume I did. I don't remember any distinct interview. Yes, I do remember I had a conversation with him before I started to Philadelphia. I went over there on business of the company, to see about an account being taken as to the damages in that suit that had been dismissed as to us and retained as to the local company. I went there to have a conference with Mr. Coulston on the subject.

Q. Did you have a conference with Senator Harris?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was it?—A. It might have been in my room, or his; I don't remember where.

Q. Who was present?—A. I don't remember. General Johnston may have been there. I don't know but Dr. Rogers may have been there, too. I don't remember. I only remember the conversation from the fact that he instructed me to go to Philadelphia and look after that suit, and also to go to Baltimore.

Q. Was Mr. Garland there?—A. Oh, no.

Q. Was he not then the attorney of your company?—A. Yes, sir; he had been elected the attorney at first, and never resigned. I never heard anything from him.

Q. Did not that business relate to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did not this business as to which you were going to Philadelphia relate to it also?—A. No; that referred more particularly to the local company. The bill had been dismissed as to our company, but we were under obligations to take care of the costs over there.

Q. Will you say you did or did not have an interview with Mr. Garland during those three days you were here?—A. I say most distinctly, I did not. I never spoke a word to Garland about the Pan-Electric Telephone Company after he was Attorney-General but once.

Q. Will you say you did or did not have an interview with Doctor Rogers about it?—A. Oh, I couldn't say that. It is possible I may have had. I don't remember.

Q. You do not say you did not have further conversation with Senator Harris about it?—A. Oh, no; I think I did. I know I had a conversation with Senator Harris.

Q. How long were you in Philadelphia?—A. Only a few hours, and I then returned from there to Baltimore.

Q. Will you say to this committee that this application of Dr. Rogers to the Attorney-General was made on the 24th of May?—A. No, sir; I will not, for I do not know it.

Q. I have not finished my question. It appears to have been made on the 24th of May. You were here between the 4th and the 7th of July of the same year. You had previously been written to and informed of the fact that the application had been made to the Attorney-General. Will you say you made no reference whatever to that subject in your interviews with Dr. Rogers during those three days you were here between the 4th and the 7th of July?—A. No, sir; I will not. I have no recollection of it.

Q. You will not swear you did or did not?—A. No, sir.

Q. Will you swear you made no reference to it to Senator Harris?—A. No, sir; I will not. Possibly I did. I don't know.

Q. So that you are unable to say, as I understand you, whether you did or did not make any reference to it to Senator Harris or Dr. Rogers?—A. Yes; I am unable to say whether I conversed with them about it at that time.

Q. And yet you say with great positiveness you did not speak to Mr. Garland about it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You are confident as to one of the parties, but you have no recollection as to the other two?—A. I never saw Mr. Garland. I went to their rooms frequently, but I never went to the Department of Justice.

Q. After you went to Philadelphia, when were you in Washington again?—A. I came back to Washington on the 30th of July. I do not find that in this book, but I find it on the register at the Ebbitt House. The date in this book is the 27th of July. I have made a mistake there somehow.

Q. Was that the next time you were in Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Are you sure of that?—A. Oh, I know it.

Q. You were not in Washington between July 7 and the 20th of July?—A. I see from this book that I got here on the 4th and left on the 7th, and I know I was not here again until then.

Q. You left here on the 7th of July?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then you were here between the 4th and 7th of July?—A. Yes, sir; so it appears from this book. I would not remember the different dates unless I had something to refer to.

Q. When you were in Washington, at what hotel did you stop?—A. I stopped at the Ebbitt House if I stopped at any hotel at all. I don't remember whether at that time I stopped at a hotel or in private rooms. I stopped sometimes at 1227 G street. Previously to that time my rooms were at 604 Thirteenth street. I gave them up in April or May when I went away. I left here I think probably about the 30th of April, 1885, and gave up those rooms, and when I returned I found they had been occupied by other parties, and I think I stopped at the Ebbitt House.

Q. Do you now mean to say you went from here on the 7th of July to Philadelphia?—A. Yes, sir; that is what this memorandum-book shows.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. I staid two or three hours.

Q. Where did you go then?—A. To Baltimore.

Q. How long did you stay there?—A. I staid there one day and one night.

Q. Then where did you go?—A. I went to Pittsburgh.

Q. What day did you go to Pittsburgh?—A. I got there somewhere about the 9th, I think. I got there the next morning.

Q. At whose request did you go to Pittsburgh?—A. I went there partly upon my own motion. I saw in a newspaper when I was in Baltimore, at Barnum's Hotel, that on the next day a suit was to be tried in Pittsburgh in reference to the telephone, and probably giving the style of the suit; I don't remember. I telegraphed, as I now recollect, to Senator Harris about the fact, and suggested that I go to Pittsburgh. He telegraphed me back, or wrote me—telegraphed, I think—to go, and I went to Pittsburgh.

Q. Have you that letter?—A. I don't think it was a letter at all; I think it was a telegram. Possibly I have it.

Q. How long did you stay in Pittsburgh?—A. I see an entry of the payment of my bill at the Seventh Avenue Hotel in Pittsburgh on the 11th of July, and I presume I left on that day.

Q. And you went from there right to Washington?—A. No, sir; I went from there right to my home at Memphis. Here is my bill of fare, from Pittsburgh to Memphis, in this memorandum-book.

Q. You had an interview at Pittsburgh with Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. Yes, sir; and Mr. Huntington, Mr. Bakewell, and several other gentlemen.

Q. Did you have an interview with them in relation to the Government suit at that time, or in regard to vacating the patents?—A. I had no conversation with Mr. Bakewell on that subject. I had a conversation with Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Huntington. I introduced the conversation myself. We were discussing the suit there, and I was looking over their pleas, the bill, the answer, and some of the proofs; and I remarked to him that I didn't think he could gain the case on that record; I thought it was a defective record and he couldn't sustain himself; and I introduced the conversation about the Government suit by saying that there was a law passed at the last session of Congress or by the last Congress authorizing the Attorney-General to institute a suit in name of the Government to vacate a patent under certain conditions. That was the first that was ever said about it by me to anybody, unless it was some conversation I may have had with Dr. Rogers.

Q. That was at Pittsburgh?—A. At the Seventh Avenue Hotel in Pittsburgh.

Q. You went over the matter with Van Benthuyzen?—A. That was about the conversation that occurred. Of course there was a good deal more than that, for I was discussing their record.

Q. You say you told them they could not succeed in their suit there, and then you told them about this law?—A. I gave it as my opinion that on the record—

Q. You suggested this course?—A. No; I did not suggest this course.

Q. What did you say about it?—A. I will tell you what I said. I said to Mr. Van Benthuyzen that a law had been passed at the previous session of Congress that authorized the Attorney-General to institute suit to vacate a patent. We were discussing the ground that he put it upon. He charged some irregularities in the issuance of the patent, and I think also charged fraud; and I think I said that could not be inquire into in a private suit. That was my view of the law.

Q. You separated at Pittsburgh?—A. Yes, sir; I went home.

Q. You went to Memphis and they went to New York?—A. I think they went to New York from there. I heard Mr. Van Benthuyzen was at Waukesha Springs, but I understood he did go to New York first.

Q. When did you next hear of them?—A. I next met Mr. Van Benthuyzen, I think, in the city of Washington, between the 30th of July and the 2d of August. I think, perhaps, he was here when I came. I got here on the 30th of July.

Q. Where did you meet him then?—A. At the Ebbitt House.

Q. Who were present?—A. At various times a number of persons were present. I don't remember who was present when I first met him. I think I met him at the breakfast table, perhaps, the first time I met him; but in the conference that occurred there, there were present at various times—

Q. I mean at this conference you had there; not a casual meeting.—A. Which conference?

Q. When you had the conference with him?—A. In Washington?

Q. Yes.—A. We had a number of conversations. There were present, as I remember, at one time and another perhaps all at the same time, Mr. Von Briesen, of New York, a lawyer, Mr. C. P. Huntington, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, Colonel Gantt, and perhaps others. I don't remember.

Q. Try to remember all.—A. I have told you all I can remember.

Q. Where was that conference?—A. Oh, we had frequent conversations there; sometimes in Mr. Van Benthuyzen's room and sometimes in mine; mostly in his room—he had a large room—he had parlors engaged there, and most of the time we met in his room.

Q. Can you tell what occurred there?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Will you be kind enough to do so?—A. Yes; our first conversation related to a consolidation of our two companies, which we had talked about at Pittsburgh previously to that time. We had a good deal of conversation about the terms of the consolidation. I do not remember all the details. I will give you all, as near as I can remember. We discussed the application to the Attorney-General to have the suit brought. I advised Mr. Van Benthuyzen and the other gentlemen present that it was my judgment that we did not want such a suit as we would probably have to bring under the bill I then supposed had become a law; that that was my view of the matter; that we ought to get permission from the Government, if we got it at all, to bring a bill at our relation in the name of the Government, to vacate the patent, and allow us to control the suit ourselves. He said he had come to see the Attorney-General on that subject, and asked me to go with him. I declined to go, but on reflection I thought perhaps our company might be brought into it in some way; that it might be represented to Mr. Garland in an improper light; and I concluded I would go. I did go over with them and introduced them to Mr. Garland. They had been there once before to see him. Upon reflection, just as they were starting, I concluded I would go, for the reason I thought something might be said about our company; that it might be represented that we desired the suit brought.

Q. I will come to that after awhile. I want all the interview first.—A. I am giving you that, but it seems you don't want to hear it.

Q. You are mistaken. You are now passing to Mr. Garland's office.—A. No; I am not passing to Mr. Garland's office. I am telling you what occurred right in the hotel.

Q. Go on.—A. That conversation occurred in the hotel. When they started, I concluded I would go with them, and I did go to the Attorney-General's office and introduce them to him.

Q. I have not got through with the interview at the hotel yet. Have you stated all the interview before you went?—A. That is the substance of it. There was a great deal said. I couldn't remember it all.

Q. Before what occurred in Mr. Garland's office, you were together at the hotel. Did you meet there by accident?—A. No, sir. I corresponded with Mr. Van Benthuyssen and promised to meet him there at that time.

Q. Then this interview and conference was the result of previous arrangement?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you say it was with reference to a combination you were going to make between the National Improved Company and the Pan-Electric Company?—A. A consolidation; yes; that was one of the objects.

Q. You have heretofore said you did make the combination, and made a written contract, which you said was on the way. Will you produce it?—A. I telegraphed Mr. Van Benthuyssen to send me that contract, and he wrote a letter to his partner, who is here, by which it seems there has been a misunderstanding. He did not find the right contract; he had not found it, but would come in a few days and bring it or would send it, so he wrote. I haven't heard from him since, and that was four days ago.

Q. And you have not got it?—A. No, sir.

Q. I thought you said it was on the way?—A. I got a telegram saying my telegram was too late, but he would send it the next morning; and I assumed from that it was on the way.

Q. Then you have not got it?—A. No; but I will get it; don't be uneasy about it; I will have it.

Q. On what day was that contract signed?—A. I can't tell you that. I don't remember the date.

Q. Your conference was on the 30th of July?—A. The paper was signed some time before we left Washington.

Q. The conference was on the 30th?—A. No; I got here on the 30th.

Q. On what day was that conference?—A. It must have been the next day. It lasted two or three days; several days.

Q. Can't you fix the date?—A. We conferred every day from the 31st of July until the time they left here. I don't remember what day that was. I believe it was about the 6th or 7th of August. We had conferences every day. We were all stopping at the same hotel.

Q. Were you having conferences every day about this matter from the 30th of July to the 7th of August?—A. Oh, we talked about it every day; about the prospects of the two companies, and how we would conduct our business and all about it. I cannot recall everything that was said, but we discussed it.

Q. How soon did the conferences ripen into a contract that was put in writing?—A. In two or three days. It was nothing of a contract, except that we were to pay the expenses of two suits—

Q. I don't ask you what was in it. I want to see that paper.—A. I tell you there was nothing in it except that, and I don't remember what date it was.

Q. We must have that contract if we can get it.—A. You will have it. You need not be uneasy about it. I want it as bad as you do.

Q. Did you not keep a copy of that contract?—A. I thought I had, but I couldn't find it.

Q. I see you have a book in which you copied all contracts?—A. That contract was not copied. All our contracts for the sale of territory were copied.

Q. You have a book which purports to be a book in which you entered contracts your company made with other companies.—A. It not only purports to be, but it is such a book. It contains contracts between the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and all companies we made contracts with in regard to the sale of territory.

Q. Why did you not copy this contract?—A. I did not consider it important enough to copy it. It was just an agreement made between myself and Mr. Van Benthuyssen. It was not signed by the company.

Q. Will you be kind enough to produce here the telegrams you have had in relation to that contract being on its way?—A. I will if I have it among my telegrams. I think I have, and, if so, I will bring it up.

Q. You said you had a telegram that the contract was on its way?—A. I assumed from the answer I got that it was on the way. That was the telegram.

Q. Will you be kind enough to give us that telegram?—A. I have said if I could find it I would bring it up. I think I have it.

Q. How many telegrams have you sent about it since then?—A. Only one; I have not sent any since.

Q. From whom did you learn there was a mistake about the contract?—A. I learned it from Mr. Seixas, Mr. Van Benthuyzen's partner.

Q. Is he here?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was it verbal or written?—A. It was written.

Q. Did you make more than one written contract with the National Improved Telephone Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. If you never made but one, how could there be any mistake as to which one it was?—A. I cannot tell you that. Mr. Van Benthuyzen perhaps can state how he happened to make the mistake.

Q. How did you send for it; by letter or telegram?—A. I telegraphed to him to send it.

Q. Have you a copy of your telegram?—A. No, sir. It can be obtained at the office of the telegraph company.

Q. What contract did you describe in the telegram?—A. Oh, I just telegraphed, as I remember, "Send me the contract we made at Washington in reference to the expenses of the suits at New Orleans and Memphis." That is my recollection.

Q. You never made but one contract with him?—A. No, sir.

Q. And you say you got a telegram that the contract was on the way?—A. No; I did not say anything of that sort. I stated exactly what the telegram was. That it was on the way was my inference. He telegraphed he had got my telegram too late in the evening to hunt it up that evening, but he would send it the next morning.

Q. Did you not state to the committee at a previous hearing that the contract was on its way, and you would have it here the next morning?—A. I presume I did.

Q. And were you not asked at the hearing on Monday whether you had the contract?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And did you not say it had not come, but it was on its way?—A. But I learned from Mr. Seixas afterwards how the matter stood; that there had been a mistake.

Q. When did you hear there had been a mistake?—A. I believe it was on Monday; I think so.

Q. That was the very day you said it would be here the next morning, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; and I supposed it would be here.

Q. But you had already been told there was a mistake about it?—A. Oh, no; I had not already been told. I think Mr. Seixas brought the letter to my room Monday night.

Q. Who is Mr. Seixas?—A. Mr. H. O. Seixas, the partner of Mr. Van Benthuyzen. He is here in the city.

Q. As you were to produce that contract the next morning, why did you not tell the committee it had not come?—A. Nobody asked anything about it.

Q. Had you told any member of the committee about it?—A. No; I don't think I had. Nobody inquired about it. I don't think I said anything about it.

Q. What steps have you since taken to get it?—A. Simply wrote to him. Mr. Seixas wrote to him, describing what was wanted, and asked him to send it. I did not write.

Q. If there was never but one contract between you and the National Improved Company, there could not have been any mistake as to which one was wanted?—A. That is a question for Mr. Van Benthuyzen to answer when he gets here. I don't know what mistake he made.

Q. Is he coming?—A. Oh, yes, he will be here; don't be uneasy about that; he is certain to come.

Q. I understand you to say that your company entered into a written contract with the National Improved Company and kept no copy of it yourself?—A. No; I do not say our company entered into the contract; I say nobody knew of the agreement between myself and Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Q. It was a written contract?—A. It was a written agreement.

Q. Do you make a distinction between an agreement and a contract?—A. Oh, yes; the law makes one.

Q. Did you make an agreement with Mr. Van Benthuyzen in relation to the matter about which you have testified without keeping a copy of it yourself?—A. I think I did keep a copy; but I am not able to find it.

Q. Did you not sign the paper in duplicate?—A. Yes; I think we did; I think so.

Q. Where is that duplicate?—A. I have just stated to you that I have not been able to find it; I thought I had it.

Q. How much have you searched for it?—A. I have searched among all my papers.

Q. Where did you keep it?—A. I don't remember now what I did with it. I presume I put it among the other papers. I don't know. I may have put it in my trunk, which was at the hotel at the time. I may have put it in my trunk and taken it away with me.

Q. Was the agreement between you as an individual and Van Benthuyssen?—A. Yes, sir; I had no authority from the company, and I don't think I ever mentioned it to them.

Q. It was not between your company and Van Benthuyssen?—A. I don't think I ever mentioned it to the company. I presume the company will be bound by any action of that sort by me. I felt that I had a right to do it.

Q. It was an agreement between you as an individual and Van Benthuyssen as an individual, was it?—A. I think we signed it as officers of the companies. I think we did. I think he signed it as president, and I signed it as secretary; that is my recollection; and I believe I told my associates about it.

Q. Did you confer with Mr. Harris about it?—A. I don't think I did.

Q. Did you show it to him?—A. I don't know whether I did or not. I told him about it.

Q. Was he present at the first conference you had on that subject?—A. He was in the room once, as I remember, and only once.

Q. That conference was by previous arrangement, was it, between you and these other men, and was a secret?—A. Oh, no, sir; there was nothing secret about it.

Q. Did you assume to act for the company without the concurrence of the president—A. Oh, no.

Q. How was it?—A. I talked to them all. I talked to Dr. Rogers and Senator Harris, and all conferred about the consolidation. I talked with them about it.

Q. That contract is the paper to which Dr. Rogers referred, when he said you told him they had got $75,000 worth of testimony, and you were going to put the little influence of your company against that.—A. He did not mention any contract that I know of. If he did, that was the one.

Q. That was the one you spoke about to him?—A. That was not the one. I was speaking then about the consolidation of the two companies. There was nothing in that contract about it.

Q. You need not state what was in that contract.—A. You asked me what I was talking to Dr. Rogers about. How will you have me answer?

Q. Was there more than one agreement?—A. There was an agreement about our consolidation, or rather we tried to make one, which we have not consummated. It is still open.

Q. There was but one agreement?—A. In reference to this matter.

Q. And you signed on behalf of the company. Do you state to this committee that you entered into a written agreement on behalf of your company and signed on behalf of your company without the sanction of the other directors or officers?—A. You heard what I stated. I stated I signed it without consulting anybody that I know of. I was in the habit of doing such things.

Q. I don't care for your habit.—A. I tell you I did sign that paper without reference to anybody. I talked with them all about it afterwards.

Q. Will you tell us on what date that paper was signed?—A. I cannot tell you that. I can tell you about the time. I cannot tell you the exact time.

Q. Fix the time as near as you can.—A. It was probably about the 2d or 3d or 5th of August; somewhere along there.

Q. That is not very definite.—A. I think it is about as definitely as a man can remember a transaction a year old that he attached no importance to. Do you think you can come any nearer? If you can you have got a better memory than I have.

Q. That agreement was the culmination of this conference?—A. Oh, no; there was no culmination about it.

Q. It was the only agreement you arrived at?—A. It was simply done while we were here. There was no culmination about it. That was not the thing we came for.

Q. Did you have the conference for any other purpose?—A. I have stated what the purpose of the conference was—to look after the consolidation of these two companies, and to look after this very Government suit we are talking about. Mr. Van Benthuyssen had written—

Q. You came here for a conference in reference to a consolidation, and to look after the Government suit?—A. Yes, sir; that Mr. Van Benthuyssen had written to me about, and that we had talked about before that.

Q. At whose instance did you come here?—A. At the instance of Mr. Van Benthuyssen, upon a letter which I received from him while he was at Waukesha Springs.

Q. I put it to you once more. Can you account for the loss of your duplicate of that agreement which you made with Van Benthuyssen?—A. I don't know it is lost; I don't think it is; I think I have got it at home.

Q. Did you look for it?—A. I did not look before I came on here.

Q. Why did you telegraph to another man to produce his copy of it when you did not know but that you had a copy of your own?—A. I knew I did not have it here, and I thought I could get it easier from him than to go back home for it.

Q. Have you not a clerk there to whom you could telegraph for it?—A. Oh, no; I am not able to support a clerk.

Q. Have you taken any steps to obtain it?—A. None whatever.

Q. Do you know it is there?—A. No.

Q. How happened you to have all the other papers of the company here and not that?—A. I have not got them all. There are a great many I haven't got. I have got all the papers that pertain to this matter, except probably a few scattered about home.

Q. During those days you were here, from the 30th of July to the 7th of August, you were having conferences all the time about this Government suit?—A. Oh, no; that is your assumption. That is not my evidence.

Q. You conferred whenever you met?—A. When we met we conferred first about the consolidation of our companies—very soon after I got here. Mr. Van Benthuyzen introduced that subject. It was a favorite one with him, and it was the main object that brought him here. I hardly think he would have come for anything else.

Q. Can you state the date of your call on Mr. Garland?—A. No; I cannot tell the exact day. It was probably the 31st of July. It may have been that day or the 1st of August.

Q. Can you not fix it any nearer than that?—A. One day is about as near as a man can fix anything that elapsed a year ago.

Q. Who of you called upon Mr. Garland?—A. Myself, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, Mr. C. P. Huntington, Mr. Von Briesen, and Col. George Gantt.

Q. These persons whom you have named were either connected with and interested in the National Improved Company or in your company?—A. Mr. Von Briesen was not that I know of, nor Col. Gantt. They were lawyers, and had no other interest in it.

Q. Did you communicate to Mr. Attorney-General Garland the fact of your having made an agreement with the National Improved Company?—A. I did not say a word to him, except to introduce them.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Had you at that time made the agreement?—A. No; we had made no agreement then.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You had made no agreement when you called upon him?—A. None.

Q. Do you know whether you had or not?—A. I know it was not made until just before we left here.

Q. Can you now fix the date when it was signed?—A. Oh, no.

Q. Can you fix the date when you called on Mr. Garland?—A. I can fix it on the 31st of July or the 1st of August; one of those two days. I think it was the 31st of July, but about that I cannot be certain.

Q. You called in reference to having a Government suit brought?—A. Yes; that was what we went there for.

Q. Did you know that Mr. Van Benthuyzen had made an application to the Attorney-General?—A. I did.

Q. When did you first know it?—A. I think I learned it from him in a letter he wrote me before I came on here. He told me in Pittsburgh he was going to do it.

Q. You got a letter from Van Benthuyzen informing you of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And he told you at Pittsburgh, in the interview you had there, that he was going to do it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where is that letter from him?—A. I haven't got it. I have looked for it, but did not find it.

Q. When did you look for it?—A. Since I have been here.

Q. Where did you look for it?—A. I looked among my papers.

Q. You did get a letter from him informing you that he had done it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you reply to it?—A. I think I did; I don't remember.

Q. Did you keep a copy of your reply?—A. I don't keep copies of my letters at all.

Q. Nor keep the original letters you receive?—A. Oh, sometimes I do and sometimes I don't. It appears I didn't keep this.

Q. Why did you not keep it?—A. I can't give you any reason why I have not kept all the letters I have received in the last two or three years.

Q. You seem to have produced a few letters from Dr. Rogers that were good for nothing, and all the letters of importance you don't seem to produce.—A. How do you know they are important? I don't regard them so.

Q. They were likely to be important.—A. Then you know more about it than I do. I did not regard it so, or I should have kept them. You are entitled to your opinion on that subject and I am entitled to mine. I don't agree with you.

Q. Do you know you have not got that letter?—A. I know I have not got it here.

Q. When did you first look for it?—A. I looked for it a week ago, perhaps.

Q. A week ago, perhaps?—A. Yes, sir; and last night, too.

Q. It could not have been a very anxious search if you put "perhaps" to it.—A. I didn't feel very great anxiety about it; not nearly so much as you manifest.

Mr. RANNEY. I wish to put in here a copy of the application made to the Attorney-General by Mr. Van Benthuyzen on July 12, 1885. It is on page 1 of the record from the Interior Department. It is dated New York Hotel, New York, July 12, 1885, addressed to the Hon. A. H. Garland, Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.:

NEW YORK HOTEL,
New York, July 12, 1885.

Hon. A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR:

I respectfully request that you will institute suit against the "Bell telephone patents," under a law passed last session of Congress, as I am informed making it incumbent upon you to proceed against patents issued fraudulently or having fraudulent claims, at the request of any citizen.

I charge that A. G. Bell is not the inventor of the telephone.

Speaking telephones were invented previously by Reiss, Van der Weyde, Pickering, Cross, and Edison, and I deny that "Bell" was the first inventor of any telephone, or that he invented any telephone; that "Bell" was not anticipated by "Reiss" and others, and that the Bell patents are valid in whole or in part. In Bell's application of February 25, 1875, he says: "For instance, with a series of transmitters organized as above I can place at the receiving end of the line a telephone."

Whose telephone???

I charge that the third claim of Bell's patent is false—"falsus in uno falsus in omnibus"—wherein he claims the combination of an "electro magnet having an inductive plate, &c.;" the said Bell having seen said combination and magneto telephone used in the Institute of Technology, in Boston, by Professors Pickering and Cross in their lectures delivered in 1873 to 1874. See "Cross" cross-examination in "Overland" case, taken recently and not yet examined by any court in any case.

I charge that the Bell patent of 1876 is not being used, and that it is without value, and that the transmission of speech at the present day by the Bell Company is by the use of what is known as the Blake transmitter, which is an infringement of the Edison patent, which latter patent, Mr. Edison claims, is an improvement on "Reiss."

I charge also that the "Blake" transmitter was largely used in this country three years before being patented, and therefore that said patent is void.

I charge that the claim in the Bell patent for "the method of and apparatus for transmitting vocal or other sounds telegraphically" is false.

That vocal and other sounds were transmitted telegraphically long before Bell was heard of, and I therefore respectfully request that the proper proceedings be had to relieve this people of the great wrong perpetrated in the issue of claims giving to said patents the exclusive right of transmitting articulate speech by electricity, and beg leave to ask that said proceedings shall be instituted in Memphis before Judge Hammond.

I shall furnish a large amount of valuable information with reference to said patents, when called upon to do so, without cost or expense of any character to the Government.

Your prompt attention and reply to this address to my attorneys in New York, Messrs. v. Briesen & Steele, 229 Broadway, will oblige,

Very respectfully, with assurance, &c.,

W. VAN BENTHUYSEN,
(Of New Orleans, La.),
National Improved Telephone Company.

I put in, in connection with it, the indorsements on it by the Department of the Interior: "Received July 15, 1885." Also this:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, July 14, 1885.

SIR: I have the honor to send you for your consideration and for an expression of your views thereupon a letter of the 12th instant, from Mr. Van Benthuyzen, asking the institution of "suit against the Bell Telephone patents." Please return Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter with your reply.

Very respectfully,

A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

To the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

There are some other indorsements, as follows:

"Department of Interior. Received July 15, 1885. 349,231. July 14, 1885. Office of Commissioner of Patents. Received July 16, 1885. The Attorney-General. Inclosed, for expression of views of this Department, a letter from W. Van Benthuyzen, of the National Improved Telephone Company, requesting that suit be brought for annulment of Bell telephone patents on account of fraud. Department of the Interior, July 15, 1885. Respectfully referred to the Commissioner of Patents for report. H. L. Muldrow, Acting Secretary. G. M. D. On request of writer, and on assurance that it is in accordance with the views of the Attorney-General, this paper is returned to such writer without report. Dated July 31, 1885. M. V. Montgomery, Commissioner of Patents."

Q. You and the men you have spoken of got here on July 30?—A. I don't know what time the men I am talking about arrived here. I arrived here then.

Q. And on July 31 you had a conference?—A. I think that was the day.

Q. Did you in that conference refer to the application Van Benthuyzen had made to the Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir; we talked all about it. We consulted very fully.

Q. Did you talk about it on July 31?—A. Yes, sir; I think we did on that day, and probably on other days.

Q. Did you have anything to do with getting that application withdrawn from the office of the Secretary of the Interior?—A. Nothing whatever. I did not know it was done until long afterwards. I had nothing to do with it.

Q. You talked it over?—A. We did not talk about withdrawing it.

Q. You talked about it being on file?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. What conclusion did you come to as to what had better be done with it?—A. I didn't come to any.

Q. What was the talk between you about withdrawing it?—A. Not a word was said that I know of. I never heard of it. I was giving my views about the sort of suit that ought to be brought.

Q. Was it communicated to you at any of those conferences that it had been withdrawn?—A. At none. I never heard a word said about it.

Q. You did not know of it from the time you came there until you left?—A. I never heard of it until long afterwards.

Q. On what day did you go to the Attorney-General?—A. I think we went to the Attorney-General on the 31st of July. Please write that down and hand it to the gentleman, Mr. Clerk. He don't seem to remember it. I have said it about twenty times.

Q. I thought you said in your answer that you could not fix the date. Now you do fix the date as the 31st of July.—A. I fix it as the 31st of July or the 1st of August; I don't mean to say which it was.

Q. Oh, I thought you wanted it written down.—A. You think a great many things that are not warranted by the facts.

Q. Fix the right date and I will try and remember it.—A. I have given it as near as I can remember it, but you don't seem to be able to.

Q. Will you now answer once for all?—A. I will answer as near as I can. It was either the 31st of July or the 1st of August.

Q. You can't tell which?—A. No; I cannot.

Q. I want to know which, so I can remember?—A. You can remember both of the dates, if you are capable of doing it.

Q. Was it before or after you had been up to the Capitol to see what had become of the Senate bill?—A. It was before.

Q. Which was first?—A. I have just answered you it was before.

Q. Did you go to the Attorney-General before going to the Capitol?—A. I went to the Attorney-General before going to the Capitol.

Q. What day was it you came to the Capitol?—A. I can't remember the date. It may have been some time afterwards. I don't remember.

Q. Try and fix the date the best you can, and I will try and remember it?—A. I can't really fix the date when I did go to the Capitol.

Q. Are you sure you went to the Attorney-General before you went to the Capitol?—A. I know it was before—

Q. How do you know that?—A. I am just going to state: Because they left the Attorney-General with the impression that the suit would be brought, if brought at all, under that bill, and I was opposed to any such suit; that is the way I remember it.

Q. I see Mr. Van Benthuyzen says that bill was stolen from the Senate.—A. You can question him about it when he comes; I don't know whether it was or not; I am going to try to find out before we get through with this investigation whether it was stolen or not; a good many things have been purloined, and perhaps that has.

Q. Do you say you left the Attorney-General with the impression that the suit would be brought under that bill?—A. No, sir; I left the Attorney-General with the impression that if the suit was brought at all it would be brought under that bill; that was what they were asking for.

Q. And that is why you know?—A. Yes; because when I went back to the hotel—

Q. After seeing the Attorney-General and getting the impression—A. Don't be in such a hurry; let me answer the question, and then you shall have full opportunity to talk all you want.

Q. I am going to let you do the talking.—A. I propose to do it if necessary. I went to the Attorney-General's office, opposed to the bringing of the suit under that bill. When I came back it was discussed again, and I still said to those gentlemen: "I don't think that is the sort of suit you want to bring, which will be brought under that bill if brought at all." They were not discussing the general authority of the Attorney-General to do it outside of that bill; I was. I told them he had the authority independent of that bill; that that bill did not give the sort of authority we wanted.

Q. In consequence of what was said at that interview about the bringing of the suit, you came to the Capitol to see whether the bill had been passed?—A. I couldn't say I did it in consequence of that. I came to the Capitol some time, I don't remember the exact date. I found out when I came to the Capitol that the bill had not become a law. The reason I came there was, it was intimated to me from some source or other—I have forgotten now by whom—that perhaps the bill had not passed. I always thought it had. I have forgotten who did speak about it first, or who suggested it to me. I do not know whether it may not have been Mr. Van Benthuyzen himself. I don't remember now.

Q. You have already stated that you came to the Capitol and there found the bill had not become a law?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had not the laws of the Forty-eighth Congress been published before the 31st of July?—A. I presume so. I don't know.

Q. Could you not have looked in the Attorney-General's office at the published statutes of that Congress, and see whether it has become a law?—A. I presume I could if I had tried to. I did not do it as a matter of fact.

Q. At that interview with the Attorney-General you went there with these gentlemen and discussed the matter of bringing the suit, did you not?—A. No, sir; we did not discuss it at all. The Attorney-General would not let us discuss it. He would not talk about it. He just said, "Gentlemen, I can't talk to you on that subject."

Q. What did he say would be done?—A. He said just what I am telling you.

Q. Was that all that was said by the Attorney-General?—A. As near as I can remember. The conversation was about this: I introduced the gentlemen. Mr. Von Briesen, of New York, opened the conversation to the Attorney-General by saying he had come to see him to get him to bring suit against the Bell Telephone Company to annul its patents. The Attorney-General said, "I am interested in a telephone company. I am its attorney. I cannot talk to you gentlemen on that subject." Mr. Von Briesen then pulled out an affidavit from his pocket, prepared before he went there, some time previous—I didn't see it prepared—by Mr. Wilbur, and proposed to read it to the Attorney-General. He said, "I want to read you this affidavit." The Attorney-General said, "I don't want to hear it. I can't talk to you on the subject." Mr. Van Benthuyzen then took up the conversation excitedly, and he said, "Mr. Attorney-General, we have got some rights here. We are entitled to have this suit brought, and I want it done." Mr. Garland said, "I can't do it." Mr. Van Benthuyzen said, "I will see it is done by somebody;" whereupon we left. We were not there five minutes.

Q. That was all that was said there?—A. That was the substance of it.

Q. Was a word said in that interview about the application that had been made previously by Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. Not a word that I now remember of. I don't think there was a word said about it, unless it may have been the Attorney-General said he had referred it to the Secretary of the Interior. I don't know that it was mentioned at all, but I learned from somebody that it had been referred there.

Q. How happened it that on that very day, July 31, the application of Van Benthuyzen is recorded as having been withdrawn in accordance with the views of the Attorney-General?—A. You have been a great stickler for my telling only what I know. I must decline now to tell you what I do not know.

Q. There was nothing said in that interview about Mr. Van Benthuyzen having leave to withdraw that application?—A. Not a word. For information on that subject I refer you to him when he comes.

Q. Was there any other interview with the Attorney-General that you know of, except the one when you were present?—A. Not that I know of. I heard afterwards that Mr. Van Benthuyzen went there, but I don't know anything about it.

Q. That was July 31, and that was the date when the application of Van Benthuyzen was withdrawn?—A. Oh, I went all through that record with the Bell lawyers and discussed the whole thing. It was discussed with the attorneys of the Bell Company.

Q. In that interview, when Mr. Garland declined having anything to do with it, did he give any reason why he had on July 14 referred that application for information to the Department of the Interior, entertaining it to that extent?—A. I don't know as that was mentioned at all.

Q. Did he give any reason for it?—A. I don't know that it was mentioned at all. I have no recollection of its being mentioned. I learned from somebody it had been referred there, but whether from Van Benthuyzen or not I couldn't say.

Q. Had you or Van Benthuyzen, when the Attorney-General acted on his application, ever communicated the fact to him that you and Van Benthuyzen had had an interview at Pittsburgh?—A. I never mentioned it to him.

Q. Do you know whether he was aware that the National Improved Company and the Pan-Electric Company were acting in combination in any way?—A. I don't know that he knew it. I know that I did not tell him so.

Q. Did he not tell you he would not have acted on that application of Van Benthuyzen if he had known the National Improved Company was in any way connected with the Pan-Electric Company, in which he was interested?—A. Oh, no; you would be very happy if I would tell you he did. He never said anything about it.

The CHAIRMAN. Just answer the question.

The WITNESS. It is an improper question, Mr. Chairman.

Q. He did not say anything about it?—A. No, sir; and I shall not answer questions which are improper hereafter.

Mr. RANNEY. I don't see anything improper in it.

The WITNESS. I differ with you.

Q. Did he in that interview allude to the fact that he had already acted on Van Benthuyzen's application?—A. Not that I remember. I don't think a word was said about it at the time.

Q. That he had acted on it because he did not know there had been any combination between you and the National Improved Company?—A. I have told you there was nothing said about any combination.

Q. I am only trying to get an excuse for him. Do you not know that he acted on that application in ignorance of the fact of the combination?—A. You ask him about it; he can tell you. I don't know.

Q. You never communicated to him at all the fact that there was any combination?—A. Never; and to nobody else but my associates.

Q. I see this indorsement: "Finding that the law referred to in the writer's letter to Attorney-General Garland had not been enacted, and being informed that the bill had been stolen from the Senate after being adopted by the House of Representatives, and being advised by my attorney to pursue another course, consent to withdraw the letter was obtained, and the letter was withdrawn by A. von Briesen, esq., my attorney." Was von Briesen, the attorney, there at your conferences?—A. He was there; yes, sir. I will tell you the reason why he withdrew it, if you want to know.

Q. Answer my question. Was he there at those conferences?—A. Yes, sir; he was there; and I will tell you why that letter was written.

Q. While your conferences were going on, did you know of the fact that he went to the Department of the Interior and withdrew that letter?—A. No; I did not. I never heard of it.

Q. Did you have anything to do with getting the consent of the Attorney-General for its withdrawal?—A. Nothing whatever. I never spoke to him about it in my life.

Q. Did you hear anything said in that interview about the bill being stolen from the Senate?—A. No; I don't think I did. I heard it afterwards from somebody.

Q. Where?—A. I can't recollect where I heard about it. Perhaps Mr. Van Benthuyzen may have told me so, or I saw that indorsement. I don't know whether I ever heard of it until I saw that indorsement.

Q. You don't know what he means by the bill going from the House to the Senate and being stolen in the Senate?—A. Yes, I do; I think the language is pretty clear. He is a man who generally speaks in pretty plain terms. He says "stolen," and I reckon he means what he says.

Q. You never investigated it?—A. I did not, but I will, for your benefit, before this investigation is over.

Q. You say you came up to the Capitol to investigate the matter?—A. Not to investigate whether it was stolen.

Q. To see whether it had passed?—A. Yes, sir; and found it had not.

Q. Did you inquire to see whether it had been stolen?—A. Oh, no; and I have not yet. I will, though. I think very probably it was.

Q. Did you not know before you left Washington, that that proceeding, thus instituted on the letter of Van Benthuyzen, was stopped in the Department?—A. No. I knew I had advised it. I didn't know whether it had been done or not.

Q. You did advise it?—A. I did.

Q. Did you advise it before or after that written agreement was made?—A. I couldn't say. I advised it all the time I was there. I thought it was an improper proceeding.

Q. Let us pass on. It seems that on August 31 there was an application to the Attorney-General by H. W. McCorry, United States attorney for Western Tennessee. It is dated Jackson, Tenn., August 31, 1885, and addressed to Hon. A. H. Garland, Attorney-General, Washington, D. C. When you got through here in August, on the 7th or 8th of the month, where did you go?—A. Home.

Q. To Memphis?—A. Yes, sir; I think so.

Q. Ascertain what time you arrived there, if you please.—A. [referring to memorandum]. I see I left here on the 7th of August, and I suppose I reached Memphis the next night, which would be the 8th.

Q. Between that and the 31st of August, 1885, how many times did you see District Attorney McCorry?—A. I saw him twice.

Q. Where?—A. I saw him at Memphis once and at Jackson once.

Q. Did you meet Van Benthuyzen there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And his attorney?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When, and how soon?—A. Well, that was some time after I got home; I don't remember the date. It was during the early part of August. I think probably they came there very soon after I got home.

Q. Who came there?—A. Mr. Van Benthuyzen, Mr. Huntington, and Mr. J. R. Beckwith.

Q. Then, there was yourself, representing the Pan-Electric Company, and Mr. Beckwith and Mr. Van Benthuyzen, representing the National Improved Company?—A. Mr. Van Benthuyzen was the president, and Mr. Beckwith the attorney.

Q. Those were the two companies between whom this agreement that you referred to was made?—A. They were the ones.

Q. You say you met Mr. McCorry, the district attorney, there. How long had he been appointed?—A. Oh, a short time. I don't remember when he was appointed. He was appointed some time previous to that; I don't remember when.

Q. He was a new appointee?—A. He was appointed under Mr. Cleveland's administration.

Q. Perhaps you had something to do with his appointment?—A. No, sir; I did my best to prevent it, as the records of the Department of Justice will show. I did my best.

Q. You tried to get it for yourself?—A. No, sir; I did not want it myself. I tried to get a young man named Rea in Memphis appointed.

Q. Mr. McCorry got his information about these matters from you and your associates?—A. He didn't get it from me. I didn't talk with him about it.

Q. Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Beckwith talked with him?—A. Yes, sir; and General Wright and Colonel Gantt.

Q. Wright was your attorney?—A. Yes, sir; General Luke Wright—not the one we have been speaking of. It is a different man; no relation to the other.

Q. He is a Memphis man?—A. They are both Memphis men, but no relation to each other.

Q. They acted on behalf of the company?—A. Yes, sir; they were authorized by our company to act.

Q. I see that H. W. McCorry, in his application to the Attorney-General, says: "I ask that Hon. Casey Young, Col. George Gantt, and General Luke Wright, of Memphis, and Col. J. R. Beckwith, of New Orleans, be permitted to appear as associate counsel without expense to the Government, and that you will direct the commencement of proceedings?"—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You and Gantt and Wright were the attorneys of your company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Beckwith was the attorney of the National Improved Company?—A. Yes, sir; I will tell you how that came to be done.

Q. And you all met at Memphis?—A. Hold on and let me answer the question. We had examined the previous cases that had been tried and found that it was universally—

Q. I do not ask you anything about that.—A. I know you do not, but I want to tell you about it. We found it had been the universal custom to appoint special attorneys.

Q. Answer my question and make any explanation you want afterwards.—A. All right; I am answering it.

Q. Turn to your record and give me the entry as to the amount of stock in your company that was voted to Messrs. Gant and Wright?—A. I think $20,000.

Q. Turn to the record.—A. I will, if it is in the record. I don't know whether it is in the record. It was long before this occurred.

Q. No matter when it was. Turn to the record and read what it contains. That is all I ask you now.—A. Do you want me to read it or state it, or don't you want me to do either?

Q. I want you to read it.—A. I think that matter was left with me.

Q. I am now asking you for the record.—A. I am looking for it. I am not sure there was any record made of it.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes there was, for I saw it yesterday.

The WITNESS (after a further examination). I do not find any record of it.

Q. I read it there the other day. I can find it for you. It was voting $20,000 of stock to each of them, to Luke E. Wright and to Mr. Gantt.—A. I know what it was. I want to find the date of it. [After a further search.] No, I do not find it.

Q. Will you turn to your stock ledger and find wherein $20,000 of stock was allotted to Colonel Gantt?—A. That was not done. I stated the reason it was not done.

Q. I do not care for the reason.—A. Well, it is not there.

Q. I read that the other day on the ledger. I saw it unless I am grievously mistaken.—A. I do not see it in the index, and I am quite sure it was never in the stock-book at all. Here is the minute book, but I do not find it.

Q. You know the fact, do you not, that there was $20,000 voted to these men?—A. I was authorized to give each of them $20,000 of stock.

Q. I saw both of them the other day, but we haven't time to stop and look them up. I only wanted to fix the date. It is a fact that that was voted to them?—A. Yes, sir; and it must have been previous to the 20th of May.

Q. So that, in the request for a suit to be brought, Mr. McCorry asked to be appointed as counsel yourself, who owned your share, before developed, in this company, Colonel Gantt and Luke Wright, who had been employed by your company and voted $20,000 of stock for their services, and Mr. Beckwith, of New Orleans—there was no payment to him. Mr. Van Benthuyzen, I suppose, took care of him?—A. Yes, sir; and we did it for the reason I state, that the precedents all authorized it.

Q. I am after the facts.—A. I will give you the facts.

Q. Did you make the request of Mr. McCorry that these men should be appointed?—A. No, sir; I declined to act in the matter.

Q. Why?—A. I thought possibly there might have been some little impropriety in it, and I declined to act, and did not sign the bill.

Q. You thought there was an impropriety in your acting?—A. I cannot say I thought so, but I preferred not to sign the bill, and did not do it.

Q. Where was there any more impropriety in your acting than there was in Colonel Gantt and Mr. Wright's acting, who were interested in the company?—A. The only difference I saw was that I was an officer of the company and they were its attorneys.

Q. They were interested in the stock?—A. Yes, sir; to the amount of their fees. I could have done it with perfect propriety, but I preferred not to do it.

Q. But you did appear before the Secretary of the Interior to get a hearing on that application?—A. I did make an argument before the Secretary of the Interior.

Q. You filed a brief?—A. Yes; I filed a brief.

Q. Had the impropriety ceased between the time this application was made and the time you were acting?—A. I was not then acting as an officer of the company, as I declared to the Secretary of the Interior. Our company is not known in that record.

Q. Who did you appear for?—A. I appeared for the citizens of Memphis, as stated in my brief.

Q. You appeared before the Secretary of the Interior under this application, acted as counsel, filed a brief, and argued the case?—A. Yes.

Q. Who retained you for that purpose?—A. Nobody.

Q. Who paid you?—A. Nobody; I never got a cent.

Q. Whom did you appear for?—A. For Colonel Gantt, Mr. Beckwith, Mr. Huntington, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Q. You appeared as counsel for counsel?—A. No, sir; I appeared for one of the presidents and the stockholders.

Q. Of what?—A. Both of them of the National Improved Telephone Company. I would have appeared for our company if I had thought it was necessary.

Q. Do you mean that you went before the Secretary of the Interior and appeared for the National Improved Company?—A. No, sir; I did not say so.

Q. But you went there and appeared for Mr. Beckwith?—A. No, sir; I did not say so, either.

Q. You appeared for Colonel Gantt?—A. I appeared for Colonel Gantt, Mr. Beckwith, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and Mr. Huntington.

Q. Did they retain you?—A. No, sir; nobody retained me.

Q. Did you go and argue it for the love of it?—A. No, sir; not altogether. I will give you the reasons that I had.

Q. Answer my question. Did you go because you were to receive pay as counsel?—A. Let me give the reasons.

Q. Well, give them in your own way.—A. I came on here after this application had been made. First, it was suspended by order of the president, and there was a good deal said in the newspapers about it, and I came in for a pretty large share of it from my friend over there [referring to Mr. Crawford, of the New York World]. I determined then that I would appear and present the law of the case. I had been charged with the responsibility of bringing it, and I intended to come here and argue it as a lawyer. I did come on here. When I got here I found there was no lawyer here at all representing any of the original petitioners. Mr. Beckwith had been here, and I supposed he was going to attend to it, but he left on the very morning that the inquiry was commenced, and there was nobody here, except General Bradley T. Johnson, representing his own company, and Mr. Humphreys, representing the Globe Company, and I did not desire the matter should be presented in the light those gentlemen proposed to present it.

I went before the Secretary of the Interior the morning the inquiry was commenced, and when I was sitting there General Bradley T. Johnson opened the argument, presented his petition, and Mr. Humphreys, representing the Globe Telephone Company, presented a petition of his company, and somebody represented the petition of Cushing and others and a resolution of the Board of Trade of New York. Mr. Lamar asked who represented the Pan-Electric Company, and General Johnson said Mr. Young. I rose and said, "No, I am not here to represent the Pan-Electric Company. The Pan-Electric Company has no representative here. I am here to represent these petitioners, and I will speak for them." Then the hearing was adjourned.

Mr. Van Benthuyssen was here, and I discovered that all the Bell attorneys were here, and all these elaborate briefs were prepared, and I determined to make a brief on it, but I was not ambitious to oppose those gentlemen in a legal conflict, and so I said to Mr. Van Benthuyssen, "You had better telegraph to Mr. Beckwith to come back and meet these gentlemen in argument." I also myself telegraphed to Colonel Gantt, one of the most eminent lawyers of the South, who had been retained by us, asking him to come on, but he answered that he could not come at that time. I found that the investigation was going to be postponed for some days, and I telegraphed or wrote him, if he could, to come, and he did come, and Mr. Beckwith also returned. When they both got here I was willing to leave the matter in their hands, and I then declined to make any argument at all. Mr. Storrow made a very ingenuous argument on the law of the case—

Q. Is all that necessary?—A. I am giving my reasons, and I hope the committee will allow me to do it.

Q. You have traveled all over God's creation.—A. And perhaps I have told a great deal that you do not want to hear.

Q. I want anything that is relevant, but I want a direct answer.—A. Well, I have a right to state that. I met that argument of the lawyers in that case that you are stating. I found that Mr. Storrow made a very ingenuous argument, and I thought it ought to be answered, so I prepared a brief which I will take great pleasure in giving to you, as I see you have his to file with the committee. Now, that is the part I took in the matter. I wanted the suit brought, as it had been started, but I did not want it brought in the way it was, and made that argument for the purpose of having it brought in the proper way.

Q. Is what you have said true, that you acted as counsel there for Messrs. Gantt and Wright?—A. I state nothing but what is true.

Q. For whom did you act as attorney?—A. For Colonel Gantt, Mr. Van Benthuyssen, Mr. Huntington, and the other man who signed that petition. I would have acted for my company if it had been necessary.

Q. Colonel Gantt made an argument himself?—A. Yes, sir; and a very good one.

Q. Did you think you were acting for him when he made an argument of his own?—A. I appeared there for the petitioners in that petition, and he was one of them.

Q. Did not Colonel Gantt act for your Pan-Electric Company?—A. I telegraphed him to come and make the argument.

Q. He was an attorney of your company?—A. No, sir; I cannot say he was representing our company in that argument.

Q. Whom was he representing?—A. You will find it printed there. They asked him to make the argument, and I asked him to come here.

Q. Who employed you to make the argument?—A. Nobody; I employed myself. Not a member of my company said a word to me about it.

Q. Did you do it because of your interest in the Pan-Electric Company or your regard for the public good?—A. I made it because I was interested in the result of that suit, and I had a right to make it.

Q. Was it because of your interest in the Pan Electric Company or your regard for the public good?—A. I did it for both, unfortunately. I did not intend to benefit the public so much as to benefit my company, but the way it turned out, as I am afraid, it benefited the public more than the company.

Q. Your views of propriety satisfied you?—A. Yes, sir; my views of propriety satisfied me. I had a perfect right to appear there, and I have no apology to make to you or anybody else for having done it.

Q. Did you know before Mr. McCorry sent in that application that you and Colonel Gantt, Wright, and Beckwith were to be requested by him to act as counsel?—A. I do not know that I knew it, but I am satisfied that some of them asked him about it, and I would have asked him if I had thought of it.

Q. Hadn't you interest enough in it to ask him?—A. Oh, there were able attorneys enough there.

Q. Please turn to page 3 of the record of minutes that I referred to yesterday.—A. You seem to know a great deal about it. Shall I read what I find here?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

The witness read as follows:

"Mr. Looney further reported that he had conferred with Messrs. Gantt and Wright, leading attorneys of Memphis, in reference to obtaining their professional services in the defense of any suit which might be brought against the Memphis company, and that they were willing to engage in the matter for a small fee in money and a certain amount of the capital stock of the company, to be agreed upon hereafter between them and the company, Mr. Looney giving it as his opinion that the amount of stock should be $20,000 for each of the gentlemen mentioned.

"On motion of Isham G. Harris, Mr. Looney was directed to send telephones to the Memphis Company as agreed by him—that is, twenty-five at a time, until suit is brought by the Bell Company or until it is otherwise ordered by the directors of this company, and Mr. Young was also directed to employ Gantt and Wright to assist in defending the litigation referred to, paying them not exceeding $250 each in money and not exceeding $10,000 in the capital stock of the company.

"On motion the meeting adjourned subject to the call of the president.

"J. E. JOHNSTON.

"CASEY YOUNG,
"Secretary."

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What is the date of that?—A. That is dated Monday, January, 12, 1885.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. On one of those old books I saw that stock allotted to them. This book does not seem to be the one. It is the one in which the dividends were declared.—A. I never paid them any dividends, I know.

Mr. OATES. It is the book on which he says the dividends were entered.

Mr. RANNEY. It is on the book where I think I saw Mr. Marble's name as receiving dividends.

The WITNESS. That is the old stock. I will state that Mr. Marble had no stock in this. (Looking at the book.) Yes, I find it is here.

Q. Please read the entry.—A. (Reading.) "To two hundred shares capital stock transferred to him from the company stock, for legal services, twenty thousand dollars."

Q. What is the date of that?—A. This is April 29, 1885.

Q. That is Colonel Gantt's, is it? Now take Mr. Wright's.—A. I suppose that is the same. The reason I did not put it on the other book is that they had a disagreement about the amount afterwards.

Q. They wanted more?—A. Yes, sir. I see the entry is the same for Mr. Wright here. It is on page 198; the same date, April 29, 1885.

Q. Is it the same entry as to him?—A. Yes; the same entry to Wright as to Gantt. We agreed that we ought to give them more, but we had not fixed the price.

Q. So that they were not only the paid counsel in this case of the Pan-Electric Company, but likewise interested in the stock itself?—A. Yes; to the extent of their votes.

Q. Did you communicate that fact to Mr. McCorry?—A. I did not. I do not know whether he knew it or not. I had forgotten altogether that it was on the book.

Q. Didn't it occur to you when you were getting a suit brought in behalf of the public that it would look a little strange, and that the hired attorneys of all who were interested in the stock itself of particular companies were improper men to manage a suit on behalf of the Government?—A. No, sir; I had seventeen precedents before me; I did not think it was improper, for the Attorney-General of the United States had been doing it so long I thought it was proper.

Q. You do not think he really knew the relation of these men?—A. I do not know. I would have told him if I had thought it was necessary.

Q. Was the meeting of yourself, Mr. Beckwith, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen and yourself at Memphis accidental?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was it by an arrangement?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it by an arrangement by which you were to get the district attorney to bring the suit?—A. Yes, sir; we came for that purpose. It had not been decided when they came there what district attorney we would get. We decided that after they did come.

Q. By that arrangement you agreed on the district attorney of Western Tennessee?—

A. Of course. We would not have gone to him if we had not; but that was not the purpose when they came there.

Q. That was where you lived?—A. Yes, sir. The purpose when they came there was to go to New Orleans.

Q. What did they come up to Memphis for then?—A. They came to test certain instruments I had at Memphis.

Q. Did not Mr. Beckwith bring his models there to show Mr. McCorry the fraud?—A. Yes, sir; he brought them from Pittsburgh.

Q. To show the fraud, as you allege it?—A. Yes, sir; that was one object, and we showed it conclusively, too.

Q. How long a time did Mr. McCorry have to examine the question as to the fraud?—A. I suppose he must have been at it a week or ten days.

Q. Did he hear anybody on the subject except you, Mr. Beckwith, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. I do not know how many he heard. The only argument I heard made to him was that made by Mr. Wright.

Q. And that was a one-sided examination, wasn't it?—A. Yes, sir. There was nobody else present. It was just like all such cases had been made.

Q. It was a grand jury, an ex parte matter?—A. Yes, sir; just the same as the one you are conducting here.

Q. Where was the agreement made to meet at Memphis?—A. I don't recollect whether it was made here or whether it was made by a correspondence afterwards.

Q. Was it not made before you left Washington?—A. I cannot say.

Q. Will you say that it was not?—A. No; I do not say that it was or was not.

Q. Did you meet afterwards to make the arrangement before you met at Memphis?—A. No, sir; nowhere else. We had not met before we met at Memphis.

Q. Was it arranged by correspondence?—A. I do not remember whether it was arranged here or by correspondence.

Q. Do you remember any correspondence in relation to having this meeting at Memphis after you left Washington?—A. I do not remember any; we may have had; there may have been an arrangement made here.

Q. According to your best recollection?—A. I can't remember anything about it. You can put it as having taken place here if you want to.

Q. I want the fact according to your best recollection.—A. I have no recollection about it.

Q. According to your own best recollection, was not the matter talked of in your interviews here, between the 30th of July and the 7th of August, 1885?—A. Yes; my recollection is we talked about the whole matter.

Q. About meeting at Memphis?—A. I don't remember talking about meeting at Memphis. Mr. Van Benthuyzen wanted to bring it at New Orleans.

Q. You had then arranged that you would have another proceeding by the Government?—A. Yes; we had made up our minds we would have another suit if we could get it.

Q. And made arrangements then in Washington that you would have a suit by the Government?—A. Yes.

Q. How did you expect to arrange it if the Attorney-General said he would not do it?—A. Mr. Van Benthuyzen was the leader in the matter. I was opposed to the business, but he was strong-willed, and said he would have it done even if he had to go to the White House and see Mr. Cleveland and have it ordered. He said he was going to have it done, whatever Mr. Garland's relations were to our company or any other company; that it was his right.

Q. That you arranged here in Washington?—A. It may have been here; I do not recollect.

Q. If you do not recollect any subsequent correspondence on the subject, is it not your best recollection that it was arranged at Washington that you were to meet at Memphis?—A. No, sir; the recollection I have about it is that we talked about meeting somewhere. I think it was to be New Orleans when we left here, but it was changed for some cause to Memphis; I think because my models were there, and his were to be brought from Pittsburgh.

Q. The application of Mr. Van Benthuyzen in the Department for the bringing of the suit, it seems by the record, had been abandoned.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had arranged to make a new application?—A. We had arranged to ask that the suit be brought at our relation, and let us pay the expenses.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. What do you mean by the word "arranged"?—A. We had a conversation, and agreed that we would take that course.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You had agreed or arranged that you would start a new proceeding?—A. Yes; I advised it myself, and took all the responsibility of it.

Q. And that the one Mr. Van Benthuyzen had already started should be abandoned?—A. No, sir; I do not remember that he had taken it out. Mr. Von Briesen advised it and I advised it, but I did not know that he had done it until afterwards.

Q. You had talked about starting another proceeding. Why was it then that you did not insist upon going on with the application already made to the Attorney-General, but arranged for a new one?—A. Because I did not think it was the kind of a suit we wanted. I did not think the suit brought under that bill would accomplish anything for us. It would for the public.

Q. There had not been any bill offered then?—A. No, sir; but I supposed a law had been passed by Congress allowing the Attorney-General to annul a patent.

Q. Do you say, as a lawyer, that it would make any difference if the law, as it then stood, authorized the bringing of such a suit without the act of Congress, whether there had been any law passed by Congress or not?—A. In my judgment it would not.

Q. Did it make any difference because Mr. Van Benthuyzen had put in his paper a reference to a law passed by Congress, if there was an existing law already by which it could be done?—A. I do not understand your question.

Q. Mr. Van Benthuyzen had applied to have the Government bring suit, and had referred to the act of Congress under which it was to be brought. That application although it referred to an act of Congress under which it could have been brought, do you say it would not have been just as competent for the Attorney-General under that application to have brought suit under the existing law independent of the act of Congress, as it would to bring it under the act of Congress? If the law authorized it, does it make any difference whether it was by existing law or a subsequent act of Congress?—A. I think he had the authority without the law of Congress.

Q. Then what was the occasion of withdrawing Mr. Van Benthuyzen's application?—A. Because I advised to bring a different kind of suit; to bring a suit at our relation.

Q. His application did not confine him to that, did it?—A. No, sir; and that is the reason I consented it should be withdrawn.

Q. The application to Mr. McCorry was not to bring it on your relation, was it?—I did not write that, and do not know; I tried to get him to do it on our relation, and he would not do it; he said we fellows might claim to do the very same thing that the Bell people wanted, and he would not do it.

Q. The application of Mr. Van Benthuyzen did not say whether it was on the relation of anybody, whether it should be brought on the part of the Government to set aside the Bell patents on account of alleged fraud?—A. I do not remember how the first application was.

Q. I want you to tell me what difficulty there was under Mr. Van Benthuyzen's application in the Government's bringing that suit under the law?—A. I shall be very happy to show you.

Q. If you can show what there was under Mr. Van Benthuyzen's application, if they had seen fit to have the Attorney-General bring a suit in the name of the United States to annul their patent either absolutely in behalf of the whole United States, or on the relation of anybody, I wish you would do so.—A. If you will furnish me that bill, I will be able to enlighten you.

Q. The bill had not been brought.—A. I speak of the bill before Congress.

Q. I speak of the bill before Congress, too.—A. You do not understand what you are talking about.

Q. Yes, I understand it.—A. The argument you are making was made by the Bell company half a dozen times.

Q. What difficulty was there under the Van Benthuyzen application in bringing that suit under the authority of the United States to annul the Bell patent?—A. If you will furnish me the bill that passed Congress I will tell you what the difficulty was.

Q. I haven't it. That is not a law; it is a bill proposed.—A. I supposed it was a law, and I went on that theory. I will try to explain the law in this case, if you will listen to me. I have explained it to Mr. Storrow several times.

Q. In the first place, is not that application of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's a general one, without saying that it is to be brought on the relation of any one or not?—A. Yes; it is.

Q. I ask if the Government could not have brought suit on that proceeding on the existing law, irrespective of the statute?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Mr. EDEN. This discussion between Mr. Ranney and the witness in reference to the law is exceedingly interesting, and, if I had nothing else to do, I would like to sit here and hear it all the season. But it is not an investigation of any fact that we are called on to investigate, and while I have no particular objection to it I think we should all try and save time.

Mr. RANNEY. It relates to the movements of the parties and their action. However, I do not care about the dissertation of Colonel Young on the law, and I think your suggestion is a good one. So, without the law, I will let it pass. (To the witness.) But for some reason or other your associates thought it best to abandon the Van Benthuyssen application and make a new one?

The WITNESS. I thought so.

Q. And for some reason or other the Pan-Electric Telephone Company did not join in your application?—A. No; they did not join in the subsequent application.

Q. And yet for some reason or other the attorneys of the Pan-Electric Company and the attorney of the National Improved Company were the only ones that appeared before Secretary Lamar to urge the granting of this application of Mr. McCorry's?

Mr. HALL. I submit that that is more of an argument than it is a question.

The WITNESS. I am willing to answer it.

Q. Was there any other lawyer than those you have named who appeared there to argue it?—A. Yes, sir; Mr. Humphreys appeared to argue on behalf of the Globe Company, General Bradley T. Johnson appeared for the Washington Telephone Company, and Mr. Beckwith made an application in behalf of the Meucci application of New York.

Q. As a matter of fact nobody ostensibly appeared for the Pan-Electric Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was that not for the reason that you wanted to get it before the Attorney-General and the Department of Justice as a proceeding in behalf of those companies in which Attorney-General Garland had no interest?—A. Certainly it was, of course.

Q. So that he could act?—A. No; we knew that he would not act, but we did not care to keep up this newspaper clamor against us.

Q. In other words you wanted this new proceeding to be instituted by somebody other than those in behalf of the companies in which the Attorney-General was interested. Was not that the object of it?—A. Certainly, that was one of the objects. I think I had a perfect right to do it.

Q. And you did not then disclose to the Department of Justice the fact of the agreement that you had made between the National Improved Company and the Pan-Electric Company?—A. No, sir; I did not think it was necessary.

Q. You did not disclose it?—A. No, sir.

Q. But if the Attorney-General was going to act under the assumption that he was acting for other companies or at the instance of other companies than the Pan-Electric Company, don't you think it would have been proper to have communicated to him any agreement that had been made between the National Improved Company and the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I knew perfectly well that he was not going to act.

Q. Why, then, were you anxious to have it so presented to him that on its face it would appear to be on behalf of other parties than the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I did not care about it; I did not have any anxiety.

Q. You thought it was proper?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you think it was proper; didn't you deem it proper that he should know the fact of the combination made by you?—A. No, sir; no more than you. He was not going to act on it.

Q. Suppose the Attorney-General was going to institute a suit on behalf of the Government, for the National Improved Company on the supposition that he was acting for a company in which he had no interest; don't you think he should be disabused of that error and be informed of the fact that there was a combination between that company and yours?—A. No, sir; I do not think there was any impropriety—

Mr. HALL. This seems to be a sort of debating society on the question of ethics.

Mr. OATES. I think we shall get through the examination much sooner if the questions are confined to the matters at issue.

Mr. RANNEY. If you mean that that is not an issue, we will settle it here. We are directed to inquire about all the facts and circumstances connected with the bringing of that suit.

Mr. OATES. If you can show me anything in the resolution where we are authorized to inquire as to a mere matter of taste, then I will agree with you.

Mr. RANNEY. It is a matter that pertains to the motives of this witness and the propriety of his motives. I say if they got the Attorney-General to bring that suit, or applied to have the Attorney-General bring that suit ostensibly on the application of the National Improved Company and others, when in fact the moving parties were the Pan-Electric Company, and when in fact there had been a combination between the Pan-Electric Company and the National Improved Company, it is a fraud on the Attorney-General.

The WITNESS. I am not on trial for fraud.

Mr. RANNEY. It is a competent question, and I want you to answer it.

The WITNESS. I should like to finish my answer. I was interrupted.

Mr. RANNEY. You can answer anything more that you desire.

The WITNESS. You asked me a question about my ideas of propriety, respecting my personal actions. Now, if I am on trial for perpetrating a fraud against the Attorney-General, I am ready to answer it. But answering your question and going further, I do not think there would have been any impropriety in the world in my asking him to bring the suit myself, if I wanted him to do it; or that there was any necessity for my going and informing him that we were interested in it. Anybody had the right to make the application, and I had it equally with any other American citizen, and I would have done it if I had desired.

Mr. RANNEY. Are you through?

The WITNESS. Yes.

Q. Why is it, then, as you say there was no impropriety in the matter, that you kept the Pan-Electric Company out of that application?—A. Because I did not know but what there were captious people in the world, like you, who might indulge in unfriendly comment on it, and it was a matter for me to decide for myself.

Q. Is that all the answer you have to make?—A. Yes, sir, to that question. If you ask another, I will answer it.

Q. After Mr. McCorry sent in that request to the Attorney-General did you come to Washington?—A. I did.

Q. I want to ask you once more if you got any letters from Mr. Van Benthuyzen, or his counsel, Mr. Beckwith, written between the 7th of July, 1885, when the interview at Washington terminated, and the 31st of August, 1885?—A. I do not remember, but I think it highly probable that I did receive letters.

Q. How many?—A. I could not tell you. I did have some correspondence about it.

Q. With Mr. Van Benthuyzen or his counsel?—A. I never wrote to his counsel, Mr. Beckwith; I wrote to Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Q. How many letters did you receive?—A. I do not remember. I remember writing one letter to Mr. Huntington, and receiving one from him. I do not remember how many letters I wrote to Mr. Van Benthuyzen, probably several; and I think I can get copies of them.

Q. What letters did he write you?—A. I think I can get you copies of them.

Q. I had rather have the originals.—A. I have not got them.

Q. Where are the originals?—A. I don't know; I was traveling about when I got them, and I did not preserve them; they were not of sufficient importance.

Q. They related to this suit?—A. Yes, sir; some of them did, and some to the consolidation.

Q. And you tell this committee that you have not kept one of them?—A. I have not kept one of them; I do not know that I have any of them.

Q. You say that you can get copies of them?—A. I think Mr. Van Benthuyzen kept copies of them. He is in the habit of keeping copies of his correspondence, but I kept no copies.

Q. Mr. Huntington was connected with the National Improved Company, was he?—A. Yes; he was a stockholder.

Q. You were aware of the fact that that company presented likewise to Mr. McCorry, the United States district attorney, an application for this suit?—A. Yes, I knew all about it.

Mr. RANNEY. I desire to have put into the record at this point the memorial, signed by Mr. Van Benthuyzen and others, dated Memphis, Tenn., August 26, 1885, and addressed to Mr. McCorry, the district attorney. That was presented to Mr. McCorry on the 26th of August; and I desire to put the whole of it in.

The paper referred to is as follows:

MEMPHIS, TENN., August 26, 1885.

Hon. HENRY W. MCCORRY,

United States Attorney for the Western District of Tennessee:

SIR: We are in possession of information that we deem reliable, which, in our opinion, is sufficient to establish these propositions:

(1) That Alexander Graham Bell, the alleged inventor and patentee in the following letters patent of the United States, viz, letters patent No. 174,465, dated March 7, 1876, for alleged new and useful improvements in telegraphy, and letters patent No. 186,787, for an alleged improvement in electric telephones, was not the original and first inventor of the art of telephony, or of any substantial matter described or claimed in said letters patent.

(2) That the electric speaking telephone was known and used in the United States and Europe long prior to his alleged invention and discovery of the same.

(3) That he was cognizant of these facts; had witnessed the use of the electric speaking telephone, and had knowledge of the discovery thereof, before his alleged discovery and invention of the same. That he has no just or rightful claim to the discovery or invention of the broad art of electric telephony. That he is not the founder, or entitled to stand at the head of said art by reason of prior invention and discovery.

(4) That his oath to his application for letters-patent filed in the Patent Office, in patent No. 174,465, of date January 20, 1876, in which he claimed that he was the first and original inventor of the art, is and was false, in these particulars:

First. He did know that the said art was known before his alleged invention.

Second. He did know that it was used prior to his alleged discovery and invention of the same.

Third. He not only had such knowledge from reliable sources of information, but actually had seen it work and practiced as a known and existing art prior to his alleged invention and discovery of the same.

(5) If said Bell had not intentionally concealed, but had fully disclosed and set forth in his application and the oath thereto for such patent, all that he knew of said art as it existed prior to and at the time of his alleged invention and discovery of the same, such disclosure would have effectually defeated his said application for said patent, by furnishing conclusive evidence that the said art existed, and that the state thereof, as it existed, and the use thereof were known to said Bell prior to his alleged invention and discovery of the same.

(6) That, at most, the alleged discovery and invention of said Bell, as set forth in said application and patent, are an improvement on a well-known art, existing at the time of said alleged invention and discovery by said Bell, and the alleged improvement itself is valueless because not useful and not used even by those owning the said patent of the said Bell, but, on the contrary, wholly discarded as of no practical value.

(7) That what is called the Bell Telephone, and now in extensive use, consists of successive improvements upon the art as known long prior to the said Bell patent; and the said improvements themselves, on the said art, are the discoveries and inventions of others and not of said Bell, and not covered by said Bell patent. That the so-called discoveries and inventions of said Bell, set forth in said patent, constitute nothing that is new, useful, or valuable in the electric speaking telephone, nor are they, in fact, employed in the same.

Yet said patent has been artfully and successfully employed in such manner as to enable the great corporation now owning it to wrongfully establish and maintain a close monopoly of the broad art and business of supplying electric speaking telephones to all the citizens of the United States. The income thus wrongfully derived amounts to many millions per annum, to the great wrong and injury of the citizens of the United States generally, who are forced to pay exorbitant prices, and get therefor a telephonic service far inferior to that which would be furnished if the said monopoly were overthrown and free and fair competition allowed. This to the great detriment also of many worthy inventors and discoverers of improvements in said art, who hold letters patent for the same from the United States, but which are rendered valueless in the hands of these bona fide inventors and improvers by reason of the close and complete monopoly thus wrongfully set up and maintained under said patent.

(8) That no grant should be allowed to stand without inquiry as to its bona-fides and validity, when procured in flagrant disregard of law and established usage of the Patent Office; and such was the case with the Bell grant of March 7, 1876, as the following facts will show:

First. On the very day that said Bell filed his application for said grant (February 14, 1876), Elisha Gray filed a caveat for an electric speaking telephone, in which the principal design and devices were set forth with such clearness and fulness as to manifest beyond question the object of the caveat.

Second. By the positive command of the act of Congress on the subject this caveat should have been filed among the "confidential archives" of the Patent Office, and "preserved in secrecy," yet, in a few days thereafter, without the knowledge or consent of said Gray, the secrets of this caveat were made known to said Bell by an official in the Patent Office; and after said knowledge, and in view of the same, said Bell, on the 29th of February, 1876, made an important and material amendment to his said application.

Third. And within a few days, and whilst the contents of said caveat were still supposed to be held in the inviolable secrecy of the Patent Office, said Bell publicly claimed the very means and devices by which the said Gray caveat proposed to transmit articulate speech, and which means and devices were not specified, claimed, or described in the application of said Bell of February 14, 1876.

Fourth. The examiner of patents being of opinion that there was interference between the said Gray caveat and Bell application, in accordance with the practice of the Patent Office, in order that such proceedings might be had, touching the supposed interference, as the law provides in such cases, without the knowledge or consent of Gray, and in the interest of said Bell, said suspension was removed, and a grant issued without delay to said Bell. This could only be accomplished by over-riding and disregarding the established rule of the Patent Office, which forbade the counting of fractions of days; acts done on the same day were in sense of this rule done simultaneously. Yet, in this instance, said Bell, without the knowledge or consent of said Gray, was allowed the benefit of a fraction of a day upon the pretense of subserving the ends of justice. But nothing could be further from the truth, as the material matter was not whether one of these papers was filed a few hours before the other, but which was entitled to priority of discovery and invention in the interfering matter of Gray, the caveator, or Bell, the applicant; and on the question the merit of priority was with said Gray.

(9) That Philip Reis, a learned German, who died in 1874, was the real author and inventor of the electric-speaking telephone. That everything done since that day has been by way of improving the art which he discovered, made known, and successfully employed.

Every essential principle contained in the electric speaking telephone of the present day is contained in the art as discovered and expressed by said Reis, in written description thereof, drawings, models, plates, and designs of the same, all of which were well known in Europe and in the United States prior to 1870. Yet, with unparalleled audacity and perseverance, those interested in said Bell patent assert that the said art, as discovered and expressed by said Reis, was inherently defective in principle. That it was incapable of sending and delivering speech, and that no amount of improvement in construction could by possibility make it do so. They procured a ruling from one of the inferior courts that the Reis conception of the art and his device for an electric speaking telephone were so defective in the principles thereof that a century of improvement in construction would not make it send and deliver speech as an electric speaking telephone. This decision has been followed by other inferior courts, not because it was right, but because it was made.

Upon the correctness of this ruling and the truth of the fundamental facts on which it rests depends the validity of the claim of said Bell to be the founder of the broad art, and that it is secured and covered by said Bell grants; because, passing by other objections to this claim, if that of Reis is good it anticipates Bell by many years and completely overthrows it. We have the proofs and means of conclusively demonstrating that this vital fact is adverse to the Bell claim, and directly contrary to the said judicial expression so procured in the interest of said Bell grant.

First. We can establish, by many credible witnesses, that the Reis electric speaking telephone successfully transmitted and delivered articulate speech on many occasions in the lifetime of said Reis.

Second. That it has done so since his death upon a great many occasions can be shown by a large number of credible and disinterested witnesses.

Third. We know the fact ourselves from actual tests which we witnessed.

Fourth. As conclusive and final, we herewith exhibit to you Reis instruments, made in strict conformity to the principles laid down by him, and beg that you test them for yourself, and know, as a fact beyond question or cavil, that they are capable electric speaking telephones, and that it is a grave error to assert that they are inherently defective in principle and incurably incapable of transmitting and delivering articulate speech, and that a century of mere improvements in construction could not make them do so. And, that there may be no room for mistake, and as the highest evidence we can furnish of our good faith, when you have tested these Reis instruments, we propose to leave them in your custody, to the end that, in open court, they may speak for themselves, and thus conclusively refute and forever silence the groundless charge that they are without capacity to receive, send, and deliver articulate speech as electric speaking telephones.

Fifth. We submit for a similar test, and to be used in the same way, what are known as the Vander Weyde instruments, which are mere improvements on the Reis art, and are capable of receiving and delivering articulate speech, antedating several years the invention and discoveries of said Bell. We propose to let them talk for themselves in open court, face to face with those who assert that they are mutes, and therefore cannot talk.

We also submit for your inspection, and to be used in evidence, the Pickering instrument, which is an improved Reis telephone, antedating the alleged Bell discoveries, and capable of transmitting and delivering articulate speech, as electric-speaking telephone, and which was known to said Bell prior to his alleged discovery and invention in the said art of telephony.

(10) That said Bell and mesne owners of said Bell grants have suppressed and endeavored to suppress and conceal important evidence of the actual state of the art, and which, if obtained and used against their claim, would show that said Bell was not the original and first inventor of said art, and that it was not a new art, but was well known at the time of his alleged discovery and invention.

(11) That while said letters-patent do not claim, in any specific phraseology, or form of words, in the specifications of the alleged discovery and invention of said Bell, the art of transmitting speech by the employment of electricity as an agency therein, and do not set up a claim to the art of telephony, yet said Bell and those claiming under him colorably use and employ the said patent of March 7, 1876, as covering and embracing said art, and as of giving and securing to them monopoly thereof.

Under this colorable claim, said Bell and those claiming under him are wrongfully usurping a franchise, in holding out and claiming that said Bell is the founder and original inventor of the broad art of transmitting articulate speech, in every mode in which electricity is employed as one of the agents of said transmission, and when their pretense in this respect is contested they point to the fifth claim in said letters-patent as containing such grant and as securing to them art as new, and have obtained through some of the inferior courts the erroneous declaration that said claim is warranted by said letters-patent, to the great wrong and injury of the citizens of the United States.

(12) That, well knowing that he was not the founder of the art of transmitting speech by the electric speaking telephone, and also that the said letters patent of March 7, 1876, neither in the drawings, specifications, nor claims in said letters patent describes any apparatus or device by which articulate speech could be transmitted through the instrumentality of electricity as perfectly or as well as articulate speech had for years prior to his alleged invention been transmitted through the instrumentality of electricity, by the use of well-known pre-existing devices, methods, and apparatus; and feeling therefore insecure in the grant supposed to be contained in said letters patent, the said Bell sought to fortify himself in his wrongful claim and more completely secure to himself the monopoly contained in said letters patent, and, to further impose on the Government of the United States and the Patent Office, on or about the — January, 1877, made another application for a patent and grant to be issued to him of the letters patent No. 186,787, dated January 13, 1877, which said letters patent purport to be granted to him for the specific device and apparatus for transmitting articulate speech through the instrumentality of electricity. That at the time said Bell applied for and obtained said last-named letters patent, he well knew that every material and substantial part, portion, device, element, and combination of the apparatus and device described and set forth in the drawings and specifications of said last-named letters patent were not, nor any part thereof, the invention or discovery of the said Bell, but that the separate elements, considered either separately or combined, were taken bodily by him from well-known and pre-existing apparatus and devices and plans invented and contrived by others for the purpose of transmitting articulate speech by means of electricity, for a long time prior to his pretended invention, and in common use among scientific men and in institutions of public learning; and not content with thus wrongfully claiming for himself the apparatus, combination, and device of others, he, and those claiming under him, wrongfully used his said last-named letters patent to fortify and protect them in their monopoly for the transmission of articulate speech, claimed to have been granted to said Bell in said former patent, and he so framed the several claims in said last-named letters patent as on the face thereof to give him and his assignees the practical monopoly of well known and essential devices used and combined in all instruments for the transmission of articulate speech by electricity; and now those claiming under him hold on to both of said letters patent as not only giving them a monopoly of the broad art of transmitting articulate speech by electricity, but of all the essential parts of apparatus by which the transmission of speech by electricity can be effected, and is at the present time accomplished, basing the claim to a close and complete monopoly upon said letters patent.

(13) That said Alexander Graham Bell has, by conveyances duly recorded in the Patent Office, transferred his entire interest in said patents to a corporation called the American Bell Telephone Company, which is using the same fraudulently and oppressively, to the citizens of the United States. That said company charges exorbitant prices for inferior telephone service, to the exclusion of a cheaper and better service, which would be furnished by bona fide owners of improved devices and apparatus for said art and secured by letters patent of the United States, if not so excluded by said monopoly, to the great injury and damage of citizens of the United States.

(14) That said American Bell Telephone Company has stationed its agents and emissaries in all parts of the United States, with a view of purchasing all telephone devices and apparatus from the owners hereof, who are threatened in the event of any assertion of their rights, or in the event of using their own patented inventions, with expensive and harassing litigation, based upon said fraudulent Bell patent, and by these means said company has, in effect, rendered useless and valueless in the hands of honest owners, franchise, rights, and property, held by grant from the United States, and which, but for these practices, would not only be of great value to the owners, but to the citizens at large of the United States.

(15) Outside of the owners, paid agents, emissaries, and counsel of said monopoly there is a general and deep-seated conviction that said Bell was not the founder of the broad art of transmitting articulate speech through the instrumentality of electricity, and that the monopoly built upon that assumption is grossly oppressive and unjust to the citizens of the United States.

(16) In view of the importance of telephony in the transaction of business, its constantly-growing use as an instrument of commerce, the vast value of property rights and interest affected thereby, the general belief that said monopoly was wrongfully and unjustly obtained, and the conclusive evidence herein laid before you, that said belief is well founded, we respectfully submit, that it is of great concern to all the citizens of the United States that steps be at once set on foot looking to a prompt issue and determination, by judicial inquiry, in a suit brought by the United States Government itself, to determine the validity and the extent and range of rights granted and secured, if any, by said Bell patent. If said patents have merits, then the owners themselves should be anxious for such a decisive test. If they have not, then, to the citizens at large of the United States, it is a question of the greatest concern that there be an early and authoritative determination to that effect.

We therefore respectfully invite your earnest attention to this communication and the inclosures, and request that you report on the same to the Department of Justice to the end that leave may be granted you to institute suit, in the proper form, in the name of the United States against said American Bell Telephone Company, or whoever may be found to be the owner of said two Bell patents, so that complete judicial inquiry may be made into the validity of each of them, and a determination, upon such inquiry, whether the said patents are effected by fraud and void on that account, or void for any other cause, and, also, whether they should be recalled and vacated; and that these questions be thus put at issue by the United States Government, and finally determined in its courts.

We have the honor to remain yours, very respectfully,

W. VAN BENTHUYSEN, New Orleans, La.

CHARLES P. HUNTINGTON, Mississippi.

J. R. BECKWITH, New Orleans, La.

GEORGE GANTT, Memphis, Tenn.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Mr. George Gantt, of Memphis, Tenn., who signs that, was attorney to your company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I do not see that in the communication he says anything about the Pan-Electric Company?—A. No; he did not mention it.

Q. Or of his having a share or interest in it?—A. No, sir; he did not think it was necessary.

Q. No matter what he thought. I see that on October 17, 1885, at page 6 of the last record referred to, there is a communication addressed to the Hon. L. Q. C. Lamar, Secretary of the Interior, referring to these papers, signed John Goode, "Acting Attorney-General in this instance."

The CHAIRMAN. What is the date of that?

Mr. RANNEY. October 17, 1885.

Mr. HALL. Do you want that to go into the record?

Mr. RANNEY. I want that in the record.

Mr. HALL. That book has not been introduced in evidence, I believe.

Mr. RANNEY. I called the attention of the committee to the fact that I had a certified copy of it. I do not put in the whole book, but only that which is material. I said I would use this book instead of going to the Department and getting the certified copies of it.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, D. C., October 17, 1885.

Hon. L. Q. C. LAMAR,
Secretary of the Interior:

SIR: I send you herewith a communication from H. W. McCorry, esq., United States attorney for the western district of Tennessee, renewing his application for permission to institute a suit in the name of the United States to test the validity of the Bell telephone patent. I send also for your examination several affidavits and other papers which accompany his letter. This Department desires to be furnished with such information touching the matter referred to as may be afforded by the records of the Interior Department, and also to be favored with any view which you may think proper to submit as to the propriety of granting said application. Please return the inclosed papers after you have examined them.

Very respectfully,

JOHN GOODE,
Acting Attorney-General in this instance.

Department of Interior. Received October 19, 1885.

Office of Commissioner of Patents. Received October 20, 1881.

Mr. RANNEY: I also desire to have put in at this point the letter of Mr. McCorry, United States district attorney for western Tennessee, dated August 31, 1885, addressed to Attorney-General Garland.

The letter is as follows:

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
Jackson, Tenn., August 31, 1885.

Hon. A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney General, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: Col. George Gantt, of Memphis, and others, presented me an application in writing a few days since asking an examination of certain publications, affidavits,

&c., and also a personal inspection of certain telegraphic instruments which had previously been put in circuit in Memphis, and which are those known as the Reis inventions, and the same referred to in the affidavits accompanying.

The object of the application made to me was to obtain a report by myself to you as to the propriety of instituting a suit in the name of the United States to have the patents under which the Bell Telephone Company operate declared void, and vacated and recalled.

I examined the documents given me, and also made a personal inspection of the Reis instruments referred to. I heard the words over said instruments plainly and distinctly, and am fully satisfied that they are the true Reis instruments and inventions, and am sure if the papers submitted are true, and there is every reason to so believe, that Alexander Graham Bell was not the inventor of the transmission of articulate sound or spoken words over wires by means of electricity, and that such invention was that of Reis, a German, and made about 1862, and also that these facts were, and must have been known to said Bell when he applied for and obtained his patents.

There appears to have been irregularities attending the issuance of these patents, but my knowledge of the practice on this point is not such as to offer an opinion.

I am of the opinion that the patents were improvidently issued, that they were obtained by false suggestion and concealment, and that Bell was not entitled thereto under the law, and that the interest of the people of the United States demands their recall, if it can be done.

I have examined the authorities (cited by Colonel Gantt) upon the question of practice, and am of the opinion that letters-patent improvidently issued can be recalled, and that the proper proceeding to that end is by bill in equity, as was suggested, and I am impressed not only as to the propriety of instituting such proceedings, but believe it to be a duty.

I am assured that the parties specially pressing this matter will, if required, save the Government harmless against expense, but I do not think it proper to require such of them farther than the payment of fees to the counsel whom they desire associated with me in the case. I deem this the proper course, because the suit should be, in fact as well as in name, absolutely one by the Government, and without the power of any one to suggest that, having a pecuniary interest, &c., they should be heard specially in its management, for it might happen that such interest could be adjusted by contract so that it would become desirable on the part of such persons to dismiss or permit the suit to fail, which should not be.

I caused the Reis instruments which were shown me, and over which I heard conversations, to be put in the hands of the marshal and under my control, so as to protect the Government in case of any compromise between interested parties, and for the same reason I shall keep control of all documents and affidavits, &c.

I inclose the papers submitted to me for your inspection and also a memorandum of the authorities.

I ask that Hon. Casey Young, Col. George Gantt and General Luke E. Wright, of Memphis, and Col. J. R. Beckwith, of New Orleans, be permitted to appear as associate counsel without expense to the Government, and that you will direct the commencement of proceedings.

Very respectfully,

H. W. McCORRY,
United States District Attorney for West Tennessee.

Memo. of Authorities.—14 Wall., 434. 18 Fed. Rep., 22 Fed. Rep., 9 Fed. Rep., 2 Wall., 525. I have not the Federal Reporters at hand to give the pages, having examined them in Memphis.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Mr. McCorry sent that communication on the 31st of August to Washington?—A. Yes, sir; he did.

Q. You knew of the fact, or heard of it, that the district attorney of Memphis, Mr. McCorry, had sent that communication to Washington, did you not?—A. Yes; I knew it.

Q. You knew it at the time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew it was to go?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see it before it went?—A. I think I did. I did not prepare it, but I think I probably read it.

Q. How soon did you come to Washington after that?—A. I came immediately.

Q. Did you bring it?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Who did?—A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. On what day did you come?—A. It appears from a memorandum book I have here that I got here on the 2d of September.

Q. This was signed on the 31st of August by Mr. McCorry. If it had been sent by mail, how long would it have taken for it to reach here?—A. About two days.

Q. Where did you stop when you reached here?—A. I stopped at Wormley's, I see from this book here.

Q. Whom did you meet here?—A. I met a great many people. Mr. Huntington came with me.

Q. Did you start together?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. From where?—A. From Memphis.

Q. Was Mr. Van Benthuyzen there?—A. I think he was.

Q. Did he come with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did Mr. Beckwith come with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was he there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he come with you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Was he at Memphis?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You and Mr. Huntington, representing the National Improved Company, came directly to Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Whom did you come representing?—A. I came representing myself. I came to see about this very thing.

Q. You came to see about this very thing with Mr. Huntington?—A. Yes; but I want to explain my answer.

Q. And you stopped at Wormley's?—A. Yes, sir. I want to explain my answer. I came here for that purpose. I knew this had been sent on, and I was very anxious if the suit should be brought at all that it should be brought in the way I intended, and I intended to use my influence to have it brought in that way.

Q. Brought on the relation of somebody, you mean?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Van Benthuyzen wanted to come, and I told him not to do so. He is a man of some infirmities of temper, and his purpose was to go to the President, and I advised him not to do it. I wrote the letter, however, that was to be delivered to the President, but on my advice Mr. Huntington came instead of Mr. Van Benthuyzen. At that time we supposed Mr. Garland was here. We knew he had refused to take any action in regard to it, and we intended to present the paper to him, and if he refused to act, to go to President Cleveland and lay the matter before him. That was the purpose in coming.

Q. Did you bring the letter with you that you had written to the President?—A. Yes; I had it in my pocket at the time. I intended to go with Mr. Huntington to the White House and lay it before the President.

Q. And were you going to have it brought on the relation?—A. I was going to try to do it.

Q. On the relation of whom?—A. Well, perhaps our own or the National Improved or some of the other companies. I do not know that I had my mind made up about it.

Q. Did you come here with the purpose of having it brought on the relation of the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I don't know whether it was the Pan-Electric Company or the National Improved Company, or both. I thought I had a perfect right to do either.

Q. But you came here in view of this communication of Mr. McCorry's?—A. Yes, sir; I knew it had been sent here.

Q. And you meant to get here about the time it did?—A. Yes; I started the moment I knew it.

Q. Did you intend to have it brought on the relation of the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Perhaps I did.

Q. If you did, why didn't you apply to the district attorney to have it brought?—A. I did; but he would not do it.

Q. You knew his communication did not recommend that?—A. No, sir; I never saw it, but he told me he would not do it, and he gave as his reason for that that if it was brought at all it should be brought in the interest of the people and not in the interest of a company; and he said, "If I do it, they will charge the same thing you do against the Bell Company, that it is a collusive suit."

Q. When you got here you met Senator Harris?—A. I saw him afterwards. I did not meet him with Mr. Huntington.

Q. How soon did you meet him?—A. I think the next day.

Q. Here in Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you meet General Johnston?—A. No, I did not see General Johnston.

Q. Was General Atkins here?—A. No, I did not see him.

Q. Or Colonel Gantt?—A. No.

Q. Was Senator Harris stopping here at that time or was he sent for?—A. He was here.

Q. Had you sent for him to meet you?—A. I don't remember whether I sent for him or went to his room.

Q. What was the next step you took?—A. I went to the Department of Justice and saw Mr. Goode.

Q. On what day?—A. It was very soon after I got here. I do not remember the date.

Q. See if you cannot fix the date.—A. It was the next day, I think, after I got here.

Q. Did you go alone, or was somebody with you?—A. Senator Harris went with me the first time I went.

Q. You and Senator Harris went to the Department of Justice?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Had you any appointment?—A. I think I went to his house and asked him to go with me.

Q. Was not Attorney-General Garland there?—A. No.

Q. Was he not in town?—A. No.

Q. Was he in town at the second visit?—A. I cannot say he was not in town, but that was my understanding.

Q. You went to the Department of Justice and saw Mr. Goode?—A. Yes, sir; we went and saw him about this very business.

Q. Had you been directed to see Mr. Goode before that?—A. No; I went on my own motion.

Q. Why did you go and see him?—A. Because Attorney-General Garland was out of town.

Q. If the Attorney-General had been here you would have gone right to him?—A. Yes, I would.

Q. How long an interview did you have with Mr. Goode?—A. It lasted about two minutes.

Q. Do you know whether he knew anything of this matter until that time?—A. I have no idea that he did. He did not say anything about it.

Q. Did you go into the facts about it?—A. No, sir; I did not stay two minutes. I just asked if the papers had come.

Q. Did you see him again?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. When?—A. I think it was the next day or the day after.

Q. What occurred then?—A. I asked him if the papers had come and he told me they had.

Q. Didn't you ask him the first day if the papers had come?—A. Yes, I did. On the first day I did ask him if the papers had come.

Q. Did you say "those" papers?—A. Wait until I answer the question. I went there the first day and told him what papers they were, and asked him if they had arrived, and my recollection is that he said they had not, and sent out while I was there for them. I left him then. The next morning or the day after I went back again by myself, and I saw the papers lying on the table, and he said, "I am writing a letter to Mr. McCorry now," and I turned around and walked out. I went there for the purpose of insisting on his bringing this suit in the way I wanted it brought, but on reflection I thought I would not do so, and I walked out, and that was the only interview I had with him about it.

Q. I will ask you whether you said to him, "Have those papers come?" Is that what you said?—A. Yes; I explained what papers they were.

Q. What did you say to him about what papers they were?—A. I cannot remember my exact phraseology, but I presume I used the language necessary to convey my meaning, and designated those papers so that he would understand it.

Q. Did you understand that he knew that any such papers were coming?—A. No, sir; I knew that he did not know it. When I was here before he had gone to the Pacific Coast.

Q. Had he any information on the subject before that?—A. None that I know of.

Q. When you went in the next day, what occurred?—A. I asked him then if he had decided to do this, and he said, "I am writing a letter to Mr. McCorry now"; and I saw the papers lying on the table. That is about all that occurred.

Q. Did he tell you what he was writing?—A. I do not think he did—yes, I believe he did. I think he said, "I am directing Mr. McCorry to bring this suit."

Q. He did, right off?—A. Yes, I think so.

Q. And he was writing then?—A. Yes, sir; he was writing.

Q. He had not got them, perhaps, the first day?—A. Oh, yes. I told you that he sent for them—sent out by some clerk for them.

Q. And right off, the next day, he was writing him to bring the suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He had had only twenty-four hours to examine?—A. I am not aware that he had any other time. He is a pretty good lawyer, and perhaps he may have examined the law of the question before I had.

Q. Had he anything before him except Mr. McCorry's statement?—A. Yes; he had Mr. Gantt's brief.

Q. Did Mr. Gantt make a brief for him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When did he do that?—A. It was sent up with the papers by Mr. McCorry himself.

Q. The next day what was done?—A. Nothing; I just left there.

Q. Did you go right back to Memphis?—A. I do not remember how long it was; I cannot tell you the date.

Q. Did he say anything at that time?—A. Let me answer one question at a time. Let me tell you when I went back to Memphis. I see by an entry in this memorandum book that I got my ticket to Memphis on the 5th of September.

Q. When did you arrive at Memphis?—A. I suppose I arrived the next day; it takes two days to go.

Q. Did you send any notice to Memphis that it was to be done?—A. I think I wrote Colonel Gantt.

Q. Did you say anything to Colonel Gantt about having it brought on the relation of anybody?—A. No, I did not.

Q. Did you go to the President?—A. No, sir; it was not necessary; the suit had been ordered; I would have gone. I intended to have the suit brought, if that is what you want to get at.

Q. Did you inform any one before you went back that the suit was to be brought?—A. I do not remember; possibly I did.

Q. Who did you write?—A. I do not remember. I may have said something about it.

Q. Did you see Dr. Rogers and his son at that time before you left for Memphis?—A. I do not remember; probably I did.

Q. What did you talk with them about?—A. There is no use trying to tell that. I think it probable I saw them, and that is all I can say.

Q. What conversation did you have with them during that interval while you were here in Washington?—A. If I had any on that subject I expect I told them that the suit had been ordered.

Q. I don't want you to say "If you had any." Won't you say whether you did or not?—A. I have just told you that I do not remember having any conversation with them. Now what do you want?

Q. I do not want anything but the truth.—A. That is all you will get from me.

Q. Try to remember whether you did have any interview with them.—A. I cannot remember whether I did or not.

Q. You will not swear that you did or did not?—A. No, I will not.

Q. When was that interview that has been spoken of where the son was invited to a conference at the Ebbitt House where the father was not invited?—A. That was on the 30th of July, the same time when I was here. I wanted him to come down and talk about a consolidation, and told him about the terms proposed.

Q. You had an interview on the 30th of July with Mr. Van Benthuyzen when you invited the son and not the father?—A. That was on the 31st, I think.

Q. What was that interview?—A. I have stated it two or three times. I went to his house and saw Harry, as I recollect, about getting a patent for a receiver that he had an application for, and while I was there we talked about this matter, and the conversation occurred as I stated. We talked about the Government suit, about the letter that Dr. Rogers had written to the Attorney-General, and about the letter that Mr. Van Benthuyzen had written to him, and talked generally about it, and the conversation that I remember occurred just as I have stated it.

Q. Are you speaking now of a conversation with the Rogerses?—A. That is the one you asked about, is it not?

Q. What was that conference at which the son was invited and not the father?—A. That was about the 31st of July, in reference to the consolidation of these two companies.

Q. Was that the time that Harry was invited to meet Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. He was never invited to meet him at all that I know of.

Q. Did he meet him then at that time at the interview at which the father was not invited and the son was?—A. No, I do not think he was there that day. Neither one of them.

Q. But one was invited and the other not?—A. Oh, I told Harry Rogers that Mr. Huntington had some unfriendly feeling towards his father in consequence of a quarrel that he had had. The doctor is a little irascible sometimes.

Q. I alluded to that to identify the interview at the Ebbitt House.—A. Harry Rogers did not come there.

Q. Who was present at that interview?—A. Colonel Gantt, Mr. Huntington, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and myself.

Q. Was not Senator Harris there?—A. He was only there once, and while he was there not a word was said about it that I remember.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Do you mean that he was there on this occasion?—A. No, sir; when we were consulting about this matter Senator Harris was not there.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I ask because I notice in the testimony that the father speaks of Senator Harris meeting Mr. Van Benthuyzen without him, when he denounced Benthuyzen as a dishonored man.—A. I do not think Dr. Rogers intended to state that—that Senator Harris was invited there and he would not meet him because he had denounced him.

Q. He states that Senator Harris met him and denounced him as a dishonored man.—A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. You cannot tell me whether Senator Harris was there or not at that time?—A. Yes, I can.

Q. At that particular time, I mean.—A. No; he was not there.

Q. When was this conversation that you had with the son, when you told him not to say anything about it?—A. About the 31st of July, probably.

Q. Where was it that you told him not to say anything about it?—A. I think it was on the way from his house down to my room, or in my room. I never should have thought of it again if I had not heard him testify about it.

Q. You told him not to tell anything about it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it that you told him not to say anything about?—A. We were talking about the consolidation of the company and about this suit being brought by the Government, and I had explained to them that I thought it was proper for our company not to have anything to do with it at the time. I was apprehensive that something might be said to connect our company, and I said to Harry Rogers, "Perhaps you had better not say anything about it."

Q. You had talked about the combination of the two companies and talked about the Government suit being brought, and told him not to say anything about it?—A. Yes, just as I have stated.

Q. Just before that you had talked with the other Rogers, hadn't you?—A. I think they were both present. Both were together when I first had the conversation.

Q. Where was that?—A. I think at Dr. Rogers's house, on Four-and-half street.

Q. When was it?—A. I think on the same day; the 31st of July, or about that time.

Q. Can you give the exact date?—A. I cannot; I have told you that a dozen times.

Q. Was it not after the time when it had been determined that Van Benthuyzen's application should be withdrawn and a different proceeding started?—A. No, sir; it was not, because I saw him immediately after I got here.

Q. It appears that the Van Benthuyzen application to the Department of Justice for the bringing of the suit had been in fact withdrawn from the Interior Department.—A. In fact it was not withdrawn, because I found the letter there when I went to argue the case before the Secretary of the Interior, and it is there yet, I reckon.

Q. We have the indorsement here upon it.—A. I see the indorsement, of course.

Q. Do you say those indorsements are not true?—A. Oh, no sir.

Q. We have the indorsement here that it was withdrawn on the 7th of August with the consent of the Attorney-General.—A. Well, I saw it there when I went to argue that suit.

Q. If you can fix the date of that interview with Dr. Rogers I should like it.—A. I should be happy to oblige you, but I cannot fix the date any nearer.

Q. You seem to have been here from the 30th of July to the 7th of August.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was during one of those days; is not that all you can say?—A. No; I think it was the 31st of July; but I am not sure.

Q. Have you any means of fixing the exact date?—A. None in the world.

Q. But it was sometime during that time?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. To come back to this other matter, after Mr. Goode said he had directed the suit brought, you went immediately back, did you not?—A. No; I did not.

Q. How long did you stay here?—A. I see by my memorandum book that I left on the 7th of September.

Q. A bill was filed in the circuit court of the United States at Memphis?—A. It was.

Q. What date was it filed?—A. I don't recollect the date of the filing of the Government bill.

Q. Have you the bill here?—A. No, sir; I have not.

Q. This suit that was brought in pursuance of Mr. Goode's letter, I want to know the date on which it was filed.—A. I do not remember, but I suppose it was filed pretty soon after the order went.

Q. Was it not as early as the 7th of September?—A. I cannot say. If you deem it important, I will telegraph and ascertain the exact date.

Q. I want that bill and the date it was filed.—A. I have not got the bill.

Q. Who drew that bill?—A. Mr. Beckwith, of New Orleans.

Q. When?—A. I do not know when he drew it, but I presume he drew it about the time I went back from Washington.

Q. In Memphis?—A. No, sir; he did not come to Memphis. Mr. Beckwith went to work with Mr. Gantt for two or three days in Mr. Gantt's office, and then Mr. Beckwith was called back to New Orleans on some business that he had, and took some of the manuscript that had been written along with him, and said that he could prepare it in his office at home; that he had some English authorities there that he wanted to refer to. He was gone two or three days, and when he came back to Memphis he brought that bill with him.

Q. When you went home to Memphis, was Mr. Beckwith there then?—A. I do not think he was.

Q. Did you telegraph to have him come?—A. I did not.

Q. Who did?—A. I don't know.

Q. How did he happen to come to Memphis?—A. There is a gentleman here who can tell you all about that, Mr. Seixas; we will put him on the stand. I do not know anything about it.

Q. You knew when you got there that Mr. Beckwith was there?—A. I knew he was there in Memphis two or three times.

Q. Where you not in company with him when the bill was being drawn?—A. Yes, I was. I had no part in drawing it, but I was in and out.

Q. You had no hesitation in participating in it?—A. No, sir; I would have drawn it myself, if necessary.

Q. It was drawn in Mr. Gantt's office?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. It was not finished and he took it back to New Orleans?—A. Yes.

Q. And then it came back to Memphis?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it not filed the 7th of September?—A. It may have been; I do not know the exact date.

Q. If it was filed as early as the 7th of September he would not have had time to go to New Orleans. Wasn't that drawn before you came to Washington?—A. I do not know; it may have been.

Q. You didn't bring that with you?—A. I did not.

Q. Did Mr. Goode ever see that bill?—A. I don't know whether he did or not; if you will ask him I expect he will tell you.

Q. Will you tell us whether that bill was drawn in Memphis before you came to Washington, or started, or after you got back there?—A. I cannot tell you certainly, but I will give you the name of a witness who can tell you; I saw the bill; it was talked of before I came here.

Q. Wasn't it substantially drawn before you came to Washington?—A. I cannot say it was; I do not remember distinctly whether it was drawn before or afterwards.

Q. Did you not say you had that bill here?—A. No, sir; I have not; I may possibly have it in my room.

Q. Did you not appear as counsel in it?—A. No, sir; my name is not on it at all.

Q. When you talked with Mr. Goode in Washington about it, did he say anything about the propriety of having it referred to the Secretary of the Interior first?—A. Not a word. I never heard of such a thing being done before.

Q. Did he allude to the fact that Attorney-General Garland had in two cases since he had been in, and in every case on this application, referred it to the Attorney-General?—A. No, sir; he did not. He never mentioned it.

Q. You knew that he had referred the Van Benthuyzen case?—A. I heard so.

Q. Did you not think that was proper?—A. No, sir; I knew it was an improper practice, and that it ought not to be referred in that way, no law requiring it.

Q. Although you knew the Attorney-General had taken that course?—A. Yes, sir; but I knew no other Attorney-General had taken it. I knew Attorney-General Brewster had not done it.

Q. You did not want it done?—A. If I had been consulted about it I might have given my opinion that it was unnecessary. I am in the habit of giving very good opinions when I give any at all.

Q. You knew that Mr. Garland had adopted that course?—A. I knew that he had referred Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter.

Q. And yet you thought he was wrong in doing it?—A. I do not know that he was wrong in doing it.

Q. You wanted the suit brought in Memphis without its being done?—A. Be good enough to let me answer the question. I did not think it was morally wrong, but I did not think there was any law requiring it, or any practice or precedent that sanctioned or authorized it. I have not been able to find any.

Q. Did you consider that question at that time when Mr. Goode was acting on it?—A. I do not think I considered it at all. If he had asked me I would have told him not to do it. If you take Mr. Storow's argument you will see all that question before you, you will find all the facts you are trying to bring out, all brought out there.

Q. Mr. Storow's argument is not in evidence.—A. I am willing you should put it in.

Q. You are a witness now and not counsel. I simply want to ask you whether you thought of the question as to whether it was proper or not, or required in law or not, to refer the matter first to the Secretary of the Interior at the time you were having your interviews with Mr. Goode?—A. I do not think I did. If I had I would have told him not to send it there.

Q. Did you advise with him about it?—A. No, sir; he did not ask my advice.

Q. You were aware of the fact that the Attorney-General had referred it?—A. I heard it.

Q. Did you talk with Mr. Goode at all about the application Dr. Rogers had made?—A. I never mentioned it. I said nothing at all about it.

Q. Did you not tell Dr. Rogers you would as soon have Mr. Goode as Mr. Garland?—
A. I have no recollection of any such thing.

Q. Will you swear you did not?—A. Now, just wait until I get through. I will swear to anything that is the truth.

Q. Will you swear that you did not tell him so?—A. When I answer your other question I will answer that one. I may have seen him after this suit was ordered, and may have had a conversation with him about it, and if I said anything to him at all on that subject, I might have said—

The CHAIRMAN. You should not state what you might have said.

Q. I ask you if you did not tell Dr. Rogers that you would as soon have Mr. Goode as Mr. Garland. Will you swear you did not say that?—A. I will tell you what I did say, so far as I can remember, and you must be the judge whether it is substantially or actually the thing you ask. Let me answer it in my own way; if not, I will say I do not remember.

Q. My question is a very plain one, and you may give your own answer.—A. I am obliged to you. That is the first time you have given me the opportunity.

Q. Will you swear that you did not tell Dr. Rogers that you would as soon have Mr. Goode as Attorney-General Garland bring the suit?—A. I do not remember that I said anything to him at all about it. We had a conversation after this suit was brought, and I may have said it.

Q. You will not swear that you did not tell him so?—A. I do not know that I said anything about it. I do not remember.

Q. You know whether you will swear positively or not whether you stated it to him?—A. I have just stated to you that I do not remember whether I did or not. Is that satisfactory to you?

Q. Whatever you say I have to take as an answer, when I get your answer distinctly.—A. I try to make it as plain and distinct as possible.

Q. You say you did have a conversation with Dr. Rogers after the bringing of this suit?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. But you do not remember whether you did or not tell him that you would just as soon have Mr. Goode bring the suit as Attorney-General Garland?—A. I do not think I ever told him anything about it. I do not think I ever mentioned Mr. Goode's name to him.

Q. Will you swear you did not?—A. No; I will swear what I state to you. I do not believe I ever mentioned his name to him at all. I could not remember all that occurred between myself and Dr. Rogers in the various conversations we had.

Q. You have confidence in Dr. Rogers' integrity; you have indorsed him as a man of integrity and truth, and you say that anything you will say he will agree to?—A. I think so. I think if I were permitted to cross-examine him he would sustain every word I said.

Q. We will give you that opportunity after awhile if you want it. You have said you will not say that you did not tell him that, but that you might have told him. You do not seem to have a very distinct recollection about that conversation?—A. No, sir; I do not. I do have a distinct recollection about former one.

Q. I speak of this conversation wherein he says you told him you would as soon have Goode as Garland.—A. I do not remember I ever mentioned Mr. Goode's name to him.

Q. Didn't you tell him that he was friend of yours?—A. No, sir; I am certain I never made a remark of that kind unless in connection with something else. Mr. Goode is a friend of mine, and has been for many years, and I am glad to have such a man as my friend.

Q. Can you swear to this committee what else you said in that conversation?—A. I can swear to anything that is the truth.

Q. If you do not recollect what the conversation was, how can you state what it was?—A. I cannot. I cannot speak of anything I do not remember.

Q. You heard what Dr. Rogers swore here about that conversation?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you testified that you had forgotten it until you heard him swear to it?—A. Yes, sir; I had.

Q. If it was a conversation you had forgotten you cannot testify with any positiveness what it was, can you?—A. I can testify with a great deal of positiveness to particular things in connection with other matters which refresh my memory.

Q. I would like to have you narrate that conversation with Dr. Rodgers in your own way.—A. At what date?

Q. The one I have referred to, where you told him about Mr. Goode.—A. I have not said I told him anything about Mr. Goode. Can I relate a conversation I do not remember?

Q. You and Dr. Rogers are in conflict upon that conversation, and I want to see who is right. He has sworn distinctly what it was, and you say you cannot tell what it was.

The CHAIRMAN. You may as well let it rest there.

The WITNESS. You are alluding to what conversation?

Q. Dr. Rogers testifies to a conversation in which he says you told him—A. I would rather have the document. Just please read what he said, and then I will tell you.

Q. You may answer the question in your own way. Dr. Rogers has testified to specific conversations in which, among other things, he says you told him you would just as leave have Goode bring the suit as the Attorney-General.

The WITNESS. If I am required to testify to a conversation, I want to see the record; I want to see what the facts are.

Q. It is not material as to whether Dr. Rogers testified to those facts. This is my question: Dr. Rogers testifies to an interview with you, and to a conversation which he gave between himself and you, wherein among other things he says you said in substance that you would as soon have Mr. Goode bring the suit as Mr. Garland; that he was a friend of yours. That is the substance of it. Was there any conversation where such a thing was said?—A. I have no recollection of any such conversation, none whatever!

Q. But you recollect having a conversation with him on the subject?—A. Yes; I talked with him a dozen times about the suit, but I don't remember that Mr. Goode's name was ever mentioned in connection with it. After the suit was brought I may have told him what Mr. Goode said, but I do not remember.

Q. If you do not remember, if you have no more definite recollection about it than that, I will leave it there.—A. I have given exactly what my recollection was. I have no recollection of having any conversation with him about Mr. Goode at all. After the suit was brought I may have told him that Mr. Goode had ordered it. I told others so, and perhaps I told him, but I do not remember.

Q. Do you recollect the conversation with the son where, after you had cautioned him not to say anything about it, he said what was the use of that, that he had found others knew it?—A. Yes, I remember that.

Q. Where was that conversation?—A. I don't recollect where it was, but I remember it from the fact that Colonel Gardner told me about it. Colonel Gardner spoke to me about the same thing.

Q. You do remember the conversation at Dr. Rogers's house, where he and his son were present?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you do remember soon after that having a conversation with the son?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember the conversation that occurred at that house?—A. I remember the substance of it, but I cannot give the language of it.

Q. Fix the date, if you can.—A. I think it was on the 31st of July.

Q. How long were you there?—A. Perhaps an hour, or may be two hours.

Q. Please narrate that conversation as it occurred.—A. I could not narrate all the conversation that occurred during my visit there, but part of it related to the telephone receiver that he had patented, and I wanted to get the patent, and as soon as I heard him testify I remembered that some mention was made of this suit. Whether I introduced it or Dr. Rogers introduced it, I cannot remember. But we referred to this letter he had written on the 24th of May, and referred to the letter that Mr. Van Benthuyzen had written to the Attorney-General to bring the suit, and I said to him if that was the law, supposing a law had been passed, it would be delicate for Mr. Garland, in his situation, to act; but I saw no escape, if that was the law, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen was determined to have the suit brought, but that our company must not have anything to do with it.

Q. Is that the substance of the conversation?—A. That is the substance of all that occurred on that subject.

Q. Do you remember hearing Dr. Rogers testify in regard to that?—A. Yes, sir; I heard him say it here.

Q. Do you remember positively about that?—A. I do.

Q. Why do you remember that so positively if you do not remember the rest?—A. I remember that for the reason that I had written to him before that Mr. Garland could not do it, and that on that day or the next day I heard Mr. Garland declare that he would not do it.

Q. You have stated the conversation as it actually occurred?—A. I have tried to state the substance of it.

Q. Do you remember anything else that Dr. Rogers said in that conversation?—A. Only what I have stated. I do not know that I could state in hoc verba all that he did say.

Q. Or anything that young Mr. Rogers said?—A. Not the words that he used.

Q. Do you remember that the name of Mr. Goode was introduced?—A. I do not think young Mr. Rogers said anything. The conversation was mostly between myself and the old gentleman. I am sure Mr. Goode's name was never mentioned at all.

Q. Will you swear that the name of Mr. Garland was not introduced?—A. Oh, no; his name was mentioned.

Q. In what connection?—A. I have just stated the connection. I was talking about the letter that he had written and the letter that Mr. Van Benthuyzen had written, requesting him to bring this suit, and in reference to the law that I supposed had passed Congress making it his duty to bring the suit.

Q. Will you swear that this was not said: "I believe I would rather have Goode than Garland; he is a friend of ours, and is all right"? Will you swear that that was not said?—A. I will swear that I never said that.

Q. Didn't you say a little while ago that you would not swear that it was not so?—A. No, sir; you mentioned another occasion.

Q. No, I have mentioned this all the time.

The CHAIRMAN. They testified at the first conversation that Mr. Young told them that the Attorney-General had agreed to bring the suit, and that Mr. Rogers said he was glad to hear it, because Mr. Garland would do what he said. The other conversation occurred at another time.

Q. Did you have any other conversation when Dr. Rogers and his son were both present?—A. Possibly I did, but I don't remember any. I never had but one conversation that I remember with them where Mr. Garland's name was mentioned at all. After the suit was brought I may have told Dr. Rogers about it; I told a number of people and may have told him.

Q. You do not remember but one conversation about the bringing of this suit at which the father and son were present?—A. No, I do not; there may have been others, but I do not remember them.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Chairman, I think you are mistaken about that conversation not being at the house of Dr. Rogers. On page 63 of the testimony, he says:

"Q. Have you any recollection of Mr. Young's ever coming to your house and telling yourself and your son of an interview he had had with Mr. Garland?—A. Perfectly.

"Q. State what was said and when it was.—A. He said, enlarging on that thing about Mr. Gantt having found precedents for it, that the suits would now be brought and with good prospects, and I asked him if Mr. Garland had promised, and he said that he had.

"Q. How did you come to ask him whether Mr. Garland had promised?—A. I thought it would have to come through the promise of Mr. Garland.

"Q. Did he indicate that he had had an interview with Mr. Garland?—A. Oh, I think so. It was predicated upon that.

"Q. Give his words as near as you can.—A. It is difficult to give the very words, but I can give you the substance. I think I would be more apt to give the words in that case than in most others, because I had felt great interest in that thing from the time I wrote my letter, and I said, "Well, if Mr. Garland has promised, he will do it." Then Mr. Young said, "But Mr. Garland will leave the matter or refer the matter to Mr. Goode." I saw in some paper that I had said that he would leave Mr. Goode; that he would go home to Arkansas and leave Mr. Goode to attend to it. I probably used the word "leave," but it was not said that he would leave it with Mr. Goode.

"By Mr. RANNEY:

"Q. Is that the conversation of Mr. Young with you?—A. Yes, sir, with me. I said, "How would Mr. Goode act; would he do as well as Mr. Garland?" "Oh yes," he said, "I believe I would rather have Mr. Goode than Mr. Garland. He is a friend of ours, and it will be all right." That is the substance of it; I cannot remember the very words."

The CHAIRMAN. Dr. Rogers first testified that this delicacy of Mr. Garland's position was referred to in that conversation, but was afterwards uncertain whether it was in the conversation or in a letter to him. I was under the impression that the Goode matter was referred to at another interview.

Mr. RANNEY. I still want that contract.

The WITNESS. Oh, you shall have the contract.

Mr. RANNEY. I think before I proceed to another matter the committee had better adjourn here.

Mr. OATES. I move that the committee adjourn until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Friday, March 26, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 11.24 a. m.

Hon. CASEY YOUNG appeared before the committee, and his examination was resumed.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You spoke in your previous examination of the order which Mr. Goode gave on the 3d of September, 1885, to Mr. McCorry, the district attorney, to bring the suit. Have you a copy of that order?—A. No, sir; I suppose it is in that record. I haven't got it.

Mr. RANNEY. I will put into the record here the order of John Goode, Acting Attorney-General, dated Department of Justice, Washington, September 3, 1885, as found on page 726 of the record in the Maryland case.

The order referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE,
Washington, September 3, 1885.

SIR: Yours of the 31st ultimo, inclosing certain papers with reference to letters-patent of the United States, heretofore issued to Alexander Graham Bell for improvement in telegraphy, has been duly received. Upon a careful examination of the papers submitted, I am of opinion that they make a prima facie case sufficient to justify a suit, in the name of the United States, to vacate, annul, and declare void the said letters-patent. You are therefore authorized and instructed to institute a chancery suit in the name of the United States, in the United States circuit court for the western district of Tennessee, for the purpose of vacating and canceling the said letters-patent of the United States, issued to the said Alexander Graham Bell on the 7th day of March, 1876, and numbered 174,455, upon the ground that the same was improvidently issued, and were obtained by false and fraudulent suggestion and concealment on the part of the said Alexander Graham Bell.

Permission is also given, as you request, to Hon. Casey Young, George Gantt, Luke E. Wright, and J. R. Beckwith, esquires, to appear as your associate counsel, with the distinct understanding, however, that the conduct of said suit is to be absolutely controlled by yourself, under the direction of this Department, and that no liability is to be incurred by the Government of the United States for the payment of any fees to the gentlemen named in consideration of their services as such associate counsel.

Very respectfully,

JOHN GOODE,
Acting Attorney-General.

H. W. McCORRY, Esq.,
United States Attorney for Western District of Tennessee, Jackson, Tenn.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I see by the application of Mr. McCorry, and also by the leave granted by Mr. Goode, that you and the other gentlemen named as counsel were to act without expense to the Government for your fees.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who were to pay them?—A. There was no arrangement made about paying them. I have been doing the legal work of my company without pay, but I suppose I should have charged them if I had attended to it; I suppose our company would have paid them.

Q. You three men were acting for your respective companies, then?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. And expected to be paid by them?—A. I supposed the companies would pay it. There was nothing said about it except the vote that you see on the book there. I don't remember anything more about it.

Mr. RANNEY. I now put in evidence, for the purpose of calling the attention of the witness to it, one of the printed letters found on page 8 of the appendix, printed for the use of the committee, No. 94, dated September 7, 1885. I will read it:

"OFFICE OF PAN-ELECTRIC TELEPHONE COMPANY,
Washington, D. C., September 7, 1885.

"DEAR HARRY: Some time since Senator Harris sent me an account of Bradford & Co. (I think that is the name) for some work done by your order amounting to about $30, and requesting me to forward check for the amount. I was very busy at the time, and laying the account carelessly aside, when I came to look for it I was unable to find it. So I sent a check, blank as to amount, payable to the order of Senator Harris, and requested him to pay the account. But when I was in Washington recently he told me he had not [done] so. I intended to have done it myself before leaving, but was so hurried I forgot it.

"I wish you would see Mr. Bradford and tell him to send me the account and I will pay it."

I now come to what I want to call your attention to:

"We have secured all we expected or wished, and we will soon proceed to utilize, but nothing must be said about it for a little while yet.

"Yours, truly,

"CASEY YOUNG."

Was that September 7, 1885, the date you left Washington for Memphis?—A. I suppose it was about that time.

Q. Where was Harry Rogers then?—A. I think he was here; the letter seems to have been addressed to him here.

Q. That was written after you had seen Mr. Goode, of course?—A. Yes, sir; I guess it was.

Q. And the letter was being sent by him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now I want to go back to one or two matters not fully covered yesterday.

The WITNESS. Don't you want me to go any further with that; won't you allow me to explain it?

Mr. RANNEY. No, not now; I will give you time to make any proper explanation about it that you desire, but not now. I want it connected with some other things. When you and Colonel Gantt, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and Mr. Huntington, I believe, went and called on the Attorney-General the last of July or the first of August, the time you have spoken of before when you had a conversation with the Attorney-General about the bringing of a Government suit—I call your attention to that—can you now recall exactly what you and each one of you said to the Attorney-General there? I want to get it accurately.—A. I have told you several times about what was said, and I can state it again if you want it.

Q. Have you stated it exactly? I have not the minutes of your evidence of yesterday.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you, either of you, request or apply to him to bring a suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you ask him to do it?—A. No, sir; I did not; Mr. Van Benthuyzen did, and Mr. Von Briesen did, I think.

Q. What did they say to him in your presence?—A. I think, as well as I recollect, that the conversation was opened by Mr. Von Briesen, who said, in language something like this: "Mr. Attorney-General, we have called to see you to get your permission, or to get you to bring a suit against the Bell Telephone Company to annul its patents." The Attorney-General said, "I am interested in a telephone company. I have been or I am its attorney"—I don't remember which—"and I cannot have anything to do with it." Mr. Von Briesen then pulled an affidavit out of his pocket, made by Mr. Wilbur in reference to the Bell Company, and said, "Mr. Attorney-General, here is an affidavit I want you to read. I want you to listen to this affidavit." Mr. Garland said, "I cannot hear it; I cannot hear anything about this matter. I am interested in a telephone company, and I cannot talk to you gentlemen about it." That is all I remember that occurred between him and Mr. Von Briesen. Then Mr. Van Benthuyzen took the matter up, and he said in substance—I don't remember the exact words—"If it is your duty to bring this suit I am going to have you do it. You are not interested in my company, and I have the right to have it brought, and if I have a right I intend to do it, even if I have to appeal to the President," or "go to the White House," or something of that kind. Mr. Garland said, "I cannot have anything to do with it."

Q. Did you have anything to say about it yourself?—A. Not a solitary word, except to introduce those gentlemen to Mr. Garland.

Q. You said you did not think at first of going yourself, because you were not going to have anything done for the Pan-Electric Company.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was not the application made to Mr. Garland to bring a suit in behalf of the Pan-Electric Company?—A. No, sir; there never had been any application made to him that I know of, except the one made by Dr. Rogers, and I advised against the making of one by Mr. Von Briesen.

Q. Was there not an application made to Attorney-General Garland to bring a suit in the name of the Pan-Electric Company?—A. None, except that made by Dr. Rogers that I know of. We never made any other. I never said a word to him about it.

Q. Did you ever read the letter of Attorney-General Garland to the President, of October 8, 1885?—A. Yes, sir; I think I have.

Q. Calling your mind to that, I want to read what he says there, and see who is right, you or he. I have this letter certified to in the Baltimore record, which I will file. I read from page 768 of the Baltimore record, the first paragraph at the top of the page:

"Some time last summer, I do not recollect the precise day, some gentlemen approached me, stating that they desired to make application, in the name of this company, of which I was a stockholder and attorney, for the use of the name of the United States, to test the validity of the Bell telephone patents in the courts. Those gentlemen were Mr. Casey Young, Col. George W. Gantt, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and one other gentleman whose name I do not recollect. I told the gentlemen that I could not consider the matter, and being asked by one of them why, I stated that I was disabled because of being a stockholder and the attorney for the company in whose name it was intended to make the application. Several questions were propounded to me as to the manner and mode of proceeding in such matters, which I declined to answer, stating that I was disabled from considering the subject-matter at all. I could not consider these questions, and this response seemed to be satisfactory to the gentlemen present."

You notice that he says distinctly you three gentlemen came there.

The WITNESS. Who says so?

Mr. RANNEY. The Attorney-General.

The WITNESS. Did he write that letter?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

The WITNESS. How do you know?

Mr. RANNEY. It was certified to from his office.

The WITNESS. Where is the certificate? I want to see if you have identified it as a letter that he wrote.

Mr. RANNEY. If there is any question about that—

The WITNESS. I decline to answer the question until you prove that to be his letter. That is taken from the proceedings of the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; in the Maryland suit.

The WITNESS. I know it is.

Mr. RANNEY. And it is certified to.

The WITNESS. By whom? It was certified to a newspaper by Bell's lawyers.

Mr. RANNEY. It purports to be his letter, and is put into this record as an exhibit where your counsel wants it.

The WITNESS. That is in one of the Bell cases; it is not in this case.

Mr. RANNEY. It purports to be in his letter, and I have already seen it published.

The WITNESS. I decline to answer any question about what purports to be his letter, if it came through the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. RANNEY. I can read it, and ask you if it is true. Is that statement true?

The WITNESS. What part of it?

Mr. RANNEY. I will read the statement again:

"Some time last summer, I do not recollect the precise day, some gentlemen approached me stating that they desired to make application in the name of this company, of which I was a stockholder and attorney, for the use of the name of the United States to test the validity of the Bell telephone patents in the courts. Those gentlemen were Mr. Casey Young, Col. George W. Gantt, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and one other gentleman whose name I do not recollect. I told the gentlemen that I could not consider the matter, and being asked by one of them why, I stated that I was disabled because of being a stockholder and the attorney for the company in whose name it was intended to make the application."

Was that statement made to the Attorney-General by you or any gentleman in your presence when you called there?

The WITNESS. That they said they wanted a suit brought in the name of the Pan-Electric Company?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

The WITNESS. No, sir; it was not mentioned.

Q. Then that is not true?—A. No; and I can tell you why; I can show that it is a mistake, if you want it done, but I don't suppose you do. Go on.

Q. If there is any fact about it you desire to state, do so.—A. Very well; I will prove that by another witness. It is a mistake, and has been shown to be so.

Mr. OATES. You have a right to state if you want to.

The WITNESS. I can state what other persons told me; but I think perhaps they had better testify. The Pan-Electric Company was not mentioned.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You swear distinctly that you did not say that you wanted a suit brought for the Pan-Electric Company?—A. No, sir; I did not say it, and nobody else said it.

Q. Did not the Attorney-General tell you that he could not entertain such an application, because it was an application to bring a suit by the United States in behalf of a company in which he was a stockholder and director?—No, sir; not at all. He said he could not engage in it because he was a stockholder and attorney for a telephone company. He did not understand it was being brought for that company.

Mr. RANNEY. I find that this is put into the record not under the certificate.

The WITNESS. You will find many things put into that record in the same way.

Mr. RANNEY. It purports to have come from the New York Herald of Saturday, February 10, 1885.

Mr. HALL. Do these comments go down in the record? I infer it all goes down.

Mr. RANNEY. If there is any dispute about the authenticity of the letter we will have the original.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not think it is material.

Mr. RANNEY. Though if it appeared that it is not a certified letter coming from the Department, although proof in that case, it would not be competent here. But I have a right, for the purpose of questioning a certain statement, to ask if that was true.

The CHAIRMAN. That is about the effect of it. The witness has made one statement as to the conversation occurring at the Attorney-General's office, and the gentleman from Massachusetts has asked him whether it was not another statement.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I will ask you this. If, when you left the Attorney-General you gave him to understand that there would be an application coming to him thereafter?—A. No, sir; I did not say a word to him except to tell him good-by.

Q. Did you give the Attorney-General any reason to suppose that you would come to him after that with an application, after the statement that he had made that he could not bring one in the name of his own company?—A. No, sir; I never said a word to him afterwards.

Q. No, I mean at that time.—A. No, I did not.

Q. It appears that after that interview with the Attorney-General, whatever it was, you gentlemen had conferences in which you did determine to have a Government suit brought?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You had not determined then where it should be brought, but you had determined it should be brought?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you went immediately to Tennessee and proceeded there?—A. No, sir; I staid here two or three days after the conference with him, and then I went home, on the 7th, I think.

Q. Did not these gentlemen go with you?—A. No, sir; I do not think they did. Colonel Gantt went before I did.

Q. Substantially you met there very soon afterward?—A. I left about the 7th and I think I got there about the 9th.

Q. I want you again to refresh your recollection by your memorandum book and tell me how soon these other gentlemen, one or more of them, met in Tennessee, at Memphis, in regard to this proposed suit by the Government?—A. I have nothing on my memorandum book about that, but I can tell the time. I have not their names on it. Anything in this book would not enable me to designate the precise date. If I was at home I could give it. But I suppose it was about the 10th or 12th, or somewhere along or about that time.

Q. How long did they remain there before Mr. Beckwith took the papers to New Orleans to complete the bill?—A. I suppose they remained there a week or ten days; a week fully.

Q. And after that week or ten days Mr. Beckwith went home to complete the bill?—A. Well, they were figuring at the bill. I had written one myself about that time, but they did not think it was a very good one.

Q. When did you write that?—A. About that time, after I got home. I wrote the outline of that one.

Q. They did not like it, and Mr. Beckwith took it and went home?—A. I had written the outline of one myself and they did not like it very well, and I think the gentleman who sits right behind you [Mr. Taylor] tried his hand at it, and finally it was turned over to Colonel Gantt and Mr. Beckwith, and they worked at it a day or two, and I heard Mr. Beckwith remark that there were some English authorities at his home that he would like to examine; and he got a telegram to come home, and he took the papers with him where he could get at the authorities, and then brought it back.

Q. What time did he go to New Orleans?—A. I cannot say myself, but I can furnish that information by another witness who is here.

Q. State to the best of your recollection.—A. About the 25th or 26th of August, I think it was, that he went home. There is a witness here who could tell the very day.

Q. During the days they were there in August, before Mr. Beckwith went home, how many interviews did you have with Mr. McCorry?—A. I saw him three or four times. I think General Wright wrote to him to come down there and examine those instruments. I saw him first in the library at our court-room, at our court library. General Wright and Mr. Taylor, the gentleman who is sitting behind you there, were present, examining the authorities at Memphis, at our law library, when I walked in, and that was the first time I met him. That was about the 15th; I don't remember the exact date. I think he came there for that purpose. General Wright told him to come down there. I do not know that he wrote to him to tell him what he wanted, but to examine these instruments that he had there, and that he wanted his assistance to bring a suit against the Bell Company, and that is what we were conferring about.

Q. How early in August was that?—A. I cannot tell the date. It was after I got home, and I got home about the 9th. I think he may have been there on the 12th or somewhere along there. I have nothing in my memorandum book to show that.

Q. Did you go to Jackson to see him?—A. No, sir; not at that time. I went to Jackson about the time these papers were sent on here the—application. I went to see him for that purpose, about those papers.

Q. How far is it from Memphis to Jackson?—A. The way I have to go it is about 125 miles, but a shorter route is about 75 miles. I would like to explain why I went there, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Proceed.

The WITNESS. I knew these gentlemen had been asking Mr. McCorry to bring the suit, and I understood he was satisfied that he ought to do it. He is a very conscientious man, and would not do anything that he had not examined thoroughly. I went there to recommend Mr. McCorry to bring the suit at our relation, as I have been stating, and he refused to do it.

Q. At whose relation?—A. At the relation of the National Improved Telephone Company, or mine, or any one else.

Q. Which one?—A. I don't know which one. You can take it that it was ours if you want to. I cannot say which one. Just put it any way you want it. I would have had it done in the name of ours if I could, and perhaps I had that in my mind; I don't remember. I don't think I would have put it in the name of either company, but in the name of some citizen or member of the company. I think that would conform more to the law and precedent.

Q. Did you request either?—A. Yes, sir; I did request him to ask the suit to be brought at the relation of somebody. I do not know that I mentioned any particular individual.

Q. Did you make that request in writing?—A. No, I just went to his office and told him.

Q. It seems you had been in conference with him a good while before August 26, 1885?—A. Yes, sir; from the time I went home, every day.

Q. But the only application on which he based his action would seem to be a communication to him, which I put in yesterday, dated August 26, 1885?—A. Oh, we had been talking to him for two weeks every day or parts of days.

Q. Then, after all your talk, it was determined to take this application, was it not?—A. Yes, sir; they wanted to put it in form and send it up.

Q. It was determined then to make this application?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And this application was sent, signed by Mr. Van Benthuyzen, Mr. Huntington, Mr. Beckwith, and Col. George Gantt?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they signed that as individuals?—A. It seems to be so; I would have signed it myself, if it had been handed to me; I am surprised I did not; I would have done it.

Q. What reason did you give for making it in the name of individuals?—A. I didn't give any; I didn't write it; it was written by Colonel Gantt or Mr. Beckwith.

Q. What reason did you give for not having it made by the Pan-Electric Company or by the National Improved Company, but by these gentlemen as individuals?—A. I did not give any at all.

Q. Why, with all your talk with him about it, and your talk among each other, did you come down to an application like that?—A. You might have asked the same question if they had made it in the name of one of the other companies; I don't know of any reason.

Q. Was it not this, that you wanted the application made to the district attorney and from him to the Attorney-General in behalf of people who were not members of the Pan-Electric Company where Attorney-General Garland was interested?—A. I don't know that I thought about it. I didn't care a cent. I wouldn't have given a nickel for the difference. I would just as soon have had it made in the name of the Pan-Electric Company as any other. I considered Mr. Garland as clear out of it and I felt no delicacy about it in the world.

Q. If it be true that Mr. Garland placed his objection to granting the application on the ground that the application was made on behalf of the Pan-Electric Company, and he was a stockholder and director in that company and attorney for it, I say if it was true that he placed his objection to preceeding on that ground, you would desire to make an application where that objection did not obtain, would you not?—A. You are proceeding with a hypothetical state of facts. He did not decline it on that ground.

Q. Did it occur to you, to put it in this form, that it was better to have an application for the suit based on the request of people not connected with the Pan-Electric Company, in which company Mr. Garland was interested?—A. I don't know that I thought anything about it. I would have done it in the name of our company if it had been thought best, because Mr. Garland was clear out of it, had nothing to do with it, had declared his intention and purpose to have nothing to do with it, and I would not have hesitated to make it in the name of our company.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Was Colonel Gantt a holder of stock in your company at that time?—A. He was the attorney of our company and held stock, yes, sir; I would have done it myself at any time.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You see that Mr. McCorry's application was made to the Attorney-General?—A. It appears to be so there, doesn't it?

Q. If the Attorney-General had absolutely and unequivocally declined to proceed in such a suit in behalf of the Pan-Electric Company, as you say he did—A. I didn't say that; hold on, my friend; I didn't say anything of the sort, that he refused to hear it because the Pan-Electric Company made that application. I said nothing was said about it.

Q. You did not hear my question. You say that he absolutely declined, in that interview, to do anything about it?—A. Yes; I say that.

Q. Why?—A. Because he was counsel and interested in a telephone company, not because that telephone company made the application, as you say.

Q. I haven't said that in my last question, or anything about it. But you knew this much, that he had declined to proceed in a suit because of his interest?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That being so, would you have been a party to a renewed application of this kind in this formal way right to the Attorney-General, to bring a suit where he was interested in the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I would, and I intended to compel him to do it.

Q. Although he was interested?—A. Yes, sir; it would have been his duty to do it.

Q. You didn't believe in his scruples about it, his delicacy?—A. Yes; I thought it was very proper that he should feel a sense of delicacy about it. He was the head of the Department of Justice, and it was only through it that application could be made, and they had determined to go to the President and have an officer appointed and have that suit brought. We knew that we were fighting a powerful corporation, though, which would have done everything to prevent it.

Q. Why didn't you sign that application to Mr. McCorry?—A. I would have signed it if it had been presented to me.

Q. You observe that the application to Mr. McCorry was made August 26, after you had been in conference and consultation, and drawing bills since the 10th?—A. Yes; I knew all about that paper. I cannot give you any reason why I didn't sign it. I will sign it now, if you want it done.

Q. How happened it that somebody did not sign it officially in behalf of the National Improved Company and the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I refer you to Mr. Van Benthuyzen, who is president of the company. He can give you more definite information than I can.

Q. Was it not because you supposed that the Attorney-General would grant it on the application in behalf of these individuals or other parties, when he would not be likely to grant it on behalf of the Pan-Electric Company, where he was interested?—A. I knew perfectly well when that instrument was prepared and forwarded to the Attorney-General that he would have nothing whatever to do with it; I knew that perfectly well.

Q. Now, I will repeat my question. Was it not so signed and presented because you thought he would be more likely to authorize the suit, or to proceed with it himself, if he had an application made by parties such as these, than he would if it was on an application made by the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I answered your question that I knew he would not do it at all if it was made; I knew it perfectly well.

Q. You were perfectly satisfied about that?—A. Yes, sir; perfectly satisfied.

Q. And yet the moment that letter was sent by Mr. McCorry to Washington on the 31st of August, you followed it and got here as soon as that did?—A. I did; pretty near as soon, I reckon.

Q. And as soon as you got here you and Senator Harris went immediately to the office of the Attorney-General?—A. I think it was the next day. I came here to have that suit brought.

Q. And you went to see Mr. Goode?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you and Senator Harris saw him?

Mr. HALL. You might have the record of yesterday read about that; it is going over the same thing all the time.

Mr. RANNEY. You will allow me to exercise my own judgment about it.

Mr. HALL. I think we are doing that.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think you ought to be afraid of getting at the truth.

Mr. HALL. I do not think a suggestion like that should come from any member of the committee.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You and Senator Harris went on the 2d of September to Mr. Goode's office.

The WITNESS. Well, how do you know?

Mr. RANNEY. You say you did.

The WITNESS. No, I did not. I said I thought we went on the 31st of July—no; that is true, it was on the 2d. Let me look at my book. [Examining a memorandum book.] I was looking at my book when I was stating it yesterday, and if you look there, you will get the date; if not, you will have to go back to my book. I thought you were referring to a former visit. It may have been the 2d. I don't recollect what date I got here.

Q. You and Senator Harris went together to see Mr. Goode?—A. Yes, sir. I guess that was the second time, from this book here.

Mr. EDEN. Who was it that you said went with you? I did not hear the answer.

Mr. RANNEY. Senator Harris and himself went there?

The WITNESS. Yes; we went there about that time.

Q. And while you were there, when you first asked him, he said that he had not seen the papers, and sent for them?—A. Yes, sir; he sent out a clerk for them, and they came in while I was there.

Q. And you talked it over with him?

Mr. HALL. And he went again? Let us have that over again, if possible. He has been over it two or three or four times. I do not object to the question, but I think some consideration ought to be paid to the other members of the committee. I do not suppose any member of this committee desires to interpose any objection, but I have some interest in the proceedings of the House, and would like to get back there as soon as possible, and do not see the necessity of going over and over the same question, which would certainly not be permitted in a court, and the counsel, I think, ought to consider the other gentlemen of the committee in conducting this examination.

Mr. RANNEY. Whom do you call counsel?

Mr. HALL. I call you counsel.

Mr. RANNEY. You had better apply that designation to yourself and not to me.

Mr. HALL. I withdraw that expression. I did not mean it in that sense.

Mr. RANNEY. I think you had better do it.

Mr. HALL. I meant in the sense that you are conducting the examination. I think instead of going over precisely the same transactions and events repeatedly after they have been put upon the record and stand as having been covered by the testimony of the witness it should be allowed to remain as it is.

Mr. RANNEY. Have you got through?

Mr. HALL. Yes.

Mr. RANNEY. Do you make any motion to the committee?

Mr. HALL. Yes; I make the motion that we adopt some method of conducting the examination which shall prevent going over the same matters of detail so many times.

Mr. HANBACK. To prevent the examination?

Mr. HALL. To prevent the examination going over the same subject. This matter of the interviews on these two occasions has been gone over at least half a dozen times when I have been present, and I have not been present all the time. The witness has testified again and again what the subjects of those interviews were and what they did there and who was present.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. HALL. I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that there ought to be some plan devised or some system adopted by which we can conduct the examination having in view some saving of time. Of course I believe if any gentleman on this committee makes any objection to any question put, it will be said, as was said by Mr. Ranney, that there is a disposition to keep out the truth and prevent a full examination.

Mr. RANNEY. I made no such remark.

Mr. HALL. You said a moment ago to me that if I desired to prevent such a thing being gone into I could do so.

Mr. RANNEY. I did.

Mr. HALL. Well, I think that is equivalent, and it is not the first time it has been said by yourself. I want to say that for one I have not the slightest objection to any inquiry in any direction, but I think that this committee ought, out of regard to the time of the members and their business in Congress, to reach some decision which will prevent the examination going over and over again the same precise inquiries of the same witness.

The CHAIRMAN. I do not understand the gentleman to make any motion, but that what he says is a mere suggestion.

Mr. HALL. I do not like to interrupt the proceedings, otherwise I would ask for an executive session of the committee, so as to have a consultation on the subject.

Mr. RANNEY. You have wasted a great deal more time about the matter than if you had allowed me to go on.

Mr. HALL. I have some rights as a member of the committee. I think you have been wasting a good deal of time, and some other members of the committee ought to have the same privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no motion then made for the committee to act on?

Mr. RANNEY. I will proceed then. [To the witness:] I was simply alluding to what you testified to yesterday as the basis of another inquiry. I understand you testify, and have testified, that you and Senator Harris went on the 2d of September and had an interview with Mr. Goode?

A. I think that was the date.

Q. That he sent for the papers and said he would see you the next day?—A. What do you say? Do I understand you to say that Mr. Goode said to call the next day?

Q. I understand you went the first day, and he said he would look it up, and you were to call the next day and get his reply.—A. I had no agreement of that kind with Mr. Goode, but I did go the next day.

Q. But it was not by his request?—A. No, sir; I didn't say anything to him about coming, but I did go the next day.

Q. And you did the next day learn that he had already written the letter?—A. No, sir; he was writing the letter when I went in, he said.

Q. How early in the day was it?—A. I judge about 1 or 2 o'clock; I don't remember the time.

Q. I want you to tell me now whether you or Senator Harris on the first day, that is on the 2d of September, or the second day, or the third day, when you called, alluded in your conversation to Mr. Goode, in any way, to the fact that the Attorney-General had been previously applied to and that he had declined?—A. There was never a word said about it.

Q. Or alluded to the fact of his interest in the patent?—A. Not a word.

Q. You are sure about that?—A. Oh, yes; I know it.

Q. Had you any reason to believe that he knew anything about the Pan-Electric Company?—A. None whatever; but I had a very strong reason to believe that he did not. He had been absent from the city a short time before—when I was here previously he had been on the Pacific coast and had just got back, I understood.

Q. How long before had Mr. Goode returned?—A. I understood a very short time; I do not know how long.

Q. A few days?—A. I understood it was a short time before.

Q. When you got here you found the Attorney-General gone; he had left on the 27th of August, I believe?—A. I don't know what date he left, but I can tell you, if you want to know it, that I knew he was going away, and I was hurrying up to get here before he did get away. I was informed in the papers that he was going.

Q. How early were you informed that Mr. Garland was going to leave?—A. Oh, I saw it in the newspapers. It was just before I left home, and I wanted to get here before he left.

Q. How soon had you heard that the Attorney-General had gone away?—A. I think it was two or three days before I left home that I saw it in the papers.

Q. How soon did you learn that he had gone?—A. I picked up a morning paper at Cincinnati and saw he had left the day before.

Q. When did you learn that Mr. Goode was away?—A. I learned that he was away when I was here in July; I saw that in the papers.

Q. When did you learn that he had returned?—A. I did not know that he had returned until I got here.

Q. Then you had no reason to suppose that Mr. Goode did not know anything about it?—A. Yes, sir; I had a very strong reason to suppose it.

Q. Did it not occur to you that when you were presenting this thing to him, a new thing, it was proper for you to say that you had had an interview with the Attorney-General previously?—A. If you want that question answered I will try and answer it. What is the question?

(The reporter read the question to the witness.)

The WITNESS. It is not a proper question, but I will answer it. When I try a lawsuit before a judge I do not generally tell him that some other judge has decided it the other way, and I don't believe you do, either.

Mr. RANNEY. Speak for yourself please, and not for me.

The WITNESS. I am speaking for myself, and that is what I did; I did not feel called upon to give Mr. Goode any information on the subject whatever. The law was before him, and I supposed he was lawyer enough to pursue it without any suggestion from me whatever.

Q. Is it not true that you or Senator Harris did mention it to him?—A. It is absolutely untrue that Senator Harris or I did mention it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. If the Attorney-General had refused to allow the bringing of that suit for any other reason, as, for instance, upon the merits of the application, and you had then made application to the Solicitor-General, would you have informed him of the action of the Attorney-General?—A. I would if I had not had it in view to go beyond that. I intended to appeal to the President. I believe the law authorized it, and I didn't care a cent about what Mr. Garland or Mr. Goode thought about the merits of it. I would have gone to the highest source.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you mean that you intentionally withheld that fact from Mr. Goode?—A. Of course, if I didn't tell him.

Q. I thought perhaps you had forgotten it.—A. Oh, no, sir; whatever I do is generally intentional. I do not do anything hastily, by mistake or inadvertance, but intentionally.

Q. When you went in to see him did you inquire when the Attorney-General would be back?—A. No, sir; I did not make any inquiry.

Q. Did you seek to ascertain how soon the Attorney-General would return?—A. I did not. I didn't care a cent when he came back. It was a matter of no concern to me whatever.

Q. I want right in that connection to call your attention to one fact. You heard what Dr. Rogers said you told him as to what Mr. Goode would do; that the Attorney-

General would not, but that Mr. Goode would. Now, looking at the fact, is it not true, as a matter of fact, that that which you had told Dr. Rogers did happen; isn't it true that what you told him was to happen did so happen?—A. No, sir; I didn't tell him anything of the sort.

Q. But he says you told him.—A. Read what he says about it.

Mr. EDEN. I would suggest that the witness has the other interview perhaps in view.

Mr. RANNEY. I asked him if what followed after the conversation he had with Dr. Rogers, about which they differed, was not exactly what Dr. Rogers said he told him was to happen?

Mr. EDEN. That is a matter of reasoning.

Q. You have noticed that what followed is exactly what Dr. Rogers said would happen, or would be done, was it not?—A. If you will read exactly what he said I will tell you whether it was in exact accordance with what he said was to happen, and whether he is a prophet or not.

Mr. RANNEY. We went all over that yesterday.

The WITNESS. I know we did, and I am surprised to see you going over it again.

Mr. RANNEY. I want to see who is mistaken, you or he.

The WITNESS. Very well, go ahead.

The CHAIRMAN. The point is whether Dr. Rogers had made the statement before the occurrence.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think you should reason about the matter. I am putting a fair question. [Referring to the record.] Dr. Rogers says it was all to be turned over to Mr. Goode.

Mr. EDEN. This evidence is for the information of the committee. If Dr. Rogers swore to a certain state of facts and it turned out afterwards that the thing happened as he said, that would not be important.

Mr. RANNEY. There are two things connected with the subject of inquiry before the committee, one to get at the facts, and the other, that when two witnesses swear to one thing, and another witness comes and contradicts them as to what they say, we want to reconcile their testimony, if we can, or to see which is mistaken.

Mr. EDEN. Suppose the two Rogerses did testify that Colonel Young said that Mr. Goode would take charge of the case or would govern, and that Colonel Young testifies that he told them that, and it follows that Mr. Goode did order the bringing of the suit, that is not evidence; we all know that as well as Colonel Young does, and where is the propriety of asking him to give any further explanation about it?

The WITNESS. I will explain it if the gentleman wants me to.

Mr. RANNEY. The question is a very proper one as attempting to reconcile the conflicting testimony of these two witnesses, Colonel Young and the Rogerses, to show, if possible, which was mistaken, and I want to convince this man, if I can, that he is mistaken.

The WITNESS. Which "man" are you talking about?

Mr. RANNEY. I am talking of Casey Young, of Memphis, Tenn. I do not mean any disrespect, but I say it is a proper question to put to a witness where two conflicting statements have been made.

The CHAIRMAN. Oh, yes, there is no objection to that.

Mr. RANNEY. I call your attention to this: Dr. Rogers says in his testimony that Colonel Young said, "'but Mr. Garland will leave the matter or refer the matter to Mr. Goode.' I saw in some paper that I had said that he would leave Mr. Goode, that he would go home to Arkansas and leave Mr. Goode to attend to it. I probably used the word 'leave,' but it was not said that he would leave it with Mr. Goode." Now, I call your attention to the fact that you went home and got this application from McCorry, and came here when Mr. Garland was absent, did not inquire about Mr. Garland's being absent or when he would return, did not say anything to Mr. Goode about the fact that you had applied to the Attorney-General, and that Mr. Goode proceeded at once, as a matter of course, within twenty-four hours after getting those papers, to authorize this suit to be brought.

The WITNESS. Is it a matter of course that he proceeded within that time?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, that he proceeded between the 2d of September, when you called on him, and the 3d, about twenty-four hours, to at once authorize it without anything more being said. Now, you see that that appears to happen which Dr. Rogers says you told him was to happen.

The WITNESS. Well, are you through; shall I answer?

Mr. RANNEY. Now, with that fact still before you, you say that you did not tell Dr. Rogers that thing?

The WITNESS. Yes, and I say further that Dr. Rogers's testimony was given six months after this was alleged to have occurred. If he had testified to that fact before, your question would be pertinent. But he testified to it six months afterwards, that it had been done. I could have testified to that, and so could you. Dr. Rogers is just mistaken about it, that is all.

Q. You see that Dr. Rogers states in a letter which was put in, that the first application was on account of the Pan-Electric Company and Mr. Garland declined to do it, and that afterwards the application was put when the Pan-Electric Company were not the moving parties, and then he did it.—A. Where does it appear in the record that they were the moving parties?

Q. Who was the moving party?—A. Look at the record. You say the Pan-Electric Company was. Where do you get that?

Q. You said that Dr. Rogers had made, on the 24th of May, an application for the Attorney-General to proceed on account of the Pan-Electric Company, which he had declined to do and did not act on it.—A. I did not know it until after he made it.

Q. But you knew it at the interview at the last of July or the 1st of August; you knew it before then?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. And you knew that Mr. Garland had declined or omitted to act on an application in behalf of the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Oh, no, sir. Dr. Rogers's application seems to have been on his own behalf, and not in the name of the company. He says, "I am but one."

Q. You knew that Mr. Garland had declined to act because of his interest in that same company.—A. I do not know that he declined to act on Dr. Rogers's application for that reason, but I know that he did afterwards when I went to him, because he said he was interested in it.

Q. When you went there on September 2, you went there with an application based on the request of parties not connected with your company?—A. They were connected with it to the extent you have stated. Colonel Gantt was the lawyer of the company.

Q. But it was not disclosed?—A. No, sir; it does not appear in that record.

Q. You did not disclose to Mr. Goode Colonel Gantt's relations to the company?—A. No, sir.

Q. You did not disclose to Mr. Goode Mr. Van Benthuyssen's connection with the National Improved Company?—A. No, sir; I did not consider it material. I would have done it if I had felt inclined.

Q. You did not disclose the fact that you were interested in the Pan-Electric Company?—A. No, sir.

Q. Nor account for the fact that you had not signed the application?—A. I was not called upon to give any account of it.

Q. Mr. Goode never raised any of those questions?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he raise any question as to the propriety of your proceeding as counsel?—A. None in the world.

Q. Did he inquire to see why you should be employed as counsel for the Government?—A. He never asked me.

Q. Did he inquire to see why Colonel Gantt should be employed?—A. He did not of me.

Q. In that interview with Senator Harris?—A. Not in my presence.

Q. Did he inquire why General Wright should be employed?—A. He didn't make any inquiry about any of them.

Q. Did he make any inquiry about the propriety of these gentlemen being employed by the Government?—A. No, sir; he acted on the letter of the district attorney.

Q. Did he inquire as to whether they were to represent the United States or private interests?—A. I could not say.

Q. Did he make any inquiry about that?—A. None in the world to me.

Q. Didn't he suggest that if this suit was to be brought by the United States in behalf of the whole people of the United States, for the public good, and not for the interest of private individuals, parties disinterested should be employed as counsel and not parties connected with private interests or corporations?—A. I am so stupid that I don't quite comprehend the question. I should like to hear it again.

(The reporter read the question to the witness.)

The WITNESS. It is considerably mixed up, but there was no conversation on that subject.

Q. That answers it then. I understand you to say that he made no inquiry about the fitness or propriety of employing those counsel?—A. He did not say a word about it.

Q. I understood you to say in your examination that you did not want a Government suit brought under the Van Benthuyssen application, because it would destroy the foundation of the Bell Telephone Company patent and yours alike?—A. I thought that might be the effect of it.

Q. You wanted to destroy the Bell telephone patents, did you?—A. Yes; I did if they were illegally granted. If Bell has a right to it, I say amen, let him keep it. I don't want to beat him out of it in any improper way.

Q. But you wanted to do it on grounds that would not at the same time destroy the value of your own patent?—A. Yes. I will give the reasons more in detail if you will let me.

Q. I have not asked you for the reasons; I want the facts. Was your object to destroy a great monopoly?—A. Oh, I cannot say that I was patriotic enough to want to destroy it because it was a monopoly. I am no communist. I am not fighting against monopolies. I wanted to maintain my own a patent, which I thought was a valid one.

Q. And you wanted, if you could properly, to remove them out of the field and get it yourself?—A. No, sir; I wanted to prevent their moving me out.

Q. You say you wanted to destroy their patent?—A. No, sir; that would not remove it any more than it would remove the Western Union Telegraph Company wires. They were fighting it on the ground that the Reis telephone anticipated all telephones, and then the contest would be between us on the mechanical contrivances, and we thought ours was wide enough to maintain ourselves against Bell; but if it covered the whole element of electricity, as he holds, any telephone would infringe it, no matter how valuable it was. In other words, I wanted to destroy his fifth claim.

Q. You desired to get the Bell patents vacated, but at the same time to preserve those in which you were interested?—A. If I was entitled to them under the law.

Q. And you thought the way Van Benthuyzen was proceeding would operate to destroy not only the Bell telephone patents, but yours, too?—A. Yes; because if it was decided upon the ground that Reis was the inventor of the thing, why nobody would have any telephone patent.

Q. I want to know if you knew of the pendency of a suit by the Bell Telephone Company, in Baltimore, Md., against the Pan-Electric Company?—A. I did; I knew all about it.

Q. Did you have anything to do with carrying or getting carried the record of this Government suit in Memphis, after it was instituted, to Baltimore, to be used in that suit as a reason why the injunction against the Pan-Electric Company should not be granted?—A. I do not think I did; I think it was sent there by somebody else; I was not at my office at the time; I think I learned from General Bradley T. Johnson that he got it from Colonel Gantt; I would have sent it if I had been there.

Q. You were aware of the pendency of a suit in the State of Maryland, in the United States circuit court, brought by the Bell Telephone Company against the Pan-Electric Telephone Company and others, wherein an application was made to enjoin the defendants from the use of their telephone instruments?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You knew that was pending on the 1st of August, when you were here, didn't you?—A. I knew it when it was filed. I have forgotten the date of the filing.

Q. Didn't you know time had been given to put in the answer and proofs on it?—A. I do not know that I ever did know that any time was given for that purpose. I did not keep track of the subject particularly. I knew it was pending, and feared the old chancery suits.

Q. Can you give us the date on which this Government suit was filed in Memphis? I find by the record in the Maryland case that it was on the 9th of September.—A. Mr. Taylor, who was counsel in the case, says he thinks it was the 10th of September.

Q. Here is the copy of the record in Tennessee: bill filed September 9, 1885.—A. I suppose that is correct.

Q. On the 15th of September the hearing was in Baltimore on that motion to get the injunction, and the copy of that record was there to be used as a reason why the injunction should not be granted?—A. I do not know. Let me see if I was in Memphis at that time. (Referring to a memorandum book.) I do not think I was. If I had been there I expect I would have sent it.

Q. You were not, there at the hearing at Baltimore?—A. I was there later than that at a hearing in October or November.

Q. That is the time that the hearing was actually had. It was postponed from the 15th?—A. It was set down to be heard, and I was telegraphed to by General Johnson and went over there. Mr. Storrow was there, and we made an informal agreement to let it go over indefinitely. I know I made no argument and nobody else did.

Q. I have the record with all the arguments.—A. I say I made none at that time.

Q. You were there when the pendency of this suit down in Memphis, brought by the Government, was urged as a reason why the injunction should not be granted?—A. No, sir; I was not there until October or November. I heard that it was done.

Q. You had been to Baltimore previously to the 15th of September to see to that case?—A. Yes, sir; and I went from there to Pittsburgh.

Q. You went there then to see about that suit?—A. Yes; I went there and tried to get that suit brought. When was the suit brought in Maryland? I went there to get General Johnson to write a letter to the president of the Bell Company, telling him that if he did not bring a suit we would bring suit against him under some English authorities we had found. I think that was probably in June before the bringing of that suit.

Q. I have a copy of the record here.—A. Well, may be it was in May that I saw him. The suit was not brought until then, was it?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, July 16.

The WITNESS. I was there in June or early in July to see about that thing. In July, when I went there, I went for the purpose of trying to get that very suit brought.

Q. To prevent getting an injunction in that case by the Bell Telephone Company against the Pan-Electric Company, you deemed it important to get the Government to institute a suit so that you might use it as a reason why a demurrer or a preliminary injunction should not be granted?—A. No, sir; I never thought about it at all. If I had been there perhaps I should.

Q. It seems that notice of the filing of the bill was brought there immediately?—A. I do not know about that.

Q. The record shows that they had it there on the 15th.—A. That may be so, but I was not there.

Q. Passing from that. You said something the other day about the incorporation of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company in Tennessee. I want to call your attention to the laws in regard to that. I find among the letters not deemed material (but which are, it seems to me), under date of July 1, 1883, a letter of yours to Dr. Rogers, from Memphis, Tenn., which reads as follows:

"I received your letter a day or two ago, but was in the midst of an important lawsuit at the time and could not answer until now. Agreeing with you as to the importance of an early incorporation, I had an interview with Senator Harris, and finding him of the same opinion, I agreed, at his suggestion, to prepare the necessary papers for incorporating under the laws of Tennessee, but when I came to make a close examination of the acts of our legislature on the subject I reached the conclusion that they were wholly inadequate to meet the requirements of our case. In other words, I do not think that we can secure under it as enlarged corporate powers as we desire and as will be needful. I have, therefore, promised Senator H. that I would go to Little Rock in a few days and confer fully with Senator Garland in respect to organizing under the laws of the State of Arkansas, or of some other State whose laws may be more favorable to us. In this connection I would make this suggestion: It is only four or five months now until the members of Congress will begin to assemble in Washington. All of our company will be there then as well as people from everywhere, and we could thus understand, perhaps, more advisedly and possibly to more advantage. We could start off better—and we could not likely do much before then, no way, as this is the season of suspension of active operations in every kind of business. I will, however, in a short time prepare articles of incorporation under the laws of some State and send them on to you. I am very strongly of the opinion that we can do well with the 'transmitter,' which we are getting ready for more extended operations. I believe I could sell one of them to every man who has a telephone in Memphis, and the same I think could be done elsewhere, and we could derive a very considerable profit from it. I want to go to San Francisco and other Pacific slope cities this summer, and if I can get samples of them before I start I think I could introduce them there. Senator Harris left for Washington last night. Will confer with you fully."

Now, calling your attention to that letter, and referring to your previous testimony which you gave in chief, as well as in cross-examination, about the laws of Tennessee, I want to know if between the time you wrote that letter and the time you organized the Pan-Electric Telephone Company in the State of Tennessee, there was any change in the law?—A. I think there was a trifling or unimportant change in the summer of 1883 at an extra session of the legislature. Mr. Taylor, a lawyer who is present, perhaps could tell me about that. He says not; there was none. But I know I read an amendment which I thought would cover what we wanted at that time. I wanted to incorporate according to the ideas of Dr. Rogers as set out in that paper, and he wrote to me frequently, and that letter, I suppose, I wrote just as it is there.

Q. If I remember your testimony correctly—which I may not do—you testified before that you endeavored to get the laws of Tennessee changed and failed to do it?—A. I did. I think the legislature adjourned before my bill got there. I sent it to Colonel Patterson, one of our representatives, but it got there too late. I think there was an amendment offered by some member from the eastern part of the State, but that even was not sufficient to cover these things we wanted.

Q. If you got any new legislation before you organized, please give it to us.—A. I do not know of any.

Q. You do not know of any which reached that conclusion as expressed in your letter?—A. I am not certain about it.

Q. I wish you would look and see.—A. The session laws of Tennessee would show. I want at this point, or at some other point, to put in a paper, a fragment of a letter I found in my rooms, which I wrote to General Bradley Johnson in respect to my views on the laws.

Q. You may do so after I get through. I want to read you a letter, dated March 25, 1883, written by you to Dr. Rogers. This is what you say:

"MY DEAR DOCTOR: I am in receipt of your letter of 18th instant, which I found awaiting me on my arrival Friday night. I have examined the New Jersey statutes and do not find their provisions so favorable to us as you seem to conclude. Acting upon your suggestion Senator Harris has prepared and sent to Nashville an amendment for our general laws of incorporation, which will give us all the corporate rights and privileges which we desire. I am afraid, however, that the legislature will adjourn before it can be passed. I find that the Maryland laws in respect to incorporations are extremely liberal and I think we would encounter no difficulty in obtaining such a charter as we want in that State. Harry must necessarily be incurring some expense and I would suggest that he draw upon the other members of the company for their pro rata share of it. It is better to keep the financial part of the business closed up as we go along. He might draw for the amount each one is to pay in installments of, say, $25 or $50 at a time. In notifying the members of this matter he and General Johnston can use my name if necessary."

Did that amendment of Senator Harris pass the legislature?—A. No, sir; it did not. That was the regular session of the legislature, and it adjourned shortly after. They had an extra session afterwards; and, I think, at the extra session there was some legislation, but it was not the bill we prepared.

Q. You do not know now of any legislation had in Tennessee after the writing of the letter of July 1, 1883, that removed the objection which you stated in that letter?—A. No, sir; I do not, unless it is this little amendment that somebody else may have offered from the eastern part of the State, but it was nothing I wanted.

Q. So that you proceeded to organize under the laws of Tennessee, although you thought they were entirely inadequate?—A. Oh, no. You do not understand it at all. Dr. Rogers wanted an organization in accordance with the one he has testified to covering all these things, and I was looking for that sort of an organization too.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. That was for the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Yes, sir. I found that we could organize a telephone company under the laws as they existed, but I did not think they were broad enough to cover the whole thing he had in contemplation at that time.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. It seems, then, that you canvassed about every State in the Union to see where you could get a corporation organized?—A. No, sir; not all of them. Dr. Rogers wrote me a letter about the laws of New Jersey; that he had looked into them, and had a favorable opinion of them, as I did. I examined the laws of New York, Maryland, and Connecticut, I think, and I believe I wrote to a friend in New Hampshire about the laws there. But I found some objections in the way in all of them.

Q. I will read another letter of yours. It says:

"What is Colonel L.'s programme? How does he expect to raise the money? I think your suggestions practical to stock some of our contemplated enterprises and sell enough of the stock to put the others afloat. The telephone is the greatest and easiest method of doing it. If Harry can by any possibility invent any kind of a telephone system that will not be a practical infringement of any existing patent we can start it on a small scale and dictate terms to Gould; for such a purpose I could in in this town before sundown to-day get subscribed $500,000. Everybody is looking to the telephone as the coming means of rapid communication. I am of opinion that we had better incorporate as soon as possible, and if you deem it necessary for that purpose I will come to Washington City by the 1st of September. We will have to go to New Jersey, Connecticut, or New York. I know of no other State where the laws on that subject are broad enough to cover all we want. Has Colonel Looney seen Ewing? I think it important for him to do so. Tell Harry to put his telephone instruments to work. That is the broadest thoroughfare to fortune.

"Your friend,

"CASEY YOUNG."

Q. Do you remember that letter?—A. I do not remember it, but I have no doubt I wrote it; that is what I would have written at that time. I think the word "greatest" is a mistake; that some other word was intended. He thought it was important to organize and so did I. There was no difference of opinion.

Q. You said you knew no other State but Connecticut, New Jersey, and New York broad enough?—A. Perhaps that may have been my opinion at that time. I presume it was, or I should not have written it. I wrote him frequently. I was not preparing legal opinions when I wrote to him, but I think I talked very often about it with him before I went away. I can put in my view of the law if you want it.

Mr. RANNEY. If you deem it proper, I shall not object.

The WITNESS. Here is a fragment of a letter I wrote to General Bradley T. Johnson in reference to the law of this organization, which I have found.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Eden objected before, but I waive it now. If the other members of the committee want your view of the law, I shall not object. They objected to my putting in any view of the law where I deemed it important, as bearing on the motives of your action. Here I do not think it is of any consequence. If the other members of the committee say they want your views on the subject I shall not object.

The CHAIRMAN. If you think it is necessary in order to explain anything you have said, you may do so.

The WITNESS. All I want is to show what I thought of the law at that time after an examination. I will read it or put it in without reading.

Mr. RANNEY. If the members of the committee want it I do not make any objection to it.

The WITNESS. It is a conclusion or an opinion which I seem to have written to General Johnson.

Mr. RANNEY (Examining the paper). This does not seem to be the opinion itself.

The WITNESS. I say it is a fragment I found among my papers.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think a fragment should be put in. If there is an opinion which you wrote and sent to General Johnson, where you have a copy of the opinion you sent to him, and the committee want your views of the law, they may put it in; I don't.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee have not expressed any desire to have his views. I spoke from Colonel Young's standpoint, if he wants it.

The WITNESS. I do not think it affects the inquiry, but I would not like to go out to the country as an incompetent lawyer. These are the conclusions I reached then.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. When did you write that?—A. That was written to General Bradley T. Johnson two years ago. This is a copy made by my clerk day before yesterday.

Q. Did you copy it?—A. No, sir; my clerk copied it. I write so poor a hand that nobody could have read it.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think such a paper as that copied by your clerk, picked out from some papers, is important.

The WITNESS. I should like to give it as my view of the law.

The CHAIRMAN. It makes no difference whether it was copied by yourself or by your clerk, if you know it is correct.

The WITNESS. I know it is a correct copy.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Where did you say the original was?—A. I do not know. I wrote it to General Bradley T. Johnson, and I expect he has it.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. What was that copied from?—A. From some notes of mine.

Q. Where are they?—A. I have them, unless I tore them up. I am not sure whether I did or not.

Q. When did you last see them?—A. Day before yesterday.

Q. Did you compare them with him?—A. I read it to him.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. You dictated it from your notes to him?—A. Yes, sir; and he wrote it out.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not object to the witness's stating from the minutes his view of the law if the committee desires it.

The CHAIRMAN. I beg to remind the gentleman again that the committee has no desire in the matter; it is a matter for the witness. [To the witness:] Do I understand you to say, Colonel Young, that that was a copy of what was sent to General Johnson?

The WITNESS. I found it among my papers the other day when I was looking among them, a pencil copy of mine, of which this is a copy.

The CHAIRMAN. Is that a copy of that which was sent to General Johnson?

The WITNESS. Yes; I wrote to him at the time, and I remember having a conversation with him.

Mr. RANNEY. Inasmuch as when I was inquiring about the views of Colonel Young, his views of the law, as bearing upon the motives and cause of his action, and it was objected to by a member of the committee on the other side, and I yielded to it, and did not call for his views of the law on that subject, on the objection made, I do not think it should be permitted now for him to give the committee and the country his views of the law, as they are immaterial.

The WITNESS. I have already given them, but I want to correct them.

Mr. RANNEY. If there is anything necessary to explain what is stated in the letters which you have put in as to your view of the law, in that view I shall not object.

The WITNESS. Those are the views I entertained at the time about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has stated several times that he does not object, and the witness has been told that he may put that paper in if he desires.

Mr. RANNEY. Very well, let us have it read.

The WITNESS. (Reading :) "From an examination of the foregoing authorities"—

Mr. RANNEY. Are the authorities there?

The WITNESS. No, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. I should like to have the whole of it. If we are to be instructed on points of law I should like to have the authorities. Proceed.

The WITNESS. (Reading :) "From an examination of the foregoing authorities, I have reached the conclusion that the organization of our company and the method we propose to pursue in the issuance of its stock is free from any legal objection.

"Under the original contract of 13th of March, 1883, the Pan-Electric Association or Company acquired the title to all of the Rogers inventions of every character relating to telephony, telegraphy, and all the various uses and purposes to which electricity can be applied as a lighting, heating, motive, or transmitting power.

"This association was composed of J. Harris Rogers, Isham G. Harris, Joseph E. Johnston, J. D. C. Atkins, A. H. Garland, and myself.

"I take it that under the instrument mentioned we became vested with full title to all the inventions above set out, and that we had a right to dispose of them in any way we saw proper, and at such price as we might be able to obtain.

"Subsequently the Pan-Electric Telephone Company was incorporated and organized, whereupon the parties to the original contract and the owners of the patents referred to, made an assignment to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company of all the patented rights which they owned, and in return therefor the company was to issue to them $5,000,000 of its capital stock. I think the procedure thus far has been a legal and proper one, and in exact accordance with the methods adopted for the formation of every company for the development and operation of patented inventions.

"The proportion of stock which was to be issued to each one of the parties was fixed and provided for in the original contract, and I think it perfectly competent for the Pan-Electric Telephone Company to issue and deliver stock in accordance with that stipulation.

"The patents were the consideration given for the capital stock of the company, to be distributed as agreed upon, and I think the original owners had a right to fix any value upon them that they might see proper.

"Of course I have not had time to look so much into the matter in detail as I would be glad to do, but I am satisfied from the examination I have given to it that we need fear no future trouble in respect to the issuance of the stock, as under the laws of Tennessee no part of the capital stock of any incorporated company is required to be paid up."

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. When did you send that letter to General Bradley Johnson?—A. Some two years ago. He spoke to me about it and I told him I had some doubt about the legality of the proceedings.

Mr. RANNEY. I wish you would produce the original of which this is the copy.

The WITNESS. I will try to do it if General Johnson has it.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. You say you have a draft of it?—A. I am not sure whether I have the notes I had; I just dictated from my notes.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. To the organization of what company did that opinion apply?—A. To the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

Q. Which was organized in Tennessee?—A. Yes, sir. General Johnson suggested to me that our organization was not legal.

Q. That was General Johnson, of Maryland, and not General Johnston, of Virginia?—A. It was General Bradley T. Johnson, of Baltimore, the president of this subcompany.

Q. What had he to do with the organization of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company in Washington?—A. We had sold him the right to use our telephone in this District, and he suggested to me the legality of this, and furnished me the authorities.

Q. Had he any interest in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company organized in Tennessee?—A. No, sir; except his right to use it in these different States under this contract with us.

Q. I see by the record—I have been looking at it since I examined you yesterday—that there was the Washington Pan-Electric Telephone Company, which embraced, as I understood, the States of Maryland, Delaware, the District of Columbia, Virginia, and West Virginia; is that right?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And I see there was another company embracing the district of Maryland alone?—
A. That was a subsequent one to General Johnson himself. That was his company. They sublet to a company in Baltimore the right to use the telephone there under the license which we had given to them.

Q. Then this Baltimore company that was limited to the State of Maryland did not derive their rights directly from the parent company, but from the Washington company?—Answer. Yes, sir; that was subsequent.

Q. That was a grandchild?—A. Yes, sir; a sort of a grandchild. I did not baptise or name it.

Q. The Pan-Electric Company then has children and grandchildren?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. Any great-grandchildren yet?—A. I don't know whether any have been born yet, but I think they have got a small one down in West Virginia.

Q. A great-grandchild?—A. Yes, sir; it would be styled that.

Q. And that would go down to the third and fourth generation. I see by the organization of the Washington Telephone Company, which embraced the States named, that you organized that under the laws of Tennessee, instead of the laws of either of the other States?—A. I believe so.

Q. I see that you are one of the corporators?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You said yesterday you were one of the directors, and was paid $50,000 for acting as a director; but I see by the copy of the records of that organization that you were one of the corporators down there in Tennessee?—A. Yes, I was.

Q. And if you were one of the corporators you probably participated in its organization?—A. I do not think I ever was present at any meeting; perhaps I was present at two meetings; the minutes of the company will show what the fact is, and the secretary, who is sitting there behind you, could tell.

Q. I see by looking over your testimony that you say that your combination, contract, or agreement made with Mr. Van Benthuyzen, was made verbally while you were at Pittsburgh?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And subsequently was put in writing at Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that you had made this agreement or combination with Mr. Van Benthuyzen (that is the National Improved Telephone Company represented by him) before Mr. Van Benthuyzen sent his application to the Attorney-General on the 12th of July, 1885, asking for the institution of the Government suit?—A. Yes, sir; but we made no combination.

Q. The agreement for the combination was made verbally in Pittsburgh?—A. It was not an agreement for a combination of the companies except to a certain extent.

Q. But some agreement or other?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Your testimony shows that you said you made an agreement in Pittsburgh, but that it was reduced to writing after you came to Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. So that that agreement which was made at Pittsburgh, and subsequently reduced to writing—I allude to it for identification—was made with Mr. Van Benthuyzen before he and his attorney went to New York and sent on to the Attorney-General the application for him to have the suit instituted in the name of the Government?—A. What is your question?

Q. I am calling your attention to the fact of your having testified that you made a verbal agreement with Mr. Van Benthuyzen, in Pittsburgh, which was before Mr. Van Benthuyzen and his attorney went back to New York, and before you met them again here in Washington.—A. I do not remember exactly what I stated in reference to that, but the facts are these, that we did talk about it. We had not agreed upon any specific terms.

Q. Do you want to change what you have sworn to before, that the agreement with Van Benthuyzen was made in Pittsburgh verbally and put in writing afterwards at Washington?—A. I do not know what my exact language was, and that is what I am asking you about now. I think I stated that we had talks about the matter and had agreed that we would combine forces in fighting these two suits pending.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What two suits do you refer to?—A. The suit we had brought in Memphis against the Bell Company and the suit Mr. Van Benthuyzen brought against them in New Orleans.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I am not asking you about the contents of that contract, but I was referring you to your testimony which you gave before, and which you have never corrected since, as to the agreement which you made with Mr. Van Benthuyzen at Pittsburgh.

The CHAIRMAN. That was verbal, but he can state.

A. That was a verbal agreement.

Q. Do you wish to change it?—A. I do not think I do. I have not looked at it, but when I do, if I find any mistakes I will ask opportunity to make a correction.

Q. I want to be sure of the fact, if it is a fact, that your interview with Mr. Van Benthuyzen at Pittsburgh, was prior to the 12th of July, 1885?—A. Oh, yes, sir.

Q. That is all; I want to be sure of the date.—A. Well, let me look at my book.

Q. Don't make any mistake about the date.—A. Oh, I won't make any mistake. I am not in the habit of making mistakes. [After referring to a book.] Yes, it must have been made previous to the 12th of July, because I find on that date I was on my way home.

Q. I want to know whether in your interview with Attorney-General Garland on the 31st of July, which you have before testified to, where you and Mr. Van Benthuyzen were present, you said anything to Attorney-General Garland then of your having made any verbal agreement?—A. Not a word.

Q. Did you allude to it in connection with the fact that Mr. Van Benthuyzen on the 12th of July had applied to the Attorney-General to bring a suit in behalf of the Government, and the fact that the Attorney-General, on the 14th of July, had referred that application to the Commissioner of Patents?—A. There was not a word said about it.

Q. Did you allude to it in that connection?—A. No, sir; not a word. I have stated everything that occurred at that interview.

Q. Had it anything to do with the withdrawal from the Commissioner of Patents of the letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen to the Attorney-General, dated July 12, 1885, and which on the 14th of July, 1885, had been referred by the Attorney-General to the Commissioner of Patents?—A. No, sir; nothing in the world. I will tell you how it was withdrawn, if you would like to have me.

Q. I tried to ascertain the other day.—A. You would not let me tell it then, but I will tell it now, if you will let me. Mr. Von Briesen, who was Mr. Van Benthuyzen's lawyer, advised him that that was not the proper method to pursue.

Q. In your presence?—A. Yes, sir; in my presence; that if he desired a suit brought in the name of the Government, he should make his application to a local district attorney. Mr. Von Briesen said that he had pursued that course in one or two other cases himself, and afterwards Mr. Von Briesen prepared a bill, which was made the foundation of that bill at the time, as Mr. Van Benthuyzen's lawyer, and that was the reason why it was withdrawn.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you any knowledge of the consent which was alleged to have been given by the Attorney-General to the withdrawal of that letter?—A. No, sir; I did not know it had been given until I saw the indorsement there.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You said you knew all about it. I want to know who had to do with the getting of the Attorney-General's consent to the withdrawal of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter?—A. I have told you all I know on the subject. If there is anything more I will tell you, but I think that is all there is about it.

Q. Who got the Attorney-General to consent to the withdrawal of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's letter from the office of the Commissioner of Patents?—A. Mr. Van Benthuyzen says that he did. I do not know. I did not hear it mentioned.

Q. You do not know what reason was given for it?—A. I know what reason was given by Mr. Van Benthuyzen, that his lawyer, Mr. Von Briesen advised him to do it, upon the ground that that was a proper method to secure a suit brought by the Government; that he himself had had some practice in it, and had brought two or three suits and that the method was to make the application to the local district attorney; and I say from an examination of the authorities I think that was proper.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. In this conversation between Mr. Van Benthuyzen and Mr. Von Briesen as to withdrawing that letter, was anything said about getting the consent of the Attorney-General to the withdrawal?—A. I do not think there was. I do not remember there was.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Let us look at that, it may refresh your recollection. You say Mr. Van Benthuyzen on his own account had sent to the Attorney-General a communication dated July 12, 1885, asking for the bringing of a Government suit. No reference was made whatever to the Pan-Electric Company, nothing disclosed in it that it was made in behalf of anybody connected with or interested in the Pan-Electric Company, or on the part of any one who had already entered a combination of interests, and you see that the Attorney-General, notwithstanding his interest in the Pan-Electric Company, on the 14th of July, had entertained that application so far as to refer it to the Commissioner of Patents or the Secretary of the Interior for information on the subject; he had entertained it. Now, was not the reason why the Attorney-General consented to that being withdrawn this, that he had found out that Mr. Van Benthuyzen and the Pan-Electric Company were in combination?—A. No, sir; I am very sure he never heard of it.

Q. You are sure it was concealed from him all the time?—A. Yes, sir; it was concealed from him as it was from you. He had nothing to do with it.

Mr. HALL. Can the witness testify to any information of that kind, unless it came verbally by communication from the Attorney-General?

Q. You knew this fact: that if the Attorney-General had scruples against authorizing proceedings against the Bell Company in behalf of a company in which he had a direct interest, and if a communication had come to him from Mr. Van Benthuyzen, apparently from a party outside of his interests, and he had acted upon it so far as to refer it, according to the practice, to the Secretary of the Interior or Commissioner of Patents for information on the subject, and he had acted upon it in ignorance of the fact that Mr. Van Benthuyzen and you had made an agreement at Pittsburgh, that he would have stopped the action here taken, and withdrawn the matter?—A. That is a matter of opinion.

Q. Was not that discussed?—A. No, sir; I do not think he ought to have sent it there.

Q. You say you do not think that was true because you do not think you and Van Benthuyzen had made any combination. You are sure you did not tell him of that?—A. I am sure I did.

Q. And Mr. Van Benthuyzen did not in your presence?—A. No, sir; he did not in my presence; I have a distinct recollection.

Q. Can you conceive of any reason, from what was said and done, why Mr. Garland should have consented to have that letter withdrawn from the Secretary of the Interior?—A. There was nothing said to the Attorney-General in my presence on that subject one way or another. The only thing I ever heard in regard to it was in the conversation at my room between myself, Mr. Von Briesen, Colonel Gantt, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Q. You cannot think of anything that was said other than you have stated which would have led to that? There is no fact in your knowledge which would enable you to say what the reason was?—A. Certainly there is. I have just told you—

Q. I say other than you have stated.—A. No, sir; I do not think he ought to have sent it there in the first place.

Q. I want to know if there was any talk among you that the House bill which had gone to the Senate had been stolen from the Senate?—A. No, sir; not at that time. I never heard that until afterwards.

Q. I see on the record of the case that Mr. Van Benthuyzen put it in that the bill that went from the House to the Senate had been stolen from the Senate.—A. That was put in on the 23d of October.

Q. What was that put in for?—A. You will have to ask him. He thought it had been, and I think very likely it was.

Q. A bill that had gone from the House to the Senate stolen?—A. I think it was, and a good many things done in connection with the Bell Telephone Company lead me to think so. I do not say that anybody did it.

Q. You are acquainted with legislation. Can you conceive it possible that a bill which had gone from the House to the Senate had been stolen from the committee?—A. Yes, sir. I knew while I was in Congress of one being stolen while it was being recorded.

Q. Don't you know they are all printed and could be replaced?—A. Yes; you could replace the bill, but you could not replace the exhibits, and those were the things that were stolen.

Q. Did you go to Senator Platt, chairman of the committee in the Senate which had that bill, to see whether it had been stolen or not?—A. No, sir; I saw in the newspapers that Senator Platt said he intended to investigate the matter and have it explained.

Q. Did you find that the Senate committee, of which Senator Platt was chairman, never reported that bill?—A. I do not know; I did not examine that matter.

Mr. EDEN. I do not think it is proper for us to inquire into that matter, whether the bill was stolen or not.

Mr. RANNEY. I want to find out what the truth is. It would seem from the record that that letter of Mr. Van Benthuyzen's was withdrawn and another substituted for some reason. Now, if Mr. Van Benthuyzen puts on it a reason which is a false one, it might be that it was done to conceal the real one. I think that is legitimate.

The WITNESS. He says exactly what I say about it.

Mr. RANNEY. I will read what I find on the fourth page of this record of the Department. It says:

NEW ORLEANS, October 23, 1885.

Finding that the law referred to in the writer's letter to General Garland had not been adopted, and being informed that the bill had been stolen from the Senate, after being adopted by the House of Representatives, and being advised by my attorney to pursue another course, consent to withdraw the letter was obtained, and the letter was withdrawn by A. Van Briesen, esq., my attorney.

W. VAN BENTHUYSEN.

The WITNESS. That was written on the 23d of October.

Mr. RANNEY. I so read it the other day. It is part of the indorsement put on the papers in the Interior Department, and is in the book which I have put in. Now the subject of my inquiry is, if Mr. Van Benthuyesen gave a false reason for the withdrawal of that letter, the fair inference is that it was done to cover up the real reason.

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a question.

The WITNESS. I do not think so. When he comes here you can put that question to him.

Mr. RANNEY. I say if that is the reason, I want to inquire into it. Every fact or circumstance connected with the bringing of that suit is embraced within our inquiry.

Mr. HALL. You draw the inference yourself.

Mr. RANNEY. I am not drawing any inferences.

Mr. HALL. If I understood the question you put, it assumes to draw an inference.

Mr. RANNEY (to the witness). When you examined the matter did you find that it had been stolen or was missing?—A. I never went to the Senate to see about it at all.

Q. Did you look to see whether the bill was actually reported upon by the committee at all?—A. I never made any examination of the Senate records.

Q. Did you inform Mr. Van Benthuyesen that it was stolen?—A. No, sir; I do not say it was stolen.

Mr. EDEN. This indorsement you are speaking of seems to have been made by Mr. Van Benthuyesen, and not by anybody in the Interior Department at all. The paper was withdrawn July 21, 1885, and this indorsement was made October 23. It seems not to have been an indorsement made by the Interior Department at all.

Mr. RANNEY. You will find in the record that it is a part of the indorsement.

Mr. EDEN. The paper was withdrawn from there August 21, 1885, it appears.

Mr. RANNEY. You have forgotten what Colonel Young says, that although it was marked as withdrawn, still the paper was yet there and never actually taken away.

Mr. EDEN. This does not purport to be an indorsement made by the Interior Department, but by Mr. Van Benthuyesen.

Mr. RANNEY. That, as I understand, is indorsed on the paper.

The WITNESS. It is indorsed in his handwriting.

Mr. RANNEY. It was a withdrawal. You mean by a withdrawal that it had been taken off the files, but I understand from Colonel Young that although it was withdrawn the paper still remained there.

The WITNESS. I saw it there afterwards.

Mr. EDEN. This indorsement is signed by Mr. Van Benthuyesen, and not by anybody in the Interior Department at all. It is dated New Orleans, October 23, 1885.

Mr. RANNEY. As I understand from the record, a certified copy of the record, it is under the head of an indorsement.

The WITNESS. I think I can explain how it was.

Mr. RANNEY. You have forgotten what Colonel Young said; that it never had been withdrawn from the files, for he saw it there afterwards.

The WITNESS. I never saw that letter until I came here to argue the case before the Secretary of the Interior, and then I saw the original of that letter there with that indorsement on in Mr. Van Benthuyesen's handwriting.

The CHAIRMAN. This is an indorsement on the letter.

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; an indorsement on the letter made by Mr. Van Benthuyesen in his own handwriting. I found it there. I do not know how it got back.

Mr. RANNEY. So we have it; it is on there.

The WITNESS. Yes, I think it is there now.

Mr. RANNEY. It would seem, then, that after July 31, 1885, when it had written on it "withdrawn" by the consent of the Attorney-General, that for some reason, as late as October 23, Mr. Van Benthuyesen goes there and puts that indorsement on it.

The WITNESS. I expect he had it in his possession at New Orleans. I guess he withdrew it and returned it; I do not know, but I found it back there.

Q. Why should he at that late day put this indorsement on it?—A. When he comes you can ask him; I do not know.

Q. You saw it and was counsel in discussing it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know any reason why you should have him put that indorsement on it at that late day?—A. I do not know of any. I do not think it occurred to me at all.

Q. Do you know of any other reason than that he wanted either a true indorsement or false one, one or the other?—A. I do not admit it was false; you can ask him; I do not undertake to judge about that; that is for him.

Q. That was referred to Mr. Montgomery. He was the new Commissioner of Patents, was he not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You acted in that suit. Are you aware that he declined to sit with Secretary Lamar in that case?—A. He did sit with him.

Q. And act with him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. I have seen somewhere in the papers that he declined to act because he had a friend who owned stock?—A. That was the other Montgomery. M. V. Montgomery is the Commissioner of Patents, and Zach. Montgomery is the Assistant Attorney-General.

Q. He declined to sit?—A. I heard so.

Q. On the ground that he had a friend who was interested in the stock?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know who the friend was?—A. No, I do not know anything about it at all; I have no acquaintance with him; I never saw him until I saw him there.

Q. You said yesterday that you signed that agreement or combination between the National Improved Company and the Pan-Electric Company in behalf of your company; is it not true that Senator Harris signed it?—A. No, sir; I think I signed it; I feel quite sure I signed it, but I am not certain that he did. When it comes here it will show.

Q. I see on inquiry that Senator Harris says that he signed it on behalf of the company.—A. Well, if he says so I expect it is true. I feel pretty certain, though, that I signed it.

Q. Have you looked for that paper?—A. Yes, sir; I have. Here is a telegram—

Q. Have you looked for that paper you had?—A. Oh, yes; and I can't find it.

Q. I see by looking at your testimony you testified that you had a telegram which said the agreement had been sent by mail, and you testified it would be here the next day. Have you received that agreement by mail?—A. No, sir; I told you the other day how that was. Your question the other day implied that you thought somebody was trying to cover up something about those telegrams. I had torn up Mr. Van Benthuyzen's answer, I think, at least I could not find it, and this morning I went to the telegraph office to get my telegram and to get his answer, and they required me to make a written application. I didn't have time to write it then, and I have written it since. I will read it to the committee.

Q. What did you find there?—A. I didn't find anything, because they wouldn't give it to me unless I made a written application, and I didn't have time to write it there. I have written it since I have been sitting here.

Q. They do not destroy telegrams so soon, do they?—A. Oh, I will have it this evening.

Q. Your original telegram for the paper would be at the telegraph office?—A. Oh, yes; I will have it this evening.

Q. You did telegraph for the paper?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. An so your original telegram is there?—A. I presume so; I have written the company to ascertain. I will read the application to the committee.

Q. One moment. The original telegram which you sent for the paper is at the office?—A. I presume so.

Q. Have you looked for it?—A. I just told you I went there this morning to get it and they wouldn't give it to me without a written application, and I have made the written application and am going to hand it to them when I go down there; they would not give it to me without.

Mr. RANNEY. When you make the written application we will inquire further.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. What have you in your hand?—A. I have the written application in my hand.

Mr. HANBACK. He has not yet delivered the application.

The WITNESS. I showed it to Mr. Ranney this morning. I will read it:

"DEAR SIR: Some days since I sent a telegram——"

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You are now about to read an application which you have drawn since you came here to-day?—A. I am. I have just told you I went there this morning and made a verbal application at the office, and they told me they couldn't give it to me unless I made a written application, and I didn't have the time to write it out then.

Q. This is an application which you have written to be made, but which you have not made?—A. It is one I am going to hand them when I go down there. I did not have time to write it when I was there. I showed it to you this morning.

Q. I understand; and that is why I say you have now prepared a written application, which you have not delivered, and we had better wait until it is delivered.—A. I will hand it to them. Here is a telegram from Mr. Van Benthuyzen which I will read. I have just got it:

"Have determined to carry all papers and documents with me when I start for Washington——"

Q. Is that telegram addressed to you?—A. It is addressed to Mr. Seixas, his partner, sitting right here [indicating Mr. Seixas].

Q. Do you know whether it is the original telegram?—A. Oh, I don't know. He just handed it to me.

Q. It is not one you received?—A. Oh, no; I have received none from him.

Q. It is not a telegram you received yourself?—A. No, no.

Q. Did you receive a telegram that, as you testified the other day, the agreement was on its way, and was being sent by mail?—A. Yes, sir; and I stated I inferred it was on its way.

Q. Where is that telegram?—A. I just told you I have made written application for it in this paper. If you will allow me to read the paper, you will understand it.

Q. Did you state that you had a telegram that the agreement was on its way?—A. I think I did state that the agreement was on its way. The telegram was about to this effect:

"Your telegram too late to mail this evening. Will mail to-morrow."

Next came a letter to Mr. Seixas, in which he seemed to misunderstand what it was about; but it will all be explained when he gets here.

Q. Now we understand it. The telegram which you referred to a moment ago was addressed to whom?—A. To Mr. H. O. Seixas. Here he sits [indicating Mr. Seixas]. He is Mr. Van Benthuyzen's partner.

Q. I don't object to your reading it. Please read it.—A. It has just now come. He just handed it to me. It reads:

"Have determined to carry all papers and documents with me when I start for Washington, instead of sending them by mail. Show this to Colonel Young."

He will be here with all the papers connected with the matter.

Q. Let me see the original telegram.—A. Here it is. [Hands telegram to Mr. Ranney.]

This is a telegram purporting to have been received March 25, which was yesterday?—A. I guess it came when it purports to have come. Mr. Seixas told me about it yesterday.

Q. The telegram you had originally was received last week. If I remember right you spoke of it on your examination last Friday?—A. Yes, sir. That was in answer to a letter Mr. Seixas wrote Mr. Van Benthuyzen.

Q. You were then expecting to receive the paper by mail. Was not this telegram sent in answer to a new telegram sent to Mr. Van Benthuyzen since then?—A. I think it was in answer to a letter. Mr. Seixas wrote him a letter. I told him to do it. You will have every contract, every paper, every agreement ever made between those companies; every paper that was ever made.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS. I wish to say to the committee that the stenographer requested me to look over the proof of my testimony, and that I have made notes on the margin of some trifling errors and returned the proof to him. I want the committee to know I have done this.

Mr. RANNEY. When you come before the committee, after the examination of Colonel Young, you can state what the corrections are.

Dr. ROGERS. I have given the proof to him. I want the committee to know I have done it.

Mr. RANNEY. You had better call the attention of the committee to the matter hereafter.

Q. You said you brought a letter here to be carried to the President in case you could not get the Attorney-General to institute the suit?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was that letter signed by any one?—A. I think it was signed, or was to be signed, by Mr. Huntington. I am not sure whether it was signed or not. I think I wrote the manuscript in Jackson.

Q. Can you tell us who signed it?—A. I don't remember whether it was signed at all or not. I wrote it after a conference with Mr. Van Benthuyzen and all the gentlemen. We talked it over with the lawyers, Colonel Gantt and Mr. Beckwith.

Q. What is your best recollection as to whether or not it was signed?—A. My recollection is it was not signed, because at the time it was written—

Q. Do you tell this committee that you brought to Washington a letter to be delivered to the President in order to get this suit brought if the Attorney-General did not consent to it, and that that letter was not signed?—A. All I am telling you—

Q. Were you going to deliver an unsigned letter to the President?—A. Oh, no. All I am telling is told to this committee. You need not ask if I am telling the committee anything. What I am telling I am telling to the committee; and I tell the committee I did write a letter on consultation with Mr. Van Benthuyzen; and the reason it was not signed is, I think, that I was not sure who would come. Mr. Huntington and I persuaded Mr. Van Benthuyzen not to come, for the reason which I gave yesterday.

Q. You came to Washington with a letter not signed by anybody, to be presented to the President. Were you going to present to the President an unsigned letter?—A. Oh, no; I would not have done that. Somebody would have signed it.

Q. Who was going to sign it?—A. I think Mr. Huntington; or perhaps I would have signed it myself. I reckon he would have signed it, because I proposed to do the talking.

Q. Was he here?—A. Yes, sir; he came with me. I think I should have had him sign it, and I should have done the talking myself. That was what I intended to do.

Q. You did not present it because Goode granted the application?—A. It was not necessary to present it.

Q. Dr. Rogers testified to certain meetings you had in the Judiciary Committee room; did you not have meetings in the Judiciary Committee room after May 24, 1885?—

A. If there was a meeting at the Judiciary Committee room I never heard of it, except that I went there and talked to Senator Garland, long before that time.

Q. Did you never report to the directors the fact that you had made a written agreement and signed it on behalf of the company—either you or Mr. Harris or both—with the National Improved Company?—A. I think I told every one of them of it; I don't know that I ever announced it at a meeting of the directors, because there has been none until—

Q. Did you announce it at a meeting of the directors?—A. There has been no meeting of the directors, except one, since that time; there were some informal meetings but no regular meeting, as appears by the minutes. I think I stated it at the last meeting we had; I am sure I told them all; I never kept it secret.

Q. Did you report it to Mr. Garland?—A. Oh, no; I never spoke to him about it.

Q. He was one of the directors, was he not?—A. Yes, sir; but since he has been Attorney-General I have never spoken to him about telephone matters but once.

Q. He has never resigned?—A. No, sir; no formal resignation.

Q. He was appointed attorney and was chosen a director, and is to-day?—A. Yes, sir; there has been no change at all.

Q. And you reported it to every other director of the company and did not report it to him?—A. There was no meeting of the board of directors, as I told you.

Q. You reported it to them individually, did you?—A. I am not sure; I think I did.

Q. Why did you report it to every other director and not to Mr. Garland?—A. I never spoke to Mr. Garland about it since he has been Attorney-General.

Q. Why?—A. I will tell you the reason, if you will allow me to do so. I did not desire to talk to him at all about this matter after he was Attorney-General, and never did.

Q. How many directors were there?—A. I believe there were seven.

Q. And he was one of them.—A. He was one of them.

Q. If you were reporting it individually to the other directors, and he was both your attorney and a director, why did you not report it to him?—A. I have just stated to you why I did not do it.

Q. I would like to have you tell me once more. I do not know as I understand you.—A. In the first place I never saw him to tell it to him, and if I had I don't think I should have done it, because I never talked to him about it after he became Attorney-General. I never mentioned it to him at all.

Q. You do say you saw him on the 31st of July?—A. But I did not mention it to him then.

Q. If you saw him then it is not true that you had not seen him?—A. It had not been signed then.

Q. You did see him?—A. I saw him on the 31st of July, or the 30th, but he never attended any meeting after he became Attorney-General, and only two before, I think.

Q. You made a verbal agreement at Pittsburgh, and on the 31st of July it had not been reduced to writing or signed?—A. No, sir.

Q. Do you know of any reason why you should not, before you reduced it to writing formally, and signed it on behalf of the company, have communicated the fact and advised with all the directors of your company?—A. No; there was no reason why I should not if there had been a meeting. I don't know but I did advise with all of them. I think I mentioned it to the most of them I saw.

Q. Do you know of any reason why you should have mentioned it to the others and not to Mr. Garland?—A. Yes, sir; I do.

Q. Why?—A. Because I never saw him.

Q. Did you not see him on the 31st of July?—A. It was not signed then.

Q. Could you not have written to him?—A. Oh, yes; but I never did. I could have written him and I could have gone and seen him, but I didn't do it.

Q. You have no reason to state why you did not communicate to him the fact that you had made this verbal agreement and subsequently reduced it to writing and signed it on behalf of the company?—A. I have a reason, and I gave it to you awhile ago. It was because I had never seen him. You assume I had no reason; but I have a reason.

Q. Is that the only reason?—A. That is one of the reasons. Perhaps I never thought about it.

Q. You do not now mean to deny that you did see him on the 31st of July?—A. Oh, I don't mean to deny anything that is a fact. Don't you make any mistake about that.

Mr. EDEN. He has stated it repeatedly.

The WITNESS (Mr. Young). Yes; and I will keep on stating it as long as he wants to hear it.

Q. Do you know of any reason why you should not have written him?—A. None in the world. I could have written every day, if I had wanted to.

Q. Why did you not do so?—A. Because I saw no occasion for it; no necessity for it. I did not feel any necessity for communicating with him at all.

Q. Was there any necessity for communication with the other directors?—A. None in the world; I would have done it without consulting any of them.

Q. Had you full power to act?—A. There was no express power conferred on me, but the control of this matter drifted into my hands, not because of anything I did, but the balance of them were engaged, and so the whole control of it drifted into my hands.

Q. I see in a letter of General Johnston's that has been referred to he speaks about not issuing stock, because if the enterprise fails you might all be declared swindlers.—A. I have seen the letter; the old man did have some opinion of that sort.

Mr. RANNEY. I will put that letter in here and read it:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 23, 1883.

DEAR SIR: Your note of the 21st was received yesterday afternoon, and I saw Mr. J. Harris Rogers immediately in regard to its contents, as officially I can communicate with no one but him in regard to the stock which is borne on the company's records as his.

I reminded him that the sale of stock is not permitted by the company, and also that such sales, even if not prohibited, would be very dangerous. For if the enterprise should not succeed, all concerned in them would be considered by the public as swindlers. I mean all concerned, all of us.

Most respectfully, yours truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS.

The WITNESS. I would suggest if General Johnston's letter is put in he ought to have an opportunity to explain it. I am glad he wrote that letter, and I have no doubt he is, too. I think he ought to be here to explain it.

Mr. RANNEY. It does not require any explanation or comment. I put it in now as a basis for making a few inquiries of you in relation to it.

The WITNESS. If you want to ask me about it, it is all right.

Q. You have complained about the sale of stock by Dr. Rogers after that?

The WITNESS. When did I complain?

Mr. RANNEY. I understood you to say in your testimony that he was selling stock, and you put a stop to it by a vote of the directors.

The WITNESS. I did not make any complaint that I know of. I have not seen any letter in which I made complaint.

Q. You have made no complaint about it?—A. I do not complain. He thought it was right, I have no doubt. It was a difference of opinion between me and Dr. Rogers. I did not think he sold any stock corruptly or improperly.

Q. Mr. Garland, as attorney, had examined these patent rights, had he not?—A. I think he had; yes, sir. He wrote an opinion about them.

Q. He gave two opinions, I think?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANNEY. Are those opinions published with the letters?

Mr. HANBACK. No, sir; we did not have them.

The WITNESS. You will find them among some of the papers. He did give the opinion, I know.

Mr. MILLARD. The opinion was printed by the Pennsylvania Company.

Q. I will call your attention, now, to the following letter from Isham G. Harris:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., June 14, 1884.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your note of this day, I have to say that I have used the Pan-Electric telephone in my room for some time, and think it is vastly superior to any telephone that I have ever seen.

And upon a somewhat careful examination, my opinion is that it does not infringe the Bell or any other patent.

Respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

General J. W. DENVER.

Did you know of that opinion?—A. I don't know as I ever saw it before. Perhaps I did. I don't know.

Q. Senator Harris, I believe, is well known as a lawyer?—A. Yes, sir; and a very good one, too.

Q. So that you had Senator Harris's opinion as a lawyer?—A. It seems he gave this opinion. I don't know that I ever saw it before.

Q. And you had Mr. Garland's opinion as a lawyer?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had your own?—A. I had my own.

Q. After your examination were you satisfied there was no infringement?—A. No. I was satisfied there was no infringement so far as the broad claim was concerned. Perhaps I should hardly say "infringement," but I was satisfied the broad claim could not be maintained; and I based my opinion as to the mechanical structure not infringing upon Mr. Harris Rogers's opinion and Mr. Marble's opinion. I was not as competent to determine that question as they were.

Q. So far as you were competent to determine the question you did not see any infringement of the Bell telephone, did you?—A. Oh, I could not tell at the time. I did not look at it to see.

Q. You relied on Mr. Garland and Mr. Harris?—A. No; I did not rely on either of them in that respect. I relied on what Harris Rogers said and what Mr. Marble said.

Mr. RANNEY. I find in the Maryland case the opinion of Mr. Garland, and if there is no objection I will put it in the record in this connection, with the letter from Mr. Myers, which called it forth. I will read both letters.

NATIONAL HOTEL, Washington, D. C., January 4, 1884.

DEAR SIR: My attention has been called to the stock of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company as an investment. I therefore desire your opinion as to whether the telephone owned by said company, or any part of it, is an infringement on what is known as the Bell telephone.

Respectfully,

D. E. MYERS.

Hon. A. H. GARLAND.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 5, 1884.

DEAR SIR: In reply to your question propounded in the note hereto attached, I beg to say I have given the subject referred to much attention, and have closely examined several opinions delivered by different courts in controversies between the Bell Telephone Company, Dolbear, Spencer Ghegan, and others, and I am clearly of opinion that the Pan-Electric named by you in no wise infringes the Bell Telephone. From the earliest decisions of our courts to the present, although inventions may in their general principles be alike, yet, if in their operation and working there is an essential or material difference, there is no conflict to amount to an infringement. This is recognized in the historic case of O'Reilly v. Morse, 15 How., U. S. Reps., 62, and in numerous decisions since that; but more clearly and with more direct application to the matter now in hand in Clough v. Manufacturing Co., 106 U. S. Reps., 178 (October term United States Supreme Court, 1882).

Without attempting any minute detail touching the inventions in question, I am satisfied—thoroughly so—that the difference between them is wider and more distinct than that recognized by the court in the case 106 U. S. Reps., sup.

The courts held that a "substantial departure" from a former invention is patentable without infringing. (Duff v. Sterling Pump Co., 127, U. S. Reps., 636.)

This, in my judgment, is more than enough to insure the Pan-Electric Telephone from any charge of infringement of the Bell Telephone.

Very truly, &c.,

A. H. GARLAND.

D. E. MYERS, Esq.,
National Hotel, City.

Mr. HALL. I want to say to the committee that in using the word "counsel," as applicable to Judge Ranney, that I did so entirely by inadvertence. You will all appreciate the fact that men sometimes misuse words in their remarks.

Mr. RANNEY. You withdrew it at the time. I am willing it should be stricken out of the record.

Mr. HALL. I did not design to apply the word to Mr. Ranney. It was a mere inadvertence.

Mr. RANNEY. I so understood it, and did not take any offense at it.
(To the witness:)

Q. I want now to inquire if the Bell Telephone Company and your Pan-Electric Company were not the main competitors in this fight?—A. They were two of them. There were other competitors.

Q. Were you threatened with proceedings and attack in the courts by anybody but the Bell Telephone Company?—A. No, sir; we were threatened with an attack once, which was never made.

Q. I speak of an attack in the courts.—A. No, sir.

Q. Before this Government suit, your Pan-Electric Company had been attacked in how many suits, and where?—A. Do you mean before the inquiry here?

Q. Before the Government suit was brought.—A. There was a bill filed against one of our local companies, to which we were made a party, in Philadelphia, and one filed in Baltimore of the same sort, both of which were dismissed as to us.

Q. And one in Pittsburgh?—A. Oh, no; we had nothing to do with that. That was the National Improved Company. I just happened to go there.

Mr. OATES (referring to the incorporation into the record of the opinion of Mr. Garland). Mr. Chairman, I object to Mr. Ranney's method of producing testimony. I have no objection to his asking any question about it, but I do not want it to appear right in the midst of the testimony of a witness. It seems to me it will make rather an awkward appearance in the record, and that it ought to appear after the testimony. I have no objection to the witness being asked anything about it.

Mr. RANNEY. It is made the basis of my inquiries, and so I think it should go in in connection with the testimony of the witness, so that when any one reads the testimony he can read the opinion right in connection with it, without turning over forty or fifty pages to find it. By my method the opinion is brought into juxtaposition with the testimony of the witness on the subject.

Mr. OATES. If you were to look for it, unless you had an index, you would never find it. You would only find Mr. Young's testimony referred to.

Mr. RANNEY. I will put it in again, if you want me to.

Mr. OATES. I do not care to have the record encumbered by its reproduction. I do not object to its going in, either.

Mr. RANNEY. It has all gone in.

Mr. EDEN. The only objection is as to its order. In law suits when a paper is produced it is identified, and then after the witness gets through the paper is offered.

Mr. RANNEY. That is a matter within the discretion of the examiner who puts it in at the time it is produced if it is proper.

Mr. EDEN. I have stated the rule in every court where I have practiced. I have never practiced in New England.

The CHAIRMAN. The course suggested by Mr. Eden would be followed, perhaps, where the authenticity of the paper was in question; for thus the counsel upon the other side would have an opportunity for cross-examination; but here the paper is admitted to be correct; at least, there is no question raised about it.

Mr. OATES. I have no objection to the introduction of the paper. It is only a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That is a matter for the gentleman conducting the examination, it seems to me.

Q. Right in that connection; your associates, so far as you knew, never had any doubt about the validity of your patents, and that there was no infringement, I take it. You said you were anxious to meet in the fight.

The WITNESS. Do you ask if we ever had any doubt on the question of infringement.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. Well, I cannot say that we had no doubt. We did not regard it as a question settled. We thought it was open to controversy.

Q. You knew you had the opinion of Mr. Garland and Mr. Harris, lawyers in whom you had confidence, that there was no infringement?—A. I did not have any such opinion.

Q. Did you not know of this opinion of Garland?—A. Yes. He did not give any such opinion that I know of. He gave an opinion that the broad claim of Bell could not be sustained, but that was only the fifth claim of his patent. He gave no opinion as to the mechanical appliances that I know of.

Q. I thought you said you had looked the law up and you were anxious to meet and have the fight?—A. Yes, sir; I was.

Q. Against the Bell Telephone Company, who claimed infringement?—A. Yes, sir; I wanted to settle it, and if we were infringing then I wanted to quit and surrender the field to them.

Q. Was it your opinion that you were infringing?—A. No; it was not my opinion we were infringing, or I would not have made the contest. If I had thought the question was settled against us I should have withdrawn. I thought it was like all legal questions, open to some doubt, and for the courts to decide.

Q. You knew that these suits, the one brought against the Rogers Company in Pennsylvania and the one brought in Maryland, would determine that question, did you not?—A. No; I did not.

Q. They involved it, did they not?—A. They involved the question of two of his patents. I think it is possible we might have put all the questions in issue in that suit that we could put in any private suit. There are certain questions connected with patents that cannot be inquired into, as I hold, in any private suit.

Q. I am speaking of the question of infringement; that question could have been settled in the Pennsylvania suit and the Baltimore suit, could it not?—A. I think it could have been determined in those suits.

Q. In your opinion could it be determined also in the suit which the Pan-Electric Company brought against the Bell Telephone Company in Tennessee?—A. Yes; I think it could, if that suit could be maintained. Since that bill was filed I have entertained a little doubt about whether we could maintain exactly that form of action for legal reasons that I will give the committee, if desired. I do not say it is so, but I have some doubt about it, now you have raised the question.

Q. If the Bell telephone controversy with you was settled against the Bell telephone it would make your patents very valuable, would it not?—A. Oh, if it was settled in a private suit between us—

Q. It was the great object of the parent Pan-Electric Company and the subordinate companies to get the Bell telephone patents annulled or vacated, was it not?—A. We did not care so much about that; if we could get the Bell patents so construed as not to interfere with our patents, we would have been content to let them alone.

Q. It was a vital matter with you, was it not, to have the validity of the Bell telephone patents determined?—A. And the validity of our own; of course it was. Our patents would have been of no value if they had been held by the courts to infringe the Bell patents; or if the courts were to hold that the broad generic claim of Bell covered the whole art of telephony of course no patent would be worth anything; and if it was held that our mechanical structure infringed his in every part, it would have been of no value then.

Q. Was your object in trying to get the Government suit instituted an object growing out of your own interest or the interest of your own company; or was it for the public good, independent of private interests?—A. My primary object was to benefit myself. I am a patriot, but I wanted to benefit myself along with the public.

Q. You considered it a very essential matter to get the Government to proceed against the Bell Company, did you not?—A. Yes, sir, I did; because there were questions that I did not think could be presented in any private suit that were material to be determined.

Q. It would save you a good deal of expense, would it not?—A. No, sir; I did not intend to save anything. My object was to have the Government bring the suit and let us pay the expenses, as you will see before you get through.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. The Tennessee suit was brought on condition that the Government should be at no expense, was it not?—A. To be at no expense as to counsel. We never expected the Government to pay any part of the expense.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. In other words, you wanted to use the Government's name, but to fight your own suit at your own expense?—A. We simply wanted to use the name of the Government at our relation. That was what I wanted.

Q. You wanted to have the Government lend its name, and its name only, while you bore the expense and fought the lawsuit?—A. That was all.

Q. For your own interest?—A. That was all the purpose I had in the world.

Q. For your private interest?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And not for the public good?—A. Oh no; I am not fighting for the public good especially, in that lawsuit. The way it is now I think it will be very apt to benefit the public, for it is likely the whole thing will be thrown open to competition if the Government wins the suit.

Q. Do you think it would be an important thing for the public to break down one corporation and build up another?—A. No, sir; not another monopoly. I think it is important for the Government to break down all monopolies that are oppressive to the people. I am not sitting in judgment, but that is my impression.

Q. Do you think it would be important for the Government to break down your monopoly too?—A. If we had one.

Q. I mean by monopoly the exclusive right to use and sell those patents of the Rogers' which you control.—A. If we did have the exclusive right to use those patents, and it became an oppressive monopoly, I should think it would be the duty of the Government to pursue that course, though I do not know that I would ask them to do it.

Q. You would not call it a monopoly if you only used the rights which the law gave you, would you?—A. The law says it is a monopoly, and I will not undertake to say the law designates it incorrectly. The law calls all patents monopolies.

Q. But the law gives the monopoly?—A. To be sure.

Q. You had been negotiating with the Bell Company a good deal, had you not, some time previously?—A. I never did myself, personally.

Q. Your company negotiated?—A. Yes, sir; there was some negotiation between them, but I had nothing personally to do with it.

Q. Your company were doing it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In one of your letters I see something said about striking somebody?—A. That was in connection with Jay Gould. That is one of the offenses my friends of the New York Tribune were so shocked about. I did not care particularly about striking him. I don't know as I would have hurt him very much if I had.

Q. You were willing to strike him?—A. I don't know that I was. He was a pretty hard man to strike. We had enough to strike without striking Gould. The Bell Telephone Company was enough for us without Gould.

Q. If I recollect aright you read, early in your testimony, in the record of the very first meeting of your Pan-Electric Company, a resolution about conferring with the Bell Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you said you had not found out at that time that they controlled everybody?—A. No; I had not found out at that time that they were quite so strong as they have proven now, and this investigation is one of the evidences of it.

Q. How soon did you find it out?—A. Wait until I answer your question, and then ask me another. At the time that resolution was passed I never dreamed we were infringing the Bell patents. If I had thought we were I would have had nothing to do with it. We never dreamed we were doing so. We thought we had a very superior instrument, and we thought perhaps they would be glad to buy it. I did not know as much about it then as I do now.

Q. How soon after the passage of that resolution did you find it out?—A. That was in January. Mr. Vail, probably a month or two after that time, wrote a letter to Senator Harris in reply to one perhaps he had written to him, in reference.—

Q. Have you got that letter?—A. No. Let me get through. That letter was shown to me. Mr. Vail cited a number of cases which had been decided in favor of the Bell Telephone Company. I was not acquainted with those cases then. I had not looked into them; I had been practicing in a country where there never was a patent suit, and had no occasion to look up the law; but when I got that letter I did examine the authorities referred to, and then I became satisfied there would be a contest.

Q. Can you give the date of that letter?—A. No; I cannot. I expect Senator Harris has it perhaps.

Q. This was two or three months after the organization of your company?—A. I think so.

Q. Will you turn to your records and see if you do not find subsequent to that time another resolution passed in regard to the Bell Telephone Company? A.—I think probably there was. Have you seen it on the book?

Q. Yes; it appears on the book. A.—I don't recollect it.

Q. Look at the first meeting. A.—I remember the first meeting.

Q. On that same subject, on page 18 of the appendix, I see a letter from Mr. R. F. Looney, which I will read:

MEMPHIS, TENN., August 3, 1885.

MY DEAR FRIEND: It has been over a month since I heard from you. What is the matter? I wrote you last at Bladensburg, which I suppose you have not received.

Well, I have no news worth writing. Harris, Young, and Gantt are at Washington, I suppose, on telephone matters; I do not know exactly what they are driving at. I could make plenty of money out of the telephone if I had the chance, but I have really no answer to my proposition made to the company. Harris, I think, will make another effort to sell to the Bell Company, in the success of which effort I have but little hope. I am now looking anxiously for something on which to expend my energies and make some money.

I see Atkins is hunting up all the "dead beats" in the country to give them good places. What do you think of it? I have much to say to you when we meet about "persons and things." Write me a long letter when you receive this. If you can send me Armstrong's address, please do so. I wish to write to him. Can you tell me what has become of Alexander?

Remember me to all of your family, and ask Harry if he can write. If he can, tell him to write me a letter.

Your friend,

R. F. LOONEY.

Q. Do you know if Senator Harris was here at that time?—A. He was here at that time, I think.

Q. You know whether, about that time, he was endeavoring to negotiate with the Bell Company?—A. I don't know anything about the negotiations about that time. Senator Harris had an idea, I think, all the time that we could sell the transmitter to them. I never had any such idea. I differed with him about that.

Q. What do you know about Atkins "huating up all the dead beats in the country and giving them places"?—A. Nothing. I suppose he will explain that when he comes here. He didn't appoint any of my dead beats. I tried to get a few of them in, and couldn't do it. [Laughter.]

Q. Haven't you got places for all your dead beats?—A. I have not; I wish I could; I am in the same fix as all the others. [Laughter.]

(The entry in the record book previously referred to was here found and shown to the witness.)

The WITNESS. Shall I read this?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

The WITNESS (reading):

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 7, 1884.

Pursuant to call of the president the directors met at the rooms of Isham G. Harris, at 515 Eleventh street, Washington, D. C., at 7.30 o'clock, February 7, 1884. Present: Joseph E. Johnston, Isham G. Harris, Robert F. Looney, and Casey Young.

Joseph E. Johnston, from the committee appointed and authorized to contract with D. E. Myers & Co. with respect to the States of Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, and Minnesota, reported that the committee had consummated the contract as directed by the board of directors.

On motion of Robert F. Looney, Joseph E. Johnston, Isham G. Harris, and J. Harris Rogers were directed to proceed to the city of Boston for the purpose of conferring with the officers of the National Bell Telephone Company with a view of making some satisfactory arrangement with said company in respect to the telephone business.

On motion the meeting adjourned sine die.

J. E. JOHNSTON,
President.

CASEY YOUNG,
Secretary.

Q. All your efforts to unite with or trade with the Bell Telephone Company failed, did they not?—A. Yes, sir; there was never anything done. I never tried it.

Q. And your fight then began in earnest?—A. We didn't commence any fight on them. They subsequently filed a bill against us.

Q. They began on you?—A. They entered the Philadelphia suit sometime after that.

Q. Did you not commence the fight on them when you brought your suit at Memphis?—A. That was the first attack we made.

Q. Did you know of Dr. Rogers making an application to be appointed Assistant Attorney-General?—A. I heard of it. I don't know whom I heard it from. I don't know but I signed it.

Q. You have already spoken about trying to get his son appointed electrician?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you know of the endeavor to get Dr. Rogers appointed Assistant Attorney-General when the new administration came in?—A. I heard of it. I don't know what was said about it particularly. I don't know whether I talked about it or not. Senator Harris, perhaps, talked to me about it. Perhaps I heard it from Senator Harris. I know there was such an application.

Q. You favored it, did you not?—A. I suppose I would have done it if I were asked. I think I was at home sick.

Q. Didn't you sign it?—A. I couldn't say.

Q. Were you not an applicant for appointment as Assistant Attorney-General, too?—A. No, sir; I was not. I wouldn't have any office under this Government. I had one here eight years that I got very tired of. I want it to go on the record that I never was an applicant for office. I will state that at the time this was being done I was confined to my room. My arm was paralyzed, and I was not able to go about for two months. I never went out of my room.

Q. How many people interested in the Pan-Electric Companies, either the parent company or children or grandchildren, got and held office under the new administration, and who are they?—A. I couldn't say. I didn't get office for any of them, and don't know whether any of them got office or not. General Atkins is the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and General Johnston is the Commissioner of Railroads. I don't know but that there may be others.

Q. You were the custodian of the papers of the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you got the letter book containing the correspondence of the company?—A. I put it in here the other day. Here it is [indicating book].

Q. You kept a file of letters received, did you?—A. I had a number of other files like that, and sometimes a letter got into my other files.

Q. (Examining book.) I do not want to pry into your private affairs. Are there any private letters here?—A. There are some private letters, I think. I have not looked to see what letters are there. This is marked "Telephone book." There may be some private letters in there. I think probably there are a few that my clerk put in by mistake. I have a lot of those files in my room that I have not had time to go through. I think very likely there are some letters there that relate to this business in some way or other.

Q. I would like them all.—A. I will look through them directly and see if there are any private letters here. I have not examined them at all. I just picked up the book and brought it along.

Q. One of my associates says he has looked at the letter books of your company, and does not find any correspondence since about May, 1885.—A. No; I don't think there is any in there, for this reason—

Q. One moment. There is none after that date. Has there been any correspondence since that date?—A. I was just going to say—

Q. Where are those letters?—A. Just let me answer one question at a time. About the middle of March, 1885, I was suddenly paralyzed, one morning, in my right side, from a hurt I got previous to that time. Up to that time I had put most of the letters I had got in those letter files. During my illness I was not able to do anything at all. Some letters may have come to me. If they did, my clerk took them, and read them, and attended to them. Mr. Money came down and attended to a great deal of my correspondence. I see some letters were put in here as late as May. As soon as I got able to travel I went home. I got very few letters then. Of those I did get some perhaps I have kept among my private letters, and some perhaps I did not keep at all. I corresponded with nobody during that time, except a few letters from Dr. Rogers; a few from Senator Harris, and a few from General Johnston. I don't remember any others that I got, except from persons residing at a distance from here.

Q. I see your letters were headed "Office of the Pan-Electric Company, Washington?"—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was the office of your company of that name kept here in Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any clerk in charge of the office when you were absent?—A. No, sir; none at all. Major Gardner was in charge of it. He was the secretary of the Washington Telephone Company; the gentleman behind you (indicating Mr. Gardner).

Q. Do you mean to be understood that all the letters received since about May, 1885, you cannot find?—A. I have found some of them. I think there are some in this book a little after that time, may be. I have not looked through them. I wrote home to my partner to send me all my letter files and he sent them to me here—six or eight volumes like this. Perhaps there are some among them. I have not had time to go through them yet. A subcommittee can come and look at them, or I will do it myself. Doubtless a good many letters I received while I was home I would just tear up. Then I was at Hot Springs for two or three months, and I had no letter file there and I take it I tore up all the letters I got during that period.

Q. The paper relating to the appointment of Dr. Rogers as Assistant Attorney-General has been found. [Hands paper to witness.] Will you tell me whether that signature is the signature of Isham G. Harris?—A. It looks like it. I think it is his signature.

Q. His signature is the first, is it not?—A. I don't know whether it was signed first or not. I see some on the other side.

Q. The third one is Joseph C. S. Blackburn. Do you know whether that is Senator Blackburn's signature?—A. I couldn't swear to his signature. I have seen it. That looks like his writing. I am not very familiar with it.

Mr. EDEN. Do you care about showing who signed the recommendation other than the men connected with this company?

Mr. RANNEY. If they are connected with the Government.

The WITNESS (Mr. Young). Joe Blackburn has nothing to do with the telephone.

Q. "P. Dunn, Arkansas." Is that the man who has been named before in connection with the purchase of some stock?—A. Nobody ever mentioned his purchasing any stock that I know of. That is an assumption of yours.

Q. Was not something said about his buying some?—A. I stated that Mr. Dunn had spoken to me about trading a house to Dr. Rogers or Colonel Looney for stock.

Q. Here is the name John D. C. Atkins. Is that the signature of one of your associates?—A. That looks like General Atkins's signature.

Q. The next in order is J. E. Johnston. Is that the General Johnston you have spoken about?—A. I think that is his signature.

Q. The next is H. D. Money. Is that his signature?—A. That looks like his signature.

Q. The next is J. J. Johnson. Who is he?—A. I do not know.

Q. It is not Bradley Johnson?—A. Oh, no.

Q. Who is Bradley Johnson?—A. He is a lawyer, president of the Washington Telephone Company. That is not his name.

Q. You do not know who this man is?—A. No, sir.

Q. The next is R. F. Looney. Is that another one of your Pan-Electric friends?—
A. Yes, sir; that looks like his signature.

Q. You say you were paralyzed at that time, so you could not write?—A. Yes, sir; I expect I would have signed it.

Q. Next is John C. Brown. Is that another man who was with you?—A. I don't know whether it is his signature or not. I corresponded with him sometimes.

Q. It says "ex-Governor John C. Brown."—A. I expect it is his signature.

Q. That is his name, is it?—A. I presume it is his name; I am not very familiar with his signature.

Q. The next is Robert Klotz. Is that another?—A. That looks like Major Klotz's signature. I should say it was.

Q. This paper seems to have the names of all your associates, the principal ones in this Pan-Electric Company, except yourself.—A. Oh, no; only a few of them.

Q. It has not the name of Mr. Garland, of course?—A. Oh, no; it was directed to him I think. I don't see my name here and I don't see the name of Harry Rogers. Those are the only two of the original parties whose names I don't see.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. The petition is directed to the President, is it not?—A. I think it is directed to the Attorney-General.

Mr. RANNEY. I will read the paper:

"Learning that J. W. Rogers, esq., desires the place of assistant attorney in some of the Departments, we, the undersigned, commend him to President Cleveland for the position named, whenever a vacancy may occur in such Department."

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Harris, Atkins, Johnston, Money, Looney, and Klotz signed that paper?—A. Yes, sir. I would have signed any paper for the appointment of Dr. Rogers to any office I thought he was fitted for, and would do it yet.

Q. You would have signed it if it had been presented to you?—A. I suppose I would. It was not presented. I was sick and couldn't write, I think. I couldn't have written my name at that time.

Q. The reason your name is not on it is because you could not write at that time?—
A. I do not know that is the reason.

Q. Did you know that there was such a paper?—A. I had heard of it.

Q. Did you know that such a recommendation had been made and circulated?—A. Yes, sir; I heard it had. Probably I have heard more about it since this outcry about the telephone than I did before. I will sign it yet, if you think it will do any good.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose you don't care about having those names in the record?

Mr. RANNEY. I think the whole paper had better be put in.

Mr. EDEN. Very well; I do not object.

The following is the paper referred to:

* I wish particularly to emphasize this petition for my old and well-tried friend, J. W. Rogers.

Q. Were any of your associates applicants for office that you know of?—A. None that I know of. I was not. I do not know of any. Possibly there were applicants among them.

Q. You saw these so-called disclosures or publications in the World, did you not?—A. Yes, sir; it was very interesting reading to me. I used to peruse it.

Q. Did you go to see anybody about it?—A. Oh, yes; I saw Mr. Crawford about it.

Q. Mr. Crawford, of the World?—A. The correspondent of the World.

Q. You went to see him personally?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go alone or with somebody else?—A. I went once alone and I went once with Senator Harris and General Johnston. I went to see Mr. Crawford when the first article appeared.

Q. And subsequently, after it was all out—A. It is not all out yet, I believe.

Q. After all the publications were made you and Senator Harris and General Atkins went?—A. No; General Johnston.

Q. You three went to see Mr. Crawford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Can you state what you said to him at that interview?—A. I can state all I can recollect. I don't remember all that was said.

Q. State what you recollect.—A. When we went down there Mr. Crawford was not in the room. We waited a little while, and I think a young man went after him, or perhaps he came in. We called his attention to those publications, and we told him we thought he was doing us great injustice in publishing those sort of things; that there were some things in them not true and calculated to present us in a wrong light; that our office was near at hand, and if he would come over there any time we would submit the books, papers, correspondence, and everything else to him, and let him have access to every fact connected with the whole concern. I had told him that previous to that time.

Q. Is that all?—A. Oh, there may have been a good deal more conversation. If you will call my attention to any particular thing I may remember it. We staid there about half an hour.

Q. Did he tell you he would publish any statement you would make?—A. Oh, yes; he told me that before.

Q. Did he ask you whether you had any statement to make?—A. Perhaps he did. He told us he would publish anything that we might furnish, and I told him I did not care to contribute to that character of sensational literature.

Q. Did not you three men go in there and say to him that you wanted him to state in the presence of the whole three that neither one of the three gave him the information?—A. No; nobody stated it exactly in that way. I said myself that he had published an article previous to that time that seemed to have such a clear insight into the details of our business that it had given rise to suspicion, and I was afraid that some of my associates concluded I had furnished it to him. I said this in rather a jocular way, but Mr. Crawford seemed to think it was a more serious matter than I did, and he said: "No, sir; I acquit you of any connection with it," or something of that sort.

Q. Did you not say to him that you wanted him to state in the presence of these three men that neither one of them gave him that information?—A. Perhaps I may have done so.

Q. Did you not?—A. I cannot remember.

Q. Did he not then say, "Neither you, Mr. Young, nor you, General Johnston, nor you, Senator Harris, gave me this information"?—A. Oh, I think he did; yes, sir.

Q. Did you not ask him to say that, and state that was what you had all three come for?—A. Oh, no; I did not state that was what we came for.

Q. To have him state in the presence of you all that neither of you gave him that information?—A. Oh, no; we did not go for any such purpose as that.

Q. Did you not say so after you got there?—A. No; I don't think I said so. I didn't care a cent whether anybody thought I did it or not. I wouldn't have given a flip of a nickel for what anybody thought about it.

Q. Are you sure about that?—A. Oh, no; I am not. I may have said it. Mr. Crawford is here, and you can take his statement. I don't remember.

Q. I want your recollection.—A. That is about what I recollect.

Q. Please state whether he did not say to you in substance, "Gentlemen, have you anything to say? I will publish anything you have to say"; and you said, "No; we have not."—A. Yes, sir; I told him I did not want to contribute to any sensational literature of that sort, and I had been in politics a little too long to enter into a newspaper quarrel, for a fellow generally gets the worst of it before he stops.

Q. He said he would publish anything you might say?—A. Yes; he told me that before.

Q. And you said you had nothing to say to be published?—A. I think Senator Harris said he had no publication to make, or something like that.

Q. And thereupon did you say, "We want you to state to us three that neither of the three gave you that information"?—A. I don't think I made any such statement.

My recollection about it is that I said to Mr. Crawford that the details he had published seemed to be so accurate that they appeared to have come from somebody who was acquainted with the affairs of our company, and perhaps I would rest under the suspicion of having done it myself. That was rather a jocular remark. He said, "No, I acquit you of any blame or any connection with the matter"; something of that sort, but I did not care if he did; it didn't make any difference to me.

Q. I simply ask whether you told him that?—A. I am giving it as my impression that I told him.

Q. Do you remember whether he did say to you and to each of the other gentlemen that neither of you gave him the information?—A. I do not remember that; perhaps he did. I don't know.

Mr. RANNEY. I think of nothing more I desire to ask you except as to the letters, and as to this combination and agreement, when you get it.

The WITNESS. I asked the committee yesterday to let me see the letters that were considered by the subcommittee as not relevant. I see there are a good many I wrote, and they may have some bearing upon those that have been considered relevant by the committee. The connection between them might enable me to recall a good many things that I have forgotten, in any explanation the committee may call upon me to make. I would like to explain how I happened to write every one of these letters, so far as I can recollect.

Mr. RANNEY. There is a letter here of yours which purports to be an answer to one in regard to Senator Garland.

The WITNESS. What page is it on; is it that letter you alluded to awhile ago about striking at Gould? I would like to see that letter.

Mr. RANNEY. Here is one from Dr. Rogers that purports to be a dispatch:

"By reference to my letter you will see that I do not say, as you state, 'that Mr. Garland is indebted to me for getting him appointed;' but 'for my efforts to get him appointed.' Those efforts may be summed up as follows: Ambages longe sunt.

"I suppose that phrase means that roundabout ways are long."

Dr. ROGERS. Do you wish me to translate it for you? It is what Æneas said to Dido: "I have traveled a long way, and it will take until the stars subside before I can tell you all."

Mr. RANNEY. You traveled a long way to get Garland in.

Dr. ROGERS. Oh, no; he came in early in the morning.

Q. Did you make any efforts to get Mr. Garland appointed Attorney-General?—A. Oh, no; I had nothing to do with it.

Q. Did you not sign a recommendation to the President?—A. No; I don't think I did.

Q. Did not Colonel Gantt and your associates?—A. Oh, no; I think not; Colonel Gantt was not here; he is not a politician.

Q. None of you signed his papers?—A. Oh, no; I don't know anything about that.

Mr. RANNEY. I think I am through with the examination, with the reservation I have mentioned. If I have omitted anything, my associates will supply it.

The WITNESS. I will bring out anything you have omitted.

Mr. RANNEY. Probably I have omitted a good deal. I am sorry I have had to monopolize so much of you.

The WITNESS. It has been a very happy monopoly, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. OATES. I would like to have the reporter look through the testimony of Mr. Young and see if he did not, in response to one of Mr. Ranney's questions about the bringing of that suit, say that the Attorney-General was interested in a telephone suit.

The WITNESS. I didn't say a suit, I think.

Mr. OATES. I want to see whether you did or not.

The WITNESS. If I did, I made a mistake; I did not intend to say that, if I did; I meant he was interested in a telephone company. Will the committee allow me to have those letters?

The CHAIRMAN. I understand there is no objection.

The WITNESS. I would like to look over them.

Mr. RANNEY. In looking over the list of letters that are marked "unimportant," it has occurred to me that some of them may be important for the purpose of fixing dates, if nothing more.

The WITNESS. There are some here I cannot see the relevancy of. Here is letter No. 158. I will call Mr. Hanback's attention to that. I do not see what that has got to do with this business.

Mr. OATES. Those letters are not all in evidence.

The WITNESS. I see they are printed, and I thought they would go in the record.

Mr. OATES. No; they are only printed for the use of the committee. Such as are put in evidence will go into the record, and no others.

Mr. HANBACK. They do not all go in.

The WITNESS. I notice several here that do not seem to me to have any possible connection with this investigation.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. I understood you to say, in response to one question of Mr. Ranney, that the Attorney-General was interested in a telephone suit.—A. I meant he was interested in a telephone company.

Q. So if you said it in that form, you did not intend to do so?—A. Oh, no; he had no suit that I know of. If I used the word suit it was a lapsus lingue; I intended to say a telephone company. There was no suit that he was interested in that I know of.

Q. You are aware, are you not, that the Government has commenced a suit in Ohio?—A. I see it by the papers.

Q. To vacate the Bell patents?—A. I see it by the papers.

Mr. RANNEY. I object to the witness stating what he has heard about that matter. It is not embraced in the resolution of inquiry. I apply your own doctrine.

Mr. OATES. I take issue with you squarely on that. It is embraced in this inquiry.

Mr. MILLARD. I object to the evidence, as it must be hearsay.

Mr. RANNEY. If we are going to investigate that suit, we will do it. I would like to investigate the whole thing, if you want to.

The WITNESS. So would I.

Mr. RANNEY. If the House will authorize it, I will not object, although it is not a duty to covet. I cannot see how the resolution could embrace an inquiry into a suit that has been brought since the resolution was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. Did not this Columbus suit grow out of the original application from the district attorney at Memphis?

Mr. RANNEY. Not knowing what the suit brought at Columbus is, I cannot tell.

Mr. HANBACK. I think it can hardly be said it grew out of that, because that suit was withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. It was withdrawn, but as I understand it from the record you have here, the application made to Mr. Goode by the district attorney in Tennessee is made the foundation for this suit which has now been ordered.

Mr. OATES. I read from the resolution: "And also as to what suit or suits, if any, have been brought in the name of the United States to test the validity of patents issued, or any other right or controversy between the Bell and the Pan-Electric Telephone Companies; what contracts had been made, what moneys paid or to be paid to any person or persons as assistant counsel by the Attorney-General or Solicitor-General of the United States; the reason and authority for constituting the United States a party to said suit or suits, and all matters connected therewith."

Mr. MILLARD. This suit had not been brought at the time the resolution was offered.

Mr. OATES. It was contemplated.

Mr. MOFFAT. It had been ordered, I think.

Mr. OATES. It had. We are instructed to inquire into and ascertain as to the suit or suits and all matters connected therewith.

Mr. RANNEY. If you are going into that, I see by the newspapers this morning it is alleged this suit has been brought at Columbus, so that it can be tried before Judge Baxter, who is a well known and notorious patent smasher. I do not state this as indorsing it or as knowing anything about it. I simply refer to it as enlarging the scope of the inquiry beyond what the House intended.

Mr. OATES. I serve notice on you now that if you insist upon your objection I shall hold you down to the same rule hereafter. I have been letting you run a long way outside of the rule, but if you want to enforce the strict rule and prevent the public from getting the facts, very well.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not recognize the fact that I have been doing anything by your permission.

Mr. OATES. You have, by my permission, as a member of the committee.

Mr. RANNEY. I have been doing what I have done under an assertion of my rights. If there was any objection to it you should have made it.

Mr. OATES. My rights, sir, are as broad as yours on this committee.

Mr. RANNEY. I concede it. I neither hold you down nor will you hold me down.

Mr. OATES. You can make your objections and I will make mine, and the committee will decide.

Mr. RANNEY. My objection is this: That the suit in Columbus, Ohio, is subsequent to the passage of this resolution, and is not embraced within the scope of the inquiry.

Mr. OATES. What I said was merely by way of preface to an inquiry that I intended to make of the witness about a matter that I think you will concede is material.

Mr. RANNEY. Then put the inquiry so that we can understand it.

Q. If any suit succeeds in setting aside the Bell patent, or if the suit or suits which have been brought at the instance of the Government shall set aside the Bell patents, would it or not benefit the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. Under the suit that has been brought it would not; it would destroy it.

Mr. MILLARD. That is not an answer to the question.

The WITNESS. Then I have misunderstood the question.

Q. If the suit which has been brought at the instance of the Government and in the name of the Government heretofore or at present, or hereafter, is successful in setting aside and declaring void the Bell patents, will that decision be beneficial to the Pan-Electric Telephone?—A. It would only be beneficial in this way: It would open up the whole telephonic field to competition by anybody who saw proper to put a telephone in operation, and then it would depend upon our business capacity and enterprise and industry in pushing those different matters whether or not it would benefit the Pan-Electric Company. It would benefit it to that extent and no more.

Q. If it would not benefit the Pan-Electric Company, why was it that that company was desirous of having such a suit?—A. That company was not desirous of having such a suit brought. It did not want a suit of that kind.

Q. What was it that the attorneys of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company desired or sought for in appearing before the Interior Department and urging that a suit be brought by the Government against the Bell Company?—A. Their purpose was to get a suit brought at their relation, by the Government, so that they themselves could control it, and let it as far as possible be a contest between them and the Bell Company, and not between any other company in the country. That was the sort of suit they wanted, but that is not the sort of suit they got. I suppose, in the absence of getting a suit of that sort, that they would have been willing to ask for the sort of suit that has been brought; but if they had known in advance that that sort of suit would have been ordered, the undertaking never would have commenced. But we got into it and there was no way to stop.

Q. You have stated in your examination heretofore that after you entered into the agreement with Van Benthuyzen about bringing the suit you talked with all your associates about it. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Garland about it?—A. Oh no; I never mentioned it to him. I did not say I talked to all of my associates. I talked with some of them. There were a good many of them—forty or fifty.

Q. Have any of your private letters and correspondence found their way into the newspapers and been published?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. Touching Pan-Electric Telephone matters?—A. Yes; pretty near every one I ever wrote to Dr. Rogers. He seems to have published all of them. I don't know whether there are any more or not; likely there are.

Q. Do you know of any other correspondence between you and your associates which has gotten into the newspapers and been published, except what has been furnished by Dr. Rogers?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. If so, what letters, and how?—A. I do not know of any others that have gotten into the newspapers. I take it he furnished them. I do not know.

Mr. OATES. I do not care to ask any other questions.

The CHAIRMAN. It is now the turn of the gentlemen from New York, Mr. Millard, to interrogate the witness.

Mr. MILLARD. I was not here yesterday, and do not know the ground that has been covered by Mr. Ranney.

The CHAIRMAN. I think it has all been covered.

Dr. MILLARD. I do not want to repeat, or take up time unnecessarily. I would like the privilege of looking over the evidence of yesterday, and to-morrow morning asking Mr. Young such questions as I desire.

The WITNESS. I understood the committee were not to meet to-morrow, and I made an engagement. I will come if they meet.

Mr. MILLARD. Whenever we meet again, I mean. I do not want to ask any questions that have been asked by Mr. Ranney. I was unavoidably kept away yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. Colonel Young may be recalled hereafter if you desire. He may be recalled at any time.

Mr. MILLARD. I will ask a few questions.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. If you had succeeded in the suit that you brought at Memphis, would it not have disposed of the questions raised in the suit at Baltimore?—A. If we had been able to sustain that suit, I think it would have disposed of—

Q. I mean the Government suit.—A. If that suit commenced at Memphis had been prosecuted it would have disposed of more than all the questions presented in the Baltimore suit.

Q. If you had succeeded in the Government suit which was instituted by the district attorney at Memphis it would have covered the questions you sought to litigate, not only at Baltimore, but everywhere else?—A. We did not seek to litigate them at Baltimore. They brought the suit. I think it would have covered every question in the Baltimore suit, and some that could not be put in issue in that suit at all.

Q. One question further, and I will waive further examination. Will you state precisely the object you had in view in bringing the Government suit, so far as the questions between your company and the Bell Telephone Company were concerned?—A. O, yes, sir; I have no objection in the world to stating it. Our courts have held uniformly that the question of fraud, inadvertence, or mistake in the issuance of a patent cannot be inquired into in a private suit, and I was not sure whether we could succeed in our suit without embracing those questions, and showing that ab initio this patent was void.

Q. Your object was to break down the patent of the Bell telephone?—A. The object was so far to break it down as to prevent them from interfering with us. That was all.

Q. To sweep them from the field?—A. Oh, no; we did not want to do that.

Q. Your object was, was it, to get them out of the way, so that they would not interfere with your rights?—A. Yes, sir; simply to put them in a position where they could not interfere with us. It was not our purpose to interfere with them at all, because they would have gone on anyhow. We could not possibly stop them, no matter how the suit might have gone; neither we nor the Government could stop them. They would not stop.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. How could they have gone on if their patents had been vacated?—A. The Western Union Company has been going on for forty years—

Q. On patents that have been vacated?—A. No; not on patents that have been vacated. They could not, perhaps, compel people to pay royalties except under a contract; in other words, they could not prevent me from using the same instrument, unless there was some mechanical difficulty in the way.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Your object was to set aside their patent?—A. No.

Q. To have it declared invalid?—A. My object was to have their patent construed; that is, to have declared illegal and void the fifth claim in their patent, which covers the whole art of telephony. When that was done I had no fear about the interference between our mechanical contrivances, because I had looked into it sufficiently since that time to satisfy me I could defeat an action of that sort. There is some similarity between the instruments, but I think there is a patentable difference so far as I have been able to judge. I am not an expert in these things, but I base my opinion upon that of other experts, men who do know. We simply want to take away from them the power to injure us. I will state further, if the committee will permit me, that we had abundant precedent for that proceeding. It has been done for the last fifty years, and no question has been raised about it.

Mr. EDEN. I do not want to ask any questions.

Mr. HANBACK. I will ask a few questions.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. In your testimony a little while ago you said in answer to a question by Judge Ranney that you had not known up to a certain time that the Bell Telephone Company had so much power over courts, Congressmen, &c., but you had since learned of it.

Mr. RANNEY. He did not say Congressmen.

The WITNESS. I say it now, if I did not before.

Mr. HANBACK. I thought he said it.

Q. (Continuing.) And you said this investigation was one of the evidences of the power of the Bell Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Will you please explain that answer?—A. I will. Within the last seventeen years at least seventeen suits have been brought just like this. Two of them were so nearly alike that if you will change the names of the attorneys and the parties they will appear to be absolutely the same. The same questions were involved, and the same great interests were at stake. The same able lawyers were on either side. The questions were discussed here before the Attorney-General for two months by Mr. Conkling, Mr. Harding, Mr. Crowley, of New York, all eminent lawyers, and on the other side by General Butler, by Mr. Duncan Walker, and by a lawyer from Pittsburgh, whose name I have now forgotten. That agitation commenced exactly as this did, and pursued the same course, and suit was brought just as Mr. Goode brought it, upon the application of a patentee, and for the purpose of annulling a patent. After the suit was ordered the representatives of the rival company, Mr. Conkling and Mr. Crowley and Mr. Harding, came on here and made the same complaint that was made by the Bell Company, that this had been an ex parte proceeding, without giving them an opportunity to be heard, and asked that the case be reopened, and that they be given an opportunity to argue it. Attorney-General Brewster consented to do that, but did not refer it to the Secretary of the Interior

He did hear argument for a long time. The legislature of Ohio passed a series of resolutions about it. That was never brought into Congress. Another case just like that, the Torpedo case, there was just as much noise made about in the newspapers, and just as much opposition to as there was in this case. The same arguments were made in that case as were made before the Secretary of Interior here in the present case. Those gentlemen did not have power enough to get it before Congress. That is the reason I say this investigation here is just another evidence of the immense power and influence which the Bell company are able to exert through the newspaper press and other sources. I do not pretend to say the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. Hanback) had anything to do with that, because I do not think he had.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Did you mention the name of Mr. Goode as having ordered one of those suits?—
A. No, sir, Mr. Brewster; he ordered them just like Mr. Goode ordered this suit; there was no notice; it was ex parte altogether; there was the same great outcry made that was made here, and the same array of very eminent counsel; I did not intend to say that the gentleman from Kansas had anything to do with it, because I have assurances from another source that he did not have—that no influences from the Bell Company have operated on him.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. Then I understand from your statement that as to the correspondence, newspaper articles, &c., on which this investigation was based, appeared through the newspaper press of the land, especially the New York World, the New York Sun, and the New York Tribune, such publications were made by reason of the influence of the Bell Company upon those papers?—A. No; I do not say that; I do not say that any of those papers were paid a cent by the Bell Company; but I say this: that I do not believe there is another corporation in the United States that could have exerted so much influence and made so much noise through the newspaper press.

Q. I understood you to say earlier in your examination that this investigation is one of the evidences of the power of the Bell Telephone Company.—A. I think so. I do not believe any other corporation could have done it.

Q. So far as I know anything about it my information has been received from the newspapers, and that is where the country saw it. Do I understand you to say that the papers I have named were influenced by the Bell Telephone Company to make a fight in order to break down any opposing companies that might be built up?—A. I have no facts in my possession that would authorize the belief upon my part that any of these newspapers were corrupted by the Bell Telephone Company. If I had I would state them. But I do believe that no other corporation in this country is so powerful that it could have come into Congress and instituted an investigation because a suit had been brought against them just as it has been brought against fifty other corporations. I don't believe a corporation can be found in this country that ever did do it, or ever could do it again.

Q. You were asked a question by Colonel Oates a few moments ago which I have put down as fully as I could. I will give you the substance of it, which I think I have correctly minuted. If the suits heretofore brought or at present brought or in the future to be brought in the name of the United States against the Bell Telephone Company should prevail, the question as to whether it would inure to the benefit of the Pan-Electric Company; and I understood you to say it would not; and afterwards you qualified your answer by saying that the only benefit would arise from open competition.—A. Yes, sir; that is the only benefit it would be to us. It would just result in keeping their hands off of us.

Q. I wish to call your attention to a part of your examination which I will read, (p. 175):

“Mr. HALL. Now proceed. What transpired afterwards?”

“The WITNESS. I came on to Washington City to see him, not to have a suit brought, but to keep a suit from being brought in that way. My idea about the suit was, and the one I wanted—

“Mr. MILLARD. Please state that again.

“The WITNESS. I came to Washington City, not to get him to bring that suit as he proposed to bring it—

“Mr. MILLARD. You say you were opposed to the bringing of a Government suit?

“The WITNESS. No; I do not; but I say I was opposed to the bringing of the suit that he wanted to bring, and for these reasons, which I will give to the committee: That suit would have destroyed us as well as the Bell Company, and I did not want to do that. But I did want and advised him that if the suit was brought by the Government it should be brought by the Government at our relation, so that we could control the suit and it would not undermine us together with the Bell Company.”

The WITNESS. I do not know that I used the word “undermine”; perhaps I did; that is what I meant.

Q. Is it not true that the suit afterwards brought at Memphis was in the name of the United States, and not upon the relation of any company?—A. Yes, sir; very much against my wish, too.

Q. I think you testified to-day that immediately after the letter had been prepared asking authority for the bringing of the suit in the name of the United States you left Memphis, or very shortly afterwards, and arrived here about the 2d of September?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in answer to a question by Judge Ranney with reference to Attorney-General Garland you said you did not know he was absent until you reached Cincinnati, but it made no difference, because you knew Garland would not consent himself to have any suit brought and would have nothing to do with it, and that you did not care what Solicitor-General Goode did, because you intended to go to the President and fight to have the suit brought?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That was this suit at Memphis, was it?—A. Oh, yes; that was the one.

Q. But that was not on the relation of your company?—A. I stated before that the reason it was not was because Mr. McGorrie refused to bring it in that way, and I intended when I got here to use what influence I had to have it brought in that way.

Q. On your relation?—A. Yes, sir; and if I had gone to the President and had been in a position where I could have argued it and presented my views, I should have insisted upon our right to have it brought in that form. I think it was a clear legal right we had, and I should have insisted upon it. I did not think anybody had the right to deny it to us. That was and is my view of the law, and that was the sort of suit I wanted. I thought I might get Mr. McGorrie's views changed. I thought they were wrong.

MR. RANNEY. If you can give the committee any authority for such doctrine, I hope you will do so.

THE WITNESS. I will give you very good authority. You do not seem to understand it very clearly, and I will take great pleasure in enlightening you. I will give you my brief.

MR. RANNEY. You may speak of what you understand or do not understand, but do not speak of the understanding of others.

THE WITNESS. You asked me a question, and I will take great pleasure in furnishing you with the information.

Q. After your examination of the law relative to the bringing of suits for the setting aside of patents, do you know of any case that has ever been brought by the Government, in the name of the Government, and not on the relation of any company, to set aside a patent other than a patent for land?—A. I have not examined the original record in any suit, but I have examined what the courts have said. The first case that ever was brought, that I have any knowledge of, was an English case, and that was brought upon the relation of another party by the Attorney-General. That was followed in subsequent English cases, and that same common-law doctrine has come down to us and is the law in this country to-day. I have no fear of maintaining such a suit, if they will allow us to bring it. It is brought in every State in the Union to-day. There is hardly a State where it is not brought.

MR. MILLARD. It is brought under statute.

THE WITNESS. If you will examine the case of the railroad against somebody, in 31 Wisconsin, you will see every case collated on that subject. On the law of this case I am "heeled," and I would like to discuss it.

MR. EDEN. The members of the committee have the advantage of you. You are answering under oath and they are not.

THE WITNESS. I am giving that as an opinion. I may be mistaken.

Q. I want to ask you relative to the conversations you had with the Rogerses, and I shall not be tedious. There will only be a few questions. I understand your testimony to be that you arrived here on the evening of the 30th of July?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And as near as you can fix it, you had a conversation with the Rogerses, father and son, at their residence on Four-and-a-half street, the next day?—A. I think it was the next day. I could not fix the day exactly. I think it was the day after I got here.

Q. I do not care to go over what that conversation was, because you have been over it once. You had subsequently another conversation with them?—A. I had another conversation with Harry Rogers. I don't remember whether they were both present or not.

Q. Harry Rogers testifies that you sent for them and they came to your room, or your place of business, wherever it was, and that you informed them that Van Benthuyzen was here with others, and that they had collected a large amount of testimony?—A. I don't remember sending for them; perhaps I did. My recollection is that I found them at home, but I don't undertake to say how that was. I frequently did send for them when I wanted to see them, or wrote a note for them to call.

Q. You testified as I remember that you told Harry Rogers you would like to have him go up to the Ebbitt House with you and see those parties, but that he had better let his father remain away?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. That Van Benthuyzen did not like him?—A. Not Van Benthuyzen; that is a mistake; Mr. Huntington. I don't remember that at that time I ever heard Mr. Van Benthuyzen say anything about him.

Q. So that conversation was evidently with Harry Rogers alone at that time?—A. I don't think the doctor was present at the time.

Q. I understand from Harry Rogers's testimony and your testimony that neither he nor the doctor went up?—A. I thought Harry did go, but as he says he did not, perhaps he did not; I don't remember; it was my impression he went with me.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. After the resolution was passed by your company at a meeting of the stockholders, in which it was determined not to sell any more stock or put any more on the market, was there any other effort made by the company to enter into negotiation to sell any more stock or any more territory?—A. Well, there was some sale of territory after that time, I think. That, as I remember, was in February, and they subscribed, as the resolutions show, 10 per cent. of their stock. That was intended to be sold for the benefit of the company, if it became necessary, in the prosecution of these various suits. But it has not become necessary. We have had money all the while, and I have made no effort to sell it, and none of it has been sold.

Q. Was any negotiation entered into to sell territory?—A. Oh yes; I think we sold some territory after that time.

Q. There had been no stock sold by the company previous to that time, except as individuals had sold it?—A. None except what was stated.

Q. For what reason was the resolution adopted?—A. To prevent its being sold about town. That was a mere difference of opinion between us and Dr. Rogers. We did not think it would do the company any good. We thought it would do it harm. We thought differently and had a right to think so. We differed with him about it. It was a mere difference about business matters. He had a right to his opinion about it.

Q. Please turn to that resolution and read it.—A. (Reading):

"Pursuant to a call of the president, the board of directors of the Pan Electric Telephone Company met at the rooms of the secretary, 606 Thirteenth street north west, Washington, D. C., at 7.30 o'clock p. m., on the 7th day of April, 1883.

"Present: Joseph E. Johnston, J. Harris Rogers, J. W. Rogers, Robert Looney, and Casey Young. Mr. Harris represented by proxy Mr. Garland and Mr. Brown.

"The president stated the object of the meeting to be for the purpose of considering various propositions for the purchase of the right to use the Pan-Electric Telephone in different localities in exchanges for the benefit of subscribers; and after a brief discussion of the same it was decided by the board that no more rights to establish exchanges should be disposed of pending certain contemplated legislation with the Bell Telephone Company, unless ordered by subsequent motion of the board.

"It was decided, however, to sell telephones in pairs, for individual use, on private lines, to such parties as may wish to buy them; and the secretary was instructed to furnish telephones on application for such use, charging therefor the sum of $40 for each telephone."

I will explain how that happened. At that time we had promised certain parties to let them have a few telephones for use on private lines; some two or three, perhaps.

Q. My inquiry was not directed to that, but to the sale of State rights.—A. I do not think there was one after that time. I don't remember any, unless it was the consummation of some contract that had already been entered into.

Q. What was the reason of it?—A. The reason of it was that we did not want to sell any more until we had established the validity of these patents by adjudication. We wanted to settle the question. That was my individual view, and I believe it was participated in by the others. If we were to be defeated in this thing we did not want to be responsible to any more people, as censure might come on us.

Q. Your recollection is that no further negotiations were entered into for the sale of rights?—A. There were none, except the continuation or consummation of some that were commenced previous to that time.

Q. Please turn to and read the minutes of the next meeting.—A. (Reading.)

"Pursuant to a call of the president, the board of directors of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company met at the rooms of the secretary, 606 Thirteenth street, northwest, Washington, D. C., at 7.30 o'clock on Monday, May 5, 1885.

"Present: Joseph E. Johnston, J. Harris Rogers, and Casey Young, who represented by proxy Isham G. Harris, A. H. Garland, and Robert Looney.

"On motion of Mr. Young, the following resolution, adopted at the last meeting, was rescinded, viz:

"Resolved, That the secretary be, and he is hereby, directed to give notice to the various parties to whom this company has sold the right to use the Pan-Electric telephone within certain States, districts, and Territories, which contracts have by their terms been forfeited, that the company will, on a specified day, proceed by resolution to declare said contracts and each of them forfeited and annulled."

Q. I will direct your attention right to what I want, so as not to incumber the record. See if you do not find a negotiation authorized for a sale?—A. (Reading):

"The secretary informed the meeting that Mr. S. H. Newsom, of Las Vegas, Territory of New Mexico, desired to negotiate with the company for the purchase of New Mexico and certain States in the Republic of old Mexico, for the purpose of putting in operation therein the Pan-Electric telephone.

"On motion of Mr. Rogers the president and secretary were authorized to make such contract with Mr. Newsom as they might see proper."

Mr. Newsom was a gentleman who had come here from New Mexico. He had been in old Mexico and had been putting up instruments of the Bell Company. He spoke the language of that country very fluently, and he wanted to make a contract to put up telephones in Mexico. This negotiation was directed more to old Mexico than to New Mexico, but nothing was ever done.

Q. What reason had you for negotiating in this case and not in others?—A. He had made a proposition to take New Mexico, but the purpose we had in view was to give him old Mexico, where he could get out patents.

Q. The resolution included both; I want to call your attention to that.—A. It seems to embrace both.

Q. I want to know why you would sell rights there and not anywhere else?—A. We did not sell them. I laid his letter before the board of directors.

Q. And they authorized you to proceed?—A. They authorized me to proceed and negotiate. I observe the minutes say "Las Vegas, New Mexico," but the purpose was to give him the right to operate in old Mexico. That was the only purpose we had in view.

Q. Who are the officers of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company at present?—A. The same officers; we never had but one election.

Q. Mr. Garland is still the counsel?—A. Yes.

Q. And Mr. Johnston is still president?—A. The first organization remains. It was provided in the resolution under which we elected the first board of directors, as the minutes will show, that they were to hold their offices until their successors were elected and qualified, and we have never had any election since. The officers have remained in just that way.

Q. Will you tell me from the books how much in dividends Attorney-General Garland has received from that company?—A. I can tell you pretty nearly without looking at the books.

Mr. MOFFATT. Perhaps the shorter way will be, as I proposed the other morning, to put so much of these books in evidence as relate to the dividends which have been received by the various people.

The CHAIRMAN. The separate accounts.

The WITNESS. I will draw them off.

Mr. MOFFATT. They are in the possession of the clerk, and he can draw them off and put them in the record.

The WITNESS. Mr. Garland received about $1,800; I cannot state the exact amount without looking at the book. He did not receive any more than anybody else, and nobody objected to what he did receive.

Q. In regard to legislation, some of these inventions of Harry Rogers that were covered by this agreement were not patented, as I understood?—A. At the time the agreement was made they were not patented. I don't know whether patents have been issued for all of them or not.

Q. Were there some of them it was thought could not be obtained under the terms of the patent law?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Did you introduce a bill at the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress extending the provisions of the patent law so as to cover stenography and phonography?—A. I did.

Q. Had that any relation to any of these inventions?—A. None in the world. I will show the committee a letter I have here. I want to explain that. I understood this matter has been hunted up from the files.

Q. What made me ask the question was some invention that young Mr. Rogers spoke of in his testimony, which was not patented, and which he considered very important.—A. There may have been something. I do not know. Do you refer to stenography?

Q. Phonography, I think, and stenography.—A. Oh, no; he did not mention that. I was informed that my record had been looked up in the file-room. I should have forgotten that bill; if you had asked me the question, I should have said I never introduced it. When my attention was called to it I was astonished, for I had no recollection of it in the world. This is the way it came about: Before I came on here to the Forty-eighth Congress a former attorney-general of our State, General J. B. Heiskell, who is now one of the attorneys of the American Bell Telephone Company, told me his brother, who lived up in East Tennessee, had invented a new system of stenography, and he was of opinion that the present patent laws did not authorize a patent upon that as one of the new and useful arts; and he asked me when I came on here to introduce a bill to enlarge the patent laws sufficiently to embrace that. I told him I would do it, but I said, "You draw the bill and send it to me." So he wrote me this letter and inclosed the bill. I will read the letter.

[Heiskell, Weatherford & Heiskell, Attorneys-at-Law.]

MEMPHIS, TENN., December 4, 1883.

DEAR SIR: I inclose draft of bill to amend the patent law so as to include stenography in the useful arts embraced therein. I have, in accordance with our understanding, sent a duplicate to Hon. I. G. Harris, to have the same introduced in the Senate. Please have the thing put through.

Very respectfully,

J. B. HEISKELL.

Hon. CASEY YOUNG.

When I got that letter inclosing the bill I introduced it in the House, and I asked Senator Harris to introduce it in the Senate, too, which he did. He has now, and it will be laid before the committee, the manuscript bill written by General Heiskell, who is at present one of the attorneys of the American Bell Telephone Company of record in Memphis. That is how I came to introduce it. I had forgotten all about it. It has no reference to this matter whatever. I do not think there is anything in Mr. Rogers' invention in relation to stenography. If there is, I never knew it. That was the reason I introduced the bill.

Q. I believe you recommended the letting of the suit in Pennsylvania against the Rogers company go by default. Why did you do that?—A. I did it upon the advice of our local counsel at Philadelphia.

Q. Did you assign as a reason for the advice that you considered you could not obtain justice?—A. Oh, no; I said nothing of that sort.

Q. Your advice in that case was founded, as you have stated, upon the fact that they would probably follow other cases that had been decided, and would not open up the question?—A. Solely on that ground. I had no distrust of the integrity of the Pennsylvania judges. I had no reason of that sort. Mr. Coulston gave me his opinion about the matter, and he was our local lawyer and a man of some eminence in the profession. He advised that we pursue that course.

Q. You did not tell Mr. Rogers anything intended to convey any such impression?—A. Oh, no; I heard his testimony on that subject. He did not state it that way. He said we could not get justice. That was his way of expressing what I had said to him. He did not intend to say I expressed any distrust of the Pennsylvania judiciary.

Q. Did you tell Senator Vest that you did not want a suit brought East because it would be bought off?—A. How bought off?

Q. That was the expression Senator Vest used in his testimony, and I want to find out from you what you meant.—A. I had a conversation with him in which I may have used this language: That a great many of those suits up there had been compromised. I meant that the litigants had been bought off, not the courts.

Q. You were speaking of future litigation, and you wanted your case brought in the West, because if brought in the East it would be bought off?—A. He must have misunderstood me. If I said anything like that I had reference to litigants and not to courts.

Q. If you were the complainants you could not be bought off, could you?—A. Oh, I do not say that. It may be every fellow has his price, and if they would give me my price, I don't say I would not accept it.

Q. In that case it would not make any difference whether the suit was brought in the East or in the West?—A. No, sir.

Q. I see the following in Senator Vest's testimony:

"Q. When did you first hear that the suit would be brought by the Government?—A. I cannot say with any exactness. It was sometime in July or August of last year; that is my recollection of it.

"Q. Who was that from?—A. My first intimation was from Mr. Casey Young that he was trying to get such a suit brought to test the validity of the Bell telephone, and the next I saw of it was in the newspapers."

Then follows this:

"Q. Did Casey Young say why the case was to be brought by the Government?—A. Yes, sir; he told me that the Bell patent had been procured by fraud. He said all he wanted was a fair trial, an equal chance, and no collusion; that the idea was to make this a test case; that if the suit was brought in the East it would be bought off, and they wanted it brought in the West."

Q. What have you to say about that?—A. I did not say anything to him about the judiciary being bought. We had a good deal of conversation and there had been a good deal said about these collusive suits and their being bought off. The Senator misunderstood me if he thought I was speaking about buying the judiciary. I had no such idea as that. I have practiced law a good while and I have never seen a judge sell out yet.

Q. I wanted your explanation in connection with the Senator's testimony.—A. That is the only explanation I have to make; he misunderstood me; we had a great deal of conversation about it.

Q. When did you first begin to consider the question of the Government bringing a suit?—A. I never commenced to think anything about it until this conversation that occurred between me and Mr. Van Benthuyzen at Pittsburgh. Oh, I may have thought about it before, when Dr. Rogers wrote me that letter; perhaps I did.

Q. Your ideas were founded upon the belief that this bill had passed Congress?—A. Yes, sir; I thought at that time that it had been passed; I thought of the matter first when I got Dr. Rogers's letter; I was in the House when the bill came up and passed the House, and I thought it passed the Senate.

Q. There was no attempt to have Mr. Brewster bring a suit, was there?—A. Oh, no; I never talked to him about it.

Q. In regard to the interest which you and your friends procured in this telephone business, you say it was not a donation; what do you call it?—A. I call it a contract; it was a contract.

Q. Was it a gift or a sale?—A. It was a sale under that contract; you can read its terms and see what it was.

Mr. EDEN. I suggest that the agreement, being in writing, will speak for itself.

Mr. MOFFATT. I understand that.

The WITNESS. I am willing to give you any explanation you may desire; there never was a word said about its being a gift or a donation.

Q. You gentlemen did not expect to pay anything for it?—A. It seems we did; we stipulated to pay for it, and did pay for it.

Q. How much?—A. A little over $400; all we stipulated to pay, and all that was necessary to be paid; we would have paid more, if necessary; any one of us was able to do it; I could have put up the exchange myself if I had thought proper to do it; I had the financial ability to put it in operation.

Q. You have testified as to a pamphlet, as I understood, that was issued, or rather, printed, by the company, which you and Dr. Rogers burnt up?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you a copy of that document?—A. No; but I can tell you all about it. I was getting letters frequently from people in all parts of the country inquiring about this telephone, and it took more time to answer those letters than I could give to it. As a matter of course I had no time for that purpose, and we concluded we had better publish a little pamphlet describing the instrument, so as to save time and trouble in writing all these letters, and I was too busy to do it when they asked me, and a friend of ours, General Marcus Wright, who handles the pen very well, was asked to prepare the circular or pamphlet describing the telephone and these various inventions. He wrote one and brought it up to my room. Dr. Rogers was there at the time. I looked over it, and I thought it was a little too highly colored; that it presented the inventions in rather too favorable a light. Dr. Rogers thought the presentation was not quite favorable enough. So we concluded not to let it go out. I think he coincided with me, and I then put the thing in the fire, and it was never circulated.

Q. You do not recollect anything particular about it?—A. It was just a description of the instruments and the number of patents we had, and the formation of the company and the names of the officers. Just an ordinary prospectus such as companies publish; but I thought it not best to put out anything of that sort, and I objected to it on the ground I have stated, and burnt it up. I have intended frequently to prepare a circular to save me the trouble of writing so many letters, but I have never done so.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Was it circulated at all?—A. Not at all. One never went out of my room. I thought it was rather too highly drawn, and presented the enterprise in rather too favorable a light.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. I noticed in some of the testimony or letters—I can't now call to mind exactly which—that it was proposed that one of the instruments be put up in the Congressional Hotel. That is near here; right across the square, is it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you know of any reason why that particular place was selected?—A. Yes; because a room could be obtained over there. I give this testimony second hand, from what Dr. Rogers told me. I had nothing to do with it personally. Mr. Fletcher oc-occupied the building then, and we wanted to put up a telephone to exhibit, and Dr. Rogers got that place. I had nothing to do with it personally. I saw it over there, but I never was there but once or twice.

Q. Was it on account of its being near the Capitol where the Congressmen were?—

A. I expect it was; I don't know. Probably it was because a great many people come here and we wanted to show it. In this connection I wish to say that I have seen it stated in the report of my testimony that I said I had a telephone put up in my committee room. I had nothing to do with it. It was put up by Dr. Harlan, who had the right to use the telephone in this District. I had nothing to do with it in the world.

Q. It was put up by the Washington Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Of which you were a director?—A. It was not put up by the Washington company, after all. It was put up by the company, I believe it was called the Washington company, but it embraced the District of Columbia, and belonged to Dr. Harlan and Mr. Gustin. Afterwards the contract was enlarged and took in the surrounding States; at that time I was not a director; it was a different company,

Q. At what time did you become a director?—A. When the Washington company was formed.

Q. You do not recollect the date?—A. No, sir.

Q. Is there any evidence anywhere?—A. I will inquire. [Addressing a bystander:] Colonel Gardner, when was the Washington company formed?

Mr. GARDNER. On the 6th of June, 1884.

The WITNESS. This was one which preceded it. We first made a contract with Dr. Harlan and Mr. Gustin for the District of Columbia alone, and I don't think we had anything to do with that company after it was, if that company was, organized; if it was, I don't think I had anything to do with it; at any rate, I had nothing to do with putting up that telephone.

Q. My impression is that it was stated in a circular issued by the company of which Mr. Bradley Johnson was president.—A. That was the subsequent company; he was not president of the company then.

Q. In that circular signed by Bradley Johnson and others it is stated that a telephone had been put up in the room of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, as I recollect?—A. There was one there, but it was put up long before that; I was not a member of Congress in 1884; I went out in March, 1884, and that was in June, 1884.

Q. You went out in March, 1885.—A. Oh, yes; that is so.

Q. You were a member of Congress at that time, and, as I understand, a director in this company?—A. Yes; but it was in there before I had anything to do with the company; it was put there by Dr. Harlan; I would have put it up there, if necessary.

Q. Judge Ranney called your attention to a letter this morning just as I stepped out. I do not know whether it was taken up again or not. If it was the committee will call my attention to it. I refer to letter No. 94, addressed to Harry Rogers, in which occurs this expression:

"We have secured all we expected or wished, and we will soon proceed to utilize, but nothing must be said about it for a little while yet."

Was your attention called to that, and was your explanation given?—A. My attention was called to that. I spoke to one or two gentlemen about that yesterday. I have no recollection of it in the world, and I do not know what it alludes to; but the inference would be a fair one that the allusion was to the Government suit which was brought. I think it is probable it referred to that, but I have no recollection in the world. It may have referred to the patents I was here after. I do not know.

Q. Did you secure any patents at that time?—A. I had secured some previous to that time.

Q. At that time, on that trip to Washington?—A. I do not know; I was getting them very frequently; I don't know whether I did then or not; the inference is a fair one that I alluded to the Government suit, though I have not the slightest recollection of it.

Q. Then the inference is fair that you had some previous conversation with him about it?—A. I had had; there is no doubt about that.

Q. And you were conveying to him some good news, that you had got all you wished?—A. Oh, yes. Perhaps I put it a little too strong. I did not expect these letters to be published.

Q. Why did you say to him it had better be kept quiet for a little while and nothing said about it?—A. I cannot tell.

Q. You must have had some motive?—A. I presume there was, but I can't recollect.

Q. Was it not that you did not wish the matter made public until the suit was commenced at Memphis?—A. That may have been the reason; I cannot say; I expect it was.

Q. Would you not expect the action of the Interior Department to be open to everybody?—A. This had nothing to do with the Interior Department; it was the Department of Justice.

Q. The Department of Justice, I mean.—A. Yes, sir; open to everybody.

Q. A matter of that character would be very apt to become public if the officials wished it to be, would it not?—A. Yes; I think so. I don't remember now why I wrote that note at all; I have no recollection about writing it; but when I saw it, it occurred to me that that might be the fair inference, and perhaps that was what I alluded to. This seems to have been dated on September 7.

Q. And the order was given the 4th of September, was it?—A. Somewhere about that time. It was before this note was written. I think it is very probable I had reference to that suit, but I have no recollection of it.

Q. You cannot tell the committee why you wanted it kept still and not made public?—A. I don't know any reason why, because it could have been made public at any time unless, as you suggest, I thought we had better wait until the bill was filed. Perhaps I may have had some such thought in my head. I know I had talked to him about the suit, and had been here for the purpose of getting the suit brought, and I had written home to my friends—

Q. Your main purpose in coming here, as I understood you, was not so much to see that the suit was brought, for you expected that; but you wanted to see it was brought on the relation of your company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When you conveyed to Mr. Harry Rogers the good news that you had got all you wished, you conveyed an incorrect idea of what you wished, did you not?—A. I cannot say.

Q. Your main object was as I have stated, was it not?—A. I had not seen the direction of Mr. Goode at that time, and I did not know how he had ordered it to be brought. I know he ought to have ordered it that way. I did not think—it was a matter of opinion with me—that the Government ought to pay this expense. I thought we ought to pay it, and I am entirely willing to do it yet. I had not seen Mr. Goode's order, and I did not know what he had provided for. It is possible, in that view, I may have written this note; but that was my object all the time.

Q. That was your great object in coming on here?—A. Oh, yes; to see it was brought, and to see it was brought the way I wanted it brought. I had made up my mind we had a perfect right to bring the suit, and I had concluded that I would have it done. I had imbibed some of Mr. Van Benthuyssen's spirit on the subject, and I intended if we had any rights in the matter to enforce them; and I believe we did have clear legal rights to have the suit brought in that way.

Q. With that idea of your clear legal right, you say you did not know at that time whether Mr. Goode had ordered the suit on your relation or not?—A. No; I did not know how it had been ordered.

Q. The application of the district attorney for the western district of Tennessee did not contain any request of that character?—A. No; but I thought Mr. Goode would probably take the proper view of it.

Q. The application submitted to Mr. Goode was not in the name of your company, was it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then, what reason had you for thinking Mr. Goode would order it on the relation of your company any more than on the relation of the National Improved Company?—A. I did not. I did not care which one he ordered it on. I would as soon have had one as the other. We had agreed to fight out the contest together, anyhow, and I didn't care which one was named.

Q. You left your home in Memphis and came up here to Washington mainly for the purpose of having the suit brought upon the relation of your company?—A. Yes, sir; to have it so brought.

Q. And you had insisted all the time, from the time you met Mr. Van Benthuyssen at Pittsburgh until this time, that it ought to be brought on the relation of your company in order that you might enjoy the benefit of the suit?—A. Yes, sir; and I think so yet.

Q. And you came clear up here to do it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you do in that line when you got here?—A. I have stated it thirty or forty times, but I have no objection to stating it again. I got here on the 30th of July, at 9 o'clock at night, or about that time. I think it was the next morning, the 31st of July, or the 1st of August, I don't remember which, that I went over to Mr. Goode's office, and asked him if those papers had come.

Mr. HANBACK. I think you are testifying to the wrong dates. Don't you mean September?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir. I went over to Mr. Goode's office, whatever date it was. I can tell the exact date by my memorandum book, probably. I asked him if he had received from Mr. McCorry, the United States district attorney for the western district of Tennessee, a copy of our letter asking him to institute suit in the name of the United States to annul or cancel the patents of the American Bell Telephone Company. He told me he had not. I said: "It ought to have reached you before now." While I was there talking to him it was either brought in or he sent out for it, I don't remember which. I saw he had received it, and I turned around and walked out and had no further conversation with him about it at that time.

Q. You did not say a word to him about bringing the suit on your relation?—A. Not a word. I did not know whether he was going to bring it at all or not. I thought it was probable he might decline to bring it, and I intended to go to the President on the subject. If he had declined, Mr. Huntington and myself would have gone to the President, and I should have insisted on my views there; but I went to his office the next day and found that he was giving the directions. It occurred to me then to ask him to have the suit brought, as I wanted it; but as I had been unfortunate with Mr. McCorry, who had declined to do it for the reason, as he said, that we might do the very same thing we were charging the Bell Telephone Company with doing, I thought, perhaps, I had better not venture upon a discussion of that question with Mr. Goode, and allowed him to take his own course, thinking if it got back to the courts in the way we did not want it, that perhaps we would be able to correct it afterwards.

Q. And so you came on here and gave up all your cherished schemes without any effort to secure the desired object?—A. Oh, no; I did not give up all my cherished schemes. One of my schemes when I came here was to see that the bill was filed. If it had not been done, I should have staid here until it was done.

Q. But that was the main reason why you came here?—A. Oh, no; that was not the main reason; it was to have it filed, and have it filed as I desired it to be filed, for the reason that I thought it would be more beneficial to us if filed in that way. It was a selfish motive altogether on my part. I wanted to get it done solely for that reason.

Q. At the conversation between Mr. Garland and yourself, and the gentlemen who called upon him about the 1st of August, Mr. Garland absolutely refused to consider the question at all, or to have any conversation in regard to it.—A. Absolutely, unconditionally, and unequivocally, just in the language I have given you.

Q. And you gentlemen shortly after that left here, and subsequently met in Memphis, or somewhere in that vicinity, for the purpose of making another application to him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What reason had you to think he would grant that application?—A. We didn't have any; we knew he would not.

Q. Why did you make it?—A. So that we could go to the President. We could not go there any other way. We could not make application directly to the President.

Q. What was your idea in regard to the jurisdiction or powers of the Attorney-General setting out of view the law which you supposed to exist? Did you understand it was a matter of right which you could enforce; that the Attorney-General, on the application of any one holding a patent, would be obliged to commence a suit of this kind, or that it was a matter in his discretion and judgment?—A. We had no right we could enforce. We could not force the Attorney-General by any process I know of. I don't believe we could have mandamusd him.

Q. It being a matter of discretion, then, he would exercise that power himself, on his own motion. Do you know of any case in which an Attorney General has ever been authorized by the President to bring a suit of that kind or a suit of any kind?—A. No; I never got hold of so strong a corporation as this.

Q. Yes or no will answer that question.—A. I know of a case where the President directed one to be suspended, and I supposed that if he had that power he might direct one to be brought.

Q. Did you ever know of the President ordering the Attorney-General to commence a suit?—A. No, sir; and I do not know that he would have done it in this case; but we intended to try it. Mr. Van Benthuyzen's idea was that if the President did not do it we would have to appeal to Congress, like the Bell Company has done, and have a law passed to do it. I was out of Congress then.

Q. You say you were not certain this suit was going to be brought when the papers were sent here from Memphis?—A. I was quite certain it ought to be.

Q. Were you not of opinion that it was very likely to be brought?—A. Oh, no; I thought it was very doubtful.

Q. Is it not a fact that the bill was drawn up before the papers were sent to Washington?—A. I don't know whether the bill was completed or not before they were sent.

Q. There was a draft made of the bill, was there not?—A. I had written one before that time.

Q. And you gentlemen who went there to inaugurate these proceedings, before you completed your labors and sent off the application, drew this bill that was to be filed and that was filed subsequently, did you not?—A. I started to answer, and you kept on with your question. Are you through now?

Q. Yes.—A. I prepared a draft of a bill some time before; some two weeks, perhaps; and handed it to the other gentlemen, and they commenced to write it. Whether they finished it or not before that time I do not know. I cannot say whether it was finished or not; but it would have been a very proper thing for it to have been finished and submitted to Mr. McCorry before he decided what he would do. It would have been a very proper thing for them to have done.

Q. How long after this suit was ordered by Mr. Goode was this bill filed in Memphis?—A. I do not know when it was filed; the 9th or 10th, I think.

Q. It was ordered, as the record shows, on the 4th?—A. Perhaps so.

Q. How long would it take a letter generally to go from Washington to Memphis?—A. Two days.

Q. Then it was filed within two or three days after the order got there?—A. If the dates are correct, it was. It might have been filed in two or three hours all the same.

Q. What I am aiming at is this: You gentlemen thought it very probable when that application was drawn, that that suit would be ordered by the Government?—

A. No; we thought it was doubtful.

Q. Then why was the bill drawn and everything made ready?—A. They wanted to have it ready to submit to Mr. McCorry, I suppose. I don't know that they did finish it before he was required to file the bill, or send it to him. He ought to have seen it.

Q. Was that the reason you gentlemen had for drawing the bill?—A. That was the idea I had, and that was the reason I wrote it. I wanted to show him the character of bill we wanted him to file, and let him pass judgment upon it and decide upon the propriety of his action and know what he was doing.

Q. What reason had you to suppose that the President of the United States, without any precedent in that regard, would order the Attorney-General to commence that suit?—A. I did not suppose he would do it.

Q. Then what was the foundation of the thing; you knew Mr. Garland would not do it?—A. I was going to make an effort to get him to do it.

Q. All this trouble had been gone through with first, the papers had been withdrawn, and you gentlemen had gone down to Memphis and had a long consultation; you had drawn up this application; you had drawn the bill alluded to a few moments ago; you had come here to Washington, and Mr. Huntington had come with you, with no idea either that Attorney-General Garland would commence the suit or that the President would order it. How did you expect to accomplish it?—A. I cannot say. I had no idea he would do it. I didn't know what he would do.

Q. You did not expect it?—A. Possibly, if I said I did not expect it, I put it a little too strong.

Q. What reason had you to expect the President to interfere?—A. No reason, except I thought it was the duty of the Attorney-General to do it, and if the Attorney-General refused to do his duty I took it for granted the President would direct him to do it.

Q. Is it not a fact that the President usually consults the Attorney-General in regard to such matters instead of ordering the Attorney-General as to what action he shall take?—A. I don't believe it is with this Cabinet. I am told Mr. Cleveland does not consult them very much.

Q. Not in regard to legal matters?—A. I am told that they consult him about everything; that that is his method.

Q. About bringing suits?—A. I am told that in the transaction of Government business Mr. Cleveland is the chairman of the committee down there.

Q. Did you think he would order a suit to be brought without consulting the Attorney-General?—A. He ordered one to be stopped.

Q. That is quite true, and it was very proper.—A. In your view it was. I thought it would be just as proper to start one as to stop one.

Q. If you had had no idea that Attorney-General Garland would commence this suit or have anything to do with it, why did you say to Mr. Huntington in Cincinnati, when you learned Mr. Garland had left the city, that he was going to have his trip for nothing?—A. I did not know of any other way to get it to the President, if it went there at all, except through the Department of Justice. Mr. Garland was the Attorney-General, and I did not know of any other way to get it to the President except through him.

Q. You did not know there was anybody to act in his place?—A. Oh, yes; I knew there were other officers there, and I know, if I had thought about it, that they would have the power to act in his place. I knew enough about the Department to know that. In his absence the Solicitor-General or some one of the assistants do take his place. Just here a matter occurs to me that I wish to mention. It has been said I mentioned the name of Mr. Goode. If I ever mentioned anybody I think I mentioned Mr. Maury, one of the Assistant Attorneys-General, because he had directed the other suits to be commenced. He had directed the suits against the Torpedo Company and against the Barbed Wire Company. He had directed them, and my idea was to go to him, and I think I mentioned it.

Q. Was it not the theory upon which this application was made that came from Memphis, that the Attorney-General was obliged, under the law which you supposed had passed, to bring that suit, and when you came here if he refused to do it were you not going to the President to say, "Here is a law, and it must be carried out?"—A. Unquestionably our theory was that it was his duty to do it under that law. I think it is the duty of every officer to obey every public law, whatever his private interests.

Q. The theory upon which you gentlemen were going was that that bill which you supposed had passed was in fact a law, and that you could demand of the Attorney-General the action you desired, and in the event of his refusal you could go to the President and demand that he enforce action under that law?—A. Yes, sir; I thought we had a perfect right to demand it.

Q. It was with that idea that this application was sent from Memphis?—A. No; I cannot say that was the idea, because I may have discovered previous to that time that that bill had not become a law. I do not remember the exact date when I discovered that fact; but I thought, and I think yet, as a lawyer, that he had the same power to bring a suit without the passage of that bill as he would have had with it, except that the bill directed the particular manner of bringing it. It was a cumulative remedy. It did not confer any more power on him than he had before. It prescribed the method, but did not confer any power he did not have before.

Q. I understood you to say that you had noticed in the papers of Memphis that Attorney-General Garland was going to leave the city, but you did not know whether he had gone or not?—A. Yes, sir; I did not know whether he had gone until I saw it in the Cincinnati papers. I had seen he was going to leave.

Q. Had there been any controversy between your company and the company which Mr. Van Benthuyzen represented in regard to priority of patents or infringements?—A. Yes, sir; there had been; hardly a controversy between the companies. There had been something of a controversy between Senator Harris and Mr. Van Benthuyzen that I learned of by correspondence with gentlemen in New Orleans; that he had claimed that the patents sold to us by Harry Rogers embraced certain patents sold to him, and that certain of those patents infringed some that he had, but there was no controversy beyond that. I heard he threatened to bring suit against some people in New Orleans if they used our patents, and I mentioned it to him when I first met him in Pittsburgh.

Q. In these agreements that you and he entered into were all these matters arranged?

Mr. RANNEY. I object to your going into the contents of that agreement.

Mr. MOFFATT. As I understand it, there was a written contract and a verbal agreement.

Mr. RANNEY. There was a verbal agreement made in Pittsburgh and reduced to writing in Washington; and that is the contract in question.

The WITNESS. I am not going to say a word about that. I am going to speak about a verbal agreement we had afterwards.

Q. That is the one as to which I am inquiring.—A. I am not going to give the contents of any contract that is in writing. Before I would talk to Mr. Van Benthuyzen about making any agreement at all I said to him "I understand you claim that you are the owner of our patents, or that our patents infringe yours, and I want to settle that question before you and I have any agreement about this matter. I do not want any lawsuit with you." That thing was decided before we made any agreement at all. He said "Very well; I will waive that. They are my patents, and you infringe me, but I have got enough without them." He still claims some infringement.

Q. When was it that the difficulty or altercation occurred between you and young Rogers?—A. I cannot give the date, and I do not think it is a proper subject of inquiry for Congress. The police court would be a better place. I am going to ask this committee to strike out of the record all that has been said on that subject.

Q. I am not asking you about the trouble, but simply the date when it occurred.—A. I ask the committee now to strike out of the record all the testimony on that subject. I do not think it is embraced in this inquiry by Congress. If it is, I would like to give my version of it. It was simply a fight between me and young Rogers, which has been paraded in the papers. I don't care about my personal affairs being—

Mr. OATES. Was not that the meeting before the last?

The WITNESS. It was the last meeting we had. The police court is a better tribunal to inquire into that than a committee of Congress. I don't know the date. The meeting is not recorded.

Mr. RANNEY. That is the trouble; those meetings were not recorded.

The WITNESS. I think it was about the 25th of January.

The CHAIRMAN. I am afraid it is too late to have the matter stricken out. It has been printed.

The WITNESS. Then perhaps I should give the correct version. The version given is wholly incorrect. I did not suppose the committee would stop to make inquiries into matters of that kind. It does not seem to me to be a proper inquiry. You brought it out by your direct examination of Mr. Rogers. I thought it was not a proper subject. When I come before the committee again I would like to tell my story about that.

The CHAIRMAN. I did not ask any question about it. It was Mr. Hanback,

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I asked you the other day about the date of an opinion from Mr. Marble. In looking over the papers I find that opinion of October 22.—A. That had reference to the National Improved Company.

Q. It is an opinion of Mr. Marble, is it not?—A. Yes; this is an opinion on that subject.

Mr. RANNEY. I want to put it in.

The WITNESS. I want an opportunity to explain it before it goes in. This is on another subject. I spoke of the other, and I want to speak of this, if it is put in.

By Mr. HANBACK:

Q. You were present when Mr. Joseph Pulitzer was sworn and testified, were you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. In his testimony he uses this language:

"I had no motive, private or otherwise, than that arising from the feeling that the publication of these facts was in the nature of news, and I honestly believed in the nature of a public service."

Have you any reason to believe otherwise so far as Mr. Pulitzer is concerned that he was influenced by any other motive?

Mr. EDEN. That is not proper.

A. I want to answer it; I want to cross-examine Mr. Pulitzer when you put him back on the stand.

Mr. RANNEY. Unless the witness knows some fact about it I don't think his opinion should be taken.

The WITNESS. He is an eminent reformer; I don't know of any other reason for his action.

Mr. HANBACK. The opinion of the witness has been taken right along. He testified a few moments ago as to his opinion about the power of the Bell Company in controlling Congressmen, &c.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not object to it if the committee want to hear it.

Mr. HANBACK. It is simply touching his reason for having testified in the manner in which he did. He testified positively—

Mr. RANNEY. The quickest way is to have the question answered.

Mr. MILLARD. Has he any facts?

Mr. HANBACK. Have you any facts, Colonel Young, which you can give now?

Mr. OATES. I think you had better defer that until another time.

The WITNESS. That may come out at a later stage of the proceedings.

Mr. OATES. I do not object to your asking any questions, but we had better not do it this evening. If we go into that we will be here two hours longer.

Mr. MOFFATT. I would like to ask one question that can be answered in a moment.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Have you any of the correspondence between you and Mr. Van Benthuyzen or any other parties in regard to the commencement of these suits?—A. I may have some letters from Mr. Van Benthuyzen; one or two; when I was corresponding with him I was traveling about; I didn't have any letter file with me and I didn't keep them; he never wrote me many letters; probably half a dozen letters would cover all he ever wrote me; I have not looked carefully through all the letter files I have to ascertain whether I have got any of them or not, but I will do it between now and Monday; I have not had time; you gentlemen have kept me so busy.

The CHAIRMAN (showing paper to witness). I show you a certificate authorized to be issued by the Pan-Electric Telephone Company; state whether that is the certificate printed by direction of the company. It was proved the other day, but we did not get it on the record.—A. Yes, sir; this is the form; it was taken out of the book.

The CHAIRMAN. Hand it to the stenographer and let him include it in the record.

The following is the certificate referred to:

OFFICE OF THE PAN-ELECTRIC TELEPHONE COMPANY.

This certificate entitles ——— to ——— shares of the capital stock of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, of the par value of one hundred dollars each, so soon as the validity of the patents is judicially determined in any litigation instituted for that purpose. But this certificate is not transferable except with the consent of the president and secretary of the company endorsed hereon.

In witness whereof the company has caused its corporate seal and the official signatures of its president and secretary to be hereto attached at its office in the city of Washington, D. C., on this the ——— day of ———, 188—.

President.

[SEAL.] _____,
Secretary.

Mr. OATES. This is a good place to have Senator Vest's deposition go into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. The deposition of Senator Vest can be put in at this time if there be no objection.

The deposition referred to is as follows:

The subcommittee of the special committee—appointed under a resolution of the House of February 26, 1886, charged with the investigation of certain matters relating to the Pan-Electric and Bell Telephone Companies—consisting of Messrs. Hale and Millard, visited the residence of George G. Vest for the purpose of taking his testimony in regard to the subject-matter ordered to be investigated by the committee, Mr. Vest stating that he had been ordered by his physician to leave the city on Friday the 12th instant, and that he desired to give his evidence before leaving.

Hon. GEORGE G. VEST, being duly sworn, says:

In June, 1884, I purchased 100 shares of stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, for which I paid to Senator Isham G. Harris, treasurer of the company, $1,000 cash, giving my check on the National Metropolitan Bank, of this city, for that amount, and which check my bank book shows to have been paid on the next day.

At the time of the purchase I received from Senator Harris the following paper:

"For value received, we, the undersigned, have this day sold, and by these presents do sell, convey, and assign, to George G. Vest an undivided interest of $10,000 (on the basis of a capital stock of $5,000,000 for the whole) in the hereinafter described inventions and discoveries for utilizing electricity, some of which are patented and upon the others patents have been applied for and are still pending, and also the same proportionate interest in any improvements that we may hereafter make upon the same, and in any other discoveries or inventions in the same line which we may hereafter make.

"The patents already granted are as follows:

"One numbered 130662, granted August 20, 1872; one numbered 216760, granted June 24, 1879; one numbered 210213, granted November 26, 1878; one numbered 268294, granted November 28, 1882; one numbered 269326, granted December 19, 1882; one numbered 277349, granted May 8, 1883; one numbered 281560, granted July 17, 1883; one numbered 297166, granted April 22, 1884; one numbered 297167, granted April 22, 1884; one numbered 297168, granted April 22, 1884.

"And the applications for patents filed and still pending are as follows: Serial numbers and dates as follows: One, serial No. 69966, August 22, 1882; one, serial No. 115564, December 26, 1883; one, serial No. 122965, March 4, 1884; one, serial No. 126310, April 1, 1884; one, serial No. 126384, April 2, 1884.

"And an undivided interest of one-half of one numbered 128789, April 21, 1884.

"To have and to hold to him, the said George G. Vest, his heirs and assigns, for and during the term that said patents have to run.

"In testimony whereof we have hereunto set our hands and affixed our seals on this the 4th June, 1884.

"By his attorney-in-fact:

"ISHAM G. HARRIS."

Afterwards, on the 28th day of April, 1885, I received by mail a certificate for 90 shares of stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and when I made inquiry why the certificate was not for 100 shares, I was told that 10 per cent. of the stock belonging to each stockholder had been set aside as a fund to meet the expenses of litigation which was anticipated with the Bell Telephone Company in regard to the validity of the Pan-Electric patent. The following is the certificate:

[Number 14. Shares, 90.]

OFFICE OF THE PAN-ELECTRIC TELEPHONE COMPANY.

This certificate entitles George G. Vest to 90 shares of the capital stock of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, of the par value of one hundred dollars each, so soon as the validity of the patents is judicially determined in any litigation instituted for that purpose. But this certificate is not transferable except with the consent of the president and secretary of the company indorsed hereon.

In witness whereof, the company has caused its corporate seal and the official signatures of its president and secretary to be hereto attached at its office in the city of Washington, D. C., on this the 28th day of April, 1885.

[SEAL.]

J. E. JOHNSTON, President,
CASEY YOUNG, Secretary.

I never had anything to do with the management of the company, or any other connection with it than as a stockholder. I paid the highest price at which the stock has been sold, and I made the investment on my own judgment and without solicitation from any one. Before purchasing the stock I saw one of the instruments operate, and was struck with its superiority over any telephone I had ever seen. Upon inquiry I was told that Senator Harris could give me any information in regard to the matter, and I therefore went to him. He stated that none of the stock was on the market, and in fact that none had then been issued, but that he would see his associates in the enterprise and if they were willing he would be very glad to let me have an interest equal to one hundred shares at $10 per share. I asked him if he had examined the legal questions involved as to the validity of the patent, and he told me that he had, and that in his judgment there was no conflict between this patent and that of the Bell telephone, but he referred me for further information on this point to Senator Garland, who was the attorney for the company. I then conversed with Senator Garland, who stated to me that he had examined the matter very thoroughly, and that he had no doubt the Pan-Electric patent was a perfectly valid one. I also inquired if there could be any contingency in which Congress would be called upon to legislate in the matter, and was told that no such contingency could arise—nor could I myself see how it was possible that Congress could have anything to do with the subject.

When I purchased the stock in June, 1884, Mr. Cleveland had not been nominated for the Presidency, and no one dreamed of Mr. Garland being made Attorney-General. I never heard of any scheme or project to have any legislation by Congress establishing a national telephone in the interest of the Pan-Electric Company until I saw it published in a New York paper some weeks ago; nor did I ever think of Mr. Garland's having any official position which could be used in the interest of the company. In fact, after Cleveland's election, when a paper was brought around on the Democratic side of the Senate to secure signatures in Mr. Garland's interest for the office of Attorney-General I declined to sign it, and, as is very well known to my colleagues in the Senate and to the Missouri delegation in Congress, I earnestly urged the President to appoint another gentleman.

I had as much right to buy this stock as to purchase a horse or a house, and if I lose every dollar of the investment, it is my business and nobody else's.

Since this matter has been agitated in the newspapers an offer has been made to me for the purchase of my stock upon terms which would prevent any loss on my part, but I declined to sell at any price, for two reasons: (1) Because I did not choose to even appear in the attitude of apologizing for what I had done, or attempting to evade the issue as presented by certain newspapers; and (2) because I do not propose to be coerced by any sort of clamor from any source into disposing of property which I had bought and honestly paid for until I thought proper on my own judgment and for my own interest to do so.

I have never advised or requested any one to purchase any of the stock, nor am I soliciting advice or sympathy myself. When I need either I shall not trouble the persons now tendering it so profusely and from such obviously unselfish motives.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Question. I understand it was a cash transaction between you and Mr. Harris?—Answer. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you have any conversation with anybody else in regard to its value?—A. I have an indistinct recollection of talking to Casey Young about it, and also to Senator Edmunds. I recollect going over to his (Edmunds's) seat and asking him about it. He told me of a decision in a telephone case, but that he had not seen the opinion, and said he would send it to me, which he never did.

Q. Did Mr. Casey Young tell you who the directors were?—A. No; he did not tell me. I knew who the original corporators were. There was a circular sent to me stating who were interested. I know all the directors personally except Mr. Rogers. I never saw him in my life that I know of.

Q. When was this conference with these men?—A. My conference was with Mr. Harris, but he said, "Go to Garland, he is our attorney, and talk to him." I am not sure but what Mr. Garland handed me his written opinion.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Who was that written opinion given to?—A. I do not recollect. It was given to some man who was about to buy stock. I do not put absolute confidence in anybody's legal opinion; I am a lawyer myself.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You purchased, as you said, one hundred shares and they delivered only ninety?—A. They never delivered but ninety. The ten shares they kept to sustain the cases, as I understand it. The mother company had undertaken to defend the subcompanies,

I suppose. I met Casey Young and asked him what they meant by only giving me ninety shares. This was Mr. Young's explanation.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. How long had the company been organized before you bought shares?—A. I do not know. It was a Tennessee company, if I understand aright. I asked Senator Harris who the stockholders were; I had supposed there were only fourteen. He told me there were a couple of ladies whom he had let in; he let them have 250 shares at $10 per share, which was the same as I paid. Harris said they let Governor Brown in at incorporators' rates. I never heard of any other shareholders except George Howard of this city, who bought 50 shares for $500.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Did you talk to Governor Brown about it?—A. Not at all.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Mr. Atkins was not then in Congress?—A. I believe not.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Was there anything ever said to you about local companies being formed? had you any interest in the shares of local companies?—A. I have a slight, indistinct recollection that something like that was said. I think they said when they sold to home companies that they received royalties, and they proposed to sell territory. The State of Missouri was sold. I have a recollection that they paid me $12 or $15 as a dividend.

Q. Do you recollect when?—A. My impression is that it was the latter part of last summer. It was either $10 or $15.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Do you recollect who bought Missouri?—A. I do not know all the parties; Messrs. Andrew, Lancaster, and others.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. When did you first hear that the suit would be brought by the Government?—A. I cannot say with any exactness. It was some time in July or August of last year. That is my recollection of it.

Q. Whom was that from?—A. My first intimation was from Mr. Casey Young, that he was trying to get such a suit brought to test the validity of the Bell telephone. The first I saw of the suit being brought was in the newspapers.

Q. Did Mr. Harris make any special inducements to you?—A. Never. He said to me that the stock was not for sale. They thought they would not put any of it on the market until the validity of the patent was sustained. He told me it was a good thing, and spoke of Rogers as a good electrician.

Q. Do you recollect when you saw Young?—A. I could not be positive when I saw Young.

Q. You say that since this matter has been mentioned an offer has been made to buy your shares. Would you have any objection to telling who offered to buy?—A. Mr. Stilson Hutchins of the Post was the person who desired to purchase my stock. On reflection I told him I did not want to sell; he said if I did that he could fix it so that I should not lose anything, or words to that effect.

Q. Do you recollect who paid you the dividend?—A. It was sent to me by mail. I think it was $15.

Q. You spoke of your number being 14; was that stated to you at the time of the purchase?—A. No, sir; Governor Harris said that 500 shares had been sold to two ladies, each taking 250 shares at $10 per share, the same as I paid. He also stated that George Howard had taken 50 shares at $10 per share. I did not know then that Governor Brown was a stockholder. They told me afterwards they had let Brown have the stock at the same price the incorporators paid.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Did Casey Young say why the case was to be tried?—A. Yes; he told me that the Bell patent had been procured by fraud; that an old man named Reis had the right to the patent. Young said, "All we want is a fair trial and an equal chance and no collusion"; that the fair way was for the United States to make a test case, and that if suit was brought in the East here it would be bought off, and they wanted it tried in the West. It seemed to me that Young had particular control of the matter after Garland went into the cabinet.

G. G. VEST.

Mr. RANNEY (resuming his examination of Colonel Young). I have looked over your letter books and I do not find a single letter written to you by your associates. The letters are all those of outside parties.

The WITNESS. Didn't you find some from General Johnston and Senator Harris there?

Mr. RANNEY. You have not kept a single letter, except from outside parties, so far as I have been able to discover.

The WITNESS. That letter book was kept while I was in Washington, and I had no written correspondence with Senator Harris and General Johnston. They were here and it was not necessary. I will try to find every letter I have.

Mr. MOFFATT. Would it not be well to put in the record the minutes of the meetings of stockholders. There are not many of them, and there is something in every meeting that we want.

The WITNESS. They would be of more service to the Bell Company than they would to a committee of Congress.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not like to lumber up the record.

The committee then adjourned until Tuesday, March 30, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Tuesday, March 30, 1886.

The committee met at 12.30 p. m.

Senator I. G. HARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I was not aware of the fact, until a few moments ago, that the committee expected to hear me to-day, and have made engagements wholly inconsistent with my presence before the committee. I shall be very glad to come before the committee at any time that may now be named.

Mr. OATES (in the chair). After we had adjourned it occurred to me that there had been no resolution or motion that you should be notified to appear. We unintentionally omitted to take that action.

Senator HARRIS. I stated to the chairman of the committee, at the first or second session of the committee, that I desired to come before the committee at such time as might be convenient.

Mr. RANNEY. Can you name a day?

Senator HARRIS. I can come with convenience on any day except to-day. I have engagements for to-day elsewhere.

Mr. OATES. Will to-morrow suit you?

Senator HARRIS. Perfectly.

Mr. OATES. I suppose that will suit the committee. What hour shall we fix?

Senator HARRIS. It would suit me better to appear at 12.30 o'clock than at any other time. My committee duties occupy most of my mornings, and I dislike to be absent during the morning hour in the Senate until I have had an opportunity of doing whatever business I may chance to have. Half-past 12 or 1 o'clock will suit better than any other hour, but I will conform to the convenience of the committee.

Mr. OATES. If there is no objection, 12.30 o'clock to-morrow will be fixed as the time for your examination.

Senator HARRIS. I will be here at that time.

Hon. CASEY YOUNG then came before the committee for further examination:

Mr. OATES (in the chair). Some members of the committee desire to examine you further, Colonel Young.

The WITNESS. I shall be very happy to entertain them.

Mr. MILLARD. I should like to ask you a few questions.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Have you yet received the agreement to which reference has frequently been made?—A. No, sir; but I can oblige the committee with my own copy of that agreement, which I have found. I did not know of its existence at the time I was examined, and probably I may have been a little mistaken in my testimony on the subject. If the committee will turn to the bottom of page 175 of the record you will see that I testified to a subsequent verbal agreement that was made.

Q. Was that in regard to the Government suit?—A. Yes, sir; I said, in answer to a question by Mr. Ranney, or, perhaps, you, that subsequently a verbal agreement was made. It was my belief at that time, and I so stated, that that agreement had never been reduced to writing. I find I was mistaken. I have found the agreement, which I will hand to the committee. I found in the tray of my trunk, in looking through it, this agreement that I had forgotten all about. [Exhibiting paper.] This is the agreement I am talking about.

Mr. MILLARD. I do not ask you about that agreement now.

Mr. RANNEY. Before you put it into the record or read it we would like to look at it.

The WITNESS. One at a time. Mr. Millard is asking me questions. Let me answer his questions.

Q. What I wish to know is whether you have yet received from Mr. Van Benthuyzen a copy of that agreement?—A. No, sir; I have not. I showed you a telegram from him the other day in which he said he would bring all the papers himself.

Q. Have you any further information in regard to that agreement?—A. I had, and started to give it. I have had no information from him, but I have here before me, whenever you want it, my copy of that agreement. I have heard nothing from him since the telegram I showed you the other day.

Q. You stated, in answer to a question put by Mr. Ranney, that the conference held at the Ebbitt House was in pursuance of correspondence between you and Van Benthuyzen?—A. I think there was one letter written to me by Van Benthuyzen, either from Waukesha Springs or New York, I do not remember which.

Q. Have you got that letter?—A. No, sir, I have not. I have examined all my papers, and I have not got it. I received that letter at home, I think, and I kept none of the files of my telephonic correspondence there, and whether I tore it up or threw it aside, I don't remember.

Q. Have you produced before this committee any letters between you and Van Benthuyzen or McCorry or Gantt, or any of your associates, since the 7th of July last?—A. I am not sure whether there were any in the book I handed in or not.

Q. There are none.—A. Then I have not produced any. Those are all I have produced.

Q. You have produced no correspondence, then, since that date?—A. I don't think I have; I was traveling about all the time. I don't remember whether I received any letters. I was with these gentlemen most of the time, and Colonel Gantt lived in my town.

Q. I understood you were required to produce all the letters that passed between you and your associates?—A. Yes, sir; in reference to this matter, and I have done so, as far as I have been able to find them.

Q. I understand you are still the secretary and treasurer of the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. (Handing book to witness). Is this the cash book of the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Kept under your direction?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. MILLARD. I want it marked for identification.

The WITNESS. It has been marked already, as the record shows.

Mr. MILLARD. Not the book.

The WITNESS. The account which was drawn off perhaps is what I refer to.

(The cash book above referred to was marked by the stenographer "For identification, March 30, 1886.")

Q. Under date of July 8, 1885, I find the following: "Fare from Baltimore to Pittsburgh, $13.50."—A. Yes, sir; that was when I went to Pittsburgh from Baltimore. I don't know whether that is the exact date or not.

Q. That was for your expenses to Pittsburgh, where you met Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. "Sleeping-car fare, $2."—A. Yes, sir; I went on a sleeping-car.

Q. "Bill at Seventh Avenue Hotel, Pittsburgh, $10.43." That was your hotel bill there?—A. Yes, sir; I suppose so.

Q. "Fare to Memphis, $21," under date of July 12.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you go from Pittsburgh to Memphis?—A. I did, directly. I think that was the date. Perhaps in transcribing it from my memorandum book the clerk may not have got exactly the date. That was about the time. Those entries are in the handwriting of my clerk.

Q. When did you say you reached Memphis?—A. Oh, I suppose I reached there about the next day, or the second day, perhaps; I don't remember the exact day.

Q. "Sleeper to Memphis, $3."—A. Yes, sir; I went on a sleeper.

Q. What is the entry under date of the 9th?—A. "Paid for coupons, Patent Office;" little things you buy to pay for patents at the Patent Office.

Q. Was that before leaving?—A. I don't know; I can't tell now; perhaps so. Those accounts are scattered along.

Q. "Paid United States circuit court for copying bill, $6," under date of July 15.—A. I guess that was the bill which we filed ourselves against the Bell Company. I think I had it copied to send to General Bradley Johnson. I am not sure.

Q. Are you quite certain of that?—A. Oh, no; but I take it from the date that it must have been that. There was no other bill there to copy but that. It must have been that, I think.

Q. Under date of the 15th, "paid stenographer for writing letters for company, $5."—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was that stenographer?—A. Mr. Stevens.

Q. What is his given name?—A. I can't remember. I believe it is A. S. Stevens,

Q. Where does he reside?—A. He resides in Memphis.

Q. To whom did you write?—A. It is impossible to tell. I wrote, I think, mostly to people who had written to me about the telephone, at a distance.

Q. Did you not write to parties here in Washington?—A. I may have done so; I am not sure. It is very possible I did; but I can't remember now.

Q. Do you not remember a single person to whom you wrote?—A. No. I would often let a whole pile of letters accumulate about my professional business—

Mr. MILLARD. I do not want to digress.

The WITNESS. I am explaining to you how it happened that I had a stenographer. I couldn't write. My arm was disabled, and I generally let my letters accumulate for a month or two weeks, and then got a stenographer and dictated replies to him. I can't tell to whom I did write.

Q. July 20, 1885, paid for printing bill $36?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where was that done?—A. In Memphis.

Q. What bill was that?—A. That was a bill we filed against the Bell Telephone Company.

Q. You are quite positive of that?—A. Oh, yes; I know there was no other bill filed.

Q. Coming down to July 27, "Started to Washington with Colonel Gantt on business of company."—A. Yes, sir. That was the time I came here when we went to see the Attorney-General. You say "started." I am not sure about the exact day. I suppose that is the correct date. I got here on the 30th, and so probably started a day later than that.

Q. The company not only paid your expenses, but they paid the expenses of Colonel Gantt also?—A. Oh, yes; we both came on business of the company.

Q. July 27, "tickets for two, $52.50."—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Yourself and Colonel Gantt?—A. I suppose so; that is about what it would cost.

Q. "Bill at Ebbitt House, $16."—A. I suppose that is right; I don't know.

Q. "Paid bill for Colonel Gantt, $26.25."—A. I suppose so.

Q. What is the entry on the date of August 4?—A. My bill at Mrs. Banes, it looks like; it ought to be "Ryan." The clerk has got it wrong.

Q. In Washington?—A. Yes, sir; 1227 G street. It is not Banes; it is Ryan.

Q. Ticket back to Memphis, how much?—A. Twenty-six dollars.

Q. That was for yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALE. I would like to make a point on this testimony. I do not understand that we are investigating the private accounts between Mr. Young and this company. I do not think the testimony is pertinent to the inquiry at all.

Mr. OATES. I do not know what the gentleman's purpose is. I do not see any relevancy at all.

The WITNESS. There was never any complaint made by the company, that I know of.

Mr. MILLARD. I think Mr. Hall recognizes the materiality of the evidence.

Mr. HALL. It can all be developed by asking the witness the direct question. There is no controversy about it all.

Mr. MILLARD. I think if you will look at the evidence you will see there is.

Mr. HALL. The witness has testified a dozen times that they all came here for the same purpose and were operating together; that that was the agreement.

Mr. MILLARD. It cannot do any harm.

Mr. HALE. It will consume a great deal of time.

Mr. OATES. I do not think we ought to go into anything because it may not do any harm. If you have any point to make, that is another thing.

Mr. MILLARD. Whatever Colonel Young and whatever Colonel Gantt did, they did for the company. They came on here to have a conference and appeared before Goode and before Garland—

The WITNESS. I have testified that we did come for that purpose and did all we could to have this suit brought; that we did everything proper and lawful to be done—

Mr. MILLARD. Hold on.

The WITNESS. I want to satisfy you about that matter.

Mr. HALE. I want the matter passed on. If we are going through this private investigation I would like to understand it. The witness says he will state generally, if necessary, that he was acting for the company.

The WITNESS. And did everything I could; and employed lawyers to help me.

Mr. HALE. This seems to be an investigation of private accounts between the witness and his company.

Mr. OATES (in the chair). Objection is made to the further examination of the witness as to the accounts shown on this book, about which questions are being put. Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. RANNEY. I understand the book is in evidence, and these items appear upon it. We cannot fully tell what the importance of this examination may be. It seems me it would be better to have the particular items referred to than to have the whole book copied into the record. These items are important in one aspect in my view—as to the dates about which I inquired. They serve to fix those dates, and so are important in connection with the facts and circumstances surrounding the bringing of the suit.

Mr. OATES. I thought a part of the books was to be put in; not the whole.

Mr. MILLARD. These items established the fact that whatever Colonel Young did in this matter, either in Memphis or here in Washington, before Solicitor-General Goode or Attorney-General Garland, or subsequently before the Interior Department was the act of this company.

The WITNESS. Unquestionably.

Mr. RANNEY. We want to find out by whom these expenses were paid.

The WITNESS. The company paid all the expenses.

Mr. RANNEY. And whether this suit brought in Tennessee, under the order of Mr. Goode, was brought for the general public welfare, or whether it was brought for individual benefit with the help of the Government.

Mr. HALL. We were not directed to take an account and find out how much money had been spent as far as the company is concerned.

Mr. RANNEY. The resolution comprehends that.

Mr. MILLARD. I do not want to lumber up the record by putting the whole book in.

Mr. OATES. I think it is better not to put the whole book in. You want to select parts of it.

Mr. MILLARD. That is all.

Mr. EDEN. Any part that is material might be put in.

Mr. MILLARD. That is what I am after. I am simply calling the attention of the witness to certain expenditures at certain times.

Mr. EDEN. How does it bear upon the matter we are called upon to investigate to inquire of the witness the details of the money he spent?

Mr. RANNEY. One of the claims here is that this Government suit was brought ostensibly in behalf of the public, while, as a matter of fact, it was for the benefit of these interested individuals. We want to know what the expenses were, and by whom.

Mr. MILLARD. That is the precise issue here.

Mr. RANNEY. We want to know if there was any false pretense or cover.

Mr. OATES. I do not object to any evidence to show that fact.

Mr. HALL. I suggest that the question how much the company paid to counsel is purely a private question. It is competent to ask whether expenses were incurred on behalf of this enterprise and who was being represented.

Mr. RANNEY. I think the evidence is competent and material.

Mr. OATES. The question is whether the examination should include particular items of expenditure for Colonel Young and Colonel Gantt, after the witness has already testified that these expenses were paid by the company to which they belong, and that they were interested parties, trying to have the suit brought, as he says, for the benefit of their company. He has testified to that several times.

Mr. RANNEY. Considerable latitude has already been allowed.

Mr. MILLARD. Is it conceded that the Government suit was brought for the purpose of benefiting the Pan-Electric Company?

Mr. OATES. Colonel Young has testified that his efforts were for that purpose, and it seems to me the inquiry should stop there.

Thereupon the question was put upon the motion of Mr. Hale to restrict the inquiry, and resulted as follows:

Ayes—Messrs. Oates, Eden, Hall, and Hale; noes—Messrs. Ranney, Millard, Hanback, and Moffatt.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Q. When was that conference held at the Ebbitt House?—A. I have not got my memorandum book here, and I cannot tell the exact date.

Q. Was it on the 30th or 31st of July?—A. I think it was on the 31st, and from there on, up to the time I left. We met every day. We were all stopping there.

Q. Under date of July 27 is an entry, "Tickets to Washington for two, $52.50." Was that for yourself and Colonel Gantt to attend that conference?—A. That was what we came for.

Q. And the expense was paid by the Pan-Electric Company?—A. It has been charged to them. I am not sure whether that is the exact date. I think probably we started a day or two later. The clerk has probably made a mistake, or I may have got the tickets a day or two before we started; I don't remember.

Q. Under date of August 30, "Ticket from Jackson to Washington, $25.40." For whom was that?—A. For me.

Q. How came you to be in Jackson?—A. I went to see Mr. McCorry, the district attorney, about this suit.

Q. In regard to bringing the Government suit?—A. Yes, sir. I stated all that in my testimony before.

Q. And the company paid your expenses?—A. Yes, sir; I charged it to the company. I have had no settlement with them.

Q. Did Gantt go to Jackson also?—A. No; I thought one lawyer was enough for that.

Q. Do I understand that Gantt appeared before the Interior Department at the hearing there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who paid his expenses?—A. I did.

Q. The company paid them?—A. Yes, sir; he was an employé of the company, and I did it without consulting them. They would have sanctioned it, no doubt. It was for the company.

Q. They also paid your expenses?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And they are charged on this book, are they not?—A. They are; or if they are not, they ought to be. Sometimes I forgot to make charges. They have got the best of me a good deal in that way, I suppose. All the items are down, unless I have forgotten some of them.

Q. You spoke of the National Improved Company having obtained certain evidence abroad that had cost them $75,000?—A. No; I don't think I said $75,000.

Q. Then it cost them a good deal of money?—A. Yes, sir. I don't think it cost that much.

Q. What was the character of that evidence?—A. It was in the nature of publications and correspondence and the proceedings of scientific bodies; quite a library. I did not read it all. A good deal of it is set out in the exhibits of the bill.

Q. How was it to be used?—A. It was to be used in these suits to establish the priority of inventions and to establish a good many facts about this controversy, questions of currents, air-waves, and all that sort of thing; an immense amount of it.

Q. If the Government suit that was ordered by Goode had come to trial would that evidence have been used in that trial?—A. We should unquestionably have furnished it to the Government, and they could have done as they pleased with it. We have done it already, though whether or not they think it worth anything I don't know.

Q. That was to be furnished by the National Improved Company?—A. There was no agreement about that except in that paper. I have no doubt they would have done it.

Q. I think you have so testified.—A. If I did, let it go. I testify now, if I did not then, that they would have done it.

Mr. EDEN. Judge Ranney objected to any statement about that contract.

Mr. MILLARD. I am not going into that.

The WITNESS. If I did not testify to it, I will now. They would have furnished it.

Q. You stated that Mr. Van Benthuyzen made a proposition to you to join forces in litigating against the Bell Company, and that he had gathered a large amount of evidence abroad.

The WITNESS. That was at Pittsburgh, was it not?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

A. Certainly we did make that agreement.

Q. And he did make that statement to you?—A. Yes, sir; in reference to these suits pending. We had two suits pending at that time, and it was about those suits we were talking.

Q. I understood you to say that that evidence was to be used upon the trial of any case to be brought by the Government?—A. I don't know whether that was in the agreement or not.

Q. Was that the intention?—A. If it was not, it ought to have been, and if I had thought of it it would have been. There was nothing about the Government suit in one paper. I will look at the other. It will be furnished to the Government now. I saw a telegram from Mr. Van Benthuyzen to his partner, who sits behind you, telling him to give to the Government all the material, the evidence, the models, and everything of that sort that we have and he will furnish them.

Q. Were you to compensate the National Improved Company in money for that evidence?—A. No, sir.

Mr. EDEN. I object to going into that inquiry.

The WITNESS. I have no objection to answering.

Mr. EDEN. Judge Ranney would not let the witness tell a word about that, and it is not fair that he should do so now.

The WITNESS. I do not object to telling anything they want to know.

Mr. MILLARD. I am not asking for the contents of any agreement.

The WITNESS. That was only a verbal agreement.

Q. Would the Pan-Electric Company have paid any money for any portion of that evidence?—A. No; that was only a verbal agreement at that time. We had accumulated a good deal ourselves. We had a book very carefully prepared, and had a good many models made. Nothing like $75,000; and I don't think they had, either. I don't think I stated that.

Q. Mr. Ranney asked you to state the persons who were present at the conference at the Ebbitt House.

The WITNESS. Do you want me to state again?

Mr. MILLARD. I want to call your attention to a circumstance. Whom did you state was present at that conference?—A. I stated, or if I did not I will state now, that I was present, Mr. Van Benthuyzen was present, Mr. C. P. Huntington was present, Col. George Gantt was present, and Mr. Von Briesen was present. Other gentlemen, perhaps, came in and out during the time we were there. I don't remember now. Those were the—

Q. Did you not—A. Allow me to finish my answer. There were other people possibly coming in and out; I don't remember how many or whether there were any; those I have named are the gentlemen whom I was conferring with, and those are the gentlemen I had business with.

Q. Did you not have business with another person who was there?—A. I don't remember that I had business with any others; there may have been other gentlemen there, and no doubt there were.

Q. Was Mr. Zenas Wilbur there?—A. Yes, sir; I saw him there; he held no conference with us.

Q. What business had he there?—A. He did not come to see me, and I cannot tell; Mr. Von Briesen introduced him to me.

Q. Don't you know why he was there?—A. I only know from hearsay; I do not know otherwise. He came there, I understood, to make an affidavit which Mr. Von Briesen asked him to make.

Q. Did he make it?—A. I do not know.

Q. Was it not prepared there?—A. I cannot say; I did not prepare it. I saw it there. I don't know whether it was written there or not. He was there. I saw him there twice, I think, but I did not talk with him any myself.

Q. Was his affidavit that was made there used before McCorry?—A. I think it was. That record will show.

Q. Was it made for that purpose?—A. I cannot say what purpose it was made for; Mr. Von Briesen took it. I do not know.

Q. Let me read you something to refresh your memory:

STATE OF TENNESSEE,
County of Shelby, ss:

W. Van Benthuyzen, being duly sworn, deposes and says: I reside in the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, and have resided there for nearly forty years; my occupation being president of the New Orleans and Carrollton Railroad Company, and other corporations. On or about the 30th day of July, 1885, I was in the city of Washington, D. C., occupying rooms at the Ebbitt Hotel, and on that day Zenas Fisk Wilbur, esq., formerly an examiner in the Patent Office at Washington, called at my rooms by appointment with Arthur von Briesen, esq., patent attorney, of New York, for the purpose of making affidavit to the course pursued by him, the said Zenas Fisk Wilbur, in examining and allowing patent No. 174465, issued to A. Graham Bell, dated March 7, 1876. Mr. Von Briesen had ascertained that in examining and allowing the said patent the examiner had, contrary to law, notified the said A. Graham Bell that a caveat filed by Elisha Gray, the same day with Bell's application (i. e., February 14, 1876), interfered with the same in some of its claims, and also that an amendment had been made to said Bell's application about fifteen days after said application had been filed, which amendment had not been called for by the Patent Office, and was unsupported by oath; and that the said Zenas Fisk Wilbur, esq., was the examiner having charge of the said caveat and application.

After the said Zenas Fisk Wilbur had made an affidavit reciting the above facts, he stated, in the presence of Hon. Casey Young, of Tennessee, and Charles P. Huntington, of Mississippi, who were present with myself, that he had made known the contents of the Gray caveat to A. G. Bell, or his attorneys, at the time of suspending the Bell application, or while it was in suspension, notice of which suspension being given on the 19th of February, 1876, as appears in the records of the Patent Office, and that he did not realize that he had acted contrary to law until his attention was called to the fact by Mr. Von Briesen.

W. VAN BENTHUYSEN.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 28th day of August, 1885.

[L. S.]

SAM. RICHARDS,
Notary Public.

Did Mr. Wilbur make that statement to you as stated in that affidavit?—A. If you want to impeach a witness, hadn't you better have him here. The object of the question seems to be to ascertain whether Mr. Van Benthuyzen has sworn falsely or not.

Q. Not at all.—A. I cannot see any other purpose in it.

Q. I simply want to know whether he was there and made the statement.—A. He was there.

Q. Did he make the statement that Van Benthuyssen swears to?—A. You had better ask Mr. Van Benthuyssen that.

Q. You were there?—A. Oh, yes; but your purpose is to impeach the truth of Mr. Van Benthuyssen's affidavit by me.

Q. Not at all.—A. I will state all the circumstances about the matter. Mr. Van Benthuyssen spoke to me about that afterwards, when the affidavit was made, and I was asked to make an affidavit to that effect, and could not do it because I did not remember it. I don't remember whether Mr. Wilbur made that statement. I think he did. My impression is pretty strong that that affidavit of Mr. Van Benthuyssen is correct; but I don't remember distinctly and did not remember distinctly enough to make my own affidavit.

Q. He also states that he "called at my rooms by appointment." Do you know how he came to come?—A. I know nothing about the appointment with him. He was there. I don't know who brought him there. I did not. I think he came there to talk to these gentlemen about that affidavit.

Q. Had you seen him before he came there?—A. Oh, no; I had never seen him in my life. Perhaps I did know him twenty years ago; I think it is likely I did; but I had not seen him for years, and didn't know he was here. I don't know who brought him. I saw that affidavit and read it at the time. That was the one they wanted to read to Mr. Garland, and he would not hear it.

Mr. MILLARD. I offer the affidavit of Wilbur, made on the 30th of July, 1885, which Mr. Young says was used before McCorry.

The WITNESS. The record shows whether it was used before McCorry or not.

Mr. MILLARD. At the end of the affidavit is the following:

"The first affidavit given by Mr. Wilbur, as above, was made on the 30th day of July, 1885, and on the 3d of August he made three or four more as above, except the date."

Mr. EDEN. What are you reading from?

Mr. MILLARD. From the certified copy of the proceedings before the Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. HALL. I do not see the propriety of introducing the paper at this time as a part of Mr. Young's testimony.

Mr. MILLARD. It is a part of the transaction.

Mr. HALL. It does not follow that it is a part of his testimony.

Mr. MILLARD. I think the whole affidavit is material and should go in.

Q. Who took this affidavit of Wilbur to Memphis?—A. I do not know.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Was it taken there?—A. I don't know anything about it.

Mr. MILLARD. It was taken there, and the proceedings show it.

The WITNESS. I presume it was taken there; I don't know.

Mr. HALL. What proceedings do you allude to; the record there?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

The WITNESS. I would have taken it if anybody had asked me; but I did not.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Did you or Gantt or Van Benthuyssen or Von Briesen take it?—A. I did not; I can't say whether they did or not. I would have taken it if it had been necessary, or if I had had it. As a matter of fact I did not.

Q. Tell us, if you know, why three other affidavits were made within three days and of a similar character?—A. I have no idea in the world. I did not take any of them.

Q. Before it was taken to Memphis, was it not taken over to Garland?—A. Yes, sir; of course it was. That was the one Mr. Von Briesen wanted to read him and he wouldn't hear it.

Q. Was it not on that day or the day following that the letter of Van Benthuyssen was taken out of the Interior Department?—A. I do not know when it was taken out, as I have testified several times. I found it there when I came back in October, and I didn't know it had ever been taken out; but I have learned since from Mr. Seixas that Mr. Van Benthuyssen did take it out and carry it to New Orleans and make that indorsement upon it and send it back. I did not know that.

Q. That was on the 31st of July, was it not?—A. I don't know; the record shows. I did not know anything about it at the time; I did not advise the withdrawal of it. I told him I did not think it was a proper form of suit, and Mr. Von Briesen told him he could not bring it in that way; he would have to go through the local attorneys.

The affidavit of Mr. Wilbur, previously referred to, is as follows:

CITY OF WASHINGTON,
District of Columbia, ss:

Zenas Fisk Wilbur, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

I reside in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia, and am forty-three years of age, and am by occupation a solicitor of patents.

In the year 1876 I was employed by the Government of the United States as principal examiner of the Patent Office, in charge of the class of electricity. The application of Alexander Graham Bell for a patent for improvements in telegraphy, which was filed February 14, 1876, which patent was issued on the 7th day of March, 1876, and numbered 174,465, was put in my charge as examiner, and was passed to issue by me.

I reached the said application for examination on the 19th day of February, 1876, and found on that day a caveat had been filed by one Elisha Gray, on the 14th day of February, 1876, for a new art of transmitting vocal sounds telegraphically, which caveat, in my opinion, interfered with the first, fourth, and fifth claims of Bell's said application.

On said 19th day of February, 1876, I notified Messrs. Pollok & Bailey, Bell's attorneys, that the first, fourth, and fifth clauses of claims in said application relate to matters described in a pending caveat. Afterwards, to wit, on or about the 24th day of February, 1876, the said attorneys, Pollok & Bailey, addressed a letter to the Commissioner of Patents, wherein they stated that they had "inquired the date of filing the caveat, inasmuch as we are entitled to the knowledge," and protested against the delay, which the notice to the caveator would subject them to. They thereupon made a special application to the Commissioner of Patents, under whose instructions I afterwards, to wit, on the 24th day of February, 1876, withdrew the suspension of the application.

I have since carefully examined the law on patents, and am satisfied that the notice to the attorneys of Bell of February 19, 1876, is not warranted by law, and that their ascertainment of the date of filing Gray's caveat is also contrary to the letter and spirit of section 4902 of the Revised Statutes.

To give such information to applicants for patents had, to an extent, become a custom in the Patent Office; but I now clearly perceive that the law did not contemplate the giving such information to an applicant for a patent, as it distinctly requires the caveat to be kept secret and the caveator alone to be notified.

On the 29th day of February, 1876, an amendment was filed by said attorneys for Bell and incorporated in the application, but to said amendment Bell did not make oath nor did he subscribe to the same, as I verily believe.

ZENAS FISK WILBUR.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 3d day of August, A. D. 1885.

[SEAL.]

JOHN E. BEALL,
Notary Public.

The WITNESS. Gentlemen, as I am a party as well as a witness, I would like to inquire whether I am trying the Bell telephone lawsuits over again here. I tried all this in the Interior Department, and I expect to try it in court, and I don't want to divulge anything here that will benefit them in court. I would like to inquire what the nature of this proceeding here is.

Mr. MILLARD. I will ask no question that I do not think is proper and material.

The WITNESS. I have a right to judge whether it is, if it affects me as a party to the proceedings, and I do not understand that this inquiry is in the nature of public interest. It does not look that way to me; perhaps I am mistaken.

Q. Do you know of any affidavits made after you reached Tennessee, by Van Benthuyzen or Huntington or Gantt that were used before McCorry?—A. I think that record shows some, but I don't think I was present when they were made.

Q. In connection with this Wilbur affidavit?—A. I think the record shows some. I don't know of any others except what the record does show. I know they talked about it, and I was asked for one, and I couldn't remember distinctly enough to venture to swear to it. I have a distinct impression that such a conversation did occur, but I couldn't swear to it.

Q. Was not this particular affidavit, which I have read, made by W. Van Benthuyzen, also the affidavit of Charles P. Huntington, also another one of Van Benthuyzen, under date of August 28, 1885, also an affidavit on page 21, made by Randall, Gantt, Huntington, and Sigler, used before McCorry?—A. The record shows it. What is the use of asking me the question?

Q. That is the only way I can put it into the case.—A. If the record shows it that is better than for me to prove it. You can't prove by me what the court record is.

Mr. HALL. There is a comment here in reference to this affidavit of Wilbur, as if it were a part of the certified record. It is hardly possible that can be so.

Mr. MILLARD. It is a part of the record, for the certificate follows.

Mr. HALL. It purports to certify to copies of papers on file. It is not competent, it seems to me, to insert such a note.

Q. Have you stated all the persons in the Interior Department that hold stock of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. Nobody in the Interior Department holds any stock that I know of. I never heard of anything of that sort.

P. Or in any of the subordinate companies?—A. I don't know of anybody in the Interior Department who has any stock of any sort except Upshaw. I heard he held some stock in the Alabama Company.

Q. General Atkins is in the Interior Department?—A. Oh, yes; he is among those I stated,

Q. And General Johnston?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What position does Mr. Upshaw hold?—A. I understand he is a clerk in the Indian Bureau. He owns some stock I understand (I have no doubt it is so, though I don't know it certainly) in the Alabama Company. He does not own any stock in this company.

Q. Are there any other parties, to your knowledge, holding any stock in any of the companies?—A. None in the world. Every man who has any interest in those companies is on that list that I know anything about. If there is anybody else I don't know anything about it at all. I don't know an individual in the world who has the slightest interest except those whose names appear on this stock book. Dr. Rogers may have given somebody else an interest in it that I know nothing about and that has never been reported to me.

Q. Have you stated the names of all the persons that hold stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company or any of the subordinate companies?—A. Oh, no; I don't know who holds it in the subordinate companies. They are all scattered around. I have no means of knowing at all.

Q. (Handing letter to witness.) Did you receive that letter from Harris Rogers?—A. Yes, sir. That is one of the letters I handed to the committee.

Q. Did you receive it at the time it bears date?—A. I suppose I did. I can't remember, except by the circumstance—

Q. Do you not recollect the fact of receiving it and giving the stock?—A. No; I do not. I recollect receiving two or three letters from Mr. Dwyer himself about it, and we had some little controversy over it. I received more letters than I cared to answer. People complained that I did not answer, and complain to this day. The stubs of the book of certificates I handed in will show all the stock and when it was issued. Dr. Rogers sold Mr. Dwyer that stock; I hadn't anything to do with it. They say he is an officer of the Government. If he is I never heard of it.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Was this one of the transfers of stock Rogers made?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Out of his own interest?—A. Oh, yes. I had nothing to do with it. I think this $100,000 was to come out of that $170,000 which Dr. Rogers reserved the right to dispose of in the original contract, and that is the reason I was led into the mistake of not issuing enough. It is just an order on me for some stock.

Mr. MILLARD. I offer the letter in evidence.

The letter is as follows:

315 FOUR-AND-A-HALF STREET,
Washington, D. C., March 10, 1884.

Hon. CASEY YOUNG:

DEAR SIR: This will be handed to you by my friend, Philip N. Dwyer, the gentleman entitled to $100,000 of the telephone stock, which I will thank you to have signed and deliver to him.

He is an architect of eminence, and continually traveling from city to city, is an officer of the Government, and can be of great service to the enterprise.

Respectfully,

J. HARRIS ROGERS.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Are you attorney for any other company than the Pan-Electric Company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What company?—A. I decline to answer that question. It is an inquiry into my private business that this committee has no right to make at all.

Q. Did you, before the bringing of the Government suit, or since, have any conversation with Elisha Gray, the author of the Gray caveat?

The WITNESS. In respect to what?

Mr. MILLARD. In respect to your company or his caveat or his interest.

A. I had a conversation with him in respect to the inquiry pending before the Interior Department.

Q. When and where was that?—A. It was in my room and Colonel Gantt's room.

He was a witness in the case. He filed an affidavit; I talked with him and was present when his affidavit was prepared.

Q. Where was that?—A. It may have been in my room or in Colonel Gantt's room or in his room; I saw him in all those rooms. I don't remember where that affidavit was prepared; I think it was prepared in Professor Gray's own room; that is my recollection.

Q. Was it here in Washington?—A. Yes, sir; here in Washington; he was here.

Q. Has there been any arrangement or combination between the Pan-Electric Company and Mr. Gray?—A. I decline to answer that question. It is a private matter the committee has no right to inquire into at all.

Q. You decline to give any evidence of any combination between yourself or the Pan-Electric Company and Mr. Gray and the company he represents?—A. Yes, sir; unless it can be shown in some way that it is pertinent to this inquiry.

Mr. MILLARD. That is not for you to say.

The WITNESS. It is for me to say; I am to judge whether I will answer a question or not; it is for me to say.

Q. Have you had any correspondence —

Mr. RANNEY. I think we had better have this matter passed upon.

Mr. HALL. I suggest that the question be put in some direct, intelligible way, right to the point.

Mr. MILLARD. He understands the question.

The WITNESS. I understand the question.

Q. Let me put this question: Has there been any combination between the Pan-Electric Company and Mr. Elisha Gray, the author of the caveat that was filed in 1876?—A. No, sir; no combination between him and the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. Any agreement or understanding?—A. Not between him and the company.

Q. Between him and you?—A. I decline to answer that question; I am not required to disclose the secrets of my clients.

Q. Have you had any correspondence in regard to the Gray caveat with Senator Harris?—A. I think it is likely I had. I have talked with him about it frequently.

Q. Have you not had correspondence with him?—A. I don't remember. It is possible I have written to him. I think perhaps I have.

Mr. EDEN. I do not see the necessity for this.

The WITNESS. I will state this to the committee to prevent any misapprehension: If Professor Gray will consent for me to disclose my communications with him as a lawyer, I haven't the slightest objection in the world.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You can state whether you are his counsel.—A. No; I will not state that. It is not an inquiry pertinent here.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Do you decline to state that?—A. Yes, sir; because it is not an inquiry pertinent to this investigation.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. I understood you to decline to answer a previous question because you were his counsel?—A. I don't believe I stated I was his counsel.

Q. I understood that was the objection you made to answering the question?—A. I will state, if the committee is anxious to know it, that I am his counsel in some respects; and I will disclose in what respects and to what extent, if Mr. Gray will consent for me to do it.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. When did your relations as counsel to Mr. Gray first commence?—A. I decline to answer that question.

Mr. EDEN. Unless it can be shown to be material, I do not think it ought to be put.

Mr. MILLARD. The affidavit of Mr. Wilbur makes it material.

Mr. EDEN. The fact of Colonel Young having transactions as an individual with Mr. Gray, or as an attorney for Mr. Gray?

Mr. MILLARD. No such question has been asked.

Mr. EDEN. That was my understanding of your question.

Mr. RANNEY. I understand it is competent for us to inquire who were active to get the Government to bring that suit.

Mr. EDEN. I do not see what the Gray caveat has to do with it.

Q. Have you had any conversation with Mr. Gray in regard to the Government suit?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. When was the first conversation?—A. I think it was when he came on here in October or November, about the time the inquiry was going on. That was the first time I ever saw Professor Gray.

Q. Had you not had correspondence with him prior to that?—A. I never saw him in my life.

Q. Who introduced him to you?—A. I think Mr. Von Briesen, perhaps; I am not sure.

Q. Where?—A. I think here was the first time I ever saw him.

Q. At what place?—A. I think at Willard's Hotel, or perhaps at the Ebbitt House I am not sure which. I met him frequently at both places.

Q. Did you meet him in company with Senator Harris?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or General Johnston?—A. No; I don't think General Johnston ever saw him. I don't know that he did. I have no recollection of his ever seeing him.

Q. When did you first talk with Senator Harris about that?

The WITNESS. About what?

Mr. MILLARD. About your relations with or any interviews you may have had with Professor Gray.

A. I don't remember distinctly. I think I mentioned it to him shortly after I saw Professor Gray. Professor Gray and I had a conversation about business matters that did not relate to this matter at all, and I think I talked to Senator Harris about it—a separate and distinct transaction that had no relation to our company. We have had no agreement with him at all.

Q. Where is the correspondence with Senator Harris in regard to that matter?—A. I don't know that I ever corresponded with him about it at all. I talked with him.

Q. You said you corresponded with him?—A. No; I did not. I said it was possible I may have written to him, but I don't remember that I ever wrote a letter. I was here all the time, and didn't have occasion to write him.

Q. Where does Professor Gray reside?—A. In Chicago, or near Chicago, at Highland Park, a suburban town, I don't know how far from Chicago.

Q. He made an affidavit that you used before the Interior Department?—A. Yes, sir; it is in that record. I did not prepare it.

Q. It was in your behalf, was it not?—A. I cannot say in my behalf.

Q. In behalf of your company?—A. Read it and you will see.

Q. I ask you.—A. I can't say whether it was or not; you may read it and construe its purpose and effect; it was made in support of the inquiry or the application made to the Secretary of the Interior to institute proceedings to annul the Bell patent; it was made in support of those proceedings; whether it is in behalf of our company or in behalf of the public you can determine by the document; there it is; you might say it was in behalf of the Board of Trade of the city of New York; their resolutions are there also.

Q. Who procured him to make the affidavit?—A. I really do not know; I think it is probable Colonel Gantt may have prepared it; I am not sure about that.

Q. Colonel Gantt, your counsel?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Counsel for this company?—A. Oh, yes.

Mr. HALL. I hope you will get the matter in a satisfactory shape for you.

Mr. MILLARD. You seem to be extremely nervous about it.

Mr. HALL. I am not conscious of it.

The WITNESS. There is no occasion for anybody to be nervous.

Q. (Handing paper to witness.) Did you receive those letters from Mr. Rogers?—A. I expect I did. I think they are those I handed in the other day, which I found among my papers.

Mr. HALL. Be sure about that.

The WITNESS. I cannot be sure now. They are in his handwriting and they are directed to me, and I take it for granted I received them.

Q. And delivered the stock in pursuance of them?—A. Oh, yes; I reckon I did. No, I did not deliver any stock.

Q. It was not delivered?—A. No, sir.

Q. A certificate was delivered?—A. There was a paper delivered showing that the party was entitled to the stock when it was issued. None of the stock has been issued. I presume they got such a paper.

Q. Was such a paper given to Mr. Marble?—A. I take it Mr. Marble got it.

Q. Under date of May 24 and 25?—A. I expect those are the dates.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Was Marble in any way connected with the Government?—A. Not that I know of.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. He had been; and after he received this stock, or after those transactions, he delivered this opinion?—A. Oh, no; he did not. He delivered the opinion in 1884, and these papers are dated in 1885.

Mr. MILLARD. Please read the letters.

The WITNESS (reading): "No. 315 Four-and-a-half street, Washington, D. C., May 24, 1884. This is to certify that E. Marble, esq., is entitled to $10,000 of the stock, when issued, of the Pan-Electric Company, to come out of my stock and to be charged to me. This stock will not embrace the telegraph or telephone stock which originally belonged to the Pan-Electric Company, $10,000 of exchange having been already delivered to E. N. Marble in certificate by Colonel Young, secretary."

Mr. RANNEY. As a part of my examination I put in the opinion of Mr. Marble.

The WITNESS. Which one? He gave two.

Mr. RANNEY. The one I put in is dated October 22, and it is wrong.

Mr. MILLARD. It should be October 21, 1884.

The WITNESS. Let me see the paper.

Mr. MILLARD. I will come to that directly.

The WITNESS. You had better let me see it first.

Mr. HALL. Show it to him.

The WITNESS. I want to see the paper you are asking about.

Mr. RANNEY. I put in that opinion at the last hearing, and it is wrong in the record.

The WITNESS. If the committee will allow me, I will explain that there are two separate opinions. I was speaking of the opinion that he gave in reference to the validity of our patents as against Bell's patents, and that was a different subject altogether. The opinion of October 21, 1884, is in relation to the National Secret Telephone Company, which claimed that we infringed their patents.

Mr. MILLARD. I am not asking you about that.

The WITNESS. I would like to see the opinions. (Paper handed witness.) This is the opinion of October 21, 1884. There was another opinion. I would like to see the one I have been talking about all the time.

Q. You have possession of it, have you not?—A. Oh, no; I handed it to the committee.

Q. You have read the letter of May 24. Now read the next letter dated May 25.—A. I suppose it is the 25th, but I can hardly make it out. It looks more like the 20th.

DEAR COLONEL: Please give to E. Marble, esq., the usual certificate for $10,000 in each of the above companies.

Respectfully,

J. HARRIS ROGERS.

Col. YOUNG,

Secretary Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and of the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company.

Q. What companies were those?—A. The Pan-Electric Telephone and the Pan-Electric Telegraph.

Q. And the date is May 25?—A. May 25, 1884.

Mr. MILLARD. I now offer the opinion, under date of May 21, 1884, addressed to Senator Harris.

The WITNESS. Let me explain how that was first. This is an opinion that was given to us by Mr. Marble.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Given to whom?—A. Given to our company.

Q. Which company?—A. The Pan-Electric Telephone Company, by Mr. E. M. Marble, a patent lawyer of this city, upon our application to him for his opinion as to whether or not the patents that Harris Rogers had transferred to us were either embraced in the transfer previously made to the National Secret Telephone Company, or whether they infringed the patents that were transferred to them. Mr. Van Benthuyzen had threatened to sue us at New Orleans about these instruments; and the moment we heard there was any possible conflict between our company and his, we asked Mr. Marble to examine the records of the Patent Office and give us his opinion, and that is his opinion.

Mr. RANNEY. I will put it in now.

The opinion is as follows:

[Offices of E. M. Marble, 27, 28, 29, and 30 Le Droit Building.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 21, 1884.

Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS,

Vice-President of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

DEAR SIR: In compliance with your request for my opinion as to whether any of the patented inventions of James Harris Rogers, now owned and used by the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, infringe any of the patents of said inventor owned by the National Secret Telephone Company or its assignors, I have to submit the following:

Upon examination of the records of the United States Patent Office, I find two patents owned by the National Secret Telephone Company, by mesne conveyance from said Rogers, which I understand and am informed are the patents referred to in your request, viz, No. 252255, dated January 13, 1882, and No. 252521, dated January 17, 1882. These, at least, are the only patents issued to said Rogers which can be said to have any reference, even the remotest, to the instrument owned and used by the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and covered by patent to said Rogers, No. 281560, dated July 17, 1883. I inclose copies of said patents.

The first in date, No. 252255, covers an instrument, consisting of a diaphragm, a mercury-holding cup in close proximity to the diaphragm, a quantity of mercury in said cup, one or more free-floating carbons in contact with the diaphragm, and electrical connections.

In this instrument the current of electricity passes from the battery up through the mercury to the carbon or carbons and out to line. Vibrations of the diaphragm caused by sounds uttered in its vicinity cause variations of contact between the diaphragm and the floating carbons, and between said carbons and the mercury, and thus vary the electric current by which such sounds are transmitted. The distinguishing feature of this instrument is the "free-floating carbon or carbons" on the surface of the mercury held in a cup in close proximity to the diaphragm, and to this feature the inventor expressly and distinctly limited himself in said patent.

In patent No. 252521 the electric current is varied by the variations of the fluid held in the cup, caused by the vibrations of the diaphragm, which are communicated through a tube at a point near the bottom of the cup, where the electric current passes through it.

The fluid in this instrument in effect forms an elastic electrode, through which the electric current is varied by a changing resistance produced through the tube by the vibrations of the diaphragm.

Patent No. 281560 covers an instrument consisting of a diaphragm, which forms one pole of the electric circuit, a flattened plate or button lying loosely and by its own weight on the diaphragm and forming the other pole of the circuit, which button may or may not be adapted to hold a small quantity of mercury and electrical connections.

The distinctive feature of this instrument is the carbon plate or button lying loosely and by its own weight on the diaphragm, making a delicate and sensitive contact between the electrodes, whether mercury is or is not used.

The mechanical construction and the operation of the instrument are entirely different from either of the other instruments mentioned, as may be readily seen by an examination of the patents.

It is well settled, and a citation of authorities in support of the proposition seems unnecessary, that a mechanical patent is infringed only when one without rightful authority makes, uses, or sells a machine, instrument, or device which embodies the same elements, or their known equivalents, combined and operating in the same or in substantially the same way as those shown, described, and claimed therein.

The fact that an instrument produces the same or similar results as one covered by a patent and employs and uses some or all of the elements described and claimed in said patent, does not establish infringement. The elements may be used in an entirely different way from that described in the patent, both in construction and combination, necessitating a different operation, although producing the same or a similar result.

When so used and operated there is and can be no infringement. No better illustration of the truth of the foregoing statement can be given or cited than the class of instruments now under consideration.

Microphones, or contact telephones, of necessity employ elements or their equivalents common to all such instruments. If such elements are properly brought together and electrically connected, the instrument, the unit of which they form parts, will transmit speech. The result will be the same, although the manner of combining said elements may be as various as the forms of the human face.

If instruments have been or shall hereafter be constructed in accordance with the directions given in patents numbered 252255 and 281560, while they do or will employ elements common in part to each, these elements are so differently employed and operated that there can be no infringement.

In 252255 the contact between the electrodes is made and sustained by the elasticity of the fluid which supports the "free floating carbon." If this floating carbon were supported and sustained by a spring, coiled or otherwise, instead of by a fluid, no one would think of claiming that the spring was in a patentable sense the equivalent of the fluid, although in a certain sense the spring and the fluid would perform the same functions.

In 281560 the contact between the electrodes is made by placing one loosely upon the other and having it kept in position by its own weight and the electrical connection.

The fact that a small quantity of mercury may be used in the upper part of the button to give the instrument through such connection greater delicacy and sensitiveness, does not affect the mechanical construction of the instrument. It may be used without the mercury, which is only incidental and not material in its construction. But if such use of mercury as a connection between one of the electrodes and the wire were material, or is or shall be found necessary, the inventor had a right to use it irrespective of his former patent, because its use for such purpose in other combinations was old, in fact older than the telephone in this country.

I have also been requested to examine the records of the United States Patent Office to ascertain if in any assignment or instrument there recorded it was agreed by said Rogers that the National Secret Telephone Company, or those from whom it acquired title in part to a portion of Mr. Rogers's inventions, should own and control any of his inventions not expressly and definitely mentioned in the instruments executed between said Rogers and said assignors, or between Rogers and said company.

I have made a thorough examination of the records of said office, and find no such instrument of record, nor anything in any instrument recorded indicating an intention to convey to said assignors or said company any of his future inventions nor any of his inventions not therein expressly mentioned.

I am informed by Mr. Rogers that he never executed an instrument which would prevent him from selling his future inventions to the highest bidder, although he was asked so to do several times and refused.

I am also requested to give an opinion as to whether the receiver used by the Pan-Electric Company infringes a patent issued to one McTighe (original No. 193405—reissue No. 8248).

Without describing the instrument used by the Pan-Electric Company, because an application for a patent on the same is still pending, I may say that if the instruments used are constructed in accordance with the description given by Mr. Rogers in his application, they do not and will not infringe said McTighe patents.

Very respectfully,

E. M. MARBLE.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. I call your attention to Mr. Marble's account on the old ledger. Is this one of the books of the company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Read the account on page 112, so that it may go on the record.—A. (Reading:) "The Pan-Electric Telephone Company, Dr., in account with E. M. Marble, Cr. 1884, May 25. To one hundred shares of capital stock transferred by order of J. Harris Rogers, $10,000. May 25, 1884. By certificate issued showing amount of stock transferred by order of J. Harris Rogers, $10,000. October 3. To one hundred shares of capital stock transferred to George Brodt, $10,000." That is the same account that was given him, leaving no balance to Mr. Marble's credit. The reason he does not appear on the new stock book is because he transferred his stock before the new book was made out.

Q. Did he ever pay any money for the $10,000 of stock issued to him?—A. I don't know. That was Dr. Rogers's stock. He did not pay any money to our company.

Q. You do not know of his paying for it?—A. I do not know anything about it. It was a transaction of Dr. Rogers. We had nothing to do with it. That was one of the things I was opposing all the time.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. The company had nothing at all to do with that?—A. Nothing in the world. The company never sold a dollar's worth of stock, except to four individuals.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Was there a local company established at Saint Louis?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who was the president of the company?—A. Mr. E. L. Adreon, the city controller.

Q. Did the Bell Company threaten that local company with suit?—A. It did. I would like the committee to stop right here and let me put in some evidence. Here are the papers connected with it.

Mr. MILLARD. I simply want to ask you a single question.

The WITNESS. I simply want to put the facts in right here.

Mr. EDEN. I do not wish to raise any objection further than this: I understood Mr. Ranney had covered all these questions.

Mr. MILLARD. I do not want to go into it further than a single question.

The WITNESS. But I do. I want to get the facts in.

Mr. EDEN. He told all about the Saint Louis Company, who the officers were, and that they had established an exchange. If there is anything new I have no objection.

The WITNESS. I have a bundle of papers that embrace all those facts about the Saint Louis business. I had them, but I do not find them now. I want to put them into the record. I suppose they have got mislaid. I want to put them in right at this point. They tell all about the Saint Louis suit.

Mr. HALL. Are they letters?

The WITNESS. Some letters and circulars. I can state exactly what it was. It was a correspondence between me and Senator Harris, and an opinion given by Senator Garland. I would like to put the papers in if I can find them. I do not find them.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. To whom was that opinion given?—A. It was written by Mr. Garland to Mr. Adreon. I would like to get those papers and put them in the record.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Is there any evidence of a suit brought by the local company?—A. No; they did not bring any.

Mr. MILLARD. Suit was threatened and notice was served?

The WITNESS. I will state to the committee how that was: We had a local company in Saint Louis—

Mr. MILLARD. I simply want to call your attention to a certain fact, and that is all.

The WITNESS. What is that fact?

Mr. MILLARD. As to whether you were threatened with a suit there.

The WITNESS. We were; now let me tell it all.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Was that before the commencement of the Government suit by McCorry?—A. Months before.

Q. Who directed the manner of the defense of the suit?—A. I did.

Q. Did not Mr. Garland?—A. I was going to state, if you will—

Q. I want the fact.—A. I will give you the fact if you will give me a chance to do so. That is exactly what I want to give, and if you gentlemen will not be impatient you will get it all. Just let me state it in my own way and you will save time, because I will state it in my own way if I state it at all. We sold to a local company in Saint Louis the right to use our telephone in the State of Missouri. The company was organized, and Mr. E. I. Adreon was elected president of the company. They commenced to put up telephones and to establish an exchange. When they had put up probably a hundred or two hundred telephones—I don't know how many—a notice was served on them by Mr. Hotchkiss, who was the president of the local Bell Company there, that he would bring suit if they did not desist from using his telephone. That notice was sent to me and I sent it to Senator Garland, who was at home, I think, at the time, over in Little Rock. I wrote back to Mr. Adreon to tell the gentlemen to go ahead and bring the suit, and that we were ready to defend it. Mr. Adreon wrote to me again saying Senator Garland had not come (I had written to him Senator Garland would attend to it), and the matter was being pressed, and he asked me to come to Saint Louis. I went to Saint Louis and staid there for a week, employed counsel there. I saw the notice. Mr. Hotchkiss, I think his name is. [To Mr. Millard:] You have got all the papers there, and it would have been a much fairer method of examining me if you had given them to me. Those are the papers you have in your hand.

Mr. MILLARD. These are only copies of the papers.

The WITNESS. They are the copies I furnished. They are the very papers.

Mr. MILLARD. I propose to put them in.

The WITNESS. Why didn't you give them to me when I asked for them.

Mr. HALL. I did not know you referred to those papers.

The WITNESS. Those are the very ones I was looking for. - [Papers handed to witness.] Here is all the correspondence. Here is the notice, and here is Mr. Adreon's letter. If the committee pleases I will read all these papers.]

Mr. HALL. Don't they tell the story themselves? Why not put them in evidence?

Mr. RANNEY. Are they of such materiality that we need to encumber the record with them?

The WITNESS. I think it is a fair thing, gentlemen, to let me have papers I am being examined about.

Mr. RANNEY. You had better not stop to lecture the committee. You have done quite enough of that.

The WITNESS. So have you, and I propose to do a little myself. I have submitted with great courtesy, patience, and forbearance to you, and I do not propose to submit any more. I will be courteous to the committee, nothing more.

Mr. RANNEY. What are those papers?

The WITNESS. They are the correspondence in the case. Here is a copy of the letter from E. I. Adreon to A. H. Garland—

Mr. HALL. I understand that whilst the local company at Saint Louis was engaged in putting up its telephones another company threatened it with an injunction. The parent company, under the articles we are all familiar with, had agreed to defend the local company; and when the suit was threatened, the company here was notified of the fact and was called on to take charge of the litigation. Letters were written by Mr. Garland telling what should be done if that suit was instituted.

Mr. MILLARD. I think we ought to wait until Mr. Garland is called before we introduce his letter. I want the fact to appear, and it seems to me it is very important in this investigation, that here was a suit threatened by the Bell Telephone Company just prior to the commencement of this Government suit, and Mr. Garland was acting as attorney for the Pan-Electric Company and directing the defense.

Mr. EDEN. It must have been some time prior.

Mr. MILLARD. It was in 1884.

Mr. EDEN. Long before he was Attorney-General.

Mr. RANNEY. Is it not the fact that there was a suit threatened, that the parent company was to defend it, and that Garland gave the directions; and is not that all?

Mr. MILLARD. That is all I ask about.

Mr. HALL. Nobody denies he was counsel. There is no question about it.

The WITNESS. I guess you had better put all the papers in.

Mr. OATES. It seems to me it is unnecessary to put them all in.

The WITNESS. I think it is necessary. If any of it goes in I think the whole of it ought to go in.

Mr. OATES. It seems to me this inquiry is not material.

Mr. MILLARD. Perhaps you think the whole investigation is immaterial.

Mr. OATES. By no means; but that which is not covered by the resolution is immaterial. I have no objection to the proposition just as Mr. Ranney states it. This evidence amounts to very little or nothing. It is a fact that there was a suit threatened by this offshoot in Missouri—

Mr. HALL. No; by the Bell telephone people.

Mr. OATES. A suit was threatened against that offshoot, and the parent company, under its obligation to defend such suits, did do it, or were prepared to do it. I believe the suit was not brought. That is all there is of it.

The WITNESS. I will ask as a part of my testimony to put those letters in the record. They explain the whole matter without any statement from me.

Mr. MILLARD. They are not original letters. I think they would be important evidence if they were properly authenticated. Mr. Garland, when he comes on the stand will be able to explain them.

The WITNESS. Here is my own letter. That is properly authenticated.

Mr. OATES. I have no doubt they are genuine; that the copies are correct, but the only question is whether there is any use having them in the record.

Mr. HALE. I think they ought to go in if they are admitted to be genuine copies of the originals. Our resolution of inquiry includes the contracts with subcompanies.

Mr. OATES. I suppose it will be the shortest way to let them go in.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose they are a part of the transaction. I have not examined them.

Mr. MILLARD. If they go in, they should go in regular order; the notice should go first, then the letter from Mr. Garland to Mr. Adreon, and the letter from Mr. Adreon to Mr. Garland in reply.

The WITNESS. And then Mr. Adreon's letter to me and my letter.

Mr. MILLARD. Yes, I have no objection to your letter going in also.

Mr. OATES. It is the shortest way to let them all go in, unless objection is made.

The following are the papers referred to:

Copy of "Bell's" notice of infringement.

SAINT LOUIS, October 29, 1884.

To the Missouri Pan-Electric Telephone Company, E. L. Adreon, esq., president:

SIR: The attention of the directors of the Bell Telephone Company of Missouri has been called to the fact, announced in the public journals, that your company has applied for and obtained permission to string wires for telephone purposes on the electric light poles erected on Ohio street in this city, by the Brush Electric Association. Information has also been given to the undersigned that your company are placing such wires on said poles, and are making or arranging for contracts with various persons for telephones to be operated by you by means of said wires.

Your attention is respectfully called to the fact that this company, as exclusive licensee of the American Bell Telephone Company, is alone authorized to use, for the purposes of a telephonic exchange in this city, telephone instruments constructed under the various patents owned by said company last named, and of which we are informed that the telephones or other instruments, or parts thereof, which you contemplate using are infringements. A list of said patents is handed you herewith, viz, Nos. 174465 and 186787, and you will please take notice that any person or corporation infringing the same, or either of them, by making, vending, or using any of said inventions in this city, will thereby become liable to legal proceedings for preventing infringement and for the recovery of damages therefor, and that such proceedings will be instituted for that purpose.

Respectfully, yours,

E. A. HITCHCOCK,
President of the Bell Telephone Company of Missouri.

Copy of A. H. Garland's letter to E. L. Adreon.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., November 10, 1884.

MY DEAR SIR: Your letter of 29th ultimo to General Johnston has been sent to me for reply, and after going to Little Rock it came back here and reached me yesterday.

In defending against the suit for injunction, exhibit the instrument, and have affidavits of experts, in detail, showing the difference between the two supposed conflicting inventions.

A statement from Rogers, the inventor, should be with you, and I suppose it is; if not, get time to have his affidavit in full. The law holds the plaintiff to a strict showing, a showing beyond all cavil, and will not permit injunction on trivial infringement.

If you have Walker on Patents, look under titles Injunction and Infringement, and you will find the whole law discussed and explained. If you have it not, then telegraph at once for it to some Eastern book-store; but I presume it can be had in Saint Louis. Of course you have the United States Revised Statutes there, containing the law of Congress on the subject. The contest, however, will turn chiefly on the testimony of experts. In answering an explicit denial must be made wherever it can; that is, unless the allegation is strictly and plainly true.

These general suggestions, with the book referred to examined by your attorney, will give you all that I can now contribute without seeing the complaint. But, save and except the scientific technical matters in inventions to be set up and proved, the practice is different in these cases and other proceedings for injunctions.

Very truly, yours,

A. H. GARLAND.

Copy of letter of E. L. Adreon to A. H. Garland.

SAINT LOUIS, November 13, 1884.

Senator A. H. GARLAND:

DEAR SIR: Your letter of the 10th instant received. From it I judge you misconstrue the purport of my letter of the 29th ultimo.

As I understand it, your answer proceeds upon the theory that we assume the defense, and advises us accordingly, whereas your company must provide for and conduct the legal proceedings for defense. My letter asked advice as to what steps we could take, at your expense, to aid your company therein. Our contract with your company requires the latter to provide attorneys and defray all expenses in protecting us in litigation involving any question of infringement. We have no attorney, nor is it proper that we should incur that or any other expense in defense of our patents. We are now prepared and intend to force the fight, and wish to know if you have any special instructions or advice to give us, to the end that we may appear in court in the best possible shape to suit your line of defense, and if any steps are to be taken by us under the direction and at the expense of your company (employing attorney, securing affidavits of parties here, &c.), as preliminary, or in aid of your plan of procedure.

We desire that your company at once place itself in a position to defend, as we wish to precipitate the litigation, if there is to be any, but cannot do so until we know that you are ready.

You say that the case will turn on expert testimony touching the difference in the respective inventions. We think, from our information, that the strongest defense lies in attacking the Bell patents on the ground of prior invention and invalidity of generic claim. I think it very important and would urge that counsel of your company come here to consult and view the field in detail. We have no affidavit of Rogers.

Very respectfully,

E. L. ADREON,
President Missouri Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

[Missouri Pan-Electric Telephone Company. For the State of Missouri and county of Wyandotte, Kansas. Capital, $1,000,000. Office, 417 Pine street. Room No. 6.]

SAINT LOUIS, November 12, 1884.

Hon. CASEY YOUNG:

DEAR SIR: Yours of 10th instant received.

Senator Garland has not been in Saint Louis; I received a letter from him this morning, of which I inclose you copy, together with copies of my reply, notice of "Bell Company," and letter of one of our patrons.

The sooner you put an end to this intimidation the better.

The inclosures indicate our position, and we desire prompt action by your company.

Very respectfully,

E. L. ADREON.

President Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

[Law office of Young & Martin, 254 Second street.]

MEMPHIS, TENN., November 15, 1884.

DEAR SIR: I received this morning a letter from Mr. Adreon, inclosing copies of notices served on him and some of his subscribers by the president of the Missouri branch of the American Bell Telephone Company, warning them against putting up and operating any other telephone, and threatening immediate suit in case they should undertake to do so. He also inclosed me a copy of correspondence between him and Senator Garland, all of which I inclose to you.

It seems to me, from Senator Garland's letter, that he not only misapprehends the terms of our contract with the Missouri Company but that he has no adequate appreciation of the importance of this matter to us. I think, therefore, that you had better impress it upon him, if you can, more forcibly than he now seems to feel it.

It is a consideration of the most vital concern to us that the first litigation should result in our favor, and we should spare no exertion to bring about that result. If we can do this our enterprise is a success of great value. I have been examining the question some, and feel confident that we can defeat any application that can be made for injunction against us, and we should make every preparation to do so. I need not suggest that you get copies of our telephone patents and specifications, and also of the patents referred to by numbers in the inclosed letter of Mr. Hitchcock to Mr. Adreon, and also all the evidence you can find that Bell is not the original inventor of the telephone, for I agree with Mr. Adreon that this latter is our most certain ground of defense. I am still quite unwell, or I would go to Saint Louis to-night, and would do so anyway, if I knew certainly that you or Senator G. had not already gone. I think it all important that some of us should go at once, and I think you and Senator had both better go. I will meet you there if you desire it, or, if neither of you can go, I will go alone. I telegraphed you this morning; suppose I shall get an answer during the day. Let me hear from you.

Yours, truly,

CASEY YOUNG.

Hon. I. G. HARRIS,
Washington, D. C.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I desire to put one more question to Colonel Young. Mr. Millard inquired of you about some affidavits that were being prepared in July or August, at the time you were here in the conference, and that embraced the period from the 31st of July to the 7th of August, when you returned.—A. Well, about that time; I don't remember the exact date I left.

Q. You were here from the 31st of July to the 7th of August, and during that time certain affidavits were being prepared to be used subsequently. I want to know if you were not, during that time, engaged in drawing the bill in equity that you speak of?—A. No, sir; I did not write a line of it in Washington.

Q. You were preparing for it?—A. No, sir; not in Washington.

Q. Were you not getting this proof?—A. No, sir; I had nothing to do with the getting of the affidavits. I do not know whether Mr. Van Benthuyzen got them to use in the prospective Government suit or to use in his own suit pending.

Q. This contract or agreement that was left open between the company and Mr. Van Benthuyzen, this agreement between your company and his, have you got that now? the one that Mr. Van Benthuyzen kept and that he was to send here?—A. No, sir; I stated that he sent me none.

Q. Has he not a man attending to this business pretty regularly who is here in the committee room?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is he?—A. Mr. H. O. Seixas.

Q. Representing Mr. Van Benthuyssen?—A. I cannot say that he represents him. He is interested in that telephone company. Mr. Van Benthuyssen represents himself as a general thing.

Q. You spoke this morning about finding some paper?—A. Yes, sir; I have it here.

Q. I want to see what you have found.—A. I handed it to the chairman.

Q. (After examining the paper.) This paper purports to be a supplemental agreement. I want the original, not the supplemental one; I want that to which this is a supplement.—A. I have explained to you so often where it is and all about it that it is not necessary for me to do it again.

Q. I want to know if that is the one?—A. No, sir; that is not the one, as I tried to tell you a while ago.

Q. Is this the original paper?—A. Yes, sir; it is an original paper.

Q. The one you have testified to, that you and Senator Harris signed?—A. I think I signed it and Senator Harris says that he did. I think he is mistaken, but I may be mistaken instead of him.

Q. You swear that this was the paper signed at that date by Mr. Van Benthuyssen for that company?—A. I have no doubt it was. I had forgotten all about the paper until I found it in my trunk.

Q. I have not read it, and will thank you to read it. First give us the date of it for identification.—A. This is dated the 27th of August, 1885.

Q. And is signed by Mr. Van Benthuyssen?—A. It is signed by W. Van Benthuyssen. Mr. OATES. Read the paper.

Mr. RANNEY. If the Chairman will excuse me, I want to know about the signature I want to know by whom it is signed.

The WITNESS. It is signed "The National Telephone Company, by W. Van Benthuyssen, president."

Q. You know that to be his signature?—A. I do.

Q. In whose handwriting is the paper itself?—A. I think it is in the handwriting of Mrs. H. W. Miller, a lady in Memphis doing writing for us at that time.

Q. Was it delivered to your company?—A. No, sir; it was not.

Q. Where did you get it?—A. If the gentlemen want me to read it, I will read it.

Q. I want to see what bearing it has. Was it a paper signed by him and delivered to your company?—A. It was delivered to me.

Q. As representative of the company?—A. Oh, I found it in my trunk.

Q. When?—A. I found it Saturday evening.

Q. When did you receive it?—A. At the time it was written, I suppose; I have forgotten.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not object to your reading it.

Mr. OATES. Read it and explain it as you want to.

The witness read as follows:

Supplemental agreement between the National Improved Telephone Company and the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

In addition to the agreement made and entered into between the above-mentioned companies at the city of Washington, D. C., on the 4th day of August, A. D. 1885, it is hereby further stipulated and agreed by and between the same, as follows, viz:

That the officers and agents of said two companies shall co-operate in the use of all lawful means to secure the cancellation, recall, or modification of the Letters Patent granted to Alexander Graham Bell on the 7th day of March, 1876, and on the 30th day of January, 1877, and numbered respectively 174465 and 186787, and that for the purpose of accomplishing the same, they shall obtain if possible the action of the Government of the United States by direct proceedings in its own name or at the relation of some agent or officer of one of the above-named companies to be hereafter selected.

And it is further agreed that the business management of any litigation so instituted shall be under the joint control of W. Van Benthuyssen, representing the National Improved Telephone Company, and ———, representing the Pan-Electric Telephone Company; and no costs or expense in connection with the same shall be incurred and no money paid out or expended without their mutual consent and approval; and all costs and expenses thus incurred shall be equally borne by the two companies except counsel fees, it being understood that each company shall employ and pay its own lawyers. In case of the death or disability of the said W. Van Benthuyssen or of the said ———, then and in that case the company whose representative shall die or become disqualified to act shall select a substitute.

It is further stipulated and agreed that each company shall furnish for use, in the litigation here provided for, all the material, models, and information possessed by them, their officers or attorneys, and each company shall exert itself to bring said litigation to a successful issue.

And it is further specially stipulated and agreed that neither of the contracting parties nor their agents nor attorneys shall use or exert any influence whatever to bring about a discontinuance or termination of said litigation before final decree shall be had therein, except after full conference and mutual agreement upon the terms thereof; it being the understanding that both companies must agree to settlement, dismissal, or abandonment of the suit herein provided for.

It is further agreed and understood that each company shall use its best efforts and influence to secure the appointment by the Department of Justice at Washington of one or more of the attorneys of each company as special assistant counsel and assigned to this particular case, as provided by the laws of the United States providing for the appointment of special counsel by the Department of Justice.

The said W. Van Benthuyzen and ——— shall have the power to secure the court cost of the proposed litigation in any way they may see proper for their own protection or the protection of any one else who may become responsible for the same.

In witness whereof, the proper officers of the two companies hereunto affix their hand and seal this twenty-seventh day of August, A. D. 1885.

THE NATIONAL IMPROVED TELE. CO.,
By W. VAN BENTHUYSEN,
President.

Mr. RANNEY. Please hand that to the reporter and have him mark it for identification.

The WITNESS. I can explain in regard to that if you want me to.

Mr. RANNEY. You received that from Mr. Van Benthuyzen at that time?

The WITNESS. I really cannot recollect.

Q. Did you show it to Senator Harris?—A. No, sir; I never have shown it to him at all.

Q. That was in August, 1885?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you show it to any other of your directors?—A. No, sir; I never thought of it until I found it by accident in the tray of my trunk. I didn't know such a paper was in existence.

Q. Can you remember whether you showed it to your co-directors?—A. I know I did not.

Q. Can you explain why you should make such an agreement and keep it secret?—A. I did not keep it secret; I can explain it exactly.

Q. I understand you to say that you remember now you did keep it secret?—A. Yes; I did not know of it myself, or did not remember it, and did not show it to anybody, so that I must have kept it secret. We had entered into a verbal agreement at Pittsburg, and that agreement was reduced to writing at Washington.

Q. You need not go into the contents of any other paper.—A. I am not going to. That paper seems to be drawn up to carry out some additional agreement that the parties had, and was signed by Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and I am sure was handed to me to bring here and get the sanction of our company to it. I see the blank left there, but it was not signed. I think that was the purpose of it. It passed out of my mind altogether until I found it in the tray of my trunk, and I assume that when I left home on the 27th of August I threw it in there so as to get General Johnston and Senator Harris to sign it, but I haven't thought of it since. I was asked the other day why this contract was not put in the contract book. That book was to record our contracts with subcompanies. I have two contracts very similar to that one, which are not recorded. No contract was put in except for the sale of rights.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Are you positive you did not sign a duplicate of that?—A. No, sir; I cannot say.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You cannot tell that you did not?—A. No, sir; I cannot. Mr. Van Benthuyzen can doubtless explain it better than I can. I have no recollection of it; I had forgotten all about it.

Q. This date, the 27th of August, 1885, was the very time when you and Mr. Van Benthuyzen and his counsel were in Memphis engaged in preparing for this application to the Attorney-General?—A. Yes; and that was what it is made for, too; there is no doubt.

Q. Then if you were there representing your company, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen was there representing his, and Colonel Gantt was there representing yours, and this was drawn and copied by his clerk, Mrs. Miller ——.—A. Not his clerk, but a lady who was doing some copying there.

Q. Well, some one doing his copying. Can you conceive of any reason why you should not execute the duplicate of it right there?—A. Well, I expect I did sign the original. I can conceive why I should bring this here to get the company to sign it.

Q. I understand in the original agreement you undertook the responsibility of executing in behalf of the company. You are not confident that you ever showed that to any members of your company?—A. I think I signed it, and I think Senator Harris says he signed it. After my statement the other day I asked Senator Harris what his recollection was, and he said he thought I had brought a paper to him, and that he signed it.

Q. Your recollection is that you signed it yourself, that you took it upon yourself to sign it, expecting that the company would approve of it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Is it not your recollection that you did the same with the supplemental one?—A. It would appear that I did take this one to show it to them, but did not do it, for I see this blank in it. I think I probably should have had some delicacy in filling out this blank with him at the time to represent our company. It provides here that Mr. Van Benthuyzen and the blank shall represent the two companies, and I think I should have felt some delicacy in putting my own name in that blank without consulting some of the officers of the company.

Q. But this is true, that after the 27th of August, your company, or yourself, representing your company, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen, representing his company, did go on and act in conjunction in regard to that suit?—A. Undoubtedly, and there is no doubt what that paper was drawn up for.

Q. Then, as a matter of fact, following the date of that paper you did go on and act in conjunction?—A. Oh, yes, and I have no doubt that paper was drawn in view of it.

Q. And you have no doubt you acted in view of this paper, have you; that your subsequent action was in view of that paper?—A. I do not know that I ever thought of that paper. This paper was doubtless intended to secure the costs of the case which we proposed to bring.

Q. Was there anything subsequent to the date of that paper which was not in exact conformity to it; if so, state?—A. Yes; we proposed in this to be responsible for the costs, and that has not been done; the Government has relieved us of that. This paper contemplates that the suit shall be brought upon the relation of some officer or agent of the company, and that has not been done. This paper contemplates that an attorney of each one of these companies shall be appointed to conduct this Government suit, and that has not been done. So that hardly anything actually contemplated in this paper has been done.

Q. But whatever you did do was in conformity with it?—A. I presume so. So far as it was done, it was in pursuance of this paper. I take it that this paper was drawn in view of our coming here and trying to get the Government to institute this suit.

Q. Then, as a matter of fact, you did come to an agreement to act in conjunction with each other?—A. Yes, sir. It is put in writing here. I would not have put it in that paper if he had not.

Q. And you never communicated that fact to Mr. Garland?—A. I say I never thought of that paper until I found it in my trunk the other day.

Q. I understand that you withheld from Mr. Garland all information of that agreement, either verbal or written?—A. I did not withhold it. I did not tell him. I withheld it from him as I would from you or anybody else in the country. I did not communicate it to him.

Q. I go upon the assumption that where there are a certain number of directors acting for a company, it requires the action of a majority of those directors to transact business, and if you do not communicate what you do in behalf of or on the part of them, you withhold it.—A. I would not consider it my duty, after a board of directors had met and a majority of them were present, and I had communicated to them any particular action of mine, to go around and hunt up the individual members who did not attend the meeting of the board of directors and communicate it to them.

Q. Do you mean to say that a majority of the directors had consented to that arrangement?—A. I never mentioned it to one of them that I remember.

Q. Then I will finish the question which I began. Corporate action requires the action of a certain number of the directors, does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, if you assumed to do an act without the conjunction of a majority of them, would you not have considered it your duty to communicate to them afterwards what you had done?—A. If I had thought of it I doubtless should have done it; but that paper passed out of my mind, and I had forgotten all about it; I attached no importance to it, because I had become satisfied in the meantime that Mr. Van Benthuyzen was a man of means, and I could safely risk him to pay his part of the expenses.

Q. You do say that in that paper, or in some other way, you had made an agreement with Mr. Van Benthuyzen by which you were to act in conjunction in this matter?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you had done it for yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, what I want to know is whether, having done that, having made such an arrangement as that, verbal or in writing, yourself, without previous authority from the directors, and without their present concurrence, would you not consider it your duty to communicate what you did do to your co-directors for their sanction or rejection?—A. Undoubtedly.

Q. Don't you think you did do it?—A. Yes; to those I saw. But we had no meetings of the board of directors. I know I communicated it to Senator Harris, to Dr. Rogers, to General Johnston, and to everybody I saw.

Q. Did you communicate it to a majority of the directors?—A. I do not know; I did to all I saw.

Q. To make it an authority it would require a record of it?—A. Yes; I think it would as a matter of law, that we should call a meeting of the board of directors to ratify it. But there was no ratification.

Q. You think, having an important agreement like that in the first place, you did not communicate the fact to a majority of your board of directors?—A. There was no meeting of the board of directors, and I could not do it; but I did to all I saw. There was only Dr. Rogers, Senator Harris, and General Johnston that I am certain I talked to about it.

Q. That was not a majority?—A. No, sir; but a majority of those that I saw. Governor John C. Brown lives in Saint Louis, and I could not go there and tell him.

Q. Suppose you had gone on acting under this combination and there had been a matter of expenses and compensation to be paid by the parties connected under the agreement, and your company had been sued for it, you could have repudiated it, could you not?—A. Oh, I would have paid it out of my own pocket at once.

Mr. EDEN. I do not think that is important.

Q. It is not very likely that a lawyer of your experience would have made an important agreement like that without the sanction of your directors, is it?—A. That is your surmise about it; it doesn't hurt me; I state the facts.

Mr. EDEN. I do not see that this has any relevancy to the subject-matter of the investigation, the inquiry as to whether it was his duty to communicate the fact to his co-directors that he had made this sort of an agreement, or whether they would be liable for the expenses if he did not communicate it to them. I do not see what it has to do with the matter or how it is important.

Mr. RANNEY. I have a very clear idea of how it may be important.

The WITNESS. I am ready to state if you want to know.

Q. You do say that you consider it your duty to make it known when you make an agreement of that sort. You would not tell this committee that you would not have considered it your duty to make known to your board of directors an important agreement like that which you had made as an individual without prior authority?—

A. I mean to say that I would tell to this committee, or to you, or to anybody else, anything I saw proper to tell, provided I think it is proper and it is the truth. I do tell the committee that if the board of directors had met and I had met with them I should have communicated to them this arrangement; but I do tell you again that those of the board of directors I did see I did communicate it to them, but I did not hunt up Governor Brown, who lived at Saint Louis; I did not go to the Department of Justice and hunt up Mr. Garland, but I did see Dr. Rogers, Senator Harris, and General Johnston, and communicated that fact to them.

Q. You would not have been very likely to conceal that important fact from Mr. Garland when he was your co-director and attorney, would you?—A. I would have been very likely to have concealed that fact from any man whom I did not meet. Mr. Garland was at the Department of Justice, and I could have gone over there and seen him if I had thought proper.

Mr. EDEN. If you ask the witness if he communicated this fact to Mr. Garland or not, I have no objection; but if you want to discuss here the reason why he did not do it, I do object.

Mr. RANNEY. I put a proper question, and I propose to insist upon an answer. I have put a question in virtue of my right as a member of this committee, and it is objected to, and I want the objection sustained or overruled by the committee.

Mr. EDEN. If you desire to ask the witness simply the fact as to whether he communicated it to Mr. Garland or not, I withdraw the objection.

Mr. RANNEY. I am trying to find out whether he did or not.

Mr. EDEN. It would be easier to find out by asking the question whether he did or not. I will withdraw the objection.

The question was then read by the stenographer as follows:

Q. You would not have been very likely to conceal that important fact from Mr. Garland when he was your co-director and attorney, would you?

The WITNESS. Is that an opinion of Mr. Ranney's or a question to me?

Mr. RANNEY. I do not propose to discuss it.

The WITNESS. I don't care whether you do or not. I ask for information about a question I propose to answer. If you do not choose to discuss it, I will let it alone.

Mr. RANNEY. Let the question be read by the reporter.

(The question was again read.)

The WITNESS. I think I would, very likely, if I had not seen him. I did not think it was my duty to go about and hunt him up unless he had attended a meeting of the board.

Q. Did you regard it any more your duty to tell any other one of the directors than to tell him?—A. Not a particle.

Q. How far was it from where you were boarding to where Mr. Garland's particular office was?—A. It was about two squares or two squares and a half. I was at the Ebbitt House.

Q. It would only have taken you two minutes to go and see him?—A. It would not have taken five minutes.

Q. Would not Mr. Garland's assent, in addition to those you did get, have made a majority of the board of directors?—A. It is possible it might. Let me see whether it would or not. There was myself, General Johnston, Senator Harris, and Harry Rogers—yes, there was a majority.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. State how many made a majority.—A. There were seven directors, and four would be a majority. If I had seen him, it is possible I might have mentioned it to him, but I never saw him during this time at all.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You could have gone and seen him in a two minutes' walk?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And you could have written him a letter, or sent him the contract?—A. Yes, sir; exactly.

Q. Don't you think you did one of those things?—A. No, sir; I don't think anything of the sort.

Q. Can you give any reason why you did not?—A. I have given you all the reason I am aware of why I did not see him.

Q. Can you give any reason why you did not communicate it to him?—A. Yes; I can give you a reason for everything I saw fit to do, and I have just given it to you, if you are capable of understanding it.

Q. If you had a reason for withholding it from Mr. Garland you will tell what it is?—A. No, sir; I did not have any reason for withholding it, and I did not withhold it any more than I withheld it from you.

Q. If you had any reason for not giving him the information, state what it is.—A. With the greatest pleasure in the world; I did not see him.

Q. Is there any reason why you did not take the two minutes' time necessary to go and see him or write him a letter?—A. No, sir; no more than I did not take the time necessary to see you or write you a letter. I had no occasion to see him or to write to him.

Q. Did you not have occasion to write him if it was necessary in order to make it valid that you should have the sanction of the directors?—A. No, sir; I didn't think it was; I had a majority already.

Q. Did you think of that at the time?—A. No, sir; I do not think I did.

Q. Are you sure you did get the sanction of a majority at the time?—A. I don't remember. I don't remember whether they said they approved it or not.

Q. Can you give any reason why you did not get their sanction?—A. No, sir; I don't think I could, and I don't think you would be competent to understand it either; I don't think you would be able to comprehend it.

Q. Answer my question without being impudent. Do you know any reason why you should not have made every director in your company aware of that fact?—A. I don't know of any reason if it had been convenient to do it. I did not notify General Brown or Mr. Looney, and they were directors, and I might just as well have done that as to notify Mr. Garland.

Q. You deemed an agreement of that kind important?—A. No, sir; I did not think it was important. I thought I was dealing with an honest man. I did not expect to undergo this pettifogging examination or I should have been more careful.

Q. I do not ask you about Mr. Van Benthuyzen's being an honest man, but about combining these companies.—A. I was giving you the reasons why I did not think proper to see them. If you want any more reasons I will give them.

Q. Proceed.—A. I have told you already that if I had seen Mr. Garland I should perhaps have communicated the same fact to him as to the other gentlemen. But as I did not deem it of sufficient importance to walk up to the Department of Justice to communicate the fact to him, I did not do so.

Q. I understood you to say that you were not certain that you did communicate it to the other directors.—A. I am not very certain about it. Possibly I did and possibly I didn't.

Q. It seems to me that you were at that time very indifferent as to whether the others knew it or not.—A. Yes, just the same as I am now indifferent to your opinion about it, for they could have repudiated it all along, and it would have been all right, I didn't care. It didn't involve any responsibility or commit them to anything.

Q. But you did not make an effort to see whether they would repudiate it?—A. No, sir; never.

Q. You had no concern about it?—A. No, I didn't care anything about it.

Q. A very important agreement like that?—A. Do you esteem it so?

Q. You say, then, you felt indifferent as to whether your associates in the corporation would sanction it or not?—A. In reply to that I have to say that you are assuming a matter that you have no right to assume. Whether it was important or unimportant I am the man to judge of that and not you. I didn't consider it important, and don't now.

Q. The fact whether your company combined with Van Benthuyzen and his company in the matter embraced in that contract you say you did not consider important at all?—A. I did not.

Q. You did not consider it important whether you shared the expense?—A. Oh, the expense wouldn't be much. I supposed they would do whatever I recommended.

Q. If I understand you—— A. I don't think you do, and I don't think you will either.

Q. Forbear your comments upon the matter.—A. Well, your manner is offensive. You are a pettifogging lawyer instead of being a member of Congress.

Mr. HANBACK. I object to that kind of language.

Mr. RANNEY. You can get up no colloquy with me.

The WITNESS. I don't want any.

Mr. HALE. I object to a further continuance of this cross-examination, for I think ample time has been allowed to Mr. Ranney, and this question has been gone over and over again for the last ten days, and there must be a limit somewhere to the time that may be consumed in that way.

Mr. RANNEY. If the member who has been indulged in a week's absence will allow me, I want to say a word in reply. The contract I am now referring to is one which has been for the first time disclosed this morning, and for the first time put in evidence. The gentleman probably was not aware of that.

Mr. HALE. Well, I think you have had time enough on that, too.

Mr. RANNEY. I am to be the judge of that.

Mr. HALE. I will make the objection to it.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the committee adjourn.

Mr. MILLARD. I call for the yeas and nays.

The Chairman (Mr. Oates) declared the motion lost—three yeas and five nays.

Mr. HALL. I insist on my objection.

Mr. OATES. I understand that the gentleman from Massachusetts only wants to put a few more questions.

Mr. RANNEY. The only question I want to put is in relation to this agreement which has come in and been disclosed for the first time this morning. I have not resumed the examination I made the other day, and do not propose to, for I have finished it. (To the witness.) Do you mean to say that all the provisions of that agreement were so unimportant that you did not consider it of any consequence whether you got the assent of your co-directors or not?—A. I did not think it very important. I did get the assent of those I spoke to, if there was any assent about it. If there had been a meeting of the board of directors——

Q. Pardon me; I understood you to say that you were not sure whether you did or not.—A. There is no telling what you did understand by what you say. I am going to answer your question in my own way, if I answer it at all.

Mr. RANNEY. Read the question.

The reporter read the question as follows:

“Q. Do you mean to say that all the provisions of that agreement were so unimportant that you did not consider it of any consequence whether you got the assent of your co-directors or not?”—A. My answer is this, that if the board of directors had met, I might have considered it of sufficient importance to lay it before them, and I think I did. In their absence, if they did not attend, I did not think it of sufficient importance to call a meeting for that purpose.

Q. And you have had no meeting of your co-directors, formal or informal, since the date of that instrument?—A. There has been one; it is the one you have heard so much about, of the 25th of January, where a little row occurred.

Q. I will put just one more question.—A. Put just as many as you want.

Q. Do you swear positively that you either did or did not communicate to any one of your co-directors or co-counsel the fact of making that agreement?—A. I think “co-counsel” is a good word; yes, I will swear that I did communicate it to them.

Q. To which one?—A. I talked with General Johnston, Senator Harris, and Dr. Rogers.

Q. When and where?—A. It was about the time the agreement was made, and was in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia.

Q. Was an agreement made in Washington?—A. Oh, yes, sir; that agreement was. This was not; this was made in Memphis.

Q. This is the one I mean.—A. I never mentioned it to a human being until I found it the other night. I had forgotten all about it, as I have explained.

Q. At Memphis, Tenn., when it was made, how many of your co-counsel were there?—A. My what?

Q. Your co-counsel, those who were associated with you?—A. I reckon all of them were there. Colonel Gantt was there, Mr. Beckwith, General Luke Wright, and I presume they were all there at the time it was made.

Q. Did you communicate it to them?—A. I presume it was written in their presence. I have no recollection when it was written. I see it is in the handwriting of the lady who was writing in my office.

Q. Do you remember whether it was shown to them or not?—A. I do not.

Q. Or after consultation with them?—A. I cannot remember whether after or before. The consultation continued for a number of days, and about that time it had been going on—

Q. Do you remember whether you brought it to Washington with you?—A. I decline to answer until I have finished my previous answer.

Q. I ask you whether you will swear that you did or not bring that agreement to Washington with you?—A. When I am allowed to answer the first question I will tell you. I don't propose to have you stop me in that way. I will answer it in my own way or not all. I was proceeding to say that about the time that instrument seems to have been written, about the 27th of August, we were having conference, just before and after that time and during that time, and I cannot say whether those gentlemen saw it or not, or whether it was submitted to them. I had no recollection of its being written at all until I found it in my trunk. Now proceed with your question.

Q. The question was whether you will swear that you did or not bring it to Washington with you after the 31st of August, 1885, and after Mr. McCorry had sent on his communication?—A. I will swear that I brought it here as early as the 1st of November, because my trunk has been here ever since, and I must have brought it here at that time.

Q. The question is whether you brought it here after Mr. McCorry had sent on his communication?—A. I cannot say. I found it in my trunk, and I presume I put it there when I came on.

Q. When you came on and were here from the 31st of August to the 7th of September?—A. I presume so.

Q. But you have no recollection to whom you showed it at that time?—A. I know I showed it to nobody because I would have remembered it if I had.

Q. You have no recollection of communicating it to anybody?—A. I have no recollection of communicating it to anybody because if I had I should have remembered it.

Q. You know of no reason why you did not, beyond what you have stated?—A. None that I can think of now.

Q. That is all I desire to ask now.

The WITNESS. Is that satisfactory to you?

Mr. RANNEY. It is not for me to say.

The WITNESS. I am very glad that you are satisfied once.

Mr. RANNEY. There is no use of your being impudent about it.

By Mr. MILLARD.

Q. Have you in your possession a copy of your agreement of which this is a supplement?—A. I have answered that a hundred times, that I have not got it.

Q. Did you not before that agreement left Washington get it copied?—A. What agreement?

Q. The agreement to which this is a supplement?—A. I don't remember whether there was a copy made or not.

Q. Did you not get a gentleman named Gardiner to have a copy made?—A. It is possible; I cannot say.

Q. Do you say that you did not?—A. I cannot say whether I did or not; I do not remember.

Q. Did you not charge him also at the time that he must not make it known to anybody?—A. No, sir; never in the world; I did not care who knew it. It was shown to anybody who wanted to see it. I would have placarded it on the wall; I had no occasion to conceal it.

Q. Do you say that Mr. Gardiner did not make for you one or two copies?—A. I could not say; I have forgotten all about it; I possibly had them made, but I am quite sure that I never told Mr. Gardiner or anybody else to conceal it. I would have put it on the wall if necessary. I could have easily withheld the whole thing from the gentlemen if I had wanted to do it. It was not brought out by any question by either one of them.

Mr. HANBACK. I would like to ask a question or two. On page 137 of the testimony—

Mr. HALE. Has there not been some rule adopted in regard to the order of examination?

Mr. OATES. Yes, there was a rule adopted about it.

Mr. HALE. If we have a rule we ought to try to adhere to it.

Mr. RANNEY. I have adhered to it.

Mr. HALE. I think we ought to adhere to that rule if we have any.

Mr. HANBACK. I have adhered to it, but when the former examination of the witness was adjourned, I had a question to ask, but it went over until this session. (To the witness). I will read it to you; it is an answer to a question by Mr. Ranney. The question is: "You had become satisfied then that the Bell Telephone had an odious monopoly?—A. I had not become satisfied that it had become such a monopoly that it controlled the newspapers of the country and the courts." I will ask you to state if you know of your own knowledge of any newspapers of the country or any courts of the country that have been controlled by the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I was asked that the other day, and I stated, I believe, that I had no fact in my possession that I could prove; but there is such a belief. I think I have facts now that do authorize me in making the statement, and when the proper time comes I propose to submit those facts to the committee. I am not prepared at present to do it.

Q. It is a part of the inquiry—A. I understand it is perfectly proper, and I shall be prepared to do it. I see in one of the newspapers that I am put down as saying that certain newspapers did not sympathize with the Bell Company. I did not say that. I do think that the Bell Telephone Company is behind this whole business.

Q. You think you have facts now which you will submit?—A. Yes, sir; I think it is behind the whole investigation.

By Mr. OATES.

Q. You are not ready to put those facts before us now?—A. I am not.

Mr. OATES. Then it is supposed that the examination is closed and that the witness, when he obtains his facts, will present them in writing to the committee, stating what he proposes to testify to, and you can ask him about them at that time.

Mr. HANBACK. I did not intend to ask any further question on this part of the investigation.

The WITNESS. I will give you all the facts I have, and the committee and the country can judge about them.

Mr. HANBACK. I have no further question to ask on that point. That is all I cared to ask in regard to that. But there is another question I want to ask. (To the witness.) You stated in answer to a question of Mr. Ranney's, on page 144 of the printed testimony, in reference to the suit against the Bell Telephone Company, "I hold that when we defeat the Bell Telephone Company in the litigation which we have pending now, as we will do, it will relieve him [that is Dr. Rogers] from the injunction which he is under in Pennsylvania. I say that on my judgment as a lawyer, and I will discuss that question with you on the authorities if you desire." To what suit did you refer?

The WITNESS. I referred to the suit we had brought against the Bell Company in Memphis, the individual suit of our company against them.

Q. Then, again, on page 145, my question is answered really by your last answer to me: "Q. Do you mean the Government case?—A. No, sir; I mean my own case that I brought against them myself. I can do very well without the Government." Do you mean to be understood as saying that the company could do very well without the Government?—A. Yes; I mean to be understood as saying that I believe we could sustain that suit except for one thing. I had some doubt whether a suit of that sort could be maintained under the sixteenth section of the patent law; whether the declaration which we would have to make to give the court jurisdiction would not prevent our sustaining ourselves. I do not know whether a court would take jurisdiction of a question of that sort. That is a legal question for the courts to determine.

Mr. HANBACK. I have no further question.

Mr. HALE. Is it understood we are through with Colonel Young?

Mr. RANNEY. We are through with him until we get the still missing contract.

Mr. HALE. I want to put two or three questions. (To the witness.) Do you remember when the suit was brought by the Government last summer, the date?—A. I do not. I have a record which shows when it was brought.

Q. Did you have any conference or consultation before that suit was brought with Mr. Goode in regard to bringing it?—A. The first suit that was brought—no, sir.

Q. Did you have any talk or conference with him?—A. Oh, yes; I went to him on the 31st of July.

Mr. OATES. The witness has already testified about that.

Mr. HALE. I did not hear it. One more question. Did he state in that conversation, or in any conversation you had with him on that subject, whether he had conferred with Mr. Garland about bringing the suit?—A. No, sir; Mr. Garland was not here at the time.

Q. He had left a short time before?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Was there anything said in the conversation about Mr. Garland?—A. His name was never mentioned at all.

Q. Did you understand that Mr. Goode was acting on his own authority?—A. Yes; I understand that he was Solicitor-General, and had authority to act under the law.

Q. Did he indicate in what he said that he was authorized by Mr. Garland to bring suit in his absence?—A. No, sir; he never mentioned anything of the kind at all.

Mr. HALE. That is all I have to ask.

The WITNESS. Before the committee adjourns I desire to ask for an opportunity of correcting such errors as I have found in my testimony.

Mr. OATES. You may make a list and submit it to the committee.

The WITNESS. I will telegraph or write to Mr. Gray to-night, and if he will release me from any obligation which may exist between us as between lawyer and client, I will tell the committee my whole connection with the case so far as he is concerned.

Mr. RANNEY. You have declined to answer questions on that point, and I do not know that we want the information now.

The committee then adjourned until 12.30 o'clock to-morrow.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Wednesday, March 31, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.40 p. m.

The CHAIRMAN. I believe it is understood that we shall proceed this morning with the examination of Senator Harris.

Mr. OATES. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN (to Senator Harris). Senator, will you be sworn?

Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS was then sworn.

The WITNESS. Mr. Chairman, you will remember that on the first or second day of the meeting of this committee I called to say to you that at such time as would be convenient I would appear here for the purpose of telling the committee what I knew in respect to the Pan-Electric Telephone matters.

The CHAIRMAN. Such is the fact, sir.

The WITNESS. And I am here this morning for that purpose. I desire to say a word in respect to the relations that have existed between Dr. Rogers and myself, so that what I may hereafter say may be the better understood, perhaps, in view of these relations.

I have known Dr. Rogers, I should say, for thirty years, possibly more, and up to a very recent period have had abundant reason to believe and have believed that he was a very earnest and fast friend of mine; I have felt most kindly disposed toward him during that period, but up to the winter of 1882-'83 we met very seldom.

The first that I ever heard of these electrical inventions, now owned by the Pan-Electric Association, was some time in the winter of 1882-'83, and I should think in February of 1883, though I have no means of fixing the precise date. My best recollection is that the first information I had in respect to them was contained in a note signed by either Dr. J. W. Rogers or Mr. J. Harris Rogers, and addressed to Hon. J. D. C. Atkins, giving some account of these electrical inventions and expressing a wish that Atkins and myself should become interested in their development and in utilizing them. For some two or three, or possibly more weeks—how long I cannot possibly say—it was a subject of conversations, and possibly the writing of notes between the Rogerses and myself, and I imagine Atkins also; he can speak better as to that, however.

After the lapse of some weeks—how long I cannot say—I appointed an hour at which time I would appear at the laboratory at 315 Four-and-one-half street, in this city, for the purpose of looking at these various inventions and hearing such explanations as the electrician could give of them. At the time fixed I appeared. I was shown the telephone. We experimented with it. I was shown the telegraphic repeater, as I believe it is termed, and that was put in operation. Of course, I did not comprehend at all, except through the explanations made by the electrician, what it was doing. I saw a cylinder in operation, and an instrument making dots and dashes upon tin-foil, which I was informed were telegraphic characters, readable by an expert in telegraphy. Not being such expert, however, I understood nothing of the dots and dashes excep-what I was told; the explanation was that the instrument would repeat with more accuracy than human fingers could do the exact message that that tin-foil had received, and receive and repeat at the rate of, perhaps, three hundred or more words per minute, while, as I was then informed, an expert operator would receive and send perhaps thirty words a minute. I was shown also an electric lamp, that struck my mind with very considerable force in its absolute simplicity, and in what I conceived to be a perfect remedy for what I understood to be the chief difficulty in electric lighting.

Of course, I relied to a large extent upon the explanations given to me. A number of other electrical inventions were shown me that I cannot now enumerate, because they did not then impress themselves upon my mind; I did not quite see the utility or practicability of them. But at the end of the investigation I said something like this to Dr. Rogers and J. Harris Rogers, who were both present: "I am impressed with the belief that at least three of these inventions are of utility, and are, I should think, of some value. The sound from the telephone impresses me as the clearest, the most distinct, and the loudest that I have ever heard. The telegraphic repeater, if it be what you gentlemen tell me it is, I think is a thing of utility, a thing of value. And the electric lamp, if it remedies, as I understand it probably will, the chief evil in electric lighting, I should think is also a thing of utility and of value."

Having said that much, I then proceeded to say: "You have been kind enough to express a wish that Atkins and myself should become interested in developing and utilizing these inventions. You have also heretofore suggested to me several persons to whom you have already promised interests. Now, there is one condition, and but one, upon which I would consent to become interested in this enterprise at all, and that condition is, in my own judgment, quite an unreasonable one." I was asked to state it. I said: "As it is the only condition upon which I would consent to become interested, unreasonable as it is, of course I will do it. It is this: That I shall have the right to name the persons who are to absolutely control the business of the enterprise; and unless I can have the naming of the persons who are to control it, I shall decline to take any interest in or have any connection with it." I think it was Dr. Rogers who replied: "The condition seems to me to be an unreasonable one." "Oh, my dear sir," I said, "I stated that it was unreasonable before I suggested it. I quite recognize the fact that it is unreasonable. But, as it is the only condition upon which I would consent to become connected with the enterprise, it is simply frank to name it, unreasonable as it is." With that we parted.

Either on the next day or the day following I was informed by the Messrs. Rogers, that, on reflection, they thought perhaps it would be well to give me the authority not only to name the persons who were to control the enterprise, but to fix the terms upon which those persons should become interested. In answer to which I said: "I will cheerfully accept the authority to name the persons, but not to fix the terms, because the persons whom I shall name will become part-owners of a property or a supposed property that belongs to Harry Rogers, and the terms upon which they are to become such part-owners must be the subject of negotiation. When I have named the persons and you have suggested terms, if the terms you suggest are satisfactory to the persons named, then the matter can go on; but if the terms you suggest shall not be satisfactory, the parties named can step down and out and no harm will have been done."

A day or two after that I received, I think, a note signed by either the one or the other of the Rogerses, the doctor or Harry, proposing that I should name three persons—for up to this time no number of persons had been suggested—in addition to Atkins and myself, making five in all, and the persons so named should be equally interested—with each other at least—the proposition being to divide the whole property into ten-tenths; that Atkins, myself, and the three persons named should each own one-tenth, Harry Rogers retain four-tenths, and the tenth tenth should be held in common by these parties named, to be used in any manner that the association should determine to use it. In answer to which I said: "Certainly, any gentleman who is inclined to connect himself with this enterprise at all will not object to the terms you propose."

Some time after that—how long I cannot say—Atkins and I went to the laboratory, at 315 Four-and-a-half street, together, and there we met Dr. Rogers and Harry Rogers, and engaged in a very general conversation about the whole matter, in the course of which I said to the Rogerses: "So far as I have thought about this matter at all I am inclined to suggest the name of General Joseph E. Johnston as one of the parties with whom I should like to be associated in this matter." Both the Rogerses and Mr. Atkins expressed absolute satisfaction at the suggestion, and I said: "Very well; let him be put down as the third man." Atkins and myself making the first and second. I had not thought about the matter sufficiently at that moment to designate or suggest any other name; but, in the course of the conversation, Atkins turned to me and said: "Senator, what do you think of Senator Garland?" I said I had not thought of Garland at all in that connection, "but Garland is in every way satisfactory to me; I could have no objection to Garland, and he is in every way satisfactory." It was then suggested that Garland make the fourth of the five.

After some further conversation Dr. Rogers asked me, "What do you think of Casey Young?" "Well," I said, "I had not thought of Casey Young in this connection at all, and, indeed, my mind had not fixed itself upon any names beyond the one I have already suggested; but Casey Young is certainly in every way unobjectionable to me." The doctor stated that he had either been corresponding with Casey Young or talking to Casey Young about the matter, and that he thought he felt some interest in the inventions, and he would be glad to have Young's name as one of the men. I said, "Very well; I have no objection to Colonel Young; let him be named as the fifth." In that way the five men were agreed upon. That was all verbal, except so far as parts of these negotiations—if they can be called negotiations—were in the form of notes, and how far they were in the form of notes and how far in the form of verbal interviews I cannot say, for I have never preserved a single note that I received from Dr. Rogers or Harry Rogers in respect to these negotiations.

Mr. MILLARD. When did you fix that date, or have you fixed it?

The WITNESS. I started by saying that some time in the winter of 1882-'83, and I thought in the month of February, 1883; but to be specific or definite as to date I know of no means that I would have of fixing it with any degree of certainty, but it was, I am quite certain, in the year 1883, and I should think in the month of February. Then my statement was that for some two or three or possibly four weeks after—

Mr. MILLARD. I understood that

The WITNESS. I had come to this suggestion that I should name the people with whom I was to be associated in the management, development, and utilizing of this property. The matter remained so. Congress was drawing rapidly to a close, and we were all—at least Garland and I were—very much engaged. I think it was some time in March, after the adjournment, when, of course, having a little leisure, I think it probable that Atkins, Young, myself, and Garland, all met once or twice at Dr. Rogers's house, when we had a general talk about the matter, and witnessed experiments. We were all very much taken with the telephone, as being simple, clear, distinct, and loud; and perhaps as often as twice, and possibly oftener—but I would say it was safe to say as often as twice—Garland and myself and probably Atkins (and I am not sure about Young) met at the laboratory of Dr. Rogers's house on Four-and-a-half street. But nothing occurred there except a general discussion of the probable merit of these inventions.

The thing remained in that condition until some time along in March, when I had to go to New-York upon a matter of business that would detain me there two or three days, and I think one or two of the other gentlemen also had to go to New York. At all events, sooner or later it was agreed that we would meet at the New York Hotel at an early day. I expect the register of that hotel would show that we reached there somewhere about the 10th, 11th, or 12th of March, 1883. Dr. Rogers and Harry, Colonel Young, Atkins, and myself met at the New York Hotel. I think General Johnston's wife was quite ill at that time, and he sent me a written power of attorney to represent him in anything we might do there; and Garland was stricken down with a cold, and he also sent me a written power of attorney to represent him in anything we might do there in the way of closing up our agreement, or supposed agreement, in respect to this matter.

We were there, I think, two or three days, perhaps four days, I do not know; but it resulted in the drawing up by Colonel Young of the contract, a copy of which is in the possession of the committee, and it is my copy that I handed to Colonel Young when he was on the witness stand, and which I suppose the committee has the possession of. That contract substantially, if not accurately, expressed the proposition that the Rogerses had submitted with reference to dividing the whole matter into ten tenths and securing to each of the five persons named a one-tenth interest, on the conditions specified in the contract. I understand my duty to be, under the verbal agreements that had been reached, so far as they had amounted to agreements and as incorporated in that contract, that we were to contribute whatever means were necessary for the development, the completion, and the patenting of a good many of these inventions not yet patented. My impression is that there were only three or four of them that were then patented—applications were pending for patents as to several others—and there were several other inventions for which no applications for patents had been made up to that time. I understood it to be the duty of myself and associates to contribute pro rata to the furnishing of such means as were necessary to complete inventions not completed, to secure patents for inventions not yet patented, to defray our proportion of the expenses of the experiments necessary to develop to our own satisfaction the utility or inutility of these inventions, and to bring to public notice and public use, such as we should, upon ample experiment, determine to be of utility.

While there I for the first time heard the name of Mr. Hewitt connected or proposed to be connected in any way with this enterprise. Some one of the gentlemen suggested that Mr. Hewitt would be a good man to associate with ourselves in developing this enterprise, and my impression is that Mr. Atkins and Harry Rogers went to see Mr. Hewitt. Harry Rogers stated here the other day, when I happened to be present, that Atkins and myself and himself went. In that he was mistaken. I did not go to see Mr. Hewitt at all upon that occasion. But I am frank to say that it would have been in every way agreeable to me to have had Mr. Hewitt associated with us, as he was a gentleman in whose capacity, integrity, and qualifications as a business man I had the very highest confidence. I should have been very glad to have him associated with us, but I did not chance to go with those gentlemen. I think, however, that Mr. Atkins and Harry Rogers did go, and they can state exactly what occurred with regard to it. The contract was drawn, and was executed by the various parties—by myself for myself, and under the powers of attorney that General Johnston and Mr. Garland had sent me I executed the contract for them as their attorney-in-fact.

Subsequent to that, I think Mr. Atkins, Harry Rogers, and myself visited the Western Union Telegraph office for the purpose of seeing if we could secure the use of a wire between Washington City and New York, in order that we might experiment both with the telegraphic instruments, with the telephone transmitter, and with what, I believe, is called a telephonic repeater. Failing, however, to make any arrangement with the Western Union Telegraph Company for the use of such wire, we went, I think, to the office of what is called the Merchants' Telegraph Company, or Bankers' Telegraph Company, which is it?

Mr. HANBACK. It is the Merchants' and Bankers', is it not?

The WITNESS. It may be; I would not be certain about the name, but it was a company other than the Western Union, and I think it was the Merchants' and Bankers', or the Merchants', or the Bankers' Telegraph Company. We made an agreement with that company to rent a wire for a given length of time, I forget how long, and I have not the terms upon which we were to have the use of the wire. My recollection is that our right to use it was to begin at six o'clock in the evening, and end at six o'clock in the morning, the telegraph company having the use of the wire from six in the morning to six in the evening. That is my recollection as to the agreement.

That accomplished, my recollection is that I went home from New York—I do not remember whether I came back through Washington and stopped here for a short time, or went directly home from New York—the understanding being that General Johnston and Harris Rogers should conduct such experiments as would develop the utility or inutility of the inventions referred to, my impression being that the chief experiments, if not the only ones, were to test the telephonic transmitter over a long line, to test the telephonic repeater, and to test the telegraphic repeater. Those, I think, were the things, certainly the chief things, that it was proposed to test over that line. I remained away from Washington for I do not know how long, and these experiments over that wire had been made some considerable time, I think, before I returned to Washington, and I only had the report of General Johnston and of Harry Rogers and other friends who had from time to time been invited to witness experiments, as to the result of those experiments.

I do not remember when the charter was obtained, but the undertaking, according to my construction of the written contract that you gentlemen have the possession of, and according to my understanding of my duties under that contract, was that we were to do whatever was necessary in aid of the electrician in perfecting and in utilizing such of those instruments as experiments showed to be of utility. The telephone impressed every one of the company that I have ever talked to about it—and I have talked to all of them—with more force as to its efficiency, as to its real value, than, I think, any other instrument. I at first, however, believed that the telegraphic repeater, if it accomplished results such as are claimed for it, would prove to be very much the most valuable of all those inventions. And at some time, whether before or after obtaining the charter I cannot say, the Western Union Telegraph Company, at our instance, named a Mr. Marean here as a telegraphic expert, and requested him to examine and to test this telegraphic repeater, and I remember to have been notified of the fact that Mr. Marean had been deputed by the Western Union Telegraph Company to investigate and to test that instrument.

Upon being so notified, I saw Mr. Harry Rogers, the electrician, and asked him to put the instrument in its best condition and give Mr. Marean all the aid in his power to subject it to a fair and thorough test. For some reason or other, I know not what, I think months elapsed—and how many I cannot say—before the instrument was put in condition by Mr. Rogers. But finally, I have understood from some of my associates—I think General Johnston, perhaps, informed me, and I do not know but others have talked to me about it—that the experiments with the repeater had been made by Mr. Marean, and my informant said that he had been told (whether by Mr. Marean or by whom I do not know) that Mr. Marean had reported to the Western Union Telegraph Company that that company had an instrument of its own, then in daily use, performing the same functions, and performing them quite as efficiently and well and possibly better—I am not sure as to that—but certainly quite as efficiently and well as our instrument was capable of performing the functions claimed for it. Since which time I know of nothing that has been done in respect to the telegraphic repeater. It has remain in a state of quietude, so far as I know. I have certainly done nothing, and I have not heard of any of my associates doing anything or attempting to do anything with the telegraphic repeater since that time.

The Pan-Electric Telephone Company, as a general rule—and I may say almost without exception—when we have met to confer about matters of the company, has been very harmonious. Rarely has there been a dissenting voice in respect to the measures of policy that were agreed upon; and indeed I do not know that I could now say that there was at any time a dissenting voice in the board of directors.

Mr. OATES. Let me interrupt you in order that we may be exactly right. Do you mean the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, or the original Pan-Electric Company? You have not yet described the formation of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

The WITNESS. True. I was referring more particularly to the corporation when I then spoke, but I believe I can safely use the same expression with regard to the association created by the contract that is now in your custody.

Mr. OATES. Known as the Pan-Electric Company?

The WITNESS. Known as the Pan-Electric Association; perhaps that would be the better name. I do not remember whether the paper gives the name, and I do not remember whether it has any name that it can legally claim, but I have usually referred to it as the Pan-Electric Association. But I understood the agreement to be that in the matter of utilizing such of these instruments as we found to be of utility and supposed to be of value we were to take such steps as would best promote the matter of getting a charter, an act of incorporation, under the general laws of some State that would authorize a charter for such a company. I infer from Dr. Rogers's testimony, such of it as I have heard, and I inferred from his very frequent appeals, that he has made perhaps to the association before a charter was obtained for anything, that he was anxious that a charter should be obtained, and then some time after it was obtained—not very early—he frequently urged that we should issue stock and deliver it to the parties in the ratio to which they were entitled. But, so far as the action of the board of directors was concerned, if there be a question where there has been a dissenting vote, the record will show it. I can only say I do not remember it.

But from the very beginning my construction of my undertaking was to aid, by furnishing my portion of such means as might be necessary to perfect these instruments, to secure patents where it was deemed necessary and proper to obtain patents, to secure a charter for the purpose of utilizing them, but not to enter upon stock-jobbing operations; it was to utilize certain inventions, which, by experiment, we might become satisfied were of utility and of some value to the public; and to use our energies, our efforts, and our business capacity in bringing to the notice of the public and in utilizing such of these instruments as we became satisfied were of utility. Upon the proposition to issue and deliver stock, I am not sure that I was not the mover—I am not sure that I was—but one thing I am sure of, and that is, that in every instance where the proposition has been suggested I have opposed, by my suggestions and by my vote, the issue of the stock; and my information is that every share of the stock proper is now in the stock-book in the hands of the secretary and treasurer, locked up, but that some form of paper was issued to each party in interest, showing the extent of the interest to which he would be entitled when the stock of the company should be issued.

Mr. RANNEY. Are you speaking of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company or the original association?

The WITNESS. I am speaking of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company; if there ever was any stock of the original association I have no recollection of it; we have never had a corporation that was authorized to issue stock, or a corporation that was authorized to do anything else, representing the various things which were included in the contract, as I understand it; I think that there was a charter obtained—I am sure there was a charter obtained—for the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and I think there was also a charter obtained for what was called the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company; but those are the only charters of which I have any knowledge, and if there be a stock-book, or if stock was ever prepared for any other corporation in connection with these matters, I have no recollection of it, and I am sure that I never, by any act or word, authorized the preparation of any such paper.

In brief, that is about the statement in respect to the circumstances under which we entered upon this enterprise and the manner in which we have conducted it. The record shows who were the officers and directors of the company.

I may make one other remark that may or may not be regarded as material: At one time, when I chanced to be present in the committee room, I remember Dr. Rogers stating that we had had perhaps two or more meetings of the board of directors in the room of the Senate Judiciary Committee. I simply desire to say that I have no recollection of any meeting of the board of directors of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, or of the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company, in that committee room at any time.

But Dr. Rogers may very easily have fallen into the error of his statement, if it be an error, in this way: I have frequently been talked to by General Johnston about some question pertaining to the business of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company; and if it involved a question of law, and possibly in many instances where it did not involve a question of law, I have said, "We will go and see Garland about it; let Garland advise you in respect to the matter;" and I have gone to the Judiciary Committee room, where Senator Garland kept a desk, repeatedly—how often I cannot tell—sometimes with Dr. Rogers, sometimes perhaps with Dr. Rogers and General Johnston, and sometimes alone, to ask Garland a question. But I know of no meeting of the board that ever occurred at that room. Indeed, I have no recollection of meetings of our board at places other than Colonel Young's room, sometimes at my rooms, but oftener at Young's, because he had the books and papers; sometimes, however, the board has met at my rooms, and as often as once or twice, when it was desirable to deal with some matter requiring prompt action, the board has met at my committee room, the room of the Senate Committee on Epidemic Diseases. I remember to have had one certainly, and possibly two meetings there, and I would not say positively that there had not been as many as three meetings of the board at my committee room. But outside of Young's room, my rooms, and my committee room, I know of no meeting of the board to consider anything.

One other suggestion. Speaking of Dr. Rogers's testimony reminds me of it; that is in respect to a proposition of his, as he states, to transfer or make some arrangement with the Pan-Electric Telephone Company in respect to his Postal Telegraph Company. I simply desire to say that I have no recollection of having ever heard any such proposition or having considered it. I have never had the slightest shadow of interest in the Postal Telegraph Company, and I do not remember for one moment having considered the question of any association. But in all human probability the doctor may have submitted a proposition, as he says; but if so, I do not think it possible that it could have been called to my attention, or that I have ever considered it, because I do not think it probable that I should have forgotten it having considered it. But I have known nothing about the Postal Telegraph Company except to have heard it spoken of from time to time, and to have known in that way that there was such an organization in existence.

I do not know that I care to state further, except to respond to such questions as any member of the committee may chose to propound.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Senator, were you a member of the United States Senate at the time you speak of, the latter part of 1882 and beginning of 1883?—A. I have been continuously since March, 1877, and am still a member of that body.

Q. I understand you to say that the suggestion to you to take an interest in these inventions was made by General Atkins?—A. My recollection is, as I stated it, that the first I ever heard of these inventions, I think, was in a note addressed to Atkins by the one or the other of the Rogerses, calling his attention to the inventions and expressing a wish that both he and I should become interested in their development and in utilizing them.

Q. Was it after you had made an examination of the inventions at the laboratory that you made this suggestion that you were to control or to suggest the names of the persons who were to control the affairs of the enterprise?—A. I stated a few moments since that I think some weeks elapsed after my attention was first called to these inventions before I found it convenient or consented to go to the laboratory to look at them; but I finally did appoint a time; I went; I experimented with the telephone; had these other inventions of which I have spoken explained to me; and after the investigation that I had given I said substantially this, naming the three inventions: "It appears to me that they are of utility and I think of some value." I then proceeded to say: "You have been kind enough to express a wish that Atkins and I should become interested in their development and in utilizing them."

I also stated that they had given me the names of several persons to whom they had already promised an interest in these inventions, some of whom I knew and some of whom I did not know; and I am frank to say that the business methods of those of them that I did know were not my business methods, and I would not have been willing to connect myself with any business matter that those gentlemen would have controlled, however kindly I may have felt to them otherwise; I was not inclined to connect myself with a business enterprise of any kind that they would control. Hence

I proceeded to say: "There is but one condition upon which I would consent to become interested in this enterprise, and that is a very unreasonable one." Being asked what it was, I proceeded to state that it was that I was to name the men who should absolutely control the business enterprise. Dr. Rogers replied, "Well, that does strike me as unreasonable." I said, "I notified you in advance that it was unreasonable;" and there the matter dropped for that day. Possibly the next day, or a day or two after, I was informed by a note, I think, but I am not sure whether by note or verbally, that on reflection they were quite willing to have me not only name the men, but fix the terms. I promptly declined the authority to fix terms, but consented to name the men. A day or two or some days after that came the proposition that "You shall name three men in addition to Atkins and yourself; the whole property shall be divided into ten tenths; the five persons so named shall each own one tenth; Harry Rogers shall retain four tenths, and the tenth tenth shall be held by the association to be disposed of in any way it chooses."

The CHAIRMAN. That is your statement as you made it; I remember it.

The WITNESS. Yes; that was after I had investigated and experimented with these instruments to some extent.

Q. I understand, then, that you and General Atkins afterward met the Rogerses, and that you suggested the name of Senator Garland?—A. Some time after that, how long I can't tell, Atkins and I went down there together, and I suggested the name of General Joe Johnston, not having up to that time determined upon any other name that I would suggest; but I suggested the name of General Joseph E. Johnston, upon which both the Rogerses and Mr. Atkins expressed their entire satisfaction, and it was agreed that General Johnston should make the third name of the five.

Q. General Atkins suggested the name of Garland?—A. Yes; in the course of the same conversation Atkins turned to me, saying "Senator, what do you think of Senator Garland?" I said "I had not thought of Garland at all in this connection, but he is in every way satisfactory to me; I can have no objection to Garland." And it was then agreed that Garland's name should be the fourth name. Dr. Rogers then asked me, "What do you think of Casey Young?" and I proceeded to say, "I had not thought of Young in this connection; but I have no objection to Young."

Q. That is what you stated before. We recall all that. I want to know whether, in point of fact, you ever had heard Garland's name suggested in connection with this enterprise before this interview?—A. Never; never.

Q. Do you remember of having any conversation with Senator Garland, after this suggestion, with respect to his becoming a member of this association?—A. Oh, yes; soon after the naming of these persons—I expect the next day—I wrote a note to General Johnston, asking him to come to my house. He called at the time I had fixed, and for the first time, I suppose, that he ever heard of it I informed him of what had occurred, and told him I desired to know whether it would be agreeable to him to join in that enterprise. He said it would be entirely so, and I advised him to go to the laboratory and investigate those inventions. On the same day, meeting Garland, I recited to him what had occurred in respect to the enterprise, and he told me, I think, that Atkins had already spoken to him about it, and had made the same explanation to him that I have just made.

Q. What did he say in respect to being associated with you?—A. He said he would very cheerfully do so.

Q. Had you had any conversation with General Johnston in regard to Senator Garland before you suggested his name as one of the parties?—A. Never; never. It was after I had suggested his name that I addressed a note, and I expect it was addressed either that night or the next morning, asking him to come and see me at an hour the next morning which I fixed, which he did.

Q. Can you give any reason for selecting New York as the place for making that written agreement?—A. I am not sure as to the reasons that controlled. I am sure as to one thing: that I had to go to New York upon business wholly independent of and disconnected from all of these matters. I am not sure but there was one other consideration that may have had more or less of influence—yet I do not state that it had, for I am not sure that it had—but I am inclined to think that we had heard through some source that there was a recent act of the New York legislature that was broad enough to cover, under one charter, these various electrical inventions, and I think possibly that may have constituted some part of the motive for going to New York, but I am not sure as to that. The law of the case in respect to getting a charter and other matters I paid little or no attention to, but was relying upon Mr. Garland and Colonel Young to look to those things and determine those questions.

Q. I understood from your statement—you have stated it two or three times—that the consideration you were to pay for the interest you received in these inventions was sufficient money to put them on foot, to ascertain their utility, and to do what might be necessary to bring them before the public?—A. Clearly so. The inventions were matters that I would not have trusted my own judgment in respect to. I was most favorably impressed with the telephone, because when it was experimented with and I conversed with people at a distance, my own ear went very far to satisfy me as to the value of the telephonic transmitter. But as to the telegraphic repeater, and as to the electric lamp, I should have had very little confidence in my judgment or conclusion that I might arrive at, unaided by the opinion or experience of experts. Nothing short of thorough experiment and the opinions of an expert would have satisfied me as to the utility and value of those things.

Q. You have stated, Senator, that you were opposed to the issuing of any stock, putting any of the stock of any of these companies before the public?—A. I stated that I was opposed to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, being the owner of these telephonic patents, putting stock upon the market.

Q. You seem to have sold the territorial right to use and introduce the Pan-Electric telephone in a number of States for some sums of money. Did it occur to you that that might be putting it in the power of your sub-companies in those States to put stock upon the market, over which you would have no control?—A. Possibly. Certainly I would have supposed it to be completely within the power of a corporation in one of those States, over which I had no control, to issue stock and put it upon the market if it chose to do so. But our undertaking was to utilize these inventions so far as could be done, and the method of doing so was either to sell to an individual, who had the means necessary to make his plant and establish a telephonic exchange and commence the telephonic business, or to organize a local corporation which should issue its stock and convert that stock into the means of making the plant, putting up the wires, and putting the instruments in operation. But I regarded that as purely local, and I supposed their operations would be confined to the exact localities where they were establishing plants, and where everybody would understand perfectly and thoroughly exactly what they were undertaking to do, and what they were putting into the enterprise.

Q. Did the possible infringement of the Bell or other telephonic patents by yours have anything to do with your opposition to putting the stock of your company upon the market?—A. Well, before we ever sold any territory, and very early in the history of our corporation—and possibly before the corporation was formed, I cannot fix the time—with reference to the subject of infringement, I went to Mr. Marble, whom I chanced to know very familiarly; he and I had occupied rooms in the same house for two or three years; he had been for some years an assistant attorney-general of the United States, and then for some years after that he had been Commissioner of Patents; he had retired from the Patent Office, and was then, as now, a patent attorney in the Le Droit building on F street, I think; that is where his office was the last I knew of it. I went to Mr. Marble and asked him to take those patents that J. Harris Rogers had assigned to us, and carefully investigate, especially the telephonic patents, and report to me if those patents infringed any other or older telephonic patents in existence. Mr. Marble gave a somewhat elaborate opinion, which, I suppose, is in the custody of the committee; I have not seen it since I delivered it to the secretary of the company.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you remember the date of that, Senator?—A. I do not; I cannot fix the date; but if the opinion is here, as I suppose it to be, it will show the date.

Q. Was Mr. Marble then connected with the Patent Office?

Mr. HALL. He has just explained that.

A. He was not; he was a patent attorney, having an office across F street from the Patent Office. He had retired from the Patent Office. He gave an opinion, my recollection of which is—

Mr. RANNEY. Both opinions are in evidence.

The WITNESS. Then, it will speak for itself.

Mr. HALL. He ought to state what it was.

The WITNESS. But, in answer to the question, I must refer to my memory as to one phase of the opinion. I think the concluding paragraph—I speak from memory, for I have never looked at it since I read it and passed it over to the secretary—was to the effect that our telephonic patents infringed no older patents nor other patents unless it be what was characterized as the broad claim of the Bell patent, which I understood to mean a claim (perhaps the fifth claim of the Bell patent, but I will not be sure as to its number) to cover the entire art of communicating articulate speech by means of electricity over a wire. Of course my own construction was that, if that broad claim could be sustained in its breadth, no telephone in America could be used without infringing that claim. That was my construction.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you a recollection of the date of the first suit commenced against your company by the Bell Company?—A. I have not. In reference to those suits I may say that I have only known of them by hearing them spoken of by Colonel Young or other members of the company. I have never looked at a paper in any one of them. I have never given the slightest attention to any one of the suits that have been pending or may be pending.

Q. I call your attention to the fact that on the 7th of April, 1885, your company resolved to sell no more rights to establish exchanges pending the Bell suit. Do you know how long it was before that date that you had knowledge that a Bell suit had been brought?—A. I cannot say; but there is one fact that I ought to have stated before, and that is this: At a meeting of our board—I should think at a date a good deal earlier than the date you name, April 7, 1885, but as to that date I cannot fix it; I suppose the minutes will show the matter to which I refer; they ought to if they do not—at a meeting of our board we instructed Colonel Young, the secretary and treasurer, to give notice to several parties with whom we then had outstanding contracts to establish exchanges, that we would declare the contracts annulled, as, under our construction of the contracts, we had a right to do, and I supposed that was at an earlier date, but my memory is not accurate as to dates in respect to any matter.

Q. I see that the action you have indicated was taken at that same meeting.—A. I should have supposed it was at an earlier date.

Q. That was on the 25th of April. There may have been earlier action, though, with respect to other companies?—A. As to the dates, I cannot fix them, Mr. Chairman; but I remember the action, and my impression was that that action was taken very promptly upon the beginning of a pending suit.

The CHAIRMAN. I will call your attention to the resolution, which I will find somewhere in this book.

The WITNESS. While you are looking I desire, with regard to this matter of selling stock, to state a fact that I ought to have stated before, but it did not occur to me until this moment. The only stock of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company that I have any knowledge of having ever been sold by the company was $5,000 stock sold to George Howard; $10,000 stock sold to Senator George Vest; and, I think, $25,000 stock sold to two ladies; and each of those sales was negotiated by myself, and each of them was made at the express instance and desire of each of the purchasers. My recollection is that the first sale was made to George Howard. He had witnessed experiments with the telephone, and become interested in the matter; he came to me to know if it would be possible for him to obtain a small interest in the enterprise. I explained to him as fully as I was capable of doing the exact status of the whole matter, and its condition from every point of view. I said to him, "We have never offered a dollar of the stock for sale and are not proposing to sell it, but if you want a small amount of the stock I will mention to the board at its next meeting the fact that you want it, and will ascertain whether or not the board will consent to let you have it, and on what terms it will consent to let you have the amount of stock you want." I did mention it to the board at its next meeting, and was authorized to sell to George Howard the $5,000 of stock at 10 cents on the dollar.

Mr. Vest came to me with exactly the same sort of suggestion, that he had seen a good deal of the telephone, and thought remarkably well of it, and would like to get an interest in it. I made to him substantially the same statement that I had made to Howard, and promised him that I would consult the board about it. So far as I was concerned, I had no objection to his coming in to the extent that he might desire. I did mention it to the board, and was authorized to sell to Vest the $10,000 that he wanted. I did so. Each of them paid to me the amount of money specified, the one $500, and the other $1,000, which I turned over to the treasurer of the company.

While I am on this stock matter, I will go through with it, because there is another fact I omitted to state in the general statement I made, which I ought to have stated. Very soon after our association was organized—I think it was before the corporation was formed, before the charter was obtained—I suggested to our associates, upon some occasion, that Gov. John C. Brown, who had been for thirty years one of my most intimate and valued friends, should be allowed to take, upon the same terms that we had obtained our shares upon, $100,000 of this undisposed of one-tenth interest, and the associates unanimously agreed to it, according to my recollection. Hence Governor Brown was put down as one of the parties in interest, on exactly the same terms that the balance of us obtained our interest. Then, with regard to the two ladies. One of them had been for twenty years a client of mine, and unfortunately involved in a good deal of litigation. I had written to her that I had received on her account the sum of $1,000 in one of her transactions, and asked her what disposition I should make of the money. She answered saying, "Send it to me, and I intend to invest it in the stock of the Memphis Pan-Electric Telephone Company." I immediately wrote, inquiring of her—

Mr. RANNEY. Is that the local company at Memphis?

The WITNESS. That is the local company, the Memphis company. I immediately inquired of her on what terms she could invest it in the stock of that local company. She answered, and my recollection is that the terms were a little higher than the terms upon which we had sold to George Howard and Senator Vest. I answered her immediately, saying, "While I am not inclined to advise you to invest at all, yet if you intend to invest in Pan-Electric telephone stock I will see the board of directors and see if I cannot procure for you the amount of stock you suggest"—the stock of the parent company, which I regarded as more valuable—"on even better terms than you can invest in the stock of the local company." In the mean time I had been requested by a lady here, who had consulted me for a number of years about all of her business affairs and had acted in her business affairs chiefly, if not entirely, upon my advice, to see what I could do for her in the way of getting some of this stock, which she had expressed a wish to obtain.

Mr. RANNEY. Unless you desire to go into all this detail, Senator, I do not see that there is any necessity for it; I do not understand that there is any complaint about it anywhere.

The WITNESS. I do not care to go into it.

Mr. RANNEY. There is no occasion for it, unless you desire to do so.

The WITNESS. If the committee do not deem it material, that whole statement may be stricken out; but I simply wanted the committee to understand.

Mr. RANNEY. I simply make the suggestion.

The WITNESS. I have no desire to go into it.

Q. I see, Senator, that this stock seems to have been the only stock disposed of by the company?—A. The only stock of which I have any knowledge.

The CHAIRMAN. That is my recollection of the testimony, and perhaps it is well enough that you have stated the circumstances under which it was disposed of.

Mr. OATES. It is, perhaps, well enough, in view of another fact, that it is already in evidence through other witnesses.

The WITNESS. Very well, then; I simply want to add the statement—I will be very brief—that upon the interview that I had had with these two ladies upon the subject, at the first meeting of our board afterwards I referred to the fact of the sale to George Howard and the sale of Senator Vest, and said, "Here are two widows, lady clients of mine, who have a little money, and they want to invest it in Pan-Electric Telephone stock. I agreed with them that I would ask the board to let them have the amount of stock they want;" and I proceeded to say something like this: "In respect to these other matters, I have been representing the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and have acted in its interest. In respect to this matter, I want you to distinctly understand that I am for the two ladies and against the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and I want to make the very best terms now that I can for this investment." Some member of the board suggested that Senator Harris be authorized to make any terms he chose, and the board assented; but I immediately said, "No; I shall not take the responsibility of suggesting terms. I am here representing the ladies, and want to make the best terms I can, but the terms must be fixed by you gentlemen." Some member of the board, I do not know who, then suggested some terms which were a modification of and were lower and better terms than we had given to anybody else. I accepted the terms, and paid the money into the treasury. That is the whole statement, so far as they are concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. I call your attention to the minutes of the stockholders' meeting held on the 26th of January, 1885. I think the minutes had better go in.

Mr. RANNEY. I think they were put in; they should have been, if they were not.

The CHAIRMAN. I will read them now, and if it is found hereafter that they are in the record, they can be omitted at this point, and a reference made to the proper page where they are printed.

[The minutes read are printed on pages 159 and 146 of the testimony.]

Q. Now, I will ask you why that action was taken. In the first place, if you know, what was your view of it at the meeting of the stockholders in January, and subsequently, at the meeting of the directors in April—the action looking to no further sale of the right to use these telephones in the States?—A. In answer to the first branch of the question, the facts stated by Colonel Young at the stockholders' meeting, looking to the form of resolution that he had prepared, which gives this 10 per cent. stock assessment into the hands of the board of directors to control, I saw no objection to taking such action, because, as a director, I would have at least my share of the control as to that stock that was so voted to the corporation; my own view of it being that when the monetary necessity came, if come it should, we would then determine whether we would undertake to sell, or whether we would by assessment undertake to raise such money as we deemed necessary or found necessary for the necessities that were upon us; and, so far as my action would have been concerned if the emergency had arisen—for I am not aware that a dollar of that stock has ever been offered to any human being since that action was taken—my own view would have been this: If a friend, such as many whom I could name, with full knowledge of all the facts, had come to me and said he desired to invest a thousand or more dollars in that stock, the man being in every way acceptable to me, I should have favored letting him have it, but I should not have favored at any time the putting of stock on the market broadcast and offering it for sale; and, so far as I know, it never has been put upon the market or offered for sale by any one of the directors of the company. I have heard of many instances of J. W. Rogers having offered to sell his private stock.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I understood you to say that you offered this resolution at the stockholders' meeting in April, 1885?—A. I think Colonel Young offered the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN. It is stated by the minutes that you offered it.

The WITNESS. At the stockholders' meeting?

The CHAIRMAN. At the meeting of the directors.

The WITNESS. That was the directors' meeting.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought I said directors' meeting. That that was offered because of litigation then pending or threatened.

The WITNESS. That was with me the moving motive. While the litigation was pending I was not willing to go on with the sale of territory, and desired to annul such contracts as were not already executed, had not already gone beyond the power that we had to annul them. I desired to arbitrarily annul such as were outstanding; and I apprehend that, in looking through the papers, between the time that you speak of (January), when this stockholders' meeting occurred, and April, when the board of directors met, I imagine you will find that no contract had been made by the company for the sale of any territory in any way.

The CHAIRMAN. There was one meeting between those two dates, and that is without date in the book.

The WITNESS. That I do not remember.

Q. At the time you were selling or agreeing to the sale of territorial rights, did you then believe that your inventions were infringements of the Bell or any other patents?—A. I did not then, and I do not now believe that they are.

Q. Do you know how long it was before this action in January by the stockholders that the Bell suits had been commenced?—A. I do not; I have no recollection as to when they were commenced. As I said a while ago, I have never looked at a paper in any of those suits, and have given them no sort of attention, and have known only what from time to time some of my associates may have said to me about them.

Q. Did I understand you to say that there has never been a charter for the Pan-Electric Company to your knowledge?—A. None that I know of.

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, are you speaking of the original Pan-Electric Company or of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?

The CHAIRMAN. Who has the original from the secretary of state of New York?

Mr. MILLARD. I have it here. That, I apprehend, is for the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company.

The CHAIRMAN. I guess not.

The WITNESS. I have understood that there was a charter obtained for that.

The CHAIRMAN. I have heard it stated that a certificate was issued from the office of the secretary of state of New York for the Pan-Electric Company, but you say you know nothing of it.

The WITNESS. If so, I have never seen it or heard of it until this moment.

Q. I show you a certificate from that office for the Pan-Electric Telegraphic Company, bearing date 10th November, 1883. Were you concerned or did you have any active part at all in incorporating that company?—A. I expect the record will show that the same officers and the same directors of that company did officer and direct the telephone company. I think I remember the organization of the telegraph company, but as to who obtained the charter I have no knowledge.

Q. You stated in your original statement that the stock was in the stock-book, locked up now.—A. Such is my information. I am not sure that I have ever seen the stock-book.

Q. Did you ever receive your certificate of stock—the certificate that was authorized by the company for your stock in the telephone company?

The WITNESS. Do you mean the certificate of stock in the telephone company that was agreed upon in the stockholders' meeting?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

A. I think I have.

Q. Has there ever been any other form of certificate of stock authorized by the company?—A. Never.

Q. Did you hear the reading of that certificate here some days ago?—A. I think I was present when that certificate was read.

Q. You say there has been no certificate issued at any time subsequent to that?—A. None of which I have any knowledge, and I have no idea that there has been any.

Q. You went home, Senator, as you stated, from the March meeting in New York; do you remember when you were next in Washington?—A. I do not; I am not positively certain that I went directly home from New York, or whether I came through Washington and spent a few days; I am somewhat inclined to think I went directly home from New York, but I would not be sure about that, for I do not remember.

Q. Did you receive a letter after the 14th of May, 1885, from Dr. Rogers, relating to the bringing of a suit by the Government to test the Bell patents?—A. At some time I received a letter from Dr. Rogers, the date of which he doubtless stated properly, though I have no recollection as to the date; but I received a letter from Dr. Rogers requesting me to urge the Attorney-General to institute a suit to test the validity of the Bell patents.

Q. Have you that letter?—A. I have not, unless it is amongst the papers; all telephone papers that I deemed worthy of preservation at all, that have come to me, I have from time to time handed over to the secretary.

Q. Have you any recollection of so disposing of that particular letter?—A. I have not; I think the probabilities are that it went into the waste basket.

Q. Did you do anything—and if so, what—in pursuance of that letter?—A. Nothing whatever; not even to the extent of acknowledging its receipt, is my impression.

Q. How soon after the receipt of that letter were you in Washington?—A. That I can't say. That was last year, was it not?

The CHAIRMAN. Last year; May, 1885.

The WITNESS. I think Dr. Rogers stated that the letter probably bore date the 24th of May, 1885.

The CHAIRMAN. I thought it was the 14th.

The WITNESS. I am not sure about the date.

Mr. MOFFATT. It was the 24th.

Mr. RANNEY. I think his communication to the Attorney-General was the 24th of May; that is my recollection.

The WITNESS. My recollection is, however, that he stated that he wrote to all of us on the same day—his application to the Attorney-General and his letter to me—and I believe he stated he wrote to General Johnston and Colonel Young, and perhaps others at the same time.

Q. How soon after that were you first in Washington, if you can tell?—A. I cannot tell that. I would possibly have the means of ascertaining it, but in respect to those matters of dates my memory is not a good one. I was serving during the most of the summer on the Senate Inter-State Commerce Committee, and we held sessions in the city of New York, in the city of Boston, a session at Saratoga for a day or two, or two or three days, a session at Chicago and at Saint Louis, at Des Moines, at Omaha, a session in this city; and subsequently we held a session in New Orleans, and one in Memphis and Atlanta.

Q. Did you make any reply to that letter?—A. Never. At least, my impression is I never answered it.

Q. Did you have any conference with any member of the company in regard to the subject suggested by the doctor; that is, the bringing of this suit by the Government?—A. I do not think the subject was ever mentioned by me or to me by any member of the company until after the suit was brought.

Q. Which suit do you refer to?—A. I mean the suit that was brought by the Government, the first suit that was brought at Memphis. Well, possibly that is not quite correct. I was in Washington at the time Colonel Young referred to in his testimony, passing through here, I think, and remained here only for a day or two, when he, Colonel Gantt, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and the National Improved Company attorneys were conferring at the Ebbitt House. I remember to have heard from Colonel Young that they were conferring together and examining the question as to the power or right of the Government to bring such suit.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Can you fix the date of that?—A. I cannot now. Possibly I might be able to fix the date by the clerk of the committee, but I suppose Colonel Young has fixed the date of that conference.

Mr. EDEN. Colonel Young fixed the date by his memorandum book.

Q. That was between the 31st of July and the 7th of August; was that the time or was it in September?—A. It is the conference that Colonel Young gave an account of when these gentlemen met here.

Q. He gave an account of one between the 31st of July and the 7th of August and another one between the 31st of August and the 7th of September of the same year?—A. My impression is it was the first conference, because the matter of the Government bringing a suit in such a case had never suggested itself to my mind until I received the letter from Dr. Rogers suggesting it. I attached no importance to his letter and paid no attention to it. When I met Colonel Young here, he informed me that he and Colonel Gantt and certain other attorneys whom he named, whose names cannot now recall, but whom I understood to be the attorneys of the National Improved Company, were examining the law and consulting and conferring in respect to the duty, the right, and the propriety of bringing a Government suit to test the validity of the Bell patent, and I suppose it from that fact to have been the first of their conferences, if they had more than one.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. I understand you to say that you were not present at any of those conferences?—

A. I was not.

Q. Were you consulted?—A. I was not consulted. I was at the Ebbitt House perhaps twenty minutes upon one occasion. I called at Colonel Gantt's room. Colonel Gantt's office has been for eight or ten years on the same floor, and but one door from my own, and he is amongst the most intimate of my personal friends. Hearing from Colonel Young that he was at the Ebbitt House, I called up there and wanted simply to see Colonel Gantt one moment, and while in Colonel Gantt's room some one of these gentlemen of the National Improved Company's people, I am not sure which, came into his room, and I was introduced to that gentleman (I think it was Mr. Van Benthuisen), but not a word was said between Mr. Van Benthuisen and myself or between Colonel Gantt and myself about the suit or anything pertaining to it. My visit was purely a social one, and made as a matter of respect to a friend of very long standing, and having paid my respects to him I bowed out and went my way.

Q. Did you ever have any conversation with the Attorney-General in regard to the bringing of a suit by the Government?—A. I do not think the subject of a suit on the part of the Government or in the name of the Government to test the validity of the Bell patents was ever mentioned by me to Mr. Garland, or by Mr. Garland to me, until after this newspaper parade and assault upon the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. I have talked to Mr. Garland two or three times perhaps since then, not about the suit, but about the newspapers.

Q. Then I ask you, broadly, whether you had any agency or connection whatever, at the time you speak of, with the bringing or with having brought a suit by the Government?—A. Unless what I will now state was an agency, I answer with absolute emphasis, no. But at some time (and you will be able to fix the date; I cannot, but the records you have will fix it), being here, I received a letter or telegram from Colonel Gantt—either Colonel Gantt or Mr. McCorry, and I think it was Colonel Gantt—informing me that an application to bring a suit had been forwarded by mail and asking me to please ascertain if it had been received at the Department, and what action, if any, had been taken upon it. With that letter or telegram in my hand I went to the Department of Justice and went to Mr. Goode's room, Mr. Garland being absent at the time.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Have you any means of fixing the date of that?—A. I have a means by which you will be able to fix it, and will come to that in a moment.

Q. Proceed.—A. With that paper in my hand, I walked into Mr. Goode's room. He was sitting at his desk, and I walked up in front of it, and read the inquiry from the telegram or letter, I am not sure which, and asked him if such an application had reached the Department. He said, "I have seen no such application." He rang for the messenger, and I think told the messenger to ask the mailing clerk—

Q. Did you go to the office alone or with some one? I do not want to interrupt you.—A. I am not sure if Colonel Young was not with me, if I did not meet him on the street. He will be able to remember whether he was with me or not, but I am inclined to think that he was with me upon that occasion.

Q. Now you may go on with your statement.—A. With that letter or telegram in my hand I asked my question. Mr. Goode answered, as I have stated, that "I have seen no such application." He sent for some clerk and asked him if such a paper had come in that day's mail. The clerk answered that he had seen no such paper, or gave a negative answer, which induced Mr. Goode to tell me that it had not come. Whereupon, without even taking a seat, without saying a word beyond making that inquiry, I left the Department, and said to Mr. Goode as I was going, that "In a day or two I will call again, so as to enable myself to answer this inquiry." On the next day, or the day following, I am not sure which, I called at Mr. Goode's room, knocked at the door, and was told to come in. As I opened the door, Mr. Goode rose from his desk and advanced to meet me half way, I should say, between the door and his desk, and shook hands with me, and invited me to take a chair. I said, "No; I simply came to ask if that application has been received, and whether any action has been taken upon it." He said, "Yes, the application reached here an hour after you were here the other day, and I have already ordered the district attorney for the western district of Tennessee to bring suit." Without taking a seat, and I think without saying another word, excepting to say "That enables me to answer the inquiry," I left and went over to the telegraph office or to my room, and wrote a telegram or letter. Whether I sent a telogram or wrote a letter I could not for my life now be certain about. But the fact I communicated was "the application has been received and the suit is ordered to be brought," and that is the extent of my agency in respect to it.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Had you any knowledge of that intended application before the receipt of the dispatch from Colonel Gantt?—A. I cannot now say positively that I had or had not; I do not remember to have had any knowledge of it. I left here before the conference that I spoke of while those gentlemen were still here, and I do not remember to have seen any one of those gentlemen, though I may have done so. I do not remember to have seen Colonel Young or anybody else (Colonel Young and myself reside in the same town), but I do not think it probable that I had been home; indeed I am pretty confident that I had not, but I could not, without going to the clerk of the committee, give an exact statement as to that.

Q. You said you had a means of fixing the time?—A. The record will show when the suit was ordered, and it was either the next day or the day after the next that Mr. Goode told me the paper reached here. He said, "The application reached here an hour after you were here the other day, and I have already ordered the suit."

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. It was the 3d of September; that is the date of Mr. Goode's order?—A. Well, the suit was ordered between the time I first made the inquiry and the time I last made it, and it was not more than two or three days—well, not more than one to three days apart.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have spoken of being at the Ebbitt House, or of being in Colonel Gantt's room at a certain time, and then of this visit to the Department of Justice. Have you any knowledge of how much time elapsed between those two occasions?—A. Oh, well, I should say some weeks.

Q. Had you been here from the one time to the other?—A. I had not. I had been East somewhere, I suppose, with the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Q. Had you been at home in the mean time?—A. I do not think I had, but I cannot positively say. If it is material that those dates should be fixed, I will get the clerk of the committee to show from the record exactly where we were at the various times, and from that data I can approximate, at least, those dates. But I can say now with absolute distinctness that I spent, at no time during that summer, more than a day or two or two or three days at my home. Some time early in the summer I took my wife out to a ranche that my son is upon in Texas, and remained there a short time, and then returned to my committee duties; and as soon as relieved from committee duties, later in the season, I went back to the ranche and spent a week or two there. But I spent a very little time at Memphis during the whole of that summer.

Q. Did you know anything of the intention of the Attorney-General to leave the city and go to Arkansas before he did go on that occasion?—A. The only knowledge I had of it is, I remember to have seen a statement in the newspaper (I think I was somewhere East at the time) that he would leave, perhaps the next day, for Arkansas.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Do you remember what newspaper that was?—A. I do not.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Did you have any communication with any other member of the company or with any of its attorneys in respect to his going away?—A. I do not think I had. I certainly never have had any communication with the attorneys in respect to the matter of this suit at all. I have met Colonel Gantt and I have met General Wright as often as once or twice, or two or three times perhaps, since that original suit was commenced, but never a word has passed between them and myself in respect to the suit, and up to this hour I have never looked at a paper connected with the suit, the bringing of the suit, or the suit itself.

Q. If you have any knowledge of an application made on behalf of the National Improved Company to the Department of Justice for the bringing of a suit in the name of the Government, you may state.—A. You mean before the suit was brought? Only the knowledge I have given you. When I met Colonel Young and Colonel Gantt here some time in the summer of last year, I was informed by Colonel Young that they were looking at the authorities and conferring in respect to the power of the Government and the right and duty of the Government to bring such a suit. I had that amount of knowledge, and the knowledge that Mr. Van Benthuyzen (who I understand to be the president of the National Improved Company) and certain attorneys of his and Colonel Gantt and Colonel Young were here, and I understood they were conferring upon that subject.

Q. Did you know anything of Mr. Van Benthuyssen's having addressed a letter to the Attorney-General requesting the bringing of a suit?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you know anything of the withdrawal of that letter?—A. No, sir; I did not, and I never knew there was such a letter written until I heard Colonel Young on the stand the other day being interrogated on the subject and making his statement with regard to it. I had no knowledge in regard to it.

Q. Was it suggested to you at the time the going into this company was spoken of or at any other time that there was to be any official action in favor of the company, whether it was to profit in any way by the official position of the persons who might be engaged in it?—A. I answer no, and I answer further that if it had been intimated to me that my official action as a Senator was to be invoked, remotely or directly, it would have ended forever all negotiation.

Q. It has been stated by one of the witnesses who preceded you that on one occasion, when the establishment of a postal telegraph by the Government was spoken of, you made some remark as to what you would do in case such a bill should come before the Senate. Do you recall the circumstance?—A. I remember at some time, when I could not say, there was some talk about a possibility or probability of such a bill, or possibly the pendency of a postal telegraph bill then in the one or the other Houses of Congress, when I distinctly announced that while the interest of the Pan-Electric Company I should regard as very remote, if such a proposition was presented in the Senate I should promptly rise in my place and say that "I feel that I may be, or am, pecuniarily interested in this question, and, so feeling, I shall not only decline to vote, but decline to utter one word or to have anything whatever to do with it."

Q. Would you have done that in case the bill had come before the Senate?—A. I most certainly should have done so.

Q. A bill was introduced by Mr. Vance, now the Assistant Commissioner of Patents, in the House, and was passed by the House, providing for the institution of suits by the Government to test the validity of patents. Have you any knowledge of such a bill?—A. Only that knowledge that I derived recently from having heard so. I do not think I have ever seen a copy of the bill.

Q. Did you know at the time that such a bill had passed the House?—A. I did not.

Q. Or had been introduced?—A. I did not, and if such a bill came to the Senate, as I understand from outside sources it did, no human being can say that I ever gave it the slightest attention, or ever uttered a word in respect to it.

Q. Did you have any connection with the effort to have Mr. J. Harris Rogers appointed electrician of the House?—A. To this extent I had. Harry Rogers and Dr. Rogers, towards whom I have felt very kindly, because they have been, up to a very recent period, very warm and earnest friends of mine, and I have appreciated their friendship and kindness, approached me to say that Harry had gone out of the office of electrician because of a change in the political majority of the House, whether by removal or resignation I do not now remember. But they said that now there was a Democratic House, he was anxious to be reinstated. My recollection is that I advised them against making any effort, and I distinctly remember that I would have preferred that Harry should not leave the laboratory and go to the House of Representatives. But they were intensely earnest about it, and finally understanding the great amount of anxiety that they had about it, and understanding that the Architect of the Capitol and the Speaker of the House made the appointment, I said to Mr. Clark one day in the lobby of the Senate (and by the way Mr. Clark had some years before that spoken in very complimentary terms to me of Harry Rogers's genius as an electrician, and I think of some economies that he had inaugurated in the House), I said to Mr. Clark that Harry Rogers was very anxious to be reinstated in the position of electrician of the House, and that I felt very kindly towards him, and would be very glad to oblige him in any way that I could. I said to him, "What do you think of it?" Mr. Clark said, "There are two objections: first, while he was electrician, occasionally he was dissipated, and not unfrequently was more or less surrounded by some dissipated people; then, if Harry Rogers should become electrician of the House he would be wanting to get his telephone in there, and that would produce a feud and make trouble with other telephone companies, and jealousies and discontent would grow out of it." Whereupon I said to Mr. Clark that that idea had not occurred to me before, and then and there I abandoned it, and never said a word to anybody about making Harry Rogers electrician of the House afterwards. I reported to Harry Rogers the first part of that interview with Mr. Clark—that is, that Mr. Clark had said he had been dissipated while he was electrician, and that I thought that Mr. Clark was disinclined to favor his reappointment, leaving him to infer that his dissipation was the only reason. Harry Rogers seemed to become irritated, and I think the next day he wrote me a note of rather a tart character, declaring—the substance of it was—

Mr. RANNEY. Have you a copy of that note?

The WITNESS. I have not, but the substance of it was that under no circumstances would he accept a favor at the hands of Mr. Clark. I do not think I answered the letter or paid any attention to it, except to cast it into the waste basket. Some time after that, Dr. Rogers and Harry came to the Senate and sent in their cards, and I met them in the marble room, or in the corridor, near the marble room. They suggested to me that some member of the House was going to introduce a resolution to appoint Harry Rogers electrician. I advised them, with emphasis, against allowing any such resolution to be introduced, and that ended all that ever occurred, so far as I remember, about his effort to be appointed electrician of the House.

Q. You have stated that you communicated to Harry Rogers one of the reasons given by Mr. Clark for refusing to appoint him. Why did you not communicate the other reason to him?—A. I do not know of any special reason why I did not, and am not absolutely certain that I did not, nor am I absolutely certain that I did. But it was the charge of intoxication, the charge of dissipation that irritated him, and the fact that he became irritated with that feature impressed itself on my mind.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. That was the one that you communicated to him?—A. Yes, sir; that was the one I communicated, but I am by no means certain that I did not tell him all that Mr. Clark said.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. You have also stated that when the request was first made to you by the Rogerses to aid in this appointment, you were opposed to Harris Rogers accepting that position and leaving the laboratory. What was the reason of that?—A. I thought that his whole time had better be devoted to his laboratory and to that in respect to which I thought he possessed a very high order of genius, and I thought it was his interest to devote his time to his own laboratory, rather than to seek to hold or take upon himself the duty that would carry him to the House of Representatives.

Q. Was it in any degree because of his connection with your company, and any possible impropriety in having a person connected with the company in that position?—A. I heard him state here that he had stated at a meeting of the board at some time or other that it would be serviceable for our company for him to hold that position, as he could conduct some experiments; that he thought it would be an economy to the Government and profitable to our company. My impression is that I could not have been present at that meeting, because I have no recollection of any such suggestion, and I am inclined to believe that if you will ask Mr. Clark he will tell you that the moment he made that suggestion to me, I said that "it had not occurred to me before, and that ends it, so far as I am concerned," and turned from him.

The CHAIRMAN. I think that is as far as I care to go in my examination.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I have a few questions that I should like to put to you, Senator. The contract in New York which you all respectively signed, that is, you and your associates, was drawn by Casey Young? You read it, I suppose, and are familiar with it?—A. I think he read it to all of us. To that extent I was familiar with it.

Q. You, in common with other of your associates, received a transfer of one-tenth interest in all these patents by virtue of that contract?—A. We did.

Q. Did you, as one of those transferees, pay directly to Dr. Rogers or to either of the Rogerses anything?—A. No.

Q. You paid nothing direct to him?—A. To neither of them.

Q. But you did agree in these articles which you signed that you should be assessed for a sum to carry on the operations, not exceeding $150 apiece?—A. I think there is such a stipulation in the agreement.

Q. And in that agreement all of those who held an interest in the patent were to be assessed—that is, Dr. Rogers or Dr. Rogers's son—I believe he is the only one who signed it?—A. Dr. Rogers was not a signer, and the only way he became interested was by transfer. It was J. Harris Rogers, who retained an interest of four tenths when he signed it.

Q. By that agreement you were all to be assessed for the expenses, as I understand it?—A. By that agreement, as I understand it, we were to be assessed by an executive committee created by the instrument to that extent, and, as I understand it, to a greater extent with the consent of a majority of the association.

Q. The assessment embraced not only you five gentlemen who got one-tenth, but embraced the Rogerses' interest I believe, also.—A. I suppose it embraced the parties to the contract.

Q. So that the sum which was to be assessed upon you by the committee from time to time, not exceeding $150 apiece, embracing all the men who were transferees in interest, and J. Harris Rogers also, would go for the benefit of all alike?—A. I do not know what the proper construction of the contract would be upon the point, nor do I know what the fact is as to the payments. The books will show, however. That is, I do not know, whether it is that we were assessed to that extent per capita by the executive committee, or assessed to that extent in proportion to the interests of each.

Q. Here is a clause I will call your attention to: "And any expense incurred for the doing of the same may assess pro rata upon the members of the company to the amount of one hundred and fifty dollars each; and no greater sum shall be assessed without authority from a majority of the members." That is article 5.

The WITNESS. Will you please read it again; I did not hear it.

Mr. RANNEY. I will read the whole of the fifth clause: "And it is also agreed that until the said charter of incorporation shall be procured, the company organized, and the board of directors elected thereunder, there shall be chosen from the persons above mentioned an executive committee of three, who shall conduct the business and affairs of the company, and direct the doing of such things as may be needed to do for the furtherance of the objects herein set out. And any expense incurred for the doing of the same may be assessed pro rata upon the members of the company to the amount of one hundred and fifty dollars each, and no greater sum shall be assessed without authority from a majority of the members." I simply want to know this. There was nothing paid by either one of the transferees, certainly not by you and Dr. Rogers or his son?—A. I have so answered.

Q. For whatever interest was transferred, but this agreement allowed of an assessment of $150 only on members and no more unless the members of the association voted it?—A. I understand that is meant by the contract; that is, that a majority could make any assessments they chose.

Q. It has been constantly asserted by Colonel Young and claimed in the papers, that you transferees, whatever you got from Dr. Rogers, you purchased and paid for. As I understand, there is no mistake about that; that the transferees paid nothing, but got their interests transferred to them, and then made a provision for the assessment of a sum not exceeding $150 to be paid by them contingently, and that assessment was made upon you all, Dr. Rogers as well as the others, and when the money was assessed it was made for the common benefit of all. I understand there is no mistake about that?—A. I do not think there is. I think we undertook to pay so much money as necessary and to give our business qualifications and capacities to the patenting, thorough testing by experiments, and utilizing such of them as we found to be of public utility.

Q. But whatever was done would be for the actual benefit of all the associates?—A. I should hope so, and should so believe.

Q. And Dr. Rogers was to pay his proportion of it?—A. I so understand.

Q. And I see at a subsequent meeting of the board of directors, the assessments were made accordingly. You have spoken about examining these patents. You are, as we all know, a good lawyer, and you examined those patent rights before you went into this enterprise, as I understand you, and satisfied yourself that they were valuable?—A. I examined certain inventions, certain instruments, but never looked at one of the patents until long after the signing of that contract; at least, I have no recollection of having done so until afterwards.

Q. How early did you look into the patents to see whether there was any infringement on anybody else's patent?—A. It is impossible for me to fix the date except as you will find it and may arrive at the approximation to it by the opinion of Mr. Marble.

Mr. HALL. I think you stated, Mr. Ranney, that that opinion had been introduced in evidence.

Mr. RANNEY. All I remember is, that Colonel Young in his testimony, in answer to a question of mine, when called upon produced the opinion. He produced one opinion, and it was put in evidence and subsequently I examined the papers and found another opinion, and that was put into the record.

Mr. HALL. At that time a question arose as to the identity of the opinion.

Mr. RANNEY. Early in the examination of Colonel Young, he made a statement about having an opinion of Mr. Marble's. I was then looking over the books and noticed Mr. Marble was a stockholder and I made a suggestion about it, whereupon Colonel Young mumbled over his papers, but did not find the opinion. Finally he found it and produced it, and it was shown, and that was then put in, or should have been put in. On last Friday, in looking over the papers, I found an opinion dated October 21, 1884, and it was put in the record. Yesterday I called the attention of the committee to the record and to the fact that they had put in the date October 21, without stating the year, and had that corrected and the year put in, and then the opinion was produced and the first opinion was handed in to you.

Mr. HALL. The second opinion was handed to me. I have never seen the first one.

The WITNESS. If you will allow me to suggest, the October opinion you will find to be upon the subject of—

Mr. RANNEY. That has been already suggested.

The WITNESS. The fact I was going to state is, that when you look at the date of the opinion you will find it at an earlier date. This was the October, 1884, opinion.

Mr. RANNEY. I am aware of that, and it must appear somewhere in the record, because it was produced, and I suppose it is in the record, or should be, and that would fix the date.

Mr. HALL. On some occasion when I was not present, it may have been produced and put in.

Mr. RANNEY. Colonel Young produced it, and had it at the other end of the table. If Colonel Young is here, can't he tell us where that opinion is?

Mr. OATES. That results from interjecting papers into the testimony of a witness, instead of putting them in at the proper place as exhibits.

Mr. RANNEY. It is not necessary to comment in regard to the interjecting of papers into the testimony.

Mr. OATES. I state the facts as they exist; I am not commenting on them.

Mr. RANNEY. I did not get the second opinion to put in until last Friday, and it had not been extended into the record until yesterday. (To the witness.) You can fix the date when you first examined the patents by the date of the first opinion of Mr. Marble.

The WITNESS. No, sir; not by the date of the first opinion of Mr. Marble, but at a very early date after the signing of this agreement; how soon I cannot tell. We requested Mr. Garland, who was recognized as our legal adviser and attorney, to examine carefully the legal questions involved in respect to patents. How much later, or at what time, I cannot say, but after Mr. Marble retired from the Patent Office and opened his office as an attorney I requested him to make a careful examination and give his opinion also. Regarding Mr. Garland as a very sound lawyer, at the same time I had very much more confidence in Mr. Marble's opinion so far as mechanical devices would figure in the question of infringement, and I wanted the opinion of Mr. Marble as well as the opinion of Mr. Garland in respect to the question of infringement.

Q. Had you gotten Mr. Garland's opinion before you had that of Mr. Marble?—A. I think so.

Q. You had his opinion that the patents were good?—A. I did.

Q. And that there was no infringement?—A. I had such an expression of opinion from him.

Q. Then you got Mr. Marble's opinion to the same effect?—A. Yes, sir; I got Mr. Marble's opinion to the same effect, except as I stated a while ago you will find the last clause of Mr. Marble's opinion the one to which I refer, the first one, to the effect that there was no infringement, unless the broad claim of the Bell patent was allowed, which claimed the exclusive right to conduct articulate speech over a wire by means of electricity.

Q. Did you examine, or have some one examine, that claim upon which he made that statement, to satisfy yourself?—A. I have heard the expression of Mr. Garland and the expression of Mr. Marble, and the expression of a good many people in respect to the probability of sustaining the broad construction of that broad claim.

Q. And what was the conclusion to which you came?—A. I never have myself believed that it would be so construed.

Q. That was the opinion of those whose opinion you obtained?—A. It was the opinion of those whose opinion I had obtained.

Q. Had you gotten those opinions and come to that conclusion prior to the formation of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company in Tennessee?—A. The date at which I arrived at such conclusion and the date at which the Pan-Electric Telephone Company under the Tennessee charter was organized, I would find it impossible to fix except by the minutes of the company.

Q. You are unable to tell whether it was before or after?—A. I am unable to tell how soon or at what time it was at which I got the opinion of Mr. Garland. I am unable to tell how soon or at what time it was that the question of infringement presented itself to my mind, but as soon as it did, I instituted inquiry.

Q. While you cannot remember the year or the month, possibly you might remember so far as to tell us whether it was before or after the corporation had been formed of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company in the State of Tennessee?—A. My decided impression is that it was before.

Q. So that then you and your associates were clear as to the validity of those patents and of the non-infringement as regards the Bell Telephone Company?—A. I have so believed, and so still believe.

Q. If so, you believed then that those patents were valuable?—A. I thought the telephone a very valuable instrument, and the telegraphic repeater a very valuable instrument until the report of Mr. Marean, which made an impression on my mind that an older patent of an instrument performing the same functions was in use.

Q. You were aware, probably (you can say whether you were or not), in the formation of the corporation in the State of Tennessee, the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, that the capital stock was put at $5,000,000; you are aware of that fact I suppose?—A. I think it very probable I had heard it, and yet I could not have told you that if you had asked the direct question, as to what its capital stock was; do you refer to the local company, the Memphis company?

Q. I refer to the parent company, so-called.—A. Oh, yes; I was aware, of course, that the capital stock of that company was fixed at $5,000,000, but I understood you to refer to the local Memphis company.

Q. I mean the parent Pan-Electric Company. Did you and your associates estimate the patent which you put into that company as worth $5,000,000?—A. I had very little idea as to what they were or were not worth. But I had the idea that no matter what the capital stock of the company might be, it represented the property that it covered, and whether you fix it at $5 or $5,000,000, it would cover the property, and the stock would be the value of the property. That was the idea I have had in respect to the matter.

Q. You were aware that in the formation of that company no money was paid in as capital stock, were you not?—A. I was perfectly aware of the facts as I have already stated them.

Q. I supposed you were. And you were aware of the fact that the patent rights conveyed to the parent company, and the Pan-Electric Telephone Company organized under the laws of Tennessee, related to telephone patents alone, not embracing the electric patents?—A. Such was my understanding.

Q. What proportion of the patent rights embraced in the New York contract were the telephone patents and what were not?—A. I do not know that there was but one telegraphic instrument. I do not know that there was not; but there was only one that attracted my attention particularly, and that was the instrument called the telegraphic repeater, I think.

Q. Are you speaking now of the patents relating to telegraphy or to the telephone?—A. To telegraphy. I think there were several telephone patents.

Q. My question intended to get at your recollection of how many patents there were which were not conveyed to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company of Tennessee.—A. That I cannot answer; but the contract itself will show the number of patents that were conveyed to us, and the assignment to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company will show the number and what patents were assigned.

Q. You haven't it in mind?—A. I have not.

Mr. EDEN. Both of those papers are in evidence.

Q. Do you say that in your opinion at that time the telephone patents conveyed to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, organized under the laws of Tennessee, conveyed in payment of the capital stock, which was $5,000,000, were worth $5,000,000?—A. I have once answered that. I have very little idea as to what they were or were not worth. The telephone I regard as very much the best telephone I have ever seen. I regard it as a thing of value.

Q. You or your associates put in these telephone patents into that company in payment of the capital stock of $5,000,000?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Now, you would not have been likely to have called those telephone patents worth $5,000,000, and of value enough to pay the capital stock of $5,000,000, unless you had some reason to suppose it was so; from your well-known character, I should not have supposed you would.—A. I have just explained that I do not think it a matter of the slightest consequence what you capitalize a corporation at. It was a transaction between ourselves. We owned the stock, and the stock covered the property, of whatever value the property might be.

Q. You will see by the certificate-book of that company that on the margin of the certificate-book gotten up there is this statement: "Stock fully paid up and non-assessable." So that the certificate-book, or the form of certificate gotten up, stated on its face, or purported to state on its face, that the capital stock of $5,000,000 was all paid up and non-assessable. You were aware of that fact, were you not?—A. I don't remember ever having noticed the certificate or the form of it, but if I had it would not have changed my course with regard to the matter at all.

Q. I am not questioning the propriety of your conduct; I only wish to know what the fact is (showing the certificate-book to the witness). You see on this certificate it says, "Fully paid and non-assessable"?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. If the $5,000,000 of stock was fully paid, it was paid by the telephone patents?—A. It was certainly the intention, I suppose, that the stock should not be assessable.

Q. The first part of it "fully paid" is what I wish to call your attention to more particularly. You would not have been a party to the getting up of an inflated corporation, would you, with an ostensible capital of $5,000,000 represented to be fully paid, when you knew the only payment was the transfer of the telephone patents, if you had really believed that the patents did not fully pay it at a supposed or fair value?—A. I should have been perfectly indifferent as to the amount of the capital stock that a majority of my associates might have desired to fix. But in every transaction with other people with whom I have ever had anything to do, I have entered into the fullest explanation of the exact status of the company, and exactly what we had done, what the capital stock was, what it was based upon, with every fact that I deemed directly or remotely material for parties to understand.

Q. I do not mean any implication or to insinuate otherwise. I only want to call your attention to the fact as to whether you intended to put these patents into that company at an inflated and unwarrantable value or at a value which you considered to be fair and honorable?—A. My answer is, I was perfectly indifferent as to what the company was capitalized at; and to illustrate, one of the subcompanies I think fixed its capital stock, when it originally organized, at a million dollars, and afterwards consulted me as to the propriety of reducing the capital stock to $40,000. My answer to those gentlemen was, "I am perfectly indifferent as to what you fix the capital stock at. The capital stock will represent whatever property there is. Fix it $40,000 if you want to, or at any other sum you think proper, so far as I am concerned. I am perfectly indifferent as to what you fix it at. It will be universally understood, I suppose, as covering whatever property you possess."

Q. Knowing your ability as a lawyer, I would like to ask you a question: whether, according to your judgment, under the law of Tennessee when this company was organized, it was competent to pay up the capital stock by putting in the patents alone as a payment?—A. I do not remember that I looked at the law then at all, either then or since then. I thought Colonel Young was looking to that, and we acted under his suggestion as to the matter.

Q. If you did not look at it we cannot have the benefit of your judgment. There was not, so far as you know, any subscriptions gotten up for capital stock in that company, was there?—A. No formal subscriptions, so far as I know.

Q. So you had no subscribers to the capital stock. I would like to know whether you were aware of the fact that a large proportion of the capital stock in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, the parent company, was issued or assigned or allotted to the company itself? To make myself understood let me state this: There were certain associates who had a limited interest, and of course had allotted to them the number of shares that represented their interest. Were you aware after that had been done that there was a large amount of that capital stock that was allotted to the company itself as owned by them?—A. Under the original contract there was a one-tenth interest that was to be held, according to my understanding of it, as the common interest of the associates pro rata.

Q. So that, as a matter of fact, the corporation was a subscriber to a large portion of its own stock?—A. And that stock—if you will allow me to answer the question that you first asked—being a one-tenth, there were some doubts expressed as to whether or not the $170,000 that Dr. Rogers had promised to certain parties was to come out of the Rogers interest or out of that common stock. As soon as the question was suggested I moved to solve any doubt that might exist, if any should, by appropriating out of that common stock, the $170,000 that Dr. Rogers had promised. It was so agreed. Subsequently, and very soon thereafter, the date of which I cannot fix, however, I moved that ex-Governor John C. Brown be taken into the association, on the same terms that the originals had come in on, to the extent of $100,000 of that stock. That was agreed to and that appropriation made. Subsequently the stock I have referred to heretofore as having been disposed of by the company was disposed of, and the books will show what balance of that common stock was left. To that extent I suppose that common stock was held by the company.

Q. What became of that tenth which was originally designed and reserved for Abram S. Hewitt, as you understood it? You understood that originally it was contemplated in New York that Abram S. Hewitt should take one-tenth.—A. I never heard of any such contemplation or any such reserve of stock for Abram S. Hewitt. When we were in New York it was suggested by some one that Mr. Hewitt was a man of enterprise and high character, and all of us who knew him recognized him as a man of ability, and thought it would be well to have him associated with us. I think Harry Rogers and Mr. Atkins called to see Mr. Hewitt, whether upon that subject or what I cannot say, but I understood that that subject had been mentioned to him. That was the first I ever heard of Mr. Hewitt in connection with this enterprise. I do not think I ever have had a word with Mr. Hewitt on the subject in my life, except as he passed out of this committee room. He made some remark to me as he passed out about the telephone company, while he was shaking hands with me.

Q. In that paper prepared in New York how many tenths interest in these patent rights did you understand Mr. Rogers had conveyed?—A. I understood that Mr. Rogers by that paper had conveyed to General Johnston one-tenth, to Senator Garland one-tenth, to Mr. Atkins one-tenth, to Casey Young one-tenth, to myself one-tenth, and one-tenth to the association, retaining four-tenths in his own right.

Q. Did you know that one-tenth at that time was also contemplated or suggested to be given to Mr. Hewitt?—A. Except as I have just stated to you, I knew nothing of any intention to give anything to Mr. Hewitt.

Q. Did you know of anybody else taking a tenth afterwards?—A. There were no tenths to be taken afterwards.

Q. You understood that Harry Rogers retained four-tenths?—A. He retained four-tenths; and the tenth tenth, I have just described to you what was done with it.

Q. I understand it; I comprehend your understanding of it. Well, were you aware that your company, the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, was selling territory?—A. Yes, sir; I was aware of it when it did so.

Q. What subordinate companies, children of the parent company, did you understand were incorporated?—A. I am inclined to think Missouri was the first State. I have understood that a corporation was created and organized there.

Q. Do you remember with what amount of capital stock?—A. I do not.

Q. Was the territory sold to them limited to Missouri?—A. To Missouri and that part of Kansas City that extends into one of the counties of Kansas. That is my recollection of what was sold in Missouri.

Q. What others do you recall that you understood?—A. I think Texas was the next State that was sold; but I am not sure about the order.

Q. What others?—A. And next to that, Tennessee.

Q. The whole of Tennessee?—A. Yes, sir; and next to that the State of Alabama; well, there was this territory here which may have been sold earlier than that.

Q. You mean here in Washington?—A. Yes, sir; Washington, including Maryland, Virginia, and possibly West Virginia; I do not remember the terms of this contract, or the territory accurately that it covered; but the contract will show.

Q. Any others?—A. And Illinois; I think those are the only contracts that have been made.

Q. Now, if this local company in Tennessee embraced the whole State, and you sold the whole State of Tennessee to them, what rights in the State of Tennessee did the Pan-Electric Telephone Company have after they had sub-sold the territory of Tennessee?—A. The Pan-Electric Telephone Company was a stockholder in the Tennessee company, and it also had the right to charge and receive a royalty upon each telephone that was used; those are all the rights that I suppose the parent company retained in respect to that State.

Q. If I understand you, then, the parent company, the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, organized under the laws of the State of Tennessee, transferred to a subordinate company all the interests in the patent rights in that State, and in consideration of receiving a certain amount of stock in the subordinate company and a certain amount of royalty—. A. It conveyed to the Tennessee company, a local company, the right to use the instruments covered by the telephonic patents (that is my recollection of the contract) within the territory of that State, in consideration of, I think it was, $7,500 in cash, a given percentage of the stock (as to which I would not attempt to be accurate in my statement, but I should say 25 per cent.), and a royalty of either 50 cents a month or $5 a year, I would be inclined to think; but the contract will speak for itself and is more accurate than my memory.

Q. So that the parent company, after that, would have no right to operate any telephone in the State of Tennessee?—A. It would not; that would be my construction.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Do you recall whether that included the right to manufacture the instruments, or did the parent company retain that right?—A. I do not think it included the right to manufacture the instruments.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Can you tell us what the capital stock of that Tennessee company was to which the parent company sold?—A. I do not remember what they fixed their capital stock at.

Q. Was it $5,000,000?—A. I don't remember; the contract will show, I imagine.

Q. You sold to the Washington Telephone Company, which embraced the District of Columbia, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, and Delaware. In selling the right of territory to those States do you remember what the capital stock of the telephone company was?—A. I do not.

Q. It appears to be $5,000,000.—A. It appears that the territory was sold —

Mr. HALL. It seems to me that in regard to questions of that kind we ought to agree among ourselves as to the facts. I suppose there is no controversy about them.

Mr. EDEN. The books are already in evidence.

Q. You were aware that these subordinate companies were already being formed with this amount of capital stock, as I understand you?—A. You do not understand me accurately, then.

Q. I would be glad to.—A. I am sure of that. I was aware that corporations were being formed, and I said, about as distinctly as I know how to speak, that I did not remember, nor had I informed myself (in all human probability I had heard) what the capital stock of those subcompanies were.

Q. You will pardon me for assuming that, for you were a director in the parent company.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And in all of these companies, as I understood it, they took stock as part consideration of the sale made to these subordinate companies.—A. That is true.

Q. And I suppose you might possibly know what the capital stock of the companies was for which you were taking pay in stock.—A. I have no doubt the records of our company will show, or the papers on file. I have not looked at them, nor have I seen them since the stock of those local companies was deposited with the secretary and treasurer, and could not remember anything about it so as to make any statement as to what the amount of stock was that we held in those companies.

Q. You did not concern yourself to see whether they organized corporations with a very large capital stock and paid it in by the patent rights?—A. I did not; and if I am a director in any of those local companies, I never have attended a meeting of one of them.

Q. Have you ever taken interest in it enough to say how much the capital stock is in amount, in the aggregate, these patent rights in which you purchased an interest of Harry Rogers, in New York, represented in the parent company and in the subordinate companies?—A. I have not.

Q. You would not have considered it of any account as to what sum they were put in as payment of capital stock, I understand?—A. The stock of the company, according to my understanding, represents the property of that company, and it does not matter very much what figures may appear, as it seems to me it represents only so much and no more than the properties of the company.

Q. Had you anything to do with it so that you could tell the reason why the Washington Telephone Company was organized in the State of Tennessee instead of in the District of Columbia, or in any one of the States embracing the territory which was sold?—A. The reason why—repeat the question, please, I did not get it.

Q. The reason why, in organizing the Washington Telephone Company, it was not organized under the laws of the District of Columbia or of Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland, or Delaware, the territory which was embraced in the sale?—A. I could give no reason. I do not think I was ever consulted by the people who organized the Washington Telephone Company. I never attended a meeting of the company, stockholders, or directors.

Q. You could not tell, then, whether the reason was that if they organized in any of those States they had to pay in the capital stock, and patent rights would not do?—A. I could not. I have no knowledge of the reason which controlled them, and could not tell you where the charter was obtained. I have never looked at it, inquired into it, or had any knowledge on the subject.

Q. Going back to your idea of the value of patents, I see in the printed letters on page 19, under date of June 14, 1884, a letter from Senator Harris. The original is here, and I suppose there is no question about the authenticity of it. It is the letter numbered 140. I will read it:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., June 14, 1884.

DEAR SIR: In answer to your note of this day I have to say that I have used the Pan-Electric telephone in my rooms for some time, and think it vastly superior to any telephone that I have ever seen.

And upon a somewhat careful examination my opinion is that it does not infringe the Bell or any other patent.

Respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

General J. W. DENVER.

At that time it would seem you had formed an opinion of your own as a lawyer?—A. I had evidently, prior to that time, talked to Mr. Garland and to other attorneys. Mr. Garland at one time furnished me a brief that I undertook to investigate, but I found my engagements entirely too pressing and numerous, and abandoned all idea of undertaking to go through the investigation of the questions of law.

Q. Do you remember writing that letter to General Denver?—A. I do not; but the original being here, I have no reason to doubt it. But I have no recollection of ever writing the letter. It could be very easily identified, and I have no doubt the letter was written.

Q. Nobody will ever accuse you, Senator Harris, of attempting to put on the market, to float on the market, corporations or stock in corporations at a fictitious or inflated value, and I suppose we may infer that you believed there was a real and substantial value, present and prospective, in those patent rights?—A. I have stated two or three times that I believed, and still believe, there is value in that telephone patent.

Q. Did you, after entering into that contract, you or your company, proceed to get out new patents, letters patent from the Patent Office?—A. Oh, several patents have been obtained.

Q. Do you remember what they were?—A. No, sir; I do not; I think Mr. Marble, as a patent attorney, has obtained I don't know how many.

Q. Is it not true that the patent rights which have been utilized in these corporations were patents that had already been obtained before you went into it?—A. That I cannot tell.

Q. I do not find here any expenses incurred in getting out any new patents by your company for any amount.—A. Well, I am sure some expenses have been paid for getting out new patents, but I could not tell you how much.

Q. As you are not aware of it, we will obtain it from some other witness. I see by the record, if I recollect it right, that you were authorized to treat with the Bell Telephone Company. Did you do anything of that kind?—A. I had a correspondence, I should think, perhaps, in the summer or fall of 1883, running, perhaps, to January or February, 1884, with Mr. T. N. Vail, who was then, I understand, the general manager of the Bell Telephone Company. My first letter called his attention to the Rogers telephonic transmitter as an instrument that impressed me as being the clearest and perhaps the loudest and most distinct telephone that I had seen, and I thought capable of extending to greater distances, perhaps, than any known telephone.

Q. You had simply a correspondence?—A. I had more than that. But you will please allow me to proceed with my statement upon the subject.

Q. Certainly. I would not have interrupted you, but I thought you were through.—A. I speak, of course, from a memory going back to that period as to exactly what that correspondence was, but what I have said indicates, I imagine—

Q. Possibly you may have the correspondence?—A. I have not unless it is among the papers of the company.

Q. We find no letters of the company.—A. I had supposed I had that correspondence, for I did at the time it was going on retain a copy of each letter I wrote to Mr. Vail, and I think it probable I wrote about three letters, and possibly more, and had as many answers from him, and had those copies and Mr. Vail's letters for a time tied up in a bundle where I could put my hand on them while the matter was still pending. I think his first letter was to warn me that results produced in a laboratory were rarely realized when the instruments were put in practical use. Finally, however, he asked me what suggestion I had to make, or what my desire was, and I made, in some form of words, this suggestion as the idea that had occurred to me: "If this transmitter be superior to any other and capable of reaching to greater distances, I think it probable that some arrangement might be made with your company by which your customers could make an arrangement with us, if they chose to do so, to use our transmitter where they chose." That, I think, was about the substance of the suggestion I made to him. He finally asked me to send him a set of our instruments, in order that he might investigate and test them. I wrote him that as soon as I could conveniently I would do so, and my impression is that in January, 1884, General Johnston, J. Harris Rogers, and myself went to Boston with perhaps two or three of our transmitters. When we reached there and announced to Mr. Vail that the instruments were there, he ordered Mr. Lockwood (I think that was the name), the chief electrician of the Bell Company at that time, to investigate and examine and test those transmitters. I asked Mr. Lockwood if I should have the instruments brought over to the Bell Telephone office or would he go to the Parker House, where they were, and he said, "I will step over there."

When we got to the Parker House Mr. Rogers brought the instruments into my room, and dissected one instrument, and was explaining it in language that I comprehended very little of, because he was dealing in electrical technicalities, I suppose, to a large extent. Mr. Rogers explained the principles upon which his transmitter operated, and I was impressed with the belief that Mr. Lockwood did not think well of it; did not think that the results that he claimed for it could be produced by that sort of mechanical device. But Mr. Lockwood said, "We will take them over to the Bell telephone office and put them up and test them." They carried them over to the office, and put up one instrument, and connected it with a line that ran down to the Exchange and back to an adjoining room. Mr. Lockwood took the receiver, and Mr. Rogers went to his transmitter. I staid with Mr. Lockwood at his desk, and they talked in various tones of conversation from a low whisper up to ordinary conversational tone, and then yelled at each other. Mr. Rogers was yelling at him, and in each instance Mr. Rogers would say, after whispering, "How is that, Mr. Lockwood?" Mr. Lockwood said, "It is excellent." Then, in a louder tone, "How is that, Mr. Lockwood?" Mr. Lockwood said, "It is splendid." And then yelling in a very loud tone, "How is that, Mr. Lockwood?" Mr. Lockwood expressed himself as somewhat surprised at the volume of sound and the perfection of the instrument. But the room in which the transmitter was put up was adjoining, with a thin partition wall between the room where Mr. Lockwood and I staid and the one Mr. Rogers was talking in, and I could hear through the door all that Mr. Rogers was saying, as well as through the telephone.

I then suggested to Mr. Lockwood that he should have the instrument connected with a room more remote, so that we could hear nothing except through the telephone. He did so. I then went to the transmitter and talked to Mr. Lockwood myself for some time, and after some considerable conversation through the instrument, I said,

"Mr. Lockwood, have you heard clearly and distinctly every syllable of every word I have spoken to you." He said, "Yes, most perfectly." I said, "Lockwood, what do you think of the instrument?" He said, "I think it is excellent." I said, "Are you satisfied with the experiment, or do you care to experiment further?" He said, "No, there is no necessity for further experiments." General Johnston, Harry Rogers, and myself then went to the room of Mr. Vail, and I said to Mr. Vail, "Mr. Lockwood has examined and experimented with the transmitter, and I suppose is ready to report." Mr. Vail called Mr. Lockwood, and as he entered the room, Mr. Vail's room, Mr. Vail spoke to him from his desk and said, "Lockwood, have you examined this transmitter?" Mr. Lockwood said "Yes." "Have you tested it?" "Yes." "Well, what is it?"

Mr. Lockwood proceeded to explain in telephonic terms the construction of the instrument and the principle upon which it proceeded, and then said: "The instrument is very clear, very distinct, and very much louder than ours." "Louder," said Mr. Vail, "how much louder?" Mr. Lockwood said, "I don't know; at least four times as loud." Mr. Vail then said: "Have it connected with my desk." Mr. Lockwood ordered the exchange to connect with Mr. Vail's desk, and I said to Harry Rogers: "Go back to your transmitter and talk to Mr. Vail." He did so, and after some conversation, perhaps extending half an hour, Mr. Vail said he was satisfied, and I then asked Mr. Vail if he was inclined to do anything in respect to the matter. Mr. Vail said, "Your suggestion is impracticable and would lead to confusion. It would result in confusion inevitably, because you would have authority to license telephones and we would have authority to license telephones, and it would evidently lead to complication and confusion." I said, "Very well, Mr. Vail, if you think that my suggestion is subject to that criticism have you any suggestion or proposition you wish to submit?" He said he was not prepared at that moment to do so, but would consider the matter in the next day or two, and would write to me, and just after saying that he would write to me he said, "By the way, I have to be in Washington next Wednesday,"—this being Monday that the conversation occurred—"and I will see you then, if that will answer as well." I said, "It will answer even better." So that evening I left and returned to Washington.

Several days, or perhaps a week, afterwards I received a note from Mr. Vail, saying that he had started in a very severe spell of weather, and that the ice or snow or something else had detained him and he had missed connection, and he got here a train or a day later than he had expected, and (reaching here in the morning) in the course of a few hours after reaching the city he had received a telegram which called him immediately back to Boston, and he had to leave on the four o'clock train of that evening, and that was the reason why he had not seen me. I then wrote him or telegraphed to him, I am not sure which, a simple inquiry whether he had any wish to negotiate with us, and if so on what terms. He did not answer until the next day, and on the next day I sent him a telegram substantially like this: "If you have any desire to negotiate with us, please indicate the terms that you would suggest, as propositions from other parties make it necessary to decide promptly whether we negotiate with you or not."

That was substantially the idea that I communicated to him in that telegram, to which I received a telegram in answer, my recollection being that he simply said in the telegram that he would write that day. Certainly the next day, or a day or two afterwards, I received a brief note from him saying, substantially this: "That in view of the complications and confusion that the adoption of your suggestion would lead to, we cannot accept it. We must have the absolute control of your instrument, if we do anything either by purchase or by giving or allowing you royalty upon it; and from what I have understood from you, while you were here, as to your estimate of their value, I do not think the probabilities are sufficiently strong of our agreeing upon their value to justify your delaying other negotiations." That was the general idea conveyed.

Q. Can you state what was the value?—A. I had never communicated that to him.

Q. What did he intimate to you was the value?—A. He did not intimate it to me at all, but he referred to the conclusion at which he had arrived from what I had said to him in Boston, or from what General Johnston and Harry Rogers and myself had said to him in Boston, when, as a matter of fact, I had never intimated to him in the correspondence any number of dollars that I thought the inventions were worth, but had mentioned to him, and emphasized the fact, that I regarded the transmitter as vastly superior to any transmitter I had ever seen.

Q. Did he intimate what was the value?—A. No. His remark was in regard to what he understood to be our estimate of the value of our instruments, and said he thought there was very little probability of our agreeing upon terms of sale.

Q. You may proceed; I do not wish to interrupt you.—A. I was a little surprised at his remark, because I had never intimated myself any idea of the value to him, except as I had intimated an opinion as to the superiority of the instrument, but I had never named any sum of money as a consideration for the instrument, and upon inquiry I was informed by General Johnston and Harry Rogers that neither one of them had mentioned to him or to Mr. Lockwood or anybody else of the Bell Company any idea we had of their value, and we had not amongst ourselves, so far as I remember, discussed any particular sum that we would agree upon, in the event of a proposition to purchase.

Q. Now go on with your narrative of the negotiation from that point.—A. That was the end of the negotiation.

Q. It ended by your telegram or his?—A. Well, I answered his letter. His telegram simply informed me that he had written that day.

Q. Do you recollect about what time that negotiation terminated?—A. I think it was some time in January or February, 1884.

Q. Did you ever resume it?—A. Never.

Q. I see in a letter dated August 3, 1885, of Mr. R. F. Looney, which was put in yesterday, there occurs this sentence: "Harris, I think, will make another effort to sell to the Bell Company, in the success of which effort I have but little hope," which seems to indicate that he thought something more was going on. Do you know anything about that letter?—A. No, I do not; I cannot imagine any basis for any such letter unless it be this: Perhaps a year after the close of the correspondence between Mr. Vail and myself I was informed by some one here that a gentleman named Gustin, who was an old college mate of Mr. Vail's, had had some correspondence with Mr. Vail, urging Vail to purchase the Pan-Electric transmitter, and possibly Mr. Gustin had suggested $5,000,000 as a price at which he, Gustin, supposed Vail or the Bell Company could purchase our transmitter; and I remember to have remarked to some of our friends that that was doubtless the thing upon which Mr. Vail had based his estimation of our idea of its value. But Mr. Gustin had no earthly authority, so far as I know, to speak on that subject at all.

Q. You say you do not know anything about the negotiations with the American Postal Telegraph Company?—A. I do not remember ever having had any negotiation or even any proposition for any such thing.

Mr. HALE. I move that the committee go into executive session, and that when it adjourns it be until to-morrow at 1 o'clock p. m.

The motion was agreed to, and after a short executive session the committee adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Thursday, April 1, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 1.05 o'clock p. m., Mr. Oates in the chair.

Mr. OATES (to Mr. RANNEY). You may continue your examination of Senator Harris.

Hon. ISHAM G. HARRIS came before the committee, and his examination was continued as follows:

Mr. RANNEY. Senator Harris, I observed yesterday what you said in your statement in regard to the American Postal Telegraph Company. Without repeating it, I want to call your attention to that matter. I find among the papers here a paper signed by the president of that company, which I will read and ask you a question about:

[Office of the American Postal Telegraph Company, 39 Broadway, N. Y.]

NEW YORK, September 26, 1883.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS,

Vice-President, Washington, D. C.:

DEAR SIR: Your letter in regard to the matter of consolidating the American Postal Telegraph Company, in some equitable manner, with the Pan-Electric Company, has been in hand some days, and after due consultation with the board of trustees and stockholders of the American Postal Telegraph Company, I am directed, as its chief officer and chairman of the executive committee, to make the following reply:

(1) The stockholders of the American Postal Telegraph Company are aware of the importance of unity of action before the next Congress to accomplish the end had in view at the organization of the company, and would be willing to unite its influence and avoid any conflict of interest with the Pan-Electric Company, by a general consolidation of the said companies, if said consolidation can be effected on the basis as set forth below, namely:

First. The American Postal Telegraph Company will surrender all of its stock of $5,000,000, its valuable patents, engraved plates, books and papers, and whatever else of value it has to the Pan-Electric Company for the following consideration:

The Pan-Electric Company shall reorganize the American Postal Telegraph Company, placing it in hands of men of national reputation, putting into the company the "famous cylinder" that worked so successfully between New York and Washington on recent trial.

Second. The Pan-Electric Company shall issue new stock (using, if so desired, our plates) for our $5,000,000 of stock (which carries with it all our patents and values of every sort), and, for the same, turn over to the American Postal Telegraph Company's stockholders, viz:

Of Pan-Electric stock $250,000, or the same amount of the Pan-Electric Telegraph, at the option of the Pan-Electric Company.

(Interlineation: There would be no need of a Pan-Electric Telegraph if "The American Postal" could be substituted for it; in which case the one telegraph company belonging to "The Pan-Electric Company" would be simply "The American Postal," stocked at $5,000,000.)

Of the Consolidated American Postal, $3,000,000.

Third. The difference between the above and the capital stock of the American Postal Telegraph Company is $1,750,000, which shall be so appropriated that this amount of stock, $750,000, shall be placed in the treasury of the newly organized company for working capital, and the $1,000,000 to be divided pro rata among the stockholders of the Pan-Electric Company as individual stock.

Please present the above to the board of directors of the Pan-Electric Company, and if accepted I will take necessary steps to carry into effect the terms and conditions named in the foregoing proposition.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

LEE R. SHRYOCK,

President American Postal Telegraph Company.

Attested: E. BAETRO,
Assistant Secretary.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Shryock lives in Saint Louis.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. I call your attention to the first clause of that letter, where it speaks of the importance of uniting with the Pan-Electric before the next Congress, and also to the general proposition of uniting these two companies. Were you present at any time when that came before the directors?—A. I have never seen the paper that you have just read until I saw it in your hands; I have never heard it read until you read it; and if the Pan-Electric Telephone Company has at any time considered such a proposition I have no knowledge of it.

Q. In that connection, I call your attention to the letter from Casey Young, dated Hot Springs, Ark., August 21, 1883, which has already been put in evidence in connection with the testimony of Colonel Young, at page 206, wherein this paragraph occurs:

"But to resume on Gould: He sees plainly enough that the next Congress will establish a postal telegraph, and he is arranging to sell the plant of the Western Union to the Government for that purpose, and to accomplish this object he will put in the field the largest lobby he has ever had in Washington, and the company we may be associated with will be the only one that will have the ghost of a chance to compete with him. So it seems to me that if these views were presented to the American Postal Company they would at once see the importance of joining forces with us. I impressed all this on Colonel Looney before he left, and supposed he would have laid it before the company at once."

Q. You see that that first letter is an official letter directed to J. W. Rogers, as vice-president, and is signed by the president of the American Postal Telegraph Company, and following that, in the next month, comes this letter from Mr. Young. Do you know anything about this letter from Mr. Young?—A. I never heard of it until I saw it printed perhaps in the newspapers, or heard it spoken of here in the examination. And for further answer, I say that J. W. Rogers was never vice-president, director, or other officer of the Pan-Electric Telephone or Telegraph Company. I heard him say here on the witness stand that he was vice-president of the American Postal Telegraph Company, of which Mr. Shryock was president.

Q. If, then, it was brought up and discussed among the directors of the Pan-Electric Company, you were not present?—A. I have no knowledge of any discussion by the Pan-Electric Company directors in regard to having anything to do with the Postal Telegraph Company, or of any action in respect to a postal telegraph bill. I have heard the subject spoken of, as I stated on yesterday, I think upon one single occasion, but I do not think that was even at a meeting of the Pan-Electric board; I think it was a private outside conversation, in which the remarks I made to Dr. Rogers about the matter—

Q. In a conversation with whom?—A. It was most likely with Dr. Rogers and Harry Rogers.

Q. Do you recall now where it was?—A. My best impression is that it was at the house of Dr. Rogers.

Q. Was any one else present?—A. Oh, I couldn't say.

Q. Have you a distinct recollection about the conference which would enable you to tell us whether it related to any arrangement for union between the Pan-Electric Company and the Postal Telegraph Company?—A. By no means does my memory tend in that direction. As I stated on yesterday, I think the suggestion was that there was a bill pending to establish a postal telegraph upon the part of the Government, in response to which suggestion I made the remarks that I repeated yesterday in respect to such question. It was not in reference to any union between the Postal Telegraph Company and the Pan-Electric Company, but was in respect to a bill either really pending or supposed to be pending in the one or the other house of Congress.

Q. By this letter of Casey Young the matter would have seemed to have been known by him, but you do not recall any occasion where it was ever mentioned to you or in your presence?—A. I must refer you to Colonel Young as to the circumstances that prompted and as to the meaning of his letter; I knew nothing of it.

Q. He has been examined originally?—A. Yes.

Q. You have been in the Senate how long a time, Senator?—A. I entered the Senate on the 4th day of March, 1877.

Q. What committees were you on in 1884 or 1885?—A. For the first six years I was in the Senate I was upon the Committee on Claims; since 1878 and 1879 I have been chairman of the Committee on Epidemic Diseases; I have been on the Committee on the District of Columbia for, I would say, eight years continuously, and for the last four or five or six years I have been on the Committee on Finance. I have been on other select committees, and have been for several years on the Committee on Rules.

Q. Is the Committee on the District of Columbia a joint committee?—A. No, sir; it is a Senate committee.

Q. Pardon me for making this specific inquiry; I make it without any implied reflection on you in any way. Was there ever anything before that committee relating to any telephone transaction in Washington?—A. I do not remember any proposition on that subject that has ever been pending since I have been a member of that committee; but it would be a very difficult matter for any human brain to remember with accuracy the various propositions that had come up in the length of time I have served on that committee. I do not, however, think there has been any question before that committee involving that matter.

Q. Did you ever have occasion to go, or did you ever go, to see the Commissioners of the District of Columbia—is that what they are called? I am not familiar with the local government here. Are they Commissioners?

Mr. EDEN. Three Commissioners.

Q. Did you ever have occasion to go to them to secure permission to put up wires in the city for the telegraph company or telephone company?—A. Upon one occasion I went to see the Commissioners to ask them to allow the local company here to put up wires on poles, as other companies were permitted to do and so long as they were permitted so to do, for the purpose of making some experiments. I think the Commissioners had probably established or had issued an order that no additional wires should be put up on housetops or poles; and I was informed by the secretary of the company that the company wanted to put up some experimental wires in the city, and desired permission so to do, as other wires were being established. I forget now which Commissioner I consulted, for I do not think I saw but one, but my recollection is that he said there would be no trouble about it; that they would be subject to be taken down whenever others were required to be taken down.

Q. Had they granted permission, or refused it?—A. I understood the Commissioner with whom I talked to say that there would be no trouble about the matter of putting up the wires; of course if they used the housetops it would have to be with the permission of the owner in every instance, and if they used poles they would be liable to be ordered down at any time when the Commissioners should order other wires to be taken down. This is the recollection I have about it.

Q. Your recollection is that you went in advance to get permission, and not to remonstrate against a refusal?—A. I was informed, I think, by Dr. Harlan, whom I recognized as one of the managers, if not the chief manager, of the Washington company here in this city, that there was an order of the Commissioners prohibiting the putting up of wires above ground, and I simply went to say to them that that company desired to put up some wires for experimental purposes, and desired to put them up above ground, as they could not afford the expense of putting them under ground for these experimental purposes, and I asked if it could be done. I was informed that there would be no objection to their doing so, subject to being required on any day to take them down and put them under ground or abandon them altogether.

Q. If I understand you, before you went to see them there had been a prohibition?—A. That was my understanding from Dr. Harlan. I had never talked to the Commissioners on any such subject, and have no recollection of having any such knowledge, and do not think I had ever examined the subject in any way, except so far as the Commissioner may have informed me as to the condition of things.

Q. At whose request did you go?—A. At the request of Dr. Harlan.

Q. He was connected with the Washington company?—A. So I have stated.

Q. You were not directly connected with that company?—A. No.

Q. Recurring, now, to your testimony of yesterday, or your statement in regard to the interviews at the Attorney-General's office, if I understand you, you went there twice?—A. Twice; once before the bringing or the ordering of the first suit, and once,

I think, on the day the order was made or the day after, to inquire, as I stated yesterday, if the record had come, and if so, what action, if any, had been taken upon it.

Q. I want to ask you again—I am not sure I did not ask you yesterday—whether the first time you went any one went with you; and if so, who it was?—A. I think Colonel Young was with me.

Q. Do you recollect where you met him?—A. My impression is that I met him somewhere near the Riggs House.

Q. Do you recollect whether he asked you to go with him, or you asked him to go with you?—A. I do not remember that either asked the other; but my recollection is that I said to him, “I have a letter,” or a telegram, one or the other, “from Colonel Gantt, asking me to ascertain whether the application of District Attorney McCorry has been received at the Department of Justice to bring a Government suit to test the validity of the Bell telephone patents and I am going there for the purpose of making that inquiry and ascertaining what has been done, if the application has reached the Department, in order that I may answer his inquiry.”

Q. Do you remember what reply Mr. Young made to that?—A. I do not, except that he would go with me, and my recollection is that we walked together to the Department, went up the elevator to the floor upon which Goode’s room is, and we entered the room together, and I do not think either one of us took a seat.

Q. I have not your evidence reported here, but I want to see if I understood you; so will you be kind enough to repeat just exactly all that was said there?—A. We entered the room and walked up to the front; Mr. Goode was sitting at his desk; we walked up on the opposite side of the desk, between Goode and the fireplace. I had the letter or telegram in my hand, and read from it the inquiry, and then asked Mr. Goode, “Has the application reached you?” He said, “I have seen nothing of it,” and rang for the messenger; instructed the messenger to tell some one—I supposed it to be the mail clerk, if there be such an officer there; he appeared in a very few seconds, and Mr. Goode asked him if anything for his desk had come that day. Mr. Goode informed me, after receiving the answer of the messenger, that the paper had not come. I then said, “Very well; I will call to-morrow or next day, and ascertain whether it has come or not, so that I may answer this inquiry.”

Q. Are you sure that Mr. Young was with you when that was said?—A. Mr. Young was with me upon that occasion.

Q. Then you both left?—A. We both left together.

Q. That was all that was said?—A. That was all that was said so far as I have any recollection.

Q. The next day you went there again; did you go alone, or with Mr. Young?—A. I went alone the next day, or the day after, I am not sure which, but one or the other. I knocked at the door of Mr. Goode’s room, and was told to come in. Upon opening the door Mr. Goode rose from his desk and advanced; I think it probable we met about midway between the desk and the door; Mr. Goode waved me to a chair. I said, “No; I have simply called to ascertain if that application has reached you, and if so, what action, if any, has been taken upon it.” His answer was that “Within an hour from the time you were here yesterday”—or the day before, as the case may be—“the paper reached me; I have looked it through, and have ordered the suit to be brought.” Whereupon I said, “I shall be able now to answer,” and retired, and that is all that was said between Mr. Goode and myself.

Q. Did you see Mr. Young after your first interview and before your second interview with Mr. Goode?—A. I don’t remember whether I did or not.

Q. Do you remember whether you saw him soon after the second interview?—A. The probabilities are, if Mr. Young and I both remained in the city, that we saw each other frequently; but I have no recollection of any special meeting between Mr. Young and myself at the time or about the time you specify.

Q. Going back to the interview you had with Mr. Young before you went in to see Mr. Goode the first time, when you told Mr. Young that you had a telegram from Colonel Gantt, what you have already stated, and which I will not repeat, did Mr. Young say anything about having just come from Colonel Gantt?—A. I do not remember that he did, and I do not think that he did.

Q. Did he say anything about the fact that a bill had already been drawn and was ready to be filed?—A. I have no recollection of his having said anything about a bill having been drawn.

Q. Is your recollection so clear about it that you can say whether he did or did not?—A. No; I should not be able to say with absolute certainty; I knew it at some time, but when or exactly how I obtained the information I do not remember. I am inclined to think I did not know it until I was informed that the suit had been ordered to be brought.

Q. Can you recollect so that you can state with positiveness whether Mr. Young did not then have a bill ready to be filed or printed in Memphis, Tenn.?—A. I had no knowledge of it if he had, and up to this time I have never seen any such bill.

Q. Can you state how long it takes to come from Memphis or Jackson, Tenn., to Washington?—A. My time over the routes that I usually travel is about forty-five hours from here to Memphis, or from Memphis here; I suppose it would be very nearly the same time to Jackson.

Q. So that a letter mailed at Memphis on the 31st of August would have reached here, in the usual course, when?—A. It would have reached here on the second day.

Q. Mr. Goode told you at the second interview that within an hour after you were there the communication came?—A. That the application had reached him.

Q. Are you quite confident that in the first interview Mr. Goode did not send out and get the application while you and Mr. Young were there?—A. I am absolutely certain that he did not; he sent out and informed us that it had not come; otherwise I should not have said to him, "I will call to-morrow or next day," to ascertain whether it had come.

Q. Did not Mr. Goode say to you that he would look it up and let you know the next day?—A. He did not, because the application had not come.

Q. You did not hear Mr. Young's testimony on that subject?—A. I did not.

Q. What was there that indicated that he knew nothing of it?—A. He simply

Q. I put the question not doubting your statement, but there is a little conflict between your statement and that of Mr. Young in regard to it, and therefore I wanted to be certain.—A. Mr. Goode stated distinctly upon the first inquiry that he had seen no such application; he rang for a clerk; the clerk reported in a very few minutes or seconds. I supposed he was the clerk that handled the mails.

Q. Did Mr. Goode inquire what application it was?—A. I read the paper that I held in my hand, which informed me that an application to the Department of Justice to bring a suit in the name of the Government to test the validity of the Bell patents had been forwarded by mail, and I was requested to ascertain if it had been received, and what action had been taken upon it, if any.

Q. And that was all that was said on that subject?—A. I read from the paper the inquiry and asked Mr. Goode "Has any such application reached you?"

Q. Did Mr. Goode make any further inquiry about it?—A. Not of me, that I remember.

Q. Was it a matter that he seemed to know about already, or did he say anything to indicate that he did not?—A. I was impressed by his manner and by what he said that he knew nothing of it.

Q. What was there that indicated that he knew nothing of it?—A. He simply said that no such application had reached him.

Q. In this call on the second day did he make any inquiry other than what you have stated?—A. Not a word that I recall. The interview of the second day did not last, I should think, a minute.

Q. Can you remember how early in the day your first call was made?—A. I should think it was somewhere about 11 o'clock in the day, possibly 12; that would be my best impression.

Q. So that, according to Mr. Goode's statement, he got the paper in the afternoon of that same day; do you remember what part of the day it was the next day when you called to make the inquiry?—A. I am inclined to think it was about the same hour; I base that statement chiefly upon the fact that I do not get down town ordinarily before 10 or 11 o'clock; it is generally nearer 11 than 10; I have been living for the last two years on the hill; but as to any distinct memory as to the hour of the day, I have it not except so far as I base my statement upon that general habit.

Q. How long had you been acquainted with Mr. Goode, the Solicitor-General?—A. I have known Mr. Goode as I know a great many others of the House of Representatives; I do not know how many years, certainly six or eight.

Q. And have been on friendly terms with him, of course?—A. Never unfriendly; but never to any extent intimate. My relations with him have been just exactly the relations that I have with perhaps forty or fifty members of the House of Representatives, whom I know as gentlemen of character and standing; but I have never had any intercourse with him outside, only that sort of intercourse that members of the two Houses have with each other when they chance to know each other.

Q. Do you know whether he was aware of your interest in or connection with, in any way, the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, or any of the subordinate companies?—A. I don't know whether he was aware of it or not.

Q. Mr. Goode made no inquiry as to whether you were at all interested in this application?—A. He did not.

Q. In either of these interviews did he make any reference to Mr. Garland?—A. None whatever.

Q. And you made no reference to him?—A. I did not.

Q. Nor Mr. Young?—A. None that I recollect, and I don't think he did.

Q. Were you aware that Mr. Young and Mr. Goode were intimate friends?—A. I was aware of the fact that Goode had been a member of the House of Representatives for a good while, and that Young had also been a member of Congress for a considerable time; beyond that I do not think I knew anything of their relations.

Q. Before you went to the Department, or when you had an interview with Casey Young, did he make any allusion to Mr. Garland being absent or being present?—A. I do not remember that he did.

Q. Are you confident in your recollection so that you can state whether he did or not? You may not remember all of it.—A. No; I should not say with absolute certainty.

Q. Was any allusion made by Mr. Young to you about prior interviews with Attorney-General Garland?—A. None whatever.

Q. Had Mr. Young ever communicated to you any interview he had had with Mr. Garland on the subject of bringing a Government suit?—A. Mr. Young has never communicated to me that he had had an interview with Mr. Garland upon the subject. The first time, I think, that I knew of that was soon after the correspondence was published between Mr. Garland and the President and Mr. Goode—

Mr. RANNEY. I do not care for that; that is subsequent to the fact.

The WITNESS. The first time that Mr. Young communicated to me that he thought Mr. Garland had fallen into an error—

Mr. RANNEY. I do not ask you what that conversation was, because it is subsequent to the fact involved.

The WITNESS. Mr. Young has never communicated to me that he had any other interview with Mr. Garland that was connected directly or remotely with the suit.

Q. I understand your answer. Were you here in Washington between the 31st of July and the 7th of August, 1885?—A. That I could not answer without getting the data from the records of the committee to which I referred yesterday. Since this question was propounded and answered I have procured a statement from the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, showing that he telegraphed me on the 24th July, 1885, that I had been appointed by the Vice-President as a member of a Senate committee to attend the funeral of General Grant. That telegram was sent to Memphis, but as I was on the ranch in Texas at the time, the telegram was repeated to Baird, Texas, the nearest telegraph office to, and about fifteen miles from the ranch. Either that or the next day the telegram was sent out to me, and I took the train to come east the night after the second day after receiving the telegram. I stopped at Memphis a day or two, I think two days, en route. It takes about four days to reach Washington from the ranch by that route. I have no means other than this of fixing the time of my arrival in Washington. From Washington, with other members of the committee, and in charge of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, I proceeded to New York. The memoranda of the Sergeant-at-Arms shows on the morning of the 6th of August.

Q. Do you remember that you directed Mr. Young to go to Pittsburgh in relation to the suit?—A. I remember what occurred in that respect. I don't remember the time; but Colonel Young called my attention, I think, to some newspaper statement in respect of very extensive telephonic preparations for a hearing of an application for an injunction then pending at Pittsburgh, an injunction sought by the Bell Telephone Company against the National Improved Telephone Company, and I think he suggested that it might be well for him to witness the proceedings there and see what those various models and telephonic instruments were that were put up to operate there upon that hearing, and to hear the case argued. I said to Mr. Young that I thought it would be a very good thing for him to go, and I very much preferred that he should witness the proceedings there. I understood from Mr. Young that he was going, and subsequently I think I telegraphed Colonel Young that I would pass through Pittsburgh on a named day, and Colonel Young joined me at Pittsburgh, and he and I went south together. You will be able to fix the date.

Q. Do you remember about the time when he went to Pittsburgh, as you understood, of meeting him in Washington on his return from Pittsburgh?—A. Yes; I remember to have met Colonel Young in Washington subsequent to that time. My recollection is that Colonel Young and I went south together from Pittsburgh.

Q. You spent some days here before you went, did you not?

The WITNESS. Here?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. We did not return here. I was leaving here on my way south while Colonel Young was at Pittsburgh.

Q. Perhaps you were here together subsequently?—A. We were here subsequently.

Q. Perhaps you went to Pittsburgh and returned?—A. We were here subsequently. As I stated on yesterday, this conference that occurred between Colonel Gantt, Colonel Young, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and the attorneys of the National Improved Telephone Company was subsequent to that time, and I was here a day or two while those gentlemen were at the Ebbitt House conferring. That was subsequent, but how long subsequent I could not say.

Q. Had you known Mr. Van Benthuyzen before that time?—A. Never; I had some—I was going to say some correspondence with him; perhaps I may say so. Some year or more prior to that time Mr. Van Benthuyzen had published, I think, an open letter addressed to the Pan-Electric Telephone Company or to General Johnston, president of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, the first I saw of which, however, was the letter published in a newspaper. My recollection is that that letter claimed that our instrument, our transmitter, was an infringement upon their transmitter, and threatened to sue everybody that invested in a Pan-Electric telephone. I published an open letter addressed to him, and suggesting to him that newspaper threats and street-corner threats settled nothing; that if our instruments were infringements upon his, the courts were open to him and possessed abundant power to remedy the wrong, if there was a wrong. But I had never met Mr. Van Benthuyzen—

Mr. RANNEY. Without going into the details of the letters, I show you a copy of the New Orleans Picayune, in which is published a series of letters, the last of which purports to be yours. See if you recognize it.

The WITNESS (after examining the letters). The letter purporting to be written by myself I have no doubt is genuine in every statement.

Mr. RANNEY. This correspondence seems to have been furnished the paper all together.

The WITNESS. That I do not know; I do not know how they happened to be furnished to the paper all together or at all.

Mr. RANNEY. There is the letter, first, of George D. Johnston; then the letter of J. Harris Rogers to him; then J. E. Johnston's letter to H. Gardes' letter; then A. H. Garland's to H. Gardes, and then your letter.

The WITNESS. The letter that is printed there purporting to be from me is in accordance with my recollection.

Mr. RANNEY. There seems to have been a series of letters written to meet that controversy down there.

The WITNESS. Yes; I do not remember anything about other parties writing; I remember very distinctly to have written myself. It is very probable that I suggested to Harry Rogers, the electrician, that he make a statement about it, but I have no positive recollection even of that. It would have been very natural for me to do that, and in all human probability I did.

Mr. RANNEY. I will put in those letters; they seem to be all connected.

Mr. EDEN. Before you proceed, Judge Ranney, what letters are they?

Mr. RANNEY. Get them and look at them, if you please.

Mr. EDEN. The Senator only spoke of one having been written by himself.

Mr. RANNEY. They are of no consequence except to show the nature of the controversy.

Mr. EDEN. He said he knew nothing about the others.

Mr. OATES. Let us look at the letters to see whether there is any objection to them.

The following are the letters referred to:

To the Public:

Certain persons, denominating themselves "The National Improved Telephone Company," having seen fit, by their officials, to publicly charge, through the press of this city, that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company are using instruments which infringe patents owned by them; also, by the same methods, warning the public against the use of said instruments, and threatening all who use them with legal prosecution; and having further published that the said National Improved Telephone Company "claims to own the exclusive right to make, use, and sell the improvements in telephones, invented by Prof. J. Harris Rogers," thereby implying that the said National Company claims to own the exclusive right to make, use, and sell all "the improvements in telephones," invented by the said Prof. J. Harris Rogers, greatly to the detriment of the said Pan-Electric Telephone Company. Now, reserving against each and all of the said persons denominating themselves "The National Improved Telephone Company" such legal redress as the courts of the country will furnish, the public is referred, for the facts, to the subjoined correspondence.

Respectfully,

GEO. D. JOHNSTON.

NEW ORLEANS, September 27, 1884.

Letter from Prof. J. Harris Rogers, the inventor of the patents in dispute, and electrician of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 20, 1884.

General GEORGE G. JOHNSTON:

DEAR SIR: General Joseph E. Johnston and Senator Isham G. Harris this morning informed me that a claim had been set up to the Pan-Electric Company's devices by the National Telephone Company, on the ground that my patents assigned to the National Secret Telephone Company, Nos. 251,292, 252,521, 252,250, 252,256, 252,257, 257,075, and 269,884, had been infringed by the Pan-Electric Company.

There is no justice or reason in such a claim. It is impertinently foolish. Several of my aforesaid patents refer simply and solely to my methods of producing a secret telephone, and the Pan-Electric Company has no secret telephone, but only a secret exchange system which controls the National Telephone patents 251,292 and 252,257. The Pan-Electric Company also owns a patent which controls the National Telephone patent No. 257,075, but while owning these controlling patents, never uses them, for such is the wealth of the Pan Electric Company, in her general system, that she has no occasion to use these controlling patents, and only holds them to restrain rival companies. Excepting these patents, all the devices assigned to the National Telephone Company are thoroughly, radically, and absolutely different from those employed by the Pan Electric Company, which do not infringe in any respect the aforesaid patents, nor are they subject to them in any sense whatever. Even the patents excepted above were bought by the Pan-Electric Company, not for use, but simply for their great value to the National Secret Telephone Company, which without these patents could neither wind their peculiar helix on a large scale, nor operate their secret telephone, except on private lines, and for these very reasons have been stock-jobbing for three years without establishing a single exchange, while the Pan-Electric Company, in her wealth of patents, has a perfect system (without using half what she owns) and exchanges in full operation.

The National Telephone Company should make terms with the Pan-Electric Company by a legitimate purchase of patents, not used by the latter, to complete her system; and either enjoin you at once or stop discrediting you with the ignorant by newspaper attacks, for their electricians and attorneys are either ignorant or they have trumped up this pretext of infringement to embarrass your movements in New Orleans, or to make capital with the vulgar to sell stock.

Respectfully,

J. HARRIS ROGERS.

Letter from General Joseph E. Johnston, president of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 22, 1884.

H. GARDES, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: My absence prevented early acknowledgment of your favor of the 12th instant.

As to the legal status, superiority, &c., of our telephone, it was patented by the inventor, J. Harris Rogers, and transferred to our company, of which he is a member. We employed an eminent patent lawyer, who was formerly Commissioner of Patents, to compare our patent with all other similar ones to ascertain if it infringes any. He made the investigations, and gave a favorable and positive report.

As to "superiority," the Pan-Electric Telephone has been tried in New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Saint Louis, Memphis (besides New Orleans), with the most satisfactory results. Indeed, I have seen or heard of no one who has witnessed such trials who has not pronounced our telephone superior to any other that has been exhibited. As to that, however, witnessing the use of General Johnston's instrument would be more satisfactory than anything I can write.

Most respectfully, yours, truly,

J. E. JOHNSTON.

Letter from Senator Garland, of Arkansas.

LITTLE ROCK, September 21, 1884.

H. GARDES, Esq.:

DEAR SIR: Yours of 12th was delayed in getting to me, as I am out in the country.

I am one of the Pan-Electric Company, and attorney for it also. I have given much time and attention to it, and my deliberate opinion is it is one of the best inventions of the day, a decided improvement on everything else in this line, and will stand scrutiny in every respect, and the most severe judicial tests as well.

Very truly, yours,

A. H. GARLAND.

Letter from Senator Harris, of Tennessee.

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 20, 1884.

W. VAN BENTHUYSEN, Esq.,

President National Improved Telephone Company:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note dated 10th instant, but which came to hand only two days since, and on the same day I received a letter from General George D. Johnston, the agent of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company at New Orleans, inclosing a slip from a New Orleans paper, in which your letter to this company, and one of a similar character addressed to him, were copied.

In your letter to this company, amongst other things, you say: "Having been advised by the electrician and attorneys of this company (the National Improved) that certain instruments used by your company are infringements of patents owned by this company, notice is hereby respectfully given that any one using said instruments will be prosecuted for infringement."

In answer to which, I have to say that I am advised by the electrician of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and by its attorneys, that the instruments used by it infringe no patent owned by your company, or by any other telephone company in existence.

I am also advised by Hon. E. M. Marble, who was for a number of years Commissioner of Patents (the head of the Patent Office), and now a prominent patent attorney of this city, and who was some months since employed by this company for the express purpose of examining and reporting upon the question of infringement, and who did report, after weeks of patient and careful examination, that the instruments used by this company do not infringe any older telephonic patent. From what I see in the New Orleans papers, and learn through other channels, I am authorized to infer that, being unable to compete with the Pan-Electric telephone instruments in the elements of merit and efficiency, the agents of your company in New Orleans raised this question of infringement, and indulged freely in the language of threat, with the hope of intimidating people not well informed upon such questions, and in that way preventing the Pan-Electric Company organizing a corporation there.

Allow me to respectfully suggest that the threats of your company through the newspapers, or of its agents on the streets of New Orleans, are not the most certain or satisfactory method of settling legal rights.

I respectfully inform you that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company is now using, and will continue to use, instruments in all respects similar to those exhibited by General George D. Johnston, in New Orleans, in the city of Washington, D. C., and in the States of New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Missouri, Texas, Tennessee, and Alabama, and intends very soon to use them in many other States and in the Territories.

The headquarters of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company are in the city of Washington, D. C., where process can be served upon the company at any time. If it has infringed any patent owned by your company, the judicial tribunals are open to you; the courts can, while newspaper threats cannot, furnish you a remedy.

Respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS,
Vice-President, Pan-Electric Telephone Company.

Q. You had a controversy with Mr. Van Benthuyzen. Your meeting here at the Ebbitt House, to which you have alluded, seems to have been, according to the testimony of other witnesses, about the 1st of August, 1885. Was that meeting of you gentlemen accidental or by appointment?—A. So far as I was concerned it was purely accidental; I knew nothing of any such intended meeting.

Q. Do you know how you happened to be present?—A. I think I was on my way East to meet the Interstate Commerce Committee, and stopped here for a day or two; that is my recollection of the matter; but learning that Colonel Gantt and Colonel Young were at the Ebbitt House, which I think I learned from Colonel Young, he having called at my rooms, or I having met him on the street, I called by there to see Colonel Gantt, and remained twenty or possibly thirty minutes; I have no idea that I remained longer than thirty minutes. After answering this question, I have referred to the records of the Interstate Commerce Committee and the record of the Senate Sergeant-at-Arms; from the latter I see that I stopped here on my way to the funeral of General Grant.

Q. I see by a letter from R. F. Looney, dated at Memphis, August 3, 1885, numbered 251, and printed on page 18 of the appendix, that—

"Harris, Young, and Gantt are at Washington, I suppose on telephone matters. I do not know exactly what they are driving at. I could make plenty of money out of the telephone if I had the chance, but I really have no answer to my proposition made to the company."

Q. It seems that Colonel Looney was aware of you gentlemen being at Washington, as he supposed, on telephone matters.—A. The probabilities are that I had just left Memphis, though I do not really remember where I came from.

Mr. HALL. That letter also alludes to the fact that Mr. Harris would make another effort to sell to the Bell Company.

Mr. RANNEY. That is immaterial in this connection.

Mr. HALL. I think it is well enough for him to understand the whole connection.

The WITNESS. Certainly, I have made no such effort.

Q. Not to divert you, I have already asked you about that and read it to you, and you have answered; I shall not repeat it unless you desire. But I am now coming to this interview. Do you remember whether any one requested you to be present?—

A. I do not remember any such request coming from any source.

Q. Did you meet there in the day-time or evening?—A. It was in the day-time that I called there.

Q. Have you any means of fixing the date?—A. None except that it was while they were in conference there.

Q. They were in conference while you were in?—A. They were not in conference when I went in; at least I met Colonel Gantt in his own room; but while there some one of the other gentlemen came in—I think it was Van Benthuyzen—to whom I was introduced. I knew from Colonel Young, however, prior to that time that they were there considering and investigating the question as to the power of the Government to bring such suit and as to the method by which it could be brought.

Q. From whom have you learned that?—A. From Colonel Young.

Q. How long before?—A. I think, perhaps, one day before, or on the very day I refer to.

Q. How long did you remain there at that interview?—A. I should say that I remained in Colonel Gantt's room twenty, possibly thirty minutes. While in Colonel Gantt's room the matter of bringing suit was not discussed. My call upon Colonel Gantt was purely social.

Q. Was any matter of business discussed?—A. No matter of business whatever was discussed while I was there.

Q. So you did not attend any meeting of those gentlemen while they were here, in which that matter was discussed?—A. I did not. I did not meet the gentlemen except upon the occasion I have stated.

Q. At that particular time, it appears in other evidence—and therefore I assume it—Colonel Young arrived here about the 30th or 31st of July, and remained here until about the 7th of August; these other gentlemen were here at the same time, and they had conferences and interviews on several occasions. What they did or what they agreed upon there about the Government suit or anything else you had no participation in?—A. I had none, and I do not remember at what time I learned what they did, but I did learn at no very remote day from that time—at some time subsequent—that it was decided that the suit could be brought.

Q. Do you know how long subsequently?—A. No, I do not.

Q. You learned that it was decided at that time that suit could be brought?—A. That they had arrived at the conclusion, upon investigation, that the suit could be brought; that is, that the law authorized the bringing of such suits.

Q. Did you know of a written contract drawn between the National Improved Company, or Van Benthuyzen, and the Pan-Electric Telephone Company at that time?

The WITNESS. At that time?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, or about that time?

A. The most difficult of all things for me to answer definitely about is as to dates.

Q. I will take the fact.—A. The fact in respect to the matter about which you inquire is this: I have already stated that Colonel Young went to Pittsburgh. As he and I were leaving Pittsburgh, I mean en route south, he explained to me that he and Van Benthuyzen had agreed—

Mr. RANNEY. I do not care to put in what he said they had agreed. I am now speaking of the written contract.

The WITNESS. Very well. At some time subsequent to that, Colonel Young informed me that an agreement had been reached between him and Van Benthuyzen; whether he said it was a written contract or not, I do not know; but at a later date, and exactly when I cannot say, I think Colonel Young exhibited to me a contract between Van Benthuyzen or the National Improved Company and the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and I would not be able to state positively until I see the paper whether it was signed by Colonel Young for the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, or whether he asked me to sign it for the Pan-Electric Telephone Company; the contract, when it is produced, will speak for itself; but my understanding of it was that it was an agreement between the two companies—I speak now of the written contract that I saw subsequent to this Pittsburgh agreement, that the National Improved Telephone Company—

Mr. RANNEY. You need not tell your understanding of the contents of it; we have not been able to find that paper yet.

The WITNESS. I hope you may be, and have no doubt you will.

Q. With reference to the point whether you signed it in behalf of the company, perhaps you will allow me to call your attention to this fact, or to ask you whether it is not a fact, that you had a talk with young Mr. Rogers about it afterwards, and told him you had taken the responsibility to sign that in behalf of the company?—A. Oh, I stated in the presence of young Mr. Rogers, old Mr. Rogers, Colonel Young, General Johnston, and Colonel Looney, that my recollection was that I had signed that agreement for the Pan-Electric Company, and such is the impression upon my mind now. But I understand, from conversation with Colonel Young, that he thinks he signed it and that I did not. My impression is that I signed it.

Q. You did not hear his last testimony, did you?—A. No, I did not.

Q. In that he stated that he had seen you and you said you had signed it.—A. I told him my impression was that I had signed it instead of himself when he presented it.

Q. When was it you told young Mr. Rogers that you had signed it?—A. It was at the meeting; at least, the conversation I refer to was at a meeting, and I do not remember that I have ever said a word about it to Mr. Rogers, except upon that occasion; that was a meeting of the directors that occurred at my room, and the last meeting we ever had.

Q. That was the time you told him?—A. Yes.

Q. Was this matter of that contract the subject of conversation then?—A. I suggested to the company that I had signed a contract, agreeing that each of the two companies should contribute whatever of models, whatever of testimony, whatever of expense that might be incurred in the prosecution of the Memphis suit and in the defense of the New Orleans suit (I believe it was), and my impressions then were, or up to, I think, about that time, perhaps that very night, that it included also whatever expense these companies would be subjected to in prosecuting the Government suit; and I stated to the directors that I mentioned the subject because the paper was signed without the authority of the company, and I wanted their approval.

Q. When was that meeting, Senator?—A. I cannot fix that date.

Q. As nearly as you can.—A. Oh, it was the meeting referred to by the two Rogerses, and I suppose by Colonel Young also; it was the time of that difficulty between Colonel Young and Harry Rogers.

Q. Who was present?—A. General Johnston, Col. Robert F. Looney, J. D. C. Atkins, J. Harris Rogers, J. W. Rogers, Colonel Young, and myself.

Q. What other business did you transact at that time?—A. There were two matters that I remember. There had been some discussion, or perhaps I may say negotiation, between Colonel Young and Van Benthuyzen upon the subject of a consolidation with the National Improved Telephone Company, which I understand to be based upon some patents of J. Harris Rogers earlier than those that we claim, we owning the balance of his telephonic patents, and Colonel Young desired to have the views of the board. Colonel Young had talked to me about the negotiations, and also Colonel Looney, looking to a consolidation; and those negotiations, in one form and another, I think, had been continued up to that time by correspondence or otherwise, but our board had taken no action. I had suggested, when I had been talked to about it at all, that I did not think the board of directors would have any power to make an agreement to consolidate; that we would have to have a stockholders' meeting, as it seemed to me, though that was an opinion expressed to them without an investigation of the question. We wanted the advice of the board or the views of the board as to the matter of consolidation. A committee was appointed to confer with the National Improved Telephone Company and ascertain the exact terms upon which a consolidation could be effected. That being done, the only other thing in the shape of business that I remember was a resolution drafted by Dr. Rogers, this meeting having occurred, I think, on the very day that the first World article attacking the Pan-Electric Telephone Company was published.

Mr. RANNEY. That will fix the date.

The WITNESS. Yes; I think it was on that very day. There was a paragraph in that two or two-and-a-half column article (speaking from memory) that amounted to an insinuation or an intimation—

Mr. RANNEY. I do not care to go into the details.

The WITNESS. I am obliged to go into the details if I tell the other business that was transacted.

Mr. RANNEY. I leave it to your judgment.

The WITNESS. The paragraph contained an intimation—I do not think it amounted to a charge—that J. Harris Rogers had sold to the Pan-Electric Telephone people patents that he had previously sold to the National Improved people or of which they were the owners. Dr. Rogers drafted a resolution referring to that particular paragraph in that two or more column article. His object was, as he stated, to vindicate the honor of his son from that charge. I said to Dr. Rogers, "Here is a two or two-and-a-half column article, with an admixture of more or less truth and more or less misrepresentation and falsehood; for us to notice a single paragraph in that two-and-a-half column article, and not notice the whole, would be taken by the whole world as a tacit admission of the correctness of all the other statements, and I assure you that I will never consent to notice that paragraph without noticing the entire article and dealing with the whole of it." The balance of the board seemed to entertain the same opinion that I had expressed, and no action was taken upon the resolution. That is all the business that I remember.

Q. After you communicated the fact or spoke of the fact to those gentlemen present of having signed that contract with Van Benthuyzen for the reason you have stated, did they take a vote on that?—A. There was a general expression of views; there was no formal resolution of the board, but there was a general expression from every one present that they approved of what I had done. I had no copy of the contract that I supposed myself to have signed. I stated verbally my recollection of its object and purpose, which was that Young and Van Benthuyzen had agreed that the Pan-Electric and the National Improved companies should each contribute what it had of scientific information, expert testimony, models, services of attorneys, and expenses equally in the prosecution and defense of the suits pending at the time of the contract. The cases of the Pan-Electric vs. the Bell Company was then pending at Memphis, and the Bell Company vs. National Improved at New Orleans. I don't remember whether the Government suit was or was not pending at the time I signed the contract, and do not think I referred to it in what I said to the directors, but I understood them as acquiescing in what I had done.

Q. Were you here when this supplemental agreement was put in?—A. I think not.

Q. Have you ever seen that original agreement since you signed it?—A. I have not. Colonel Young and I differ in our recollection about the place where it was signed; my impression is that it was done at my own office in the city of Memphis.

Q. That you signed it in Memphis?—A. That is my impression; but Colonel Young thinks it was signed here in this city; it is a mere difference of memory.

Q. You do not differ about the fact, then, that you signed it?—A. Well, I am not sure that we do or do not. Colonel Young expressed himself to me at a very late date that he thought he signed it, but I told him all the time that I was pretty confident that I did. I am not sure that Colonel Young has yet come to my conclusion about it. But the paper itself will decide the question between Colonel Young and myself when it comes to light.

Mr. RANNEY. We have had to waste a good deal of time without getting it.

Mr. HALL. Has this committee ever issued any subpoenas?

The WITNESS. I do not think, Mr. Chairman, that I have ever seen this paper (referring to the supplemental agreement). My impression is that the paper I signed, if I did sign it, as I think I did, was drawn by Colonel Young.

Mr. OATES. You notice that that does not purport to be the original agreement, but a supplemental agreement.

Mr. RANNEY. You will notice that that is an original supplemental agreement, which was drawn at Memphis.

The WITNESS. I do not see anything that indicates—

Mr. HALL. You will notice that there are blanks that have never been filled, and that it is signed by only one of the parties to it.

The WITNESS. The signature seems to be "The National Improved Tele. Co., by W. Van Benthuyzen, president."

Q. Did you not sign a duplicate on the part of the Pan-Electric and deliver that?—

A. I could not state whether there is a duplicate of this or not.

Q. I mean in the nature of an indenture in two parts?—A. I am not prepared to say whether it is the same paper or not.

Q. You see it is dated the 27th of August, 1885. Were you at Memphis on the 27th of August, 1885, or about that time?—A. Let me see. This paper is "in addition to the agreement and entered into between the above-mentioned companies, at the city of Washington, D. C., on the 4th day of August, 1885. It is hereby further stipulated and agreed by and between the same, as follows, namely: that the officers and agents of said two companies shall co-operate in the use of all lawful means to secure the cancellation, recall, or modification of the letters patent granted to Alexander Graham Bell on the 7th day of March, 1876, and on the 30th day of January, 1877, and numbered respectively," &c.

Q. You will notice that some individual was to be agreed upon whose name is left blank?—A. I cannot say as to whether the paper I signed, if I did sign, was a duplicate of that or not, but I understood the paper to be an agreement that we should make common cause in the matter of furnishing whatever of scientific testimony and of models and instruments, and our attorneys were to act jointly.

Mr. RANNEY. You need not go over the details of this; I only wanted it identified.

Mr. HALL. Did you read this clear through?

The WITNESS. No; I did not.

Q. Did Van Benthuyzen sign the paper you signed, or who did?—A. I am inclined to think it was already signed by Van Benthuyzen when I signed it.

Q. Do you remember whether at this interview you have spoken of where this affair occurred this supplemental paper was spoken of?—A. I do not remember that any paper was spoken of at the time I signed the paper that I did sign. I had known, as I stated before, that Colonel Young and Mr. Van Benthuyzen had agreed—whether in writing or verbally I do not know—that these models and instruments and our attorneys should make common cause in prosecuting the suit that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company had brought against the Bell Company and defending the suit that the Bell Company had brought against the National Improved Company.

Q. I do not make my question clear. I did not understand myself, or else you did not understand me. What I wanted to know was whether at this meeting we are talking of this supplemental paper was alluded to; I mean the meeting where you got the sanction of the rest of the directors for your action?—A. It was not, for I have no recollection that there was any supplemental paper. My recollection is that there was a contract signed by Van Benthuyzen and myself for the purposes that I have already indicated and of the character indicated.

Q. You say there was no formal vote at that meeting?—A. There was no resolution written, and no vote. I simply reported the facts, as I remember now.

Q. I understand that at the same time the matter of the consolidation of the two companies was a subject of discussion, and that committee was appointed to confer on the subject.—A. A committee was appointed to confer on the subject.

Q. Do you know how it happens that no record of that meeting was ever made?—A. I do not, except as has already been disclosed, a personal misunderstanding, a personal difficulty, occurred.

Q. That would be no reason why the business you transacted should not be recorded, would it?—A. I state the fact, and you may judge as to the reason. It is not any part of my business to keep the record.

Q. That is fair, perhaps. Was anything said at that meeting about Mr. Garland? I understand you to say he was not present.—A. He was not present, and indeed I may say he has been present at very few of the meetings of the board, but he has been a director all the time.

Q. An attorney, too, I see. You recollect he was not present at that meeting. Was that meeting at your Judiciary Committee rooms?—A. Oh, no; it was at my private room, at my house.

Q. Was any suggestion made there as to procuring Mr. Garland's sanction to the agreement?—A. None whatever; and if Mr. Garland's name was mentioned at all, it was in respect to the newspaper attack that we supposed pointed directly at him. I do not remember to what extent, if at all, that was mentioned.

Q. Going back to that interview, somewhere between the 31st of July and 7th of August, had you any knowledge at that time that Van Benthuyzen, after his interview with Casey Young at Pittsburgh, had made an application to the Attorney-General to have a suit brought in the name of the Government for the purpose of vacating the Bell telephone patents?

The WITNESS. That he had made an application?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. I answered you yesterday that he had not.

Mr. RANNEY. Not me; I did not ask you.

The WITNESS. I answered, perhaps, the chairman of the committee, but I answered the question yesterday.

Q. That being so, you are clear, are you, that neither Van Benthuyzen nor Mr. Casey Young ever mentioned it to you?—A. I stated yesterday that the application that Van Benthuyzen had made which, as I understood from Colonel Young's testimony here that I chanced to hear a day or two ago, had been made, had been referred and had been withdrawn. I answered yesterday that I had no knowledge of either fact until I heard it stated on the witness stand here.

Q. Then, in the interviews you had at the time which I have named (to wit, the period between the 30th of July and the 7th of August, 1885) you at that time did know that Dr. Rogers had made an application to the Attorney-General to have suit instituted in the name of the Government, but you did not know that Van Benthuyzen had done it as the result of the interview between Young and himself at Pittsburgh?—A. I did know that Dr. Rogers had written a letter on the subject; whether that letter stated that he had made a formal application I could not say.

Q. It seems, then, that in the interview you had with Van Benthuyzen and with Young they made no mention whatever of that subject to you or to any one else in your presence?—A. Van Benthuyzen's interview with me can hardly be called an interview. He happened to come into the room, and I was introduced to him. I do not think we remained together in the room three minutes, perhaps not one, for I think he simply called in the room to get a paper, and entering the room he was introduced to me by Colonel Gantt.

Q. You met Colonel Young often, I take it?—A. I suppose I did. Mr. Young and I met very often when we were in the city. I have already stated that I had learned from Mr. Young that Mr. Van Benthuyzen, the attorneys of the National Improved Telephone Company, Colonel Gantt, and he were at the Ebbitt House, conferring and examining the question as to the power of the Government to bring suit.

Q. I remember what you said on that point; I only wanted—not to imply in any way any doubt of your statement, Senator—to be certain on the point whether, in any of those interviews when you learned those facts from Colonel Young, whatever he told you in the course of those interviews, he said anything about the Van Benthuyzen application or his withdrawal of it?—A. I may say in a word, if it is competent to so do, that from the beginning, from the moment that Dr. Rogers made the suggestion through his letter to me, without having examined the question at all as to the practice of the Government in such matters, however clear the question might be as a legal proposition, I did not believe, with Mr. Garland at the head of that Department, that he would ever take any action in the matter; I did not believe that he ought to take any action in the matter. I know I would not if I were in his place, and I had the same opinion of him that I had of myself in respect to the matter, and I had no sympathy with any idea of presenting such a question to him, and I had no conference with those gentlemen upon the subject. But, in order that I may not be misunderstood, I will say that the fact of Garland's interest in a telephone company was the only reason why I did not favor bringing the Government suit. I did not know, nor had the idea occurred to me at that time, that in case of the incompetency of the Attorney-General some other disinterested and competent officer of the Department could act, as in the case of an incompetent judge. If the Attorney-General had been a disinterested party I should have favored bringing the suit.

Q. There is no objection to your stating, although it is not directly in answer to my question, simply whether Mr. Young said anything to you about Mr. Garland's action.—A. Never a word in respect to Mr. Garland's action or his having had anything to say to Mr. Garland about it, or Garland to him about it.

Q. You were on intimate terms, I suppose, with Attorney-General Garland?—A. Very. I have been on very intimate terms with him for eight or nine years.

Q. Of course, if you did not know there was any such application, you did not know any reason why he should withdraw it or consent to its being withdrawn from the Interior Department?—A. I knew nothing, as I said a little while ago, until I heard it stated here.

Q. Do you know any reason why Mr. Young should have withheld from you—not to use offensive terms—or omitted to state to you the interviews he had had with the Attorney-General on the subject?—A. I have never suspected Colonel Young of having any disposition to conceal anything from me. He may have deemed it wholly unnecessary to communicate a great many things to me, but I have never suspected him of a disposition to conceal or withhold any fact that he deemed at all material for me to know.

Mr. EDEN. I would suggest that Colonel Young did not state that he had an interview with Mr. Garland on the subject at all, and therefore your question is based upon wrong premises.

Q. Do you know any reason why he should not have communicated it to you?—A. I do not.

Q. You have known Dr. Rogers a great many years, I understand you to say?—A. I have known Dr. Rogers I should think I might say for thirty years; though, knowing him for thirty years, up to the winter of 1882-'83 he and I met very rarely and have had very little intercourse, but we have known each other for quite that length of time.

Q. A paper has been put in here, in which you and many others recommended him for a subordinate position under the new administration, as Assistant Attorney-General or for some attorney's place, and your name is first on the list. Did you start the paper yourself, or did some one else?—A. The paper was brought to me, and I was requested by Dr. Rogers to sign it, as a great many other such papers have been brought to me.

Q. I observe that about all the prominent men in your company signed it. Did you have anything to do with getting the signatures other than yours to it?—A. I did not.

Q. Pardon me, Senator, you need not answer unless you care to; I do not care to pry into matters. Were you instrumental in having anything to do with getting Mr. Garland appointed Attorney-General?—A. I wrote a letter to the President, telling him that I regarded Mr. Garland as an eminent and very able lawyer.

Q. With a view to his appointment?—A. It was intended for that express purpose.

Q. I make the same question in regard to Mr. Atkins; you need not answer it unless you desire: Whether you had anything to do with having him appointed clerk.

The WITNESS. Clerk of the House?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. I was very warmly his friend, and very much desired his election. I have known him since his little boyhood, and I have had no more intimate friend in the world than Mr. Atkins.

Q. Then you may answer it, if you desire, in regard to his present position?—A. I recommended him to his present position, and was very glad to see him appointed.

Q. Do you know of any other members connected with that company who are holding office under the present administration?—A. Yes, sir; I recommended General Joe Johnston for appointment to the position he holds.

Q. Any others?—A. I do not remember any others.

Q. You have spoken about your efforts to prevent issue of stock. I see by the records here (page 26, July 25, 1884) that a good many men had become stockholders. Here is a list of stockholders to whom dividends were paid. I want to run through these names, inasmuch as you have testified in regard to some of them. You have already testified in regard to General Joseph E. Johnston. Then follow the names of Isham G. Harris, Casey Young, J. D. C. Atkins, A. H. Garland, R. F. Looney, J. H. Rogers, John C. Brown —

A. He is the gentleman who was admitted on the same terms with the balance of us to the extent of $100,000, and was admitted on my motion.

Q. He is an ex-governor of Tennessee?—A. Yes.

Q. And member of the Democratic National Committee; he is the same man who has been spoken of before?—A. I do not know whether he was a member of the national committee or not; I do not know that he holds any political position.

Mr. RANNEY. I merely allude to that for the purpose of identifying the man.

The WITNESS. He is not a member; and I take it for granted has not been a member at all. He claims Tennessee as his home, although his business has been in Saint Louis for a number of years. Col. Robert F. Looney, according to my recollection, is the Tennessee member of the National Executive Committee. I do not think Governor Brown holds any political position.

Mr. RANNEY. I suppose Colonel Looney is the man I had in mind.

The WITNESS. Yes, I suppose he is.

Q. The next man is Philip H. Dwyer; in one of the letters put in here he is alluded to as holding an office under the Government in the Treasury Department, and traveling around a good deal.—A. I know nothing of him; I do not know who he is, what he does, or where he holds forth.

Q. Next is J. C. Neeley?—A. He is a leading wealthy merchant in the city of Memphis.

Q. Holding no office?—A. None that I know of.

Q. Next is Jacob Thompson; was that the former Secretary of the Navy?—A. Many years ago he was Secretary of the Interior.

Q. He lives in Memphis?—A. He did live in Memphis until he died.

Q. Do you know where he got the amount of his stock, $50,000?—A. I have heard that he got it from Colonel Looney.

Q. The next is George F. Brodt, of Washington, $40,000. Do you know anything about him?—A. I have heard that he obtained his stock from Dr. Rogers, but I have no idea of the matter. Colonel Young's books and records will show exactly.

Q. I understand. Then there is J. A. Harlan, who has $30,000; do you know of whom he got his?—A. I do not.

Q. He is simply the man who came to you connected with the telegraph?—A. With the Washington Telephone Company. I do not know from whom he got his stock, but I suppose it came from the Roger's stock.

Q. M. J. Wright, $19,000?—A. He is one of the gentlemen to whom the Rogerses had promised perhaps an interest of $10,000 on a capital of $5,000,000 before our association was formed, and is one of the parties to whom the $170,000 of that common stock was pledged.

Q. Marcus J. Wright; he holds some position; what is that?—A. I think he is a clerk in the War Records Office.

Mr. EDEN. And has been for a long while.

The WITNESS. Has been for six or seven years, I should say.

Q. The next is R. C. Wintersmith.—A. He is one of the original $170,000 men.

Q. You have already testified about E. M. Marble.—A. I do not know how he got his; I suppose he got it from the Rogerses.

Q. J. D. Webb?—A. I know nothing of him.

Q. H. R. McNeal?—A. I know nothing of him.

Q. Walter Wilson?—A. I know nothing of him.

Q. F. Palmer?—A. Nor do I know of him.

Q. R. F. Crowell?—A. I know nothing of him either.

Q. Some one said he was connected with the Government?

Mr. MOFFATT. He was one of the Auditors.

Q. One of the Auditors of the Treasury Department? Do you know anything about whether he holds an office in the Treasury Department?—A. I do not know the man at all, and did not know there was such a man who holds stock.

Q. George Howard?—A. George Howard is a Tennessean, and clerk in the Post-Office Department, and has been for I should say about eight years.

Q. John Boyle, Saint Louis; do you know anything about him?—A. I know General Boyle; I think he got his stock from Colonel Looney; I have so understood.

Q. H. S. O'Dowd?—A. I don't know him at all.

Q. C. H. Payne?—A. I don't know anything of him.

Q. W. C. Whitthorne?—A. I understood he got his stock from General Wright, and Wright was one of the original $170,000 men.

Q. Mr. Whitthorne was formerly a Representative from Tennessee?—A. Yes; he was for ten or twelve years a Representative from his district.

Q. A. B. Brownell, Washington, do you know anything of him?—A. I do not.

Q. You do not know from whom he got his stock?—A. No.

Q. L. P. Cooper, Memphis?—A. He got his stock from Dr. Rogers. I think Dr.

Rogers owed him an old debt. Cooper's office is only a couple of doors from mine, on the same floor. I think Dr. Rogers wrote to me to see if Cooper would take stock in payment of a debt that he (Rogers) had owed Cooper for many years. I handed Rogers' letter to Cooper, and Cooper afterwards reported to me that he would.

Q. Cooper is charged with $11,600. A. W. Fletcher, Philadelphia?—A. I know nothing about him.

Q. The next is William W. Briggs, Washington, D. C.?—A. I know nothing of him.

Q. It seems from the record here that those men whose names I have mentioned, including three described yesterday, were all recognized as stockholders when this dividend was made. Were you present when the dividend was made?—A. I do not remember that there was any formal action in ordering it, but I have attended meetings very generally. I do not remember to have been present at a meeting, however, when a formal order of that character was adopted.

Q. I see some other names mentioned on the previous page. F. A. Mitchell, $10,000. Do you know who he is?—A. I do not.

Q. Also George S. Mitchell?—A. I know nothing of him either.

Q. Nathaniel Wilson, do you know anything of him?—A. I do not.

Q. Up to that time had there been any refusal to recognize the sales made by Dr. Rogers?—A. I must refer you to Colonel Young, because he was the party to act upon those orders that Dr. Rogers was making. But from the beginning I understood the board to be unanimously opposed to those stock sales.

Q. I see in the record read you yesterday by our chairman, under the date mentioned, you all passed a vote of 10 per cent. of the stock to be held in the treasury for sale for the purpose of realizing funds for the company. Ten per cent. of $5,000,000 would be $500,000?—A. Yes.

Q. So that when you passed that vote you contemplated the sale of stock as a means of raising money for the use of the company?—A. The resolution will speak for itself. My recollection is that it will show that the stock was put into the hands of the board of directors subject to their selling or not selling.

Q. Yes, but you understood by that that there was authority given to sell?—A. There was authority given to sell if the board of directors should decide so to do, if they should decide to exercise that authority.

Q. Of the shares you sold to Senator Vest, 10 per cent. was retained for that purpose?—A. So I understand.

Q. Also of the ladies?—A. Yes; I understand 10 per cent. of all the stock.

Q. So that you were ready at the time that vote was proposed to sell this stock in the market for the purpose of raising money to defray expenses and meet the exigencies of your corporation?—A. I can say that for myself I was not ready. I was one of the board of directors; but as the power was given to the board to sell if the emergency should arise, and it should deem it proper to sell, I had no objection. I was not afraid to trust myself with the power.

Q. Do you remember who the committee were to whom it was left?—A. I do not. It was left to the board of directors, according to my recollection. The resolution will speak for itself. I do not think it was left to any special committee.

Q. You will pardon me, but do you recollect whether you were present at the meeting when that vote was passed?

The WITNESS. At the stockholders' meeting?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. Yes; I was present.

Q. You have no doubt about the record expressing the truth about that?—A. I suppose it does.

Q. Was there any verbal agreement made about it independently of the vote?—A. I do not remember of any verbal agreement made about it independently of the vote.

Q. Did you know anything about any agreement being made between your company and the Globe Telephone Company, connected with this litigation?—A. I have heard that the Globe Telephone Company agreed to go into the prosecution of this litigation and to defray one-third of any expense that the companies were subjected to.

Q. From whom did you hear that?—A. My impression is that it was from Colonel Young.

Q. Can you tell me when it was?—A. No; I cannot.

Q. Was there any written agreement drawn up in relation to that?—A. I do not know; I have no recollection of having seen any such agreement.

Q. Can you now fix anywhere near the time when Mr. Young told you that?—A. I am not sure it was before—I am inclined to think it was since—the decision of Secretary Lamar in respect to this second application.

Q. Were you aware that the Globe Telephone Company was one of the parties who applied to the Attorney-General and whose application was referred to the Secretary of the Interior?—A. I have been so informed by Mr. Humphries, who represented himself as the attorney for the Globe Company.

Q. That company, as you understood from Mr. Humphries, had entered into the combination to share the expenses of the fight against the Bell Telephone Company?—

A. I so understood.

Q. Were there any others that you understood entered into it?—A. No others that I have understood entered into any stipulation in respect to expense or anything else in regard to it.

Q. Did you know of any arrangement made with Professor Gray?—A. None whatever.

Q. Did you know that Mr. Young represented him?

The WITNESS. Did I know that he represented Gray?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. I have had no such knowledge until perhaps within the last two or three days. I understood that he had some professional or other connection with Mr. Gray.

Q. I do not care anything about it unless you knew it at the time?—A. I did not.

Q. Did you have anything to do with procuring the affidavit of Mr. Wilbur?—A. I have never seen Mr. Wilbur in my life that I know of.

Q. Or engaging Wellington Adams?—A. Yes; I was consulted about the propriety of engaging Dr. Wellington Adams; I think that is his name.

Q. As an expert?—A. He was employed by our company as an electrical scientist, to examine the scientific questions in connection with these inventions. That was long before, however, or some time before, I should think, I had heard anything of a Government suit, or any action at least having been taken in respect to a Government suit. We were prosecuting a suit against the Bell Telephone Company at Memphis, and had agreed to help the New Orleans people in defending the suit they had there.

Q. Were you present at the meeting when the vote was passed for his employment?—A. I expect I was; I know I favored his employment.

Q. Did you have anything to do with executing a contract whereby he was to act as electrical expert, his pay to be dependent on the success of the suit?—A. I was one of the parties present, I have no doubt, when we resolved to employ him, and I think the terms were distinctly stated, and whatever those terms are shown to be, I have no doubt I assented to them.

Q. I see his affidavit was obtained as an electrical expert on validity, infringement, and other such questions, and his affidavit was used. I want to know if you had anything to do with executing an agreement with him whereby his pay was to be dependent on the success of the suit?—A. I doubtless understood the exact nature of the contract that was made with him at the time it was made, and I have no doubt I assented to it. I cannot reproduce it from memory, nor can I state with any degree of accuracy from memory what the contract was.

Q. You made a contract with him. Did you understand that he would be a witness in the case, and that the amount of pay he should receive was to depend upon whether the suit was successful or not?—A. My recollection is that he was employed as an electrical expert to hunt up and investigate all electrical questions involved in these litigations. As to employing him as a witness, that idea had not occurred to me until it was suggested by your interrogatory.

Q. Did Mr. Young say anything to you about the propriety of making the pay of a witness dependent on whether his suit was successful?

Mr. HALL. Do you know whether that contract was in writing that Mr. Ranney alludes to?

The WITNESS. I could not have stated, but I suppose it to be so.

Q. Did Mr. Young say anything to you, that you recollect, about the propriety or impropriety of making a witness's pay dependent on the success of the suit in which he was to testify?—A. I do not think Mr. Young ever made any such suggestion to me or anybody else.

Q. Do you know this Mr. Myers to whom Mr. Garland gave the opinion as to this patent right?—A. I have met him upon one single occasion, and was introduced to him at the National Hotel, but that was subsequent to the time at which the contract that had existed between Mr. Myers and our company had been annulled, I think by the mutual consent of the parties.

Q. Do you know the relations of that Mr. Myers to your company, the Pan Electric Company, what his relations really were to the Pan Electric Company or any of the suborninate companies?—A. The only information I have is, I understood at the time that a contract had been made with Mr. Myers and perhaps one or two other parties to the contract (with Mr. Myers or associates of Mr. Myers), to utilize the telephone in the State of Indiana.

Q. Do you know whether he was not really in the employ of your company to sell rights?—A. The only connection that I ever knew of his having with our company was as a purchaser of the right to use the telephone in the State of Indiana.

Q. Then he was a mere contractor?—A. A mere contractor is what I understood him to be; but I never had a word with Mr. Myers before the contract was made. While it existed, I think it was Colonel Looney who informed me upon one occasion that Mr. Myers was willing to rescind the contract, and I advised Colonel Looney to get it rescinded if he could.

Q. I put the question, Senator, because I noticed in a newspaper this morning a statement that I am trying to find, to the effect that Mr. Myers was under an arrangement with your company, whereby he was to act for the purpose of selling rights in some of the States; that he did not really have a contract for himself, but was acting for your company for the purpose of selling rights.—A. I suppose the contract that was made with Mr. Myers is amongst the papers, but I never regarded Mr. Myers in any sense as the agent of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, but did understand at that time that he had a contract with the company for the right to use the telephone within a given State, the State of Indiana.

Q. Were you aware of any contract whereby he was to have a certain proportion of the thing that he sold?—A. I do not remember the terms of the contract.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. Was the contract in writing?—A. I supposed it to have been so, but I have no recollection that I ever saw it.

Mr. RANNEY. I would like to see it.

Mr. HALL. I suppose there is a way of getting all those papers if they are in existence.

Mr. EDEN. The official papers are in the hands of the committee. Mr. Millard has the contract, I believe.

Mr. HALL. I make the same objection in regard to the other one—the other contract.

Mr. RANNEY. Possibly there may be a written contract and a verbal one outside of it. I do not know anything about it; I do not state that there was.

Mr. EDEN. The Myers contract is in the book and is in evidence here, and that will be the best evidence.

The WITNESS. It would certainly be better evidence than the statement of a witness who had never seen it or looked at it.

Mr. EDEN. That is the way it looks to me.

Mr. RANNEY. While they are looking for that contract I will refer to another matter found in the record at page 24.

The WITNESS. Excuse me, I was in doubt about the Adams contract. Is that in evidence?

Mr. RANNEY. No, it is not in evidence yet.

The WITNESS. As I am interrogated about it, I should like to have it go into the evidence and speak for itself.

Mr. RANNEY. I now refer to the record, on the same page, of the meeting at which you say you were present (and the record shows you were present), which reads as follows:

MINUTES OF MEETING, JANUARY 15, 1885.

THURSDAY, January 15, 1885.

The president announced the object of the meeting to be for the purpose of agreeing upon terms for the employment of Dr. Wellington Adams as an expert in perfecting testimony to assist in the defense of any suit that may be brought against this company under its telephone patents. Whereupon, on motion of Col. R. F. Looney, Mr. Casey Young was directed to draw up a contract upon the basis of Dr. Adams' letter to the president of December, 1884, that is, providing that the company should pay Dr. Adams for his services as such expert the sum of $500 in cash, $500 in three months, and $1,000 at the termination of any suit that may be brought provided it terminates in favor of the company, and in addition he is to be paid his necessary expenses while in the service of the company. On motion the meeting adjourned.

Mr. MILLARD. Those are the conditions of the contract with one exception.

Mr. RANNEY. Have you seen it?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes, it is here. Those are the conditions, with one exception; that in case the Bell Telephone Company should purchase the Pan-Electric Telephone he should have his thousand dollars; that it should be equivalent to a favorable termination of the suit.

Mr. RANNEY. If any gentleman desires the contract itself to go in, that may be done.

The WITNESS. I prefer that the contract should speak for itself. I have already stated that I favored making the contract with and employing Dr. Adams as an electrical expert to investigate scientific questions, and to aid in the examination of scientific witnesses; that is what I supposed it to mean.

The paper referred to is as follows:

AGREEMENT BETWEEN PAN-ELECTRIC TELEPHONE COMPANY AND DR. WELLINGTON ADAMS.

This agreement made and entered into in the city of Washington, D. C., on the — day of January, A. D. 1885, by and between the "Pan-Electric Telephone Company," a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Tennessee for the purpose of manufacturing, operating, and putting in general use a new and improved telephone recently invented by J. Harris Rogers, party of the first part, and Dr. Wellington Adams, of the city of Saint Louis and State of Missouri, party of the second part; witnesseth.

That whereas the party of the first part is threatened with litigation by the American Bell Telephone Company upon the alleged ground that the telephone invented by the said J. Harris Rogers, and now being put in use and operated by the party of the first part, is an infringement of the telephone invented by Alexander Graham Bell, and now being used and operated by said American Bell Telephone Company, and the said party of the first part desiring the services of a competent scientist and expert to assist its counsel in taking proof and in making all other necessary preparations for a successful defense of any suit or suits that may be brought against it for the purpose of testing the validity of its patents on the telephone aforesaid, and its right to use and operate the same, has agreed with the party of the second part, the said Wellington Adams, to employ him as such scientist and expert, stipulating to pay him therefor as follows, viz: Five hundred dollars in cash, five hundred dollars in three months from the 15th day of January, 1885, and one thousand dollars when any suit that may be brought as aforesaid shall be finally determined in favor of the party of the first part, and in addition to the above, the party of the first part agrees to pay to the party of the second part his personal expenses during the time he is away from home in the service of the party of the first part not to exceed $50 per month.

And in consideration of the foregoing the party of the second party, the said Wellington Adams, hereby undertakes and agrees to assist the counsel of the party of the first part in acquiring such scientific information, and in procuring and taking such testimony in reference to the telephone as may be needed in making a proper defense to any suit or suits of the kind above mentioned, and he further agrees to perform such other services in the premises either in Washington or elsewhere as properly pertains to the expert and scientific work which he here undertakes to do, provided that the party of the first part shall pay his transportation to and from any point he may be required to visit, and also any necessary traveling expenses he may incur over and above the sum of $50 per month.

It is further agreed, however, that if the party of the first part shall sell its patents to the American Bell Telephone or otherwise terminate in its favor any suit or suits that may be brought, then, and in that case, the last one thousand dollars shall be due and payable.

In witness whereof we hereunto affix our hands and seals this ——— day of January, A. D. 1885.

J. E. JOHNSON,
Pres. B. E. T. Co.
WELLINGTON ADAMS.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Were you aware that on the 3d of August, 1885, which was the time when you were here, I understand you, that the affidavit of one Z. F. Wilbur was taken?—A. Some time after the affidavit of Mr. Wilbur was taken I heard it spoken of, but I had no knowledge of its having been taken at the time it was taken, and I do not know how long after it was taken before I heard anything of it.

Q. Were you aware that on the 28th of April, 1885, after that vote being reached, the affidavit of this Dr. Wellington Adams was taken as an expert?—A. I do not remember that I have ever been informed that his affidavit was taken at all.

Mr. RANNEY. It is contained in the Interior Department record, on page 24 G. I put in that affidavit of Professor Adams, on page 24, dated the 28th of April, 1885, and that record shows on what day the vote was, January 15, 1885.

The following is the affidavit referred to:

AFFIDAVIT OF PROFESSOR ADAMS.

WELLINGTON ADAMS, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

My name is Wellington Adams; I am 28 years of age, and reside in Saint Louis, Mo. I am a regular graduate in medicine from the Georgetown University; for six years I practiced medicine, making a specialty of ear and throat surgery, having been oral and throat surgeon to several medical institutions, and professor of that branch in the medical department of the University of Denver. From the nature of my specialty, I was early in my career led to investigate thoroughly the sciences of acoustics and electricity, which finally resulted in my drifting completely into electrical and pure scientific research, so that for the past two years my business has been wholly confined to electrical engineering and scientific expert work.

In 1877, when the telephone first made its appearance in public, and before it reached Washington, D. C., in a commercial sense, I delivered a lecture on the subject, and described the construction of the instrument and the principles governing its operation, before a Scotch literary and social society of Washington, D. C., and on the same occasion Professor Taylor, microscopist of the Agricultural Department, believered an essay on the Eucalyptus globulus tree. In the early part of 1878 I began original telephone research, making a number of different forms of transmitters and receivers. There are many who will remember these experiments. In this way I became early interested in telephonic matters, and particularly with the legal and scientific aspect of the subject. From its very incipency I was familiar with the question, and I have ever since kept apace with the developments, and with the complex and abstruse legal and scientific problems involved, and with the intrigue and strategy resorted to by counsel for the Bell Company in the Patent Office and in the courts.

With this premise I have to state that the foregoing summary of the telephone situation, both as regards the legal and scientific aspect of the case, as compiled by myself, is, to the best of my knowledge and belief, in every respect true and in perfect accordance with the facts in the case, both in entirety and in particular.

WELLINGTON ADAMS.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 28th day of April, A. D. 1885.

[SEAL.]

WM. HELMICK,
Justice of the Peace.

Then on the following April your company seem to have taken this affidavit of Dr. Adams, as an expert on the validity of these patents, on the question of infringement, though he was under pay of $1,000 contingent on the success of it. You had nothing to do with that, I take it?—A. I have no knowledge of who took his affidavit, when it was taken, or where it was taken, or what was in it.

Mr. RANNEY. I refer to the record page 9 of the meeting held January 14, 1884, at which it seems you were present when the following proceedings took place:

MINUTES OF MEETING OF JANUARY 14, 1884.

"Pursuant to a call of the president, the board of directors of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company met at the rooms of Casey Young, at 515 Fourteenth street, N. W., at 7.30 o'clock p. m., January 14, 1884. Present: Joseph E. Johnston, Isham G. Harris, J. Harris Rogers, Robert F. Looney, and Casey Young. Joseph E. Johnston, from committee formerly appointed to negotiate with D. E. Myers & Co. for the sale of the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, and Minnesota, reported that the committee had conferred with Mr. Myers & Co. and his attorney, and had agreed with him upon the following terms, viz:

"That the Pan-Electric Telephone Company should sell to D. E. Myers & Co. the right to put up and use the Pan-Electric telephone in the States of Ohio, Illinois, Indiana, and Minnesota, they agreeing to pay for the same the sum of $145,000. For the State of Illinois, $50,000; for the State of Ohio, $50,000; for the State of Indiana, $25,000; for the State of Minnesota, $20,000; to be paid in installments as follows: One-fourth of the amount agreed to be given for each State to be paid within three months from the time a telephone exchange is erected and put in operation in said State, and the balance in six, nine, and twelve months thereafter. And, in addition to which, the said D. E. Myers & Co. were to pay a royalty of $5 per annum for every telephone which they might erect and use.

"Messrs. D. E. Myers and J. W. Rogers being present, and the matter being discussed at some length, it was finally agreed that the contract should be made as above stated, and the president and secretary were instructed to prepare the necessary papers to carry it formally into effect. Said contract is recorded in contract-book, page 145.

"On motion, the board adjourned subject to the call of the president."

Q. Do you know who the "company" was with Mr. Myers?—A. I do not remember. I do not remember whether he had associates or not, but I am inclined to think he had. It was represented to me, at all events, that a wealthy gentleman, I think by the name of Allen (but I would not be certain of the name), of Indiana, was, and my impression when I spoke awhile ago was that the contract was confined to Indiana, and for that reason I asked that the written contract itself should be sought for, in order that it might show exactly what it was.

Q. You do not recall, yourself, who the company was?—A. I do not. Except assenting to the making of such contract, I do not think I ever had anything to do with it. I am not inclined to think that I have ever seen the contract itself.

Q. Do you not know of correspondence between Mr. Myers and your company, the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. I heard of correspondence between him and the company in respect to the matter.

Q. There was considerable correspondence, was there not?—A. I don't know how considerable it was. I know, at least I heard from some of my associates, that there was more or less of correspondence, probably with Colonel Young and General Johnston. One time I remember that he was very anxious (I have been informed that he was anxious) to get telephones immediately, and we were in a great hurry to have some telephones manufactured to send to him.

Q. Can you give us any information as to where that correspondence is?—A. I cannot. I have never seen the correspondence myself. I have heard it spoken of, that is, I have heard the fact spoken of, that Mr. Myers was anxious to get telephones, in order to exhibit them and to get to work. But the first telephones we sent him were extremely imperfect, as I understood him to complain, and so far as I remember about the correspondence it was in respect to his desiring telephones promptly, and in respect to the fact that the first telephones that were sent to him were imperfect and useless, as we found on experiment here a part of the same lot to be, and they had to be remodeled.

Q. I see this contract is recorded on page 45 of the record. It simply shows that the party of the first part, the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and D. E. Myers & Co., a voluntary association or business firm—do you know any such firm as D. E. Myers & Co.?—A. Oh, I did not know who composed the company, and, as I tell you, I do not think I ever met Mr. Myers but once in my life to know him, and then it was simply getting an introduction.

Q. Do you know whether any of your associates under that contract in New York or under the Pan-Electric Telephone Company were connected with Mr. Myers in any way?

The WITNESS. Connected with this Mr. Myers?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. I do not know. There was a contract that existed at one time with New York people, and the negotiations in respect to that contract were conducted by Mr. Jacobs at No. 335 Broadway, and myself, and he represented to me that a gentleman by the name of Myer or Myers, I am not sure which, was associated with him, and I think they both executed the contract that was agreed upon. That is one of the contracts that were annulled.

Q. Those are the parties of whom Dr. Rogers has spoken as the "sons of Abraham"?—A. Well, perhaps so. They are the only parties, at all events, that I knew that we ever had any contracts of any kind with in the city of New York.

Q. I see there are a good many letters here from you to Dr. Rogers. Did you not likewise have correspondence with Mr. Casey Young?—A. Very much less with Casey Young. Casey Young is a less voluminous and frequent correspondent than Dr. Rogers.

Q. But you had some correspondence?—A. Yes, sir; some correspondence from time to time. Colonel Young and myself are neighbors, are associates in these matters, have been colleagues here in Congress, and we have had more or less of correspondence.

Q. We have not found here among the papers produced any of the letters of yourself to him. Do you know what has become of them?—A. I know nothing in the world as to what has become of my letters to him, or any letter of his that I have retained, unless it was about some matter pertaining to business which, in my judgment, ought to be filed, and those letters I have put on file, if there are any such; but I do not remember really that I ever put a single letter of his on file.

Q. Will you be kind enough, if it is not too much trouble, to see if you have any letters of his, and if you find any, produce them here, if you are willing?—A. I am perfectly willing, if I have any letters of his, to produce them; but I doubt very much if I have preserved a single letter of Colonel Young's. I am not only willing, but desirous that this committee should go to the bottom of every fact and learn the exact truth.

Q. I have no doubt of that. Did you have a correspondence with Colonel Gantt about this Government suit or about these matters?—A. I do not think I have ever had any correspondence with Colonel Gantt, except as I explained the other day with regard to the receipt of the first application, and the fact that the suit was ordered. But when that suit was discontinued I received either a letter or a telegram from Colonel Gantt and General Wright, I think, asking me if—

Q. I don't care to go into that. Have you got them?—A. No, sir; I have not. They were simply matters of inquiry that I answered as I was able to answer them; and they would have no bearing on this issue that the committee is inquiring into.

Q. Then I do not care for them. It seems that the Pan-Electric Company, the original association, filed with the secretary of State, at Albany, articles of association with a view of organizing a corporation under the general laws of New York. Do you know why that thing did not go on?

The WITNESS. Do you mean the Pan-Electric Company in contradistinction to the Pan-Electric Telegraph Company?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.

A. I did not know that any such application had ever been made, and therefore I could not tell you why it did not go on.

Mr. RANNEY. I think of no more questions I desire to put now.

The WITNESS. Does any other member of the committee desire to interrogate me?

Mr. OATES. I want to ask you one or two, myself. You have been over the ground, but I merely want to see if I understand your testimony correctly on one or two points. I understand you testify that the Pan-Electric Company or Association, the existence of which is evidenced by the contract here, never issued any stock.—A. Never that I ever heard of or knew of.

Q. And that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, which sprang from that, or was one of the inventions included in that, did not sell any stock, but sold territorial rights —A. With the exception of the stock that I explained in regard to yesterday.

Q. That which was sold to Senator Vest and the two ladies?—A. That which was sold to Senator Vest, to George Howard, and to the two ladies. With that exception I know of no stock that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company has sold. I explained yesterday that at my suggestion Governor Brown was let into the original association to the extent of $100,000 before any charter had been obtained and before any corporation had been organized.

Q. You were asked about the provision of this contract limiting the assessments of the members to $150. That limitation was as against the executive committee, was it not, composed of General Joseph E. Johnston, J. Harris Rogers, and Casey Young?—A. That was my understanding of it; that the executive committee, without the consent of a majority of the parties in interest, could not assess beyond that amount, and exactly why Colonel Young incorporated it into the contract I did not understand at the time, and do not now.

Q. How much did the assessments upon you aggregate altogether?—A. I must refer you to the book. I think the assessments I paid will be found to be somewhere between $300 and $400, possibly a little over $400, but I am not sure about that. The books will doubtless show every assessment.

Q. Assessments, then, greater than $150 each were made and paid?—A. Oh, to the extent I have suggested, or to the extent the books will show, and I think they will show it was between $300 and $400.

Mr. RANNEY. The books have been put in and they show exactly.

The WITNESS. Yes, and they are doubtless correct. I have never looked at them, because I never supposed there was a mistake, much less an intentional wrong, and I have acquiesced in the report of the secretary as to all those matters.

Q. In the sale of territorial rights made by the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, what obligation, if any, did your company here enter into with them in respect to defending those rights?—A. My understanding of our contracts with what we call the "subcompanies," was that in the event of litigation upon the ground that our instrument infringed any other instrument, any other patent, we would defend such suits with our own attorneys and at own expense. That was the undertaking of our company, as I understood our undertaking.

Q. That was a continuing obligation to defend for all time; it was not limited?—A. I supposed it to be as you state.

Q. Do you know whether those contracts are in writing?—A. I take it for granted that every one of them is, and that they are in the papers that the committee has possession of.

Mr. OATES. I do not care to put any more questions.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. On whose judgment did you embark in this enterprise?—A. I embarked in it wholly and purely upon my own judgment.

Q. I ask you that question by reason of a statement I saw in one of the New York papers of yesterday, which said that you, Mr. Garland, Casey Young, and General Johnston were all the dupes of the Rogerses.—A. Well, in further answer to your question I will say this, but it is a repetition—

Q. I do not care to go further with it.—A. My attention was called to these inventions by a note addressed by one of the Rogerses to Mr. Atkins expressing a wish that Mr. Atkins and I should become interested in them. That negotiation, if it can be called such (the conversations and notes upon that subject), extended to two or three weeks.

Q. That is all I care to ask on that point.—A. Finally I fixed a time when I would go and see the inventions. I could not tell you how many inventions were shown me, quite a number, but there were three of them that struck my eye and ear as things of utility and of probable value. I so stated to them, and then went on and stated the terms, and the only terms, upon which I would consent to become connected with the enterprise at all.

Q. And one of those conditions was that you should name how many of the directors?—A. It was that I should name the persons. No number of persons had been previously named, but my statement was that I would not consent to become interested unless I had the right to name the persons who should absolutely control the enterprise, I stating in advance that it was an unreasonable condition, and Dr. Rogers acquiescing in the fact that it was unreasonable. With that I left. The next day, or the day following, either by note or personal interview, I was informed that they conceded to me not only the right to name the persons, but to fix the terms. The latter I declined to do, and then the proposition came from them that "we propose to divide this matter into ten-tenths, and you shall name three persons in addition to yourself and Atkins, making five" (that was the first time that any number of persons had been named), and that each one of the five should have a one-tenth, Harry Rogers to retain four-tenths, and the tenth tenth to be left in the hands of the association to be disposed of as it might choose.

Q. I understand that. Well, the three who came in with you, who were they?—A. Some time subsequent to that—

Q. I do not care to go into the whole of it; I simply want to call your attention to a single fact.—A. The three that were named were General Johnston, named by myself; Mr. Atkins suggested to me the name of Mr. Garland, and I acquiesced in it promptly, having never thought of Mr. Garland in that connection before, however, and then Dr. Rogers turned to me and said, "What do you think of Casey Young?" I said I had not thought of Casey Young in that connection at all, but that he was certainly entirely unobjectionable to me.

Q. Then you gave your sanction to those three?—A. I did, and the three were then and there agreed upon as the parties named.

Q. And they have remained in the company up to the present time?—A. They have.

Q. You reside at Memphis, I understand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. How long have you known Mr. McCorry?—A. I have known him from his boyhood. He is a younger man than I am. I practiced law in the same courts with his father.

Q. Did you know that he was an applicant for this position of district attorney?—A. Yes, I did.

Q. Did you indorse his application?—A. Upon the contrary, I recommended Mr. J. E. R. Rea for the position, and was overruled.

Q. Who is Mr. Rea?—A. He is a young lawyer at Memphis. The court sits at Memphis, and I recommended Mr. Rea, preferring him to Mr. McCorry. I recommended him very earnestly both to the Attorney-General and to the President. The Attorney-General informed me that he recommended Mr. Rea's appointment to the President, and I think the President so informed me also.

Q. Now a single word in regard to the Government suit. I do not want to traverse the ground again, but I understand that you got some communication from Colonel Gantt, either by letter or telegram, which you took to Mr. Goode. Am I correct in that?—A. Yes.

Q. Was it a letter or telegram?—A. I am not sure which it was.

Q. Have you got that communication?—A. I stated the other day that I did not retain it at all after having answered it.

Q. Was Casey Young here in Washington at the time or in Memphis?—A. I think he was here, and I think Casey Young went with me to the Department of Justice. I think I met him near the Riggs House on my way to the Department of Justice and told him where I was going, and for what, and he said he would go with me.

Q. You understood that he had been in Memphis making this application to Mr. McCorry?—A. I suppose so; I have no distinct recollection; but I heard him state on the witness stand that he was in conference at Memphis with General Wright and Colonel Gantt, and other parties.

Q. Why was the telegram or letter sent to you instead of Colonel Young?—A. I cannot answer that. I do not know that it was known that Colonel Young was here. My impression is that he had just arrived here.

Q. You understood that Colonel Young had come directly from Memphis?—A. I do not remember what I understood as to where he had come from, but I would naturally have supposed he had come from Memphis in the absence of any explanation, because he lives at Memphis, and seeing him here, I should naturally have supposed that he was from there; but I do not remember to have known anything on that subject at all.

Q. I understand you went directly to Mr. Goode?—A. Directly. I was on my way there and met Colonel Young; perhaps it was the first time I had seen him.

Q. You were on the way there after getting this dispatch?—A. Yes, sir; and it was, perhaps, the first time I had seen Colonel Young since his arrival; but I stated to him that I had such a letter or telegram, and was going to the Department to get the information.

Q. After you got there was the suit discussed at all between him and Mr. Goode?—A. It was not, further than I have already explained.

Q. And the next morning it was not discussed?—A. Not a word was spoken between Mr. Goode and myself on the next morning that I have not already detailed. I do not think I was there two minutes the next morning.

Q. He told you the next morning that he had ordered the suit brought?—A. He told me the next morning that "the application arrived within an hour of the time you were here the other day," or yesterday, as the case may be, "and I have ordered the suit."

By Mr. HALL:

Q. You mean the next time you saw him?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You used the expression "the next day." I understood you to say it was either one or two days after.—A. I say when I called the next day or the day after, whichever it may have been. But it was the second time I called that that interview occurred, and it did not take more than a minute or two to dispose of it.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You knew that Attorney-General Garland was out of the city?—A. Of course I did.

Q. Did it not occur to you that that was a very remarkable thing for the Assistant Attorney-General to do without consulting the Attorney-General?—A. It did not, because I supposed that the Solicitor-General understood his rights, powers, and duties a great deal better than I did.

Q. Do you know of any similar case or any similar act on the part of any Assistant Attorney-General, the ordering of a Government suit without prior consultation with or without prior direction from the Attorney-General?—A. I do not know.

Mr. OATES. The Solicitor-General is not the Assistant Attorney-General.

Q. I am asking for information.—A. I do not know of any similar suit. I have not looked at the record of suits of a similar character that have been brought, or at the methods of bringing them. I am in blissful ignorance of the methods of doing it or the law which controls it, for I never have looked at the question at all.

Q. I understand, when you went in the next morning or the next time you went there, the first thing that he said to you was, "I have ordered that suit."—A. You understand me, then, incorrectly.

Q. I desire to learn what the fact was.—A. I knocked at the door and was told to come in, and as I entered the door Mr. Goode arose and met me half way between his seat and the door and waved me to a chair. I said: "No, I do not care to sit down; I only come to ask if that application has reached you and what action, if any, is taken upon it." He said: "The application reached my desk within an hour of the time you were here yesterday," or the day before, as the case may be, "and I have ordered the suit." I said, "that enables me to answer my correspondent," and turned and walked out.

Q. I understand you, then, correctly. One question further. Did you ever see any of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia in regard to using your telephone—

Mr. RANNEY. I have been over that matter.

Mr. MILLARD. I was not in the room at the time and did not know that you had. I think that is all.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. When you first consented to become one of the promoters of this Pan-Electric Company, was it understood or supposed at that time that any contention or litigation would arise between it and any other company?—A. The idea of litigation springing out of it did not occur to me until some time after. The matter of infringement and patent litigation was one that I had never given any attention to, and I do not think I gave any thought to the probable or possible litigation springing out of it at the beginning, at the time I consented.

Q. Then you went into it simply upon what you supposed to be the merits of these inventions?—A. Purely and wholly so.

Q. And understanding that patents had been regularly issued by the United States to this patentee?—A. Understanding that some two or three or four had (I do not remember the number, but our contract will show what patents had been already issued), and that certain other applications for patents were pending, and if entitled to a patent I took it for granted they would be issued, and certain other inventions supposed to be patentable were in the course of completion and perfection, for which patents would be applied for.

Q. Will you state whether, so far as your knowledge extends, any of the gentlemen named by you were at that time selected by reason of their being learned in the law or otherwise, with a view to taking part in any litigation between this company and any other company interested in electrical apparatus or appliances?—A. I have no knowledge as to what motives other gentlemen may have had, but the question of professional attainments was a much lesser consideration to me than certain other qualities might be, when I demanded the right to name the men so as to secure myself against being identified with a business enterprise that might be controlled by persons whose business methods would not meet my approval. Hence I was resolved, so far as I could control it, to be associated with no person in that enterprise in whose capacity, integrity, and scrupulous care in the management of business affairs I could not rely as I could upon my own. And, with the persons named, Governor Brown included, there was not a man of them in whose integrity, prudence, and justice I did not have as much confidence as I had in my own.

Q. Then I understand you to say that in talking with parties and making these selections, there was no contemplation of making war upon any other company or any other enterprise and getting up litigation?—A. I had no such thought at the time, none whatever.

Q. Subsequently, when you entered into these articles of association between yourself and these gentlemen, and agreed to capitalize these properties at $5,000,000, state whether or not there was present, directly or indirectly, any purpose in using such large figures to create a fund to influence or control in any manner whatever either the judicial, executive, or legislative departments of the Government, or any members thereof.—A. No intimation from any quarter was ever made to me of any such purpose, and certainly I had no such purpose. My recollection is that when that contract was first drafted the capitalization was one or two millions, whichever it was—

Q. One million is mentioned as between the associates.—A. Very well, that smaller amount as between the associates. My recollection is that was the first draft. I think I called the attention of Colonel Young, who drafted it, and of all the other associates, to the fact that "Harry Rogers has promised $170,000 of stock upon a basis of $5,000,000 of capitalization, and therefore, that that matter may be conveniently adjusted, hadn't you better incorporate that idea, so that the $170,000 of the Rogers's outstanding promises may be kept?"

Q. I will ask you whether the question of litigation and contention between this and any other company had arisen at that time?—A. I have no recollection of any such question having arisen or having been considered.

Q. The fact, I think, has been suggested a great many times that no money consideration was paid by any of these gentlemen for any of their interests in these telephone properties.—A. No consideration, except as you will find it embraced in that written contract.

Q. The obligation to respond to assessments, and also your personal and business capacity and influence, was a consideration?—A. Yes; the aid of our business capacities and personal attention to the development and utilization of these inventions, such of them as we should find, after thorough experiment, to be of utility.

Q. Now, in regard to the largeness of the amount of stock authorized. You probably contemplated that if these properties proved to be successful and could be successfully placed upon the market in the various States they might eventually be worth the amount of capital expressed?—A. I understood and supposed the fact to be true (as I suppose it now to be true), that the Bell telephonic patents had developed into a capitalization of immense value.

Q. Greater than that named in these articles?—A. Very much greater. It is my impression it ran up to many millions greater, and my opinion then was, as my opinion now is, that our telephonic transmitter is not only superior to the Bell transmitter, but very much superior to any telephonic transmitter that I have ever experimented with.

Q. Some allusion has been made in the interrogatories propounded to you as to the propriety of authorizing so large an issue of stock, and the providing for the issuing stock where money—where the actual funds for the stock—was not paid in. Now, I will ask you whether it was not contemplated unanimously by the parties to these articles that no such stock should be issued until a future period in the success and prosperity of the company when its issue would be justified?—A. I can state that such was my resolve and such were my expressions, and I do not remember to have heard any dissent when I expressed such views.

Q. Then, again, some allusion has been made to institutions with a "balloon" capital. Was there, and has there ever been, any purpose in the management of this company to obtain credit or enter into any obligation whatever that could not be met by these limited assessments that are provided for in the association?—A. If we have ever owed a dollar that we have not been able to pay on demand, either by assessment or by moneys in the treasury, I have no knowledge of it. If we have a creditor or contractor of any character complaining of us I have no knowledge of that, nor have I had. We have met all of our obligations and never have sought to borrow a dollar from anybody I have ever heard or known of.

Q. In regard to the contracts under and by virtue of which the Pan-Electric Telephone Company conferred the territorial right in the States named, do you remember whether or not the company agreed to, or did not agree to, respond in damages where such companies or local companies might be declared to have infringed upon any other patent right?—A. My construction of the contract is that it did not agree to respond in damages, but it agreed to defend with its own lawyers and with its own means any lawsuit that involved the validity of the patent.

Q. In other words, it recognized these local companies in that respect as its mere agents or licensees?—A. The idea in my mind was this: a suit against the local company to which we had sold the right to use our instrument, involved the validity of our patents and we could not afford—

Q. It was in effect a suit against you?—A. Yes, in effect, and its effect would be ruinous to us and to whatever property we had. Hence, we could not afford to trust the defense of such a suit to anybody other than ourselves, and that we were to control and to defend it was my understanding of the contract.

Q. Did your company, the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, have anything to do in organizing these local companies, or was that left entirely to the promoters?—A. It was left entirely to the promoters of the local companies, so far as I know. I never had anything to do with the organization of a single one of the local companies, and I do not know that anybody else of our company had.

Q. Those companies determined the amount of stock to be issued for themselves?—

A. Yes, sir; I do not think our contract fixed any amount or limit. But I remember we were consulted in one instance (at least I was consulted; I do not remember that any formal application was made to our board) with regard to an Illinois company when they desired to diminish their capital stock, I think, to $40,000—perhaps from a million—and my answer was, “The Pan-Electric Company does not care a straw what you fix your capital stock at, whether you fix it at $40,000 or at $1,000,000. Your stock will cover your property, whatever that may be, much or little, and if you fix your capital stock at $40,000, and your property shall develop into millions, your $40,000 will represent those millions.”

Q. You would not have been inquired of in that instance, would you, if it had not been that a portion of the stock of that company had been transferred to your company?—A. That is the only reason, I suppose.

Q. Has there been any complaint from any person in the United States, as creditor or owner of the paper of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, that he has not been treated justly or that he has been unable to receive pay for his claims?—A. I know of no complaint of any creditor; I know of no complaint of any stockholder, except that Dr. Rogers has frequently demanded that we issue the stock and turn it over—

Q. I do not mean that.—A. The persons to whom he had given orders for stock have probably complained—not to me, but I have heard of their different complaints—that we did not issue and deliver this stock.

Q. But there has been no complaint that the stock has been imposed upon them as paid-up stock, when in fact no money was paid in?—A. So far as I know, no human being has ever made any such complaint.

Q. About when was it that you first became cognizant of the fact that there was likely to be trouble between your company and the Bell Telephone Company?—A. In that, as in respect to almost every other question, it is impossible for me to fix, with any degree of accuracy, or perhaps approximately, the time. But sooner or later I was led to believe that litigations were probable, and just so soon as that idea occurred to me, I suggested to Mr. Garland that he look carefully to it, investigate the legal questions thoroughly and well, and some time later he furnished me a brief of authorities, and I thought I would go through the case myself, but I found my engagements were so numerous that I threw it aside and determined to rely upon him and others. Subsequently I asked Mr. Marble, on account of his experience as Commissioner of Patents and as a lawyer, to investigate the matter, to look at our telephonic patents and see if they infringed any other and older telephonic patents.

Q. Have you already fixed the time that you first heard of the proposed application to have a suit brought by the Government?—A. As near as I could. The first I heard of it was the letter that I received from Dr. Rogers, and I think he fixed the 24th of May as the time that he wrote to myself and others upon that subject. That was the first suggestion I had.

Q. That was in 1885, was it?—A. Yes, sir; the 24th of May, 1885, I think, was the date fixed. I could not, from my own memory, have fixed any date, yet I do remember to have received such a letter.

Q. I will ask you whether you were able to say if that question arose or was considered at all, so far as your knowledge extends, before or after the 4th of March, 1885?—A. Oh, our board has never considered it at any meeting; our board has never taken any action in respect to any such matter.

Q. What I want to get at is this: whether you have any knowledge or information that the matter was ever existing in Mr. Garland's mind that he would be called upon, or that this question of a suit by the Government would be presented before the 4th of March, 1885, so far as your knowledge extends?—A. I never heard the matter suggested by anybody until I received Dr. Rogers' letter, and when I received it I had never looked at the question, and indeed did not remember that such suits were being brought, and the question also occurred to me upon receiving his letter, that even if the name of the Government were needed about the bringing of such suits, that Mr. Garland being at the head of that Department no application should be made to him; certainly I never would make any such application to him, and I knew, in my own mind, from my knowledge of the man, that he would not entertain any suggestion made, if it was made to him by the company.

Q. I will ask you to state whether you ever, by letter or by conversation, had any communication with Mr. Garland upon that subject?—A. Never. The subject was never mentioned between him and myself until after the newspaper notoriety that was given to that matter.

Q. So that you had no knowledge or information as to what he might do or say with reference to that subject?—A. I had no knowledge, but I had a very well defined opinion.

Q. I do not ask for that, because that we understand. Your attention has been called to a number of persons who have become the owners of these inchoate shares of stock in this Pan-Electric Company; do you know of any of that stock having been transferred or given to any person connected with this company, to the persons who now or at any time owned the same, with a view of affecting their official conduct, or the official conduct of any person connected with the Government?—A. I do not.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Do you know Mr. A. B. Upshur?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who is he?—A. He is one of the gentlemen who organized the Alabama company. He is now a clerk in the Indian Bureau in this city.

Q. In General Atkins's bureau?—A. Yes, sir; he is now here. I saw him this morning for a few moments.

Q. At the time you were here and called upon Solicitor-General Goode, you spoke of meeting Colonel Young near the Riggs House. Were you aware before that that he was in the city, do you recollect?—A. I do not know that I was. My present impression is that Colonel Young had just arrived in the city. I could not be certain, but Colonel Young's memoranda will doubtless show with absolute accuracy when he did arrive, and then the date of ordering that suit will show when it was ordered. Hence it was within one or two days of the bringing of that suit.

Mr. RANNEY. The date of the order is the 3d of September.

The WITNESS. Well, I should say it was one or two days from the date of that. It was either the day the suit was brought or the day before that I met Colonel Young.

Mr. RANNEY. He says he did not get here until the 2d.

The WITNESS. I cannot say as to that. I cannot fix the dates any more accurately than I already have done.

Q. The meeting, so far as your memory serves you, was accidental?—A. Purely accidental; wholly so.

Q. And you informed Colonel Young at that time that you were going to Solicitor Goode's office?—A. I informed Colonel Young that I had received a letter or telegram, whichever it was, from Colonel Gantt, asking if an application had been sent through the mails from the district attorney, Mr. McCorry, to the Department of Justice, and I was requested to inquire if it had been received and to inform him if it had been received, and what, if any, action had been taken upon it.

Q. Do you recollect what remark Colonel Young made? Did he say that he was going there?—A. No; I think his remark was, "I will go with you."

Q. Did Colonel Young indicate to you why he was going there?—A. I do not think he did.

Q. Did you have any conversation on the way up there in regard to this application?—A. I do not think we did. Our conversation, I think, was in respect to home matters.

Q. You do not recollect that Colonel Young said anything to you to the effect that he was here in the city looking after that suit, to see that it was brought on the relation of your company?—A. I do not think he said a word to me at the time, and I do not think he said a word to Mr. Goode about it.

Q. Did Colonel Young ever have any conversation with you in regard to a suit being brought on the relation of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. I do not think he ever discussed that question with me. That is one of those matters I do not claim to have any familiarity with, as I have not looked into it nor discussed it.

Q. You have not any recollection of his saying to you that he was going up there to look after it?—A. No, sir; I have no recollection of his making that statement to me then or at any other time.

Q. I understood in your original evidence, and also in reply to a question by Mr. Hall, that you said that you and your associates went into this matter, the Pan-Electric Company, without investigating at all the question of the legality of the patents, or inquiring whether you had anything of value in there or not?—A. At the time I consented to go into the matter (exactly how long a time it was after, I cannot say), the idea of infringement had not occurred to me at all; I had not thought of it.

Q. And did not until after the papers were signed, perhaps?—A. I do not know as to that; perhaps not.

Q. I think Mr. Marble's opinion is dated some time in February. It was about that time that your attention was first called to it?—A. My attention was called to it before I asked Mr. Marble to investigate the matter, or about the time I asked Mr. Garland to look carefully to the question, as questions of infringement possibly might arise.

Q. In answer to a question, I think of Mr. Ranney's, as to why this contract was signed in New York and why you gentlemen all went over there to perfect this arrangement, in addition to the fact that you said you were going as well on other matters of business, you suggested that perhaps it was because you were about incorporating under the statutes of the State of New York. Now, it was not necessary that that contract should be signed in the same State that the incorporation was obtained?—A. I do not suppose it was, but you do not quite accurately give my former statement. My statement was that I had to go to New York on other business; that I had understood from some one here that a very recent statute of New York probably was broad enough to cover all of these electrical inventions under our charter. But my idea was that we would get one charter broad enough, if we could, to cover all of the electrical inventions that were being or were to be conveyed to us, and we wanted to see whether that fact was true, and if there was such a statute exactly what its provisions were, and no such statute was to be found here in the library. My impression is that that furnished part of the motive for going to New York.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Have you been able, as yet, to fix the date of that visit to Mr. Goode's office in the summer of 1885, or about the date?—A. I have been able to refer to events that will enable you to fix it. From my own memory or any data I have looked to, I am not able to fix the date as a matter of memory; but you have the date at which that first suit was ordered, and it was one or two days prior to the date of the order of Mr. Goode bringing that suit.

Q. You have seen this agreement (it is called, I believe, a supplementary agreement) with Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. It was shown me here this morning.

Q. I will get you to state whether or not that agreement was authorized by your company to your knowledge?—A. It was not. I had no knowledge of any authority; indeed, believing myself that I had probably signed that agreement, I so stated to the last meeting of the board of directors that my impression was that I did sign it; that I had been shown such an agreement; and my impression now is that it will be found that I signed it as vice-president of the company.

Q. You refer to the original, I suppose?—A. I refer to the only one I have seen.

Q. The one you saw to-day is a supplemental one.—A. I am not sure whether it was a copy of this or another, but I understood it to be about the agreement that the two companies should each furnish whatever it had, including all electrical instruments, for both companies had models of the Reis and other telephones.

Q. This contract I refer to related to another matter; that they should unite in their efforts to secure the bringing of a suit by the Government against the Bell Telephone Company. That was the one of August 27, 1885, which I think refers to a prior agreement of August 4, 1885. You think you signed the one of August 4, to the best of your recollection?—A. I could not state from memory which one I signed, but I have a decided impression that Colonel Young brought an agreement to me, and my impression is it was in his own handwriting, but I think it had the signature of Mr. Van Benthuyzen or the National Improved Company to it. Since answering this question I have seen from the record of the Inter-State Commerce Committee, upon which I served during the summer and fall of 1885, that we were in session at Saratoga, New York, on the 25th, 26th, 27th, and 28th of August. Hence, I can now state positively that I was not here, but at Saratoga on the 27th of August, 1885. Therefore, if I signed the contract of that date it was signed long after that date, but I have never believed, and do not now believe that I signed the contract dated August 27. The more I have thought about it, the more confident I am that the paper I signed was signed in my office at Memphis, and I did not return to Memphis from Saratoga until some time late in September.

Q. Do you remember whether the agreement of August 4 was substantially the same as that of August 27, called the supplemental one?—A. I did not read the supplemental one this morning, but I can state what my impression was as to the meaning of the paper I signed.

Q. I will call your attention to the language of this supplemental agreement [handing the paper in question to the witness].—A. The substance of this paper is, I think, substantially the same as the one to which I refer.

Q. It corresponds substantially to the one of August 4 referred to, which you think you signed?—A. I cannot undertake to say that it corresponds with any other paper, for I do not remember ever to have seen but one. But it is perhaps proper that I state, after what I have stated, that from the fact that Colonel Young and Colonel Gantt were here in conference with Mr. Van Benthuyzen and his attorney, and from the additional fact that Colonel Young and Colonel Gantt made arguments before Secretary Lamar when the question was recently pending there, I assumed (while I have no knowledge of our company's having taken any action and do not think it ever has taken any action in respect to the matter) and believed, and if I had been asked the question six weeks or two months ago if the Pan-Electric Telephone Company was one of the petitioning parties to bring this Government suit, should have said I believed it to be so, and did suppose it to be so; yet that was based simply on the fact that I knew Colonel Young and Colonel Gantt had been in conference here looking to that question, and on the fact that they had made an argument before Secretary Lamar. But in some conversations of Colonel Young within the last two months, I do not remember when (he and I had not talked on the question of whether our company was or not before, but in conversation I assumed that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company was a petitioning company), I was then informed by him that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company was not a petitioner in either case.

Q. Is it or not your understanding that your company assented to the agreement of Mr. Van Benthuyzen, or one of a similar nature?—A. The company has never taken any action in respect to the agreement that I know of, except that I stated at the last meeting that I had signed a paper, stating at the time of signing it that the understanding between the parties, as I understood from Colonel Young, was that it was not binding upon either company without ratification; that neither Mr. Van Benthuyzen was authorized to act for his company nor I nor any other officer of our company for our company, but I mentioned the subject to those gentlemen present at the last meeting of the board, saying that "I have signed such an agreement without authority to do so, and I want your approval." There was no formal action taken then, but I understood all the gentlemen present as acquiescing in or approving the act.

Q. You notice this contract says that your company, as well as the other company, were to use their influence to secure the bringing of the suit by the Government, and also to secure the employment of your attorneys in those suits?—A. My understanding was that we agreed to do this, that we assumed our part of the expenses that the companies were to pay out in respect to the matter and to furnish all the scientific information we had, to be used in that suit, and to furnish all the models and instruments we had manufactured for the purpose.

Q. But I speak particularly with reference to what is stated in that contract.

Mr. RANNEY. There is one other element you did not state, and that is to share the expenses.

The WITNESS. To share any expenses that the companies were put to, and to give the joint aid of the attorneys of the companies.

Q. Was any effort ever made on the part of your company to your knowledge to carry out that part of this agreement by which you were to use your influence to get the Government to bring the suit and to secure the employment of your attorneys by the Government?—A. Never that I ever heard of or know about.

Q. Was that matter ever discussed by the company, and how, if you know, was that contract brought about, that is, who authorized the contract that your company is regarded as having assented to?—A. As I understood from Colonel Young, Mr. Van Benthuyzen and himself had entered into an agreement before the Government suit was agitated at all that the Pan-Electric Company and the National Improved Company should make common cause in respect to two suits that were then pending by contributing each all the electrical information they possessed, and all the models they had, and by the general services of the attorneys of the companies. Subsequent to that, some considerable time subsequent (probably after this suit had been commenced, but I cannot say as to that), the contract that I signed, my impression is, was brought to me at my office in the city of Memphis by Colonel Young. It is a contract that I did not scrutinize at the time, but I understood it to be—

Mr. RANNEY. We do not want the contents of that contract until they produce it.

The WITNESS. As I say, after the suit was brought, and I suppose it was brought at the instance of the Pan-Electric Company as well as other companies, I supposed that every telephone company in the United States was interested in the litigation involved in the Government suit—

Q. This is the point I am trying to call your attention to, and I regard it as important in this investigation. The members of your company under this contract are bound to use all their influence to secure the institution of the suit by the Government and also the employment of your lawyers by the Government?—A. Well, the idea of its committing us to use influence to secure the bringing of a suit is one that never occurred to me.

Q. That is the language of the contract.—A. Until you called my attention to it—

Q. That places yourself, Mr. Garland, and others in the same attitude of agreeing to use your influence to have a suit brought by the Government?—A. He was not present at the meeting; Mr. Garland was not.

Q. Still he is a stockholder of the company, and that contract places him in that attitude.—A. I had no contract before the board at the time I spoke of it, but verbally stated simply that I had signed the contract binding us to give the services of our attorneys in these suits and to pay our part of the expenses of those suits, and to furnish our models. That was about the statement I made to the gentlemen present. None of them I suppose have ever seen the paper.

Q. You could not state now from memory whether your visit to the Solicitor-General's office was prior or subsequent to the signing of that contract I refer to?—A. I could not fix that date.

Mr. RANNEY. He has fixed the date of that interview, so that shows it was subsequent.

The WITNESS. The contract will evidently be forthcoming and its date will fix the time. I do not know that even the date of that contract will fix it, for it is my impression that it was signed by Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen was not in Memphis at the time I signed it, if I signed it there, and it may have been presented to me for signature subsequent to the time. But Colonel Young, from his memoranda and his recollection of those matters, will be more accurate, I imagine, as to those dates, for I have no memoranda to control me, and he probably has.

Q. If your visit was subsequent to the date of that contract it might place you in the attitude, unless explained, of carrying out, or having an intention to carry out, that portion of the contract?—A. Well, my visits to the Department, the object and purpose of them, will be very clearly shown, I imagine, by the testimony of Mr. Goode, as well as by my own, or by the testimony of every man in the Department who knows anything about the matter, because it went only to the extent I mentioned, and I think Mr. Goode will so state.

Q. I believe everything you have stated, but I am speaking of the attitude it places you and your company in in connection with the Government suit and in regard to the effort you were to make to secure the employment of your attorneys by the Government. Now, whether the members of your company understood the full force and meaning of that contract when it was given out and signed is a thing I should like to know?—A. Well, the face of the contract I know was not stated to the gentlemen who were present at the last meeting of the board. I had no contract before me, and was only speaking from memory I had of the signing of a paper to divide the expenses; to pay our part of the expenses.

Q. This goes beyond that, you will notice, and relates to the institution of the suit and the employment of the attorneys?—A. Yes; it does.

Q. What is the date of that order, as shown by the records, for the bringing of the suit?

Mr. RANNEY. It is dated the 3d of September. The communication of the district attorney was dated August 31.

The WITNESS. This contract now under my eye says:

"In addition to the agreement made and entered into between the above-mentioned companies at the city of Washington, D. C., on the 4th day of August, A. D. 1885, it is hereby further stipulated," &c.

Now, that contract purports to be signed, "The National Improved Telephone Company, by W. Van Benthuyzen, president."

Mr. RANNEY. And he was here at the time.

The WITNESS. He was here at the time? Well, that does not correspond with my recollection, because the paper I signed, I think when you see it you will find, is signed by Van Benthuyzen, and was signed by me when it was presented to me. When presented to me it was presented by Colonel Young. Colonel Young certainly showed me a paper on the subject of the two companies contributing evidence, models, attorneys, &c., in pending suits, and I think he did request me to sign it as an agreement.

Q. Do you think you drew any of these agreements yourself?—A. Oh, no; not one of them. My impression is that Colonel Young showed me the paper, and it was signed by me and returned to Colonel Young; that is my recollection, and I think it was at Memphis, and if Mr. Van Benthuyzen was at Memphis at the time I have no knowledge of it.

Q. Do you know what lawyers were employed to assist in this Government suit when it was brought?—A. I did not know that any lawyer was employed.

Q. I mean the first suit that was brought?—A. I did not know that any lawyer was employed for that purpose; I know that Colonel Gantt and General Wright were both employed in the prosecution of the suit that the Pan-Electric Company brought against the Bell Company in Memphis, and I heard from Colonel Young that he and Van Benthuyzen had agreed that our lawyers and their lawyers would join in prosecuting that suit and in defending the New Orleans suit. Then hearing that Colonel Young and Colonel Gantt were here in conference with those gentlemen in respect to a Government suit, I inferred that they were co-operating in that matter as well as in the other.

Q. It is your understanding, then, that those attorneys who represented your company were engaged in the Government suit that was instituted by Mr. Goode?—A. I only understood so from the fact that they were here in conference. I understood that they were conferring upon that subject, and subsequently understood that Colonel Gantt and Colonel Young made an argument before Secretary Lamar when the case before him was argued.

Q. That Government suit was brought some time in September, was it not, the suit against the Bell Company?—A. I understood Mr. Ranney to state that the order to bring the suit was dated in September.

Mr. RANNEY. The order to bring the suit was dated September 3. It is on the record and in evidence.

Mr. MILLARD. Let me suggest to you, Mr. Hale, that the application of Mr. McCorry to Mr. Goode asks for the appointment of those attorneys, and also the letters.

Q. So that all of these contracts were made before the order for the suit was made by Mr. Goode?—A. I do not know as to that.

Q. That is, if the suit was ordered on the 3d of September, both of these contracts date prior to that time, one August 4 and the other August 27?

Mr. RANNEY. You will find that Mr. McCorry's application to the Attorney-General was dated the 31st of August, 1885, and in that he requests the employment of Messrs. Gantt and Wright, and Mr. Goode authorizes the employment of those gentlemen jointly.

Mr. OATES. But without fees on the part of the Government. They had been employed by their companies and agreed to serve in the suit without compensation from the Government.

Mr. HALE. It was not to cost the Government anything for the attorneys' services.

Mr. RANNEY. No.

Mr. MILLARD. They were to have charge of the suit, but were not to be compensated by the Government.

The WITNESS. My understanding was that Colonel Gantt and General Wright were attorneys of the Pan-Electric Company, and that certain attorneys had been retained as attorneys of the National Improved Company before a Government suit was ever thought of; that they were representing those two telephone companies in matters of litigation then pending, and that in the course of investigation of the matters involved in those litigations the idea of a suit upon the part of the Government, or rather the idea that the gaining of either of those suits would not finally settle the question, but perhaps only settle it as to the parties to the suit, led to the idea that a Government suit was the only thing that could finally and definitely settle the question of the validity of the broad claim of the Bell patent.

Mr. HALE. I only meant by my questions to call your attention to that feature in the contract that appeared to me to be a little unusual. The contract that you signed is not before the committee, I believe. Do I understand you correctly to say that this contract you have read to-day corresponds substantially with the one you signed?

The WITNESS. Oh, I say distinctly that the agreement that I understood to have been made and to have been incorporated into the contract that I signed, went to the extent of dividing expenses in the litigations pending. I inferred (for I had no knowledge of the action of our company, and I have no knowledge to-day that we have a lawyer employed to prosecute the Government suit) from the fact that Colonel Young and Colonel Gantt were here in conference with the National Improved Company, and were investigating the question of a Government suit, that they were representing their respective companies in doing so.

Q. Do you or not, on the part of the company, or as one of the representatives of the company, disavow this contract that has been read here to-day, or was anybody authorized to sign that by the company?—A. No one has been authorized to sign it by the company, so far as I am aware.

Q. These measures were not discussed by the company at any meeting of the board?—A. By no action of the company that I have any knowledge of, but upon a verbal statement I made at a meeting of the board that I had signed a contract between us to share the expenses of the litigations pending at the time, and to furnish our models, and I understood the gentlemen present—

Mr. HALL. This contract does not include anything about the models or evidence.

The WITNESS. I understood the gentlemen present to acquiesce in my signing it, but so far as I know they had no knowledge of what the contracts were except as they derived it from my statement to them, and they can speak for themselves as to how much knowledge they had.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. At that time had you ever seen the supplemental contract that is spoken of now?—A. Unless it is the one I signed I have never seen it, and I do not think it is probable it is the one I did sign, for I never would have agreed—

Q. Do you say the supplemental contract is the one you signed?—A. Oh, the paper here I have not signed; this one I have not signed.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You do not know that the one Mr. Van Benthuyzen has got has not your signature?—A. I do not; I think probably the paper I signed he has possession of.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You have possession of the one he signed and he has possession of the one you signed?—A. I only know that Colonel Young brought me a paper at Memphis, that is my impression, and that he showed it to me and talked to me about it. My impression was that it was at my own office at the city of Memphis that he showed me the paper, and my impression is still that way.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. Until you saw this contract to-day had you any knowledge that there was any contract of the sort binding on your company to carry out the objects as specified in that contract, that is, to secure the institution of a suit by the Government, and to secure the employment of counsel by it?—A. I did not think there was but one contract existing. I do not think I ever signed but one, though I may have signed it in duplicate. I do not think it contained the provisions you recite.

Q. Did you think that anything the company had done authorized you to enter into obligations to use your influence with the Government authorities to have them bring this suit?—A. The idea of being under obligation to use our influence, do you say? It never occurred to my mind until you called my attention to it here.

Mr. HALE. That is the feature I wanted to draw attention to. Have you anything more to say about it?

The WITNESS. I think not.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. At the time you signed that contract were you an officer of the company?—A. I have been an officer of the company from its organization.

Q. What officer?—A. Vice-president.

Q. Who was president at that time?—A. General J. E. Johnston.

Q. I want to call your attention to one letter suggested by the questions of Mr. Hall. It is a letter from you to Dr. J. W. Rogers, dated October 26, 1885, and is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., October 26, 1885.

DEAR SIR: I want to see you when you come to the city, but not knowing when you are in, don't know when to call.

My object is to talk to you about the telephone, and chiefly to say to you that everything in the way of newspaper, hotel, or street discussion from our side of the question is hurtful, and I beg that you say nothing on the subject through the press or otherwise, except so far as you may choose to discuss the matter with us who are interested.

Respectfully,

ISHAM G. HARRIS.

Dr. J. W. ROGERS.

Do you remember that letter?—A. Oh, yes, sir; I remember it very well.

Q. That was while this hearing was going on before the Secretary of the Interior, was it not?—A. I expect it was after the Secretary's opinion, but I am not sure. On reflection, I am sure that it was some months before the opinion of Secretary Lamar was delivered, and don't remember whether it was before or after the application was referred to him, but the record will show as to that.

Q. It was before these newspaper publications?—A. It was before the recent publications. Dr. Rogers had previously written a letter to the New York Tribune, some time before that. But my letter was written under exactly these circumstances: General Upshur stated to me that a night or two before the time of the conversation he had seen Dr. Rogers at the Metropolitan Hotel, drunk, reading a manuscript, perhaps in verse, ridiculing and satirizing the President, the Attorney-General, General Johnston, perhaps Mr. Atkins and Secretary Lamar, and the Administration generally, and suggested that he was making a very ungainly figure of himself with a group of people in the lobby of a public hotel at nine or ten o'clock at night, intoxicated and going on in the way he was going on. I wrote him that letter perhaps the night after that conversation. I did desire at the time to see if I could not restrain him from that sort of folly. I did not think he was doing himself or anybody else any good by that sort of criticism upon those gentlemen. I simply meant that the attorneys that had investigated the question were doubtless giving it all necessary attention, and if Dr. Rogers wanted to talk about it, I thought he had better confine his talking to those of us who were interested in the telephone, rather than to be writing and repeating doggerel at a public hotel while in a state of intoxication.

Q. You considered that a suit which would result in vacating the Bell patents would result in great advantage to your interests and the interests of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. Oh, a decision against the broad construction of the broad claim of the Bell patent, I supposed, would open the entire telephonic field for every mechanical device, and allow it to stand upon its own merits, and that would be of advantage to every telephone company in the country, and to every man in the country who used the telephone.

Q. You believed, did you not, and still believe that the vacating of the Bell telephone patent would enhance the value of the stock in the Pan-Electric series of companies?—A. The vacating of the broad claim by a judicial decision construing it not to extend to the entire art of telephony would open the field to all mechanical devices for transmitting articulate speech over a wire by means of electricity—do you ask if that would be of advantage to our company?

Q. Yes.—A. It would be to every telephone company in America, and to every man in America who uses a telephone ; that is what I then considered and what I now consider the effect it would have.

Q. You were aware that the Government suit was to vacate the letters patent obtained by Bell?—A. I supposed the Government suit was for the purpose of testing its validity in all its parts, but I supposed the weak point of the Bell patent, or the weakest of the weak points, was his fifth claim, which gives him the exclusive right to transmit articulate speech over a wire by means of electricity, no matter by what method.

Mr. RANNEY. I have no more questions to ask the witness.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Following the line of Mr. Ranney's last question in regard to the benefits to be derived by your company and the whole people and every other company, I will ask you whether you consider your telephone as the best one there is?—A. I have considered it and do consider it the best I have seen, but invention is going on all the time, and I do not know how long it may continue so.

Q. Then, on the ground of "the survival of the fittest," if the Bell Telephone were set aside, the Pan-Electric Telephone would have a chance for development?—A. I should think its merits would assert themselves.

Q. And therefore your patents would become of great value if you have the best telephone?—A. If the public should decide it was the best telephone I suppose they would.

Mr. EDEN. I move that the committee adjourn until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to, and the committee then adjourned.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Friday, April 2, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.20 p. m.

Mr. OATES (to Hon. J. D. C. Atkins). I understand you have expressed a desire to testify, General Atkins.

Mr. ATKINS. Yes, sir; I made the request the other day.

Hon. J. D. C. ATKINS was then sworn and examined.

By Mr. OATES (in the chair):

Question. Do you hold any official position under the Government at this time?—Answer. I am Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Q. How long have you held that office?—A. I was inducted into the office on the 26th day of March, 1885.

Q. Prior to that time were you in any way connected with the Government of the United States; did you hold any office?—A. Yes, sir; I was a member of Congress from the 4th of March, 1873, until the 4th of March, 1883—ten years; I went out of Congress on the 4th day of March, 1883.

Q. You were not in office from that time until you were appointed Commissioner of Indian Affairs?—A. I was not; no, sir.

Q. Are you a member of a company or association known as the Pan-Electric Company, and alleged to have been formed in March, 1883?—A. Yes, sir; I am a stockholder and one of the original incorporators.

A. Are you also a member of what is known as the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. Well, if I understand the proposition, I think I am. Do you mean the Pan-Electric Telephone Company that was incorporated under a charter in October, 1883?

Q. Yes; a company springing out of the Pan-Electric Company.—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Have you seen the resolution under which this committee was raised, expressing the objects and purposes of the inquiry to be made by the committee?—A. I read it at the start, but I have not seen it now for four or six weeks, that I know of.

Q. You may now proceed, if you desire, in your own way, to describe to the committee the formation of the Pan-Electric Company and the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, together with a general history of the matter as far as you deem it important.—A. Along about the latter part of February, 1883, I received an invitation in the form of a note or a letter from Dr. J. W. Rogers, stating that his son had some valuable patents, and asking if I would like to become interested in them, and suggesting to me that he would like to have me interested in them. I replied to Dr. Rogers. Possibly I received two notes from him before I replied that I was then engaged actively during all of my time in considering the appropriation bills that were before Congress, being myself a member of the Committee on Appropriations; that the conference committees upon those bills required my entire time and strength, and that I could not see him until after Congress adjourned and I had a day or two to rest, and then I would see him upon the subject. I have no recollection of having seen Dr. Rogers at all or Harry Rogers at all until after the expiration of the session. I met with Senator Harris because in this letter addressed to me a suggestion was made of a desire upon the part of these parties that Senator Harris should become interested in these patents. I mentioned the matter to him, and I think he said he had himself received a letter on that subject. I think so. That was while the Forty-seventh Congress was in session, but about the last days of the Congress. After the 4th of March, when I had had a little time to rest, Senator Harris and myself met, talked about it, and concluded we would go down and see the patents put in operation in the laboratory upon Four-and-a-half street. We did go there; we saw his telephone operated, and I think we saw what he called his telegraphic repeater operated. Well, there was a good deal of talk one way and another about forming a company, &c., &c., but nothing was definitely determined.

In the mean time, before I get too far along, I should say that when it was proposed Senator Harris and myself should invite other gentlemen into this company, I suggested Mr. Garland, and Senator Harris suggested General Joseph E. Johnston; I was Mr. Garland and asked him if he would like to go into that company, provided those patents should strike him, after examination, as being of value; he said he would think about it, and rather thought he would; that was about the way he expressed himself. After Congress adjourned, as I say, Senator Harris and myself went to this place, and I think once Senator Garland went there with us too; I think so. The inventions were examined, and while I did not then and do not now know much about telephony or telegraphy—I know very little of the scientific features of telephony or telegraphy—I thought, I confess, very well of these patents; I thought that they might be of considerable value, though I did not know; it was an experiment and had to be tried; so Mr. Rogers and his son, Senator Harris, myself, Senator Garland, General Johnston, and Mr. Young, after a consultation, agreed that we would form an association, and went to New York still considering the subject, having come to no definite terms.

At New York we made a contract, which was signed by J. Harris Rogers, the owner of the patents, on the one part, and by Senator Harris, Mr. Young, and myself, in person, and by General Johnston and Senator Garland by Senator Harris, as their attorney in fact. We made the contract covering these patents, a telephone patent, a telegraph patent, an electric-light patent, and some other patents—I do not know what they were—which we agreed should be divided into ten parts. Mr. Harris, Mr. Garland, Mr. Young, General Johnston, and myself under the contract were to own five parts—a tenth each; Mr. Rogers was to own four parts—four-tenths—and one-tenth was to belong to the joint association. We agreed that whatever assessments were necessary for the development of these patents should be made, fixing, I believe, in the contract, that not more than $150 should be assessed without the consent of the company. I think we assessed ourselves, in that contract, $150 each. The understanding was that we were to pay, in the development of these patents, whatever assessments were absolutely necessary, and to give such time and attention to them as would bring them before the public, and see whether or not there was really anything in them. That was done. The $150 was paid. Some wires were hired, I don't know of whom now, and experiments were made.

Perhaps I may as well mention right here, as I have noticed in the newspapers something said about it, that Mr. Abram S. Hewitt, of New York, was spoken of as probably a party who would go into this company, and it was suggested by somebody, I don't know by whom, that I had better see him and ask him if he wanted to go into it. I told them I had no objection; that I had a very high regard for Mr. Hewitt; he and I had served together on the Committee on Appropriations; I regarded him as a very pure man and a very good man, and I would be very glad if he would go into it as far as I was concerned. So I went to see Mr. Hewitt, and I think young Rogers went with me, and told him of the existence of the patents—that was before the contract was made, I believe—and asked him if he would like to go into it. He said no; he had so much business of his own and was not in very good health, and that he did not desire to enter into any new enterprise of any kind. There the matter dropped.

That was all that occurred at New York, that I remember, that is at all material. We simply agreed to take these patents and to bear whatever assessments were necessary to place them before the public to experiment with them and to see whether they were of value or not. We did experiment with them and my appreciation of them grew wonderfully; wonderfully; so much so that I regarded them and do regard them now as a very valuable property, provided they do not infringe upon anybody's patents; if they do, I should like to know it, as far as I am concerned. I believe that was the feeling of the company; and to ascertain whether there might be any question upon that subject the opinions of two gentlemen were asked for. Mr. Garland was one, and Mr. Marble, the ex-Commissioner of Patents, was the other. Mr. Marble was then living in Washington (I don't know whether he lives here now or not) and he had been Commissioner of Patents, but was not at the time. He was applied to and his opinion was given, as I understood. I never saw it, but I understood his opinion was given to the point and to the effect that the Rogers telephone patent did not infringe the Bell patent, either in its transmitter or receiver. No corporation was formed until, I think, about the latter part of October.

Q. 1883?—A. 1883; yes, sir; this contract was made the 13th of March, 1883, in New York. The charter of incorporation came into existence, I think, about the 30th or 31st of October, 1883; the latter part of October, at any rate.

Q. What did that incorporate?—A. I think that incorporated the Pan-Electric Telephone Company. Then a paper, I hardly know what you might call it, was issued or given to the stockholders saying that they were entitled to so much of the stock of the company, for it was then capitalized. They capitalized the company at that time, according to my understanding, and each stockholder was given his particular share of the stock. Of this tenth that belonged to all in the company, there was a certain portion given to other parties, I don't know how much. Dr. Rogers claimed $150,000 or $200,000, and he disposed of it, how I do not know, to some other parties. This paper or evidence of the ownership of the stock, was given to each of the stockholders. I was given mine and kept mine, until at a subsequent meeting of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company a demand was made of me for the surrender of that certificate or evidence of ownership with the view of issuing to me a certificate for 10 per cent. less, and one was issued to me for $450,000; that I have got. The other was $500,000. I never sold any of my stock or any evidence of stock, or any of my interest. I never sold a cent's worth. Although frequently applied to to sell it I declined to do it at any figures. I regarded the thing as not—well, the company had, in fact, enjoined any stockholder from selling any of its stock without the consent of the executive committee; but I did not desire to sell it any way, and would not have sold it any way, although frequently applied to to do it. Besides, the original contract provided that no stockholder should sell when the stock was issued, as I understand it, any of his private interest, without the consent of the company. I suppose some of the stock was sold by some of the stockholders. I have heard so. I do not know that it has been sold, but I have heard so, and I have heard that my name has been published in the papers as a member of the company referred to, either a stockholder or as a director—and I never was a director—as an advertisement for the sale of that stock. I state here that that publication of my name by anybody was wholly unauthorized by me and never would have had my consent if it had been asked. It was not asked. I have never felt comfortable under the idea that anybody could use my name in any such connection, because it was wholly without any authority from me.

Q. Do you know why that deduction of 10 per cent. in the stock was made?—A. I understood that the purpose was to sell the stock for the purpose of defraying the legitimate expenses of the company, should it have law suits or anything of that sort. That was what I understood.

Q. That was the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. That was the Pan-Electric Telephone Company; yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember the date of that?—A. I do not, but I think it was in 1884. I am not sure whether it was in 1884 or the first of 1885.

Q. Do you state that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company did not sell stock or that they did sell stock?—A. I state that I did not sell any of my stock. I understand the fact to be that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company did sell some stock. It sold some stock to three or four parties, to Senator Vest, a couple of ladies—I do not know who they are—and a gentleman by the name of Howard. I do know him. I always understood that those parties solicited the purchase of that stock themselves. So far as my intercourse with the directors is concerned, and the president of the company, my information from them has always been that they did not want to sell the stock; that they did not want to put it on the market; but they sold it to those parties at their own solicitation.

Q. Why was it, if you know, that they did not desire to sell any stock?—A. Well, I should suppose the reason why they did not desire to sell the stock was that they preferred that time should develop better the value of the property, and that they did not desire to sell the stock until they knew it had a certain value. I should think so. Not being a director, of course, I was not in their counsels, and I never was at more than one or two meetings in my life. I was at one or two stockholders' meetings. Of course I do not know what their reasoning was, but I think that was the reason.

Q. They did sell territorial rights, however?—A. Yes, sir; in order to put telephones into operation they sold to parties who, I understood, solicited the purchase—some local parties who obtained the right to operate the telephones. The license or rights or whatever you might call it, was disposed of to four or five different local companies.

Q. Do you know anything about the contracts made with those local companies?—A. No; I do not know anything about them. I never saw one of them.

Q. Not being a director, you are not informed as to the particulars of those contracts?—A. I never saw one of them, and do not know anything about them. I have a general impression about them, but it is simply from what I have heard, and really I do not know anything at all. I never saw them.

Q. How much money did you pay to develop and test the utility of any of these inventions?—A. Something over $400; that is my recollection.

Q. You say you became satisfied that the telephone was of utility?—A. Of very great utility; yes, sir. I regarded it as a very valuable property, and I regard it now as a valuable property. But the telegraphic repeater I do not, for the simple reason that upon some tests made with it it seemed that it was not so considered. Perhaps the same instrument had been previously patented; that was my impression. I do not know whether that is so or not; but I know the general impression of the company is still that the telegraphic repeater is worth but little, if anything.

Q. Did not you and your associates organize a company for telegraphic purposes based on that invention?—A. I do not know whether we did or not. Since this discussion and since this investigation has been going on I have heard something of that. I heard something of it here the other day, but I did not even know of it before. I did not know that there was a charter for a telegraphic company, if one exists.

Q. If a charter was obtained and any stock issued or any effort made to form such a company and put it into operation, you say you did not know of it?—A. I did not know, absolutely, that a step had been taken in the world for the organization of a telegraphic company; not one single step, except what I heard Senator Harris say here with regard to having it investigated by a man by the name of Marean—I believe that is his name—and that it was not a very favorable opinion. I know the impression I have received from conversations with members of the company for perhaps a year or so has been that that telegraphic repeater is not of any value.

Q. What was done at the stockholders' meetings which you attended?—A. I attended one meeting in Mr. Young's room. I believe that was a stockholders' meeting. No; that was not a stockholders' meeting; I believe it was a directors' meeting. I don't know whether it was or not, but I was present. They passed a resolution saying that none of this stock should be sold without the consent of the executive committee controlling it; an executive committee of three, I think. That is all I recollect.

Q. Why did they pass a resolution against the sale of stock?—A. Well, I do not know; but I am inclined to think the reason was the reason I gave you a while ago; that they wanted to wait and see, and be certain of the value of this property. I should judge that to be the reason.

Q. Do you remember the date of that meeting?—A. I think it was in the fall of 1884; it might have been in the spring of 1884; I don't know which.

Q. Some suits were brought against local companies in the territories where you had sold the right to operate the telephone, were there not?—A. I understand so; yes, sir. I understood there were some suits brought.

Q. Was that resolution passed before or after any of those suits were brought?—A. Upon my word I could not say, because I do not know when the suits were brought, and I do not know exactly when this meeting took place; but I think the meeting to which I refer was in the fall of 1884.

Q. Do you know anything about any suit being brought in the name of the Government for the purpose of vacating the Bell patent?—A. Nothing in the world of my own knowledge; nothing except what I saw in the papers and what I have heard here; nothing so far as my own knowledge is concerned.

Q. Did you ever take any part in or solicit any person, either the Attorney-General or the Solicitor-General, or any of your associates, to try to have a suit of that character brought?—A. Never on earth, sir. The first time that I ever heard of the agitation about a Government suit I saw in the papers at the same time that the suit was ordered. That was the first time I ever heard there was any agitation of the question. I had never opened my mouth during the pendency of that suit before the Department of Justice or the Department of the Interior on the subject to any living man connected with either Department, never; nor to anybody else on behalf of bringing it. I may have talked about it, as everybody else has talked about it, seeing it in the papers, and all that sort of thing; but I never raised my finger towards trying to bring about that suit by the Government.

Q. Then you had nothing to do with obtaining the services of counsel?—A. Nothing on earth, so far as that is concerned; and I will say right here now upon that point that I asked Mr. Young, after this case had been brought before the Interior Department, and I saw that he was appearing in the case, whom he appeared for. Said I: "Do you appear for the Pan Electric Company? Is the Pan-Electric Company before this Department?" He said: "No, sir; it is not." Said I: "Whom do you appear for?" He said he appeared for some gentlemen in Louisiana and in Memphis; and, with rather a defiant expression, that he had a right as an American citizen, if he wanted to, to petition the Government to bring a suit, or something of that kind.

Q. When was that?—A. That was when this case was pending here before the Department of the Interior, in January.

Q. I understood you to state that when you first saw these inventions put in operation you did not even know whether they had any utility or not, but had an impression or opinion that they possibly had?—A. Of course I did not know anything about them. I just thought this, that they might be of great value, and they might not be of any value. I did not know how that was. Of course it was to be tested, and I could not tell. I was willing to pay whatever assessments were necessary to see whether the inventions were of value or not. After the experiments were made I became satisfied the inventions were of very great value. You asked me a moment ago if I had been at any stockholders' meeting. There was another stockholders' meeting that I was at, which, before it passes out of my mind, I had perhaps better refer to. That was the stockholders' meeting at Senator Harris's room, some time in the month of January last, I think, to which I was invited. I attended that meeting.

Q. At that meeting or at any other time do you remember to have heard Senator Harris say anything about having entered into a contract for the Pan-Electric Telephone Company with the National Improved Company, represented by Van Benthuyssen, of New Orleans?—A. Yes, sir; I heard him say that night that the Pan-Electric Company and the National Improved Company had an understanding. That was the first time I had ever heard of it according to my recollection. He said that they had an understanding that they would unite, and that they would bear the expenses equally; that each company should pay its own lawyers, but that they should divide the expenses, and put in their machinery, models, and so on, whatever they had, in the suit in New Orleans and in Memphis—private suits. Nothing was said about a Government suit.

Q. Suits against what company?—A. Against the Bell Company. Nothing was said about a Government suit on that occasion.

Q. Nothing was said about a Government suit?—A. Not that I heard.

Q. Was any paper shown?—A. None that I saw.

Q. No written contract was exhibited?—A. None that I saw.

Q. Do you remember what Senator Harris said?—A. That is just what he said; that the meeting was called to apprise the stockholders of the fact that an agreement had been reached between the National Improved Telephone Company and the Pan-Electric organization or company; that they would unite, put in their instruments, and each company bear equal expenses, and each pay its own lawyers in the prosecution of the private suit at New Orleans brought against the National Improved Company, and the suit brought at Memphis, I believe, by the Pan-Electric Company against the Bell Company.

Q. For the purpose of making a joint fight against the Bell Company in each of those suits?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were you ever at any meeting of the Pan-Electric Company, or the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, or were you ever a party to any understanding or agreement with any member of that company, by which an effort was to be made to induce the Department of Justice to bring a suit against the Bell Company for the purpose of testing or setting aside its patents?—A. Never, sir; never in my life; and did not know that any effort of that sort was being made by anybody connected with the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. Then you state that if the Pan-Electric Company was a party to any such arrangement, or any of its members joined in an effort to induce the Department of Justice to bring a suit against the Bell Company, it was without your knowledge or participation?—A. Absolutely without my knowledge or participation, and would have been without my consent if I had known it.

Mr. OATES. That is all I have to ask.

Mr. RANNEY. I was not here during most of your examination. I have a very few questions to put to you.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You reside in Tennessee?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You were a member of what Congresses?—A. The Forty-third, the Forty-fourth, the Forty-fifth, the Forty-sixth, and the Forty-seventh.

Q. It has been said you were a candidate for Clerk of the House?—A. I was.

Q. Of the Forty-eighth Congress?—A. I was; yes, sir.

Q. And you now occupy what position under the Government?—A. I am now the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Q. I believe you were not a director in either of these companies?—A. No, sir; I was not.

Q. Did you go to New York when the contract was signed?—A. Yes, sir; I did.

Q. Who obtained you as one of the associates?

The WITNESS. Who obtained me?

Mr. RANNEY. Who spoke to you about it?—A. Mr. Rogers.

Q. You paid Dr. Rogers or Harris Rogers nothing for the interest which you received?—A. Nothing at all. I would not have paid anything for it at that time except what I agreed to pay.

Q. And you, under the agreement, like the rest, entered into an obligation that you might be assessed to the extent of $150?—A. Yes, sir; and any other assessments that the committee might make. I did not know how much it would amount to.

Mr. HALL. You did not mean "the committee," did you?

The WITNESS. I did not mean "committee."

Mr. RANNEY. What you meant was such other assessments as the directors might fix?

The WITNESS. Yes; such assessments as the directors might determine upon.

Q. As you understood it, the assessments were to be made upon all the interests?—

A. I never was very definite about it, but that was rather my opinion; yes, sir.

Q. Did you look into the patents to see whether they were of value or not?—A. Well, so far as that is concerned, it would have been like a child opening a Greek Testament. I would have known about as much before I looked into it as I would afterwards.

Q. From whom did you get your idea about the value of the enterprise?

The WITNESS. At the start?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, sir.

A. Well, I got my idea about it mostly from talking with Harris Rogers. Dr. Rogers talked a great deal about it, but I had very little confidence in his scientific knowledge—not intending to make any slur upon him at all.

Q. At that time were you a member of Congress?—A. I was not. You were not here when I made the statement, and perhaps it is proper I should say that the first time I heard of this thing was during the last days of the Forty-seventh Congress; but my recollection is that I had no interview whatever with Dr. Rogers during the time of the existence of the Congress.

Q. Not having been elected to the succeeding Congress, Dr. Rogers did not expect you would be a member of that Congress?—A. He ought to have known I would not be, because my successor was elected. But I will say this, so far as that is concerned, that it never occurred to me in that connection that being or not being a member of Congress had anything to do with the matter. I should have gone into that company just as soon if I had been a member of the Forty-eighth Congress as I did being a private citizen.

Q. It never would have occurred to you that making a gift to you of a valuable property might not— A. No, sir; and I deny now that it was a gift. I do not think it was a gift now. I agreed to pay whatever assessments were necessary to develop an unknown quantity, a patent that I did not know anything about.

Q. At the same time, the assessments were to be made upon Dr. Rogers as well as yourself for the mutual benefit of the enterprise?—A. That is all. I would not have been willing, so far as I am concerned, to have done any more than that, with my understanding of the matter at that time, because I did not know whether the inventions were worth anything or not.

Q. You would not consider, if you were a member of Congress, that there was any impropriety in taking a gift?

The WITNESS. Taking a gift?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes, sir.

The WITNESS. You are putting the question in a very different form. I deny it was a gift. If you mean to ask by that question whether I would accept a present for the purpose of influencing my action as a member of Congress, I do most emphatically deny it.

Mr. RANNEY. I have no doubt you would not do it.

The WITNESS. I do, indeed, deny it.

Q. Nor if you supposed that the object of a man in making a present to you was some indefinite idea that you might possibly be availed of for his own benefit, you would not do it?—A. I would not have anything to do with him.

Q. I do not understand what you mean when you say that the conveyance of a tenth part of the interest in those patents, which you admit you paid nothing for and were to pay nothing for, was not a gift, when the only assessment that was to be made upon it was to be for the mutual benefit of all, including Dr. Rogers. How can you call it a purchase?—A. You can make your own argument; but I repeat that the only consideration I would have given was just the one I did give, and that was that I agreed to bear whatever assessments were necessary to develop it, and to give such time and attention to it as I might be called upon to give.

Q. But you do not mean to be understood that the conveyance of a tenth part of the interest in those patents for which you paid nothing to Dr. Rogers was a purchase of itself, do you?—A. I think it was; yes, sir. I think it was as much a purchase—

Mr. HALL. I object to this manner of inquiry.

The WITNESS. I am perfectly willing to answer it. I think it was a purchase. I think it was a purchase to the extent that I paid whatever money I paid for it. It was as much as I would have been willing to pay at the time, because I knew nothing about the value of it.

Q. But you paid nothing for the transfer of the tenth interest?—A. I did; yes, sir. I gave my obligation to pay whatever assessments were necessary to see what was in it.

Q. That was to be paid to the company?—A. Oh, well, you may refine and go into metaphysics on the subject, but the simple fact is, that that was the consideration that I gave, and not official influence, as has been intimated in the papers, about which I wish to speak in a moment.

Q. Not being connected with Congress at that time as a member, you had a right to accept a gift without any consideration, and therefore I do not care to pursue that matter farther.—A. I do not consider that I accepted any gift. You asked me a question a moment ago, and I did not know whether you intended to ask a further question or not, but as it occurs to my mind, I will say I would like to have you ask any question you desire with regard to that matter. I refer to the fact that I was a candidate for clerk.

Mr. RANNEY. That has already been testified to, and I simply wanted to identify you.

The WITNESS. My candidacy for the clerkship had no connection in the world with this telephone matter—none on earth—nor would it have had if I had been elected.

Q. Senator Harris spoke yesterday about your being present at a meeting where a contract that he had made with Mr. Van Benthuyzen was discussed. Do you remember that?—A. I was at a stockholders' meeting—

Mr. OATES. He was examined in regard to that.

Mr. RANNEY. Mr. Oates says you were examined on that, and I do not care to repeat the inquiry.

The WITNESS. I did not see the contract.

Mr. RANNEY. I was not in when you were examined, and so I will not pursue the examination further, but will leave it to Mr. Millard, when it comes his turn, or to the other members.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Were you acquainted with Dr. Rogers prior to the making of this arrangement that you speak of?—A. Oh, yes; I knew Dr. Rogers by reputation as an Episcopal minister a good many years before I knew him personally. I never knew Dr. Rogers personally until I met him here during the Forty-fourth or Forty-fifth Congress. I was here as a member of Congress, and I met him here about the Forty-fourth or Forty-fifth Congress. That was the first time I ever saw Dr. Rogers to know him, although I knew very well who he was. He had been an Episcopal minister in the city of Memphis. I knew very well whom he married. I knew the lady by reputation and knew the family well.

Q. Did you know the young man personally?—A. Yes, sir; I knew him very well, because he was the electrician of the House in the Forty-fourth Congress.

Q. Did you know anything of his capacity as an electrician?—A. Well, sir, he was regarded as a young man of very extraordinary capacity in that respect; was so considered by Mr. Adams, the Clerk of the House, who appointed him, and I never heard anything but compliments paid to his abilities as an electrician. I never heard anything against his reputation in any way, so far as that is concerned, at that time. I have heard some intimations since that he was not, perhaps, a young man of the most steady habits, but still I do not know much about them, or anything about them, for I never saw him intoxicated, that I know of, in my life.

Q. As the head of the Indian Department, I suppose you have no connection whatever with the business of telephoning?—A. Well, we have got a telephone of the Bell company in our office, which we use about fifty times a day; that is all that I know of.

Q. That is the same as they have in all the offices?—A. I suppose so. I understand it is the Bell patent. I would not know the difference to-day between the Bell patent and the Pan-Electric patent, or any other patent, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. RANNEY. You do not say whether you would prefer the Pan-Electric telephone or not?

The WITNESS. I am not so certain but what I think it is the best property. I don't know about that. However, I do not care to put that remark in, as I remember now I am on oath.

Mr. RANNEY. I made the remark facetiously.

The WITNESS. Yes, I supposed so; but I wish to say I have not quite as high an opinion of the Bell Company as a great many people have, and I have a great deal better opinion of the Pan-Electric Company than a great many people have. That is the answer I will put in on my responsibility here as a witness.

Q. Have you made any use of your office to promote the interests of the Pan-Electric Company?—A. None on the face of God Almighty's earth, and there is not a man who will look me in the face and say so; not one on earth. I would cut my right hand off at the wrist before I would do it.

Q. I understand you to say you not only had nothing to do with the bringing of the Government suit, but that you had no knowledge that your company had anything to do with it?—A. I never heard of the agitation of this Government suit until I understood and saw in the papers that it was brought, never. So far as knowing about its being brought, or any of the details, I know nothing more than what is known to the public. I will say this, that when the question was being agitated in the Interior Department, I, like any other man that reads the papers, was not oblivious of the fact that the case was being brought to the attention of the Secretary of the Interior.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. And you knew Casey Young was engaged in that case?—A. I did, and I said to him, "Colonel Young, has the Pan-Electric Company anything to do with this suit before the Interior Department?" He said, "No, sir." "Well," said I, "how do you appear in it? I see you are reported as counsel in it somehow or other." He said, "I am appearing for certain friends in Memphis and certain friends in Louisiana," and with rather an energetic manner he said that he had a right to appear and petition the Government as an American citizen himself if he wanted to do it.

Q. Did he say he had a contract with Van Benthuyzen by which they had combined?—A. He did not say so.

Q. He never told you that?—A. He did not tell me so.

Mr. HALL. That has all been gone over.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. I believe you said you did not hear of this Government suit that was brought until after you saw in the papers that it had been brought?—A. Not until it was published in the papers that it was ordered. That was in September.

Q. Of course then you did not speak to Solicitor-General Goode about it?—A. Never in my life. I never opened my mouth to Mr. Goode on the subject.

Q. Did you speak to Senator Garland about it?—A. I never spoke to him on the subject of the suit. I saw Mr. Garland once since July last, only once, and I remember very distinctly when it was, and what the object of my seeing him was. It was after the case had passed from the Interior Department, having been decided by Mr. Lamar; several days afterwards. I called to see Mr. Garland—

Mr. RANNEY. I suppose a conversation then would not be of any consequence.

Mr. EDEN. I am not particular about it.

The WITNESS. Just as you please. I am willing to state what took place between Mr. Garland and myself.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not think any conversation between him and Mr. Garland since this matter has come out would be competent.

The WITNESS. It was not about the suit. We had no conversation about the suit.

Mr. HALL. Let us pass on the objection.

Mr. OATES. As the witness states what he said did not relate to the bringing of the suit, it seems to me it is not material.

Mr. HALL. It may relate to something anterior to the bringing of the suit. This investigation is not limited to any time.

The WITNESS. I am perfectly willing to answer.

Mr. EDEN. It probably refers to some relation that he had to this company. If it does, I should like to have it.

Mr. RANNEY. You are proposing to take a man's statement subsequent to the fact. If you are going to enforce any rules of evidence—

Mr. HALL. It seems to me we should hear it.

Mr. OATES. Let us hear it first. (To the witness.) You may proceed.

The WITNESS. I will state what occurred between Mr. Garland and myself. Mr. Garland and I had always been great personal friends. As I stated to you before, it was I who first suggested the idea to him of going into this company. I went to see him and asked him this question: As this whole matter had passed from the Interior Department, I wanted to know his opinion whether I, as the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, being under Mr. Lamar, should go to Mr. Lamar and tell him I had an interest in this Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and state all my connection with it. He said he thought it would be a very proper thing for me to do. That was the substance and all of the conversation that we had bearing upon that subject.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. That was after it had passed beyond him?—A. That was several days afterwards. I know very well when it was. It was the last of January, several days after Mr. Lamar had made his final decision on the question. Then I did go to Mr. Lamar and I stated to him my connection with this company and that I owned stock in it. Said I, "I don't know whether you ever knew it or not. I never mentioned the matter during the pendency of the case, as a matter of course."

Q. Did Mr. Lamar say whether he did know it or not?—A. I don't think Mr. Lamar intimated whether he knew I was connected with it or not; but I suppose that he did know it, because it was pretty generally understood that I was. Still, I don't know whether he did or not.

Mr. RANNEY. I have no objection to all of this statement going in, if you gentlemen desire it.

Mr. OATES. I do not think it is necessary, but I withdraw the objection, if the committee insists on it.

The WITNESS. I was asked if I had met Mr. Garland, and I stated that was the only time I had seen Mr. Garland.

Mr. RANNEY. I was the objecting party, and I withdraw my objection to it.

Mr. EDEN. I don't think it is very important in any way. It simply shows what his feelings were about it, that is all.

Mr. HALL. This whole investigation had its origin in the declarations of the public press and in animadversions upon the people concerned in this company, and I think it is entirely proper that every gentleman should be allowed to testify in regard to any conduct of his own that he wishes to bring out.

Mr. RANNEY. Yes; if it refers to Mr. Atkins' own conduct in relation to the matter it should go into the record, if he desires.

The WITNESS. I don't care a cent whether it goes in or not. It is perfectly immaterial to me. I don't care a cent. That is all there is of it, and the motive I had in doing it was simply to get Mr. Garland's opinion whether or not he thought it would be a proper thing for me to mention it to Mr. Lamar after the matter had passed from the Interior Department.

Mr. RANNEY. If the committee is so disposed, we will put it in. I do not see that it has any particular bearing upon the case.

The WITNESS. I am perfectly willing to have it in or out. I don't care a cent. That is the simple fact.

Mr. RANNEY. I think it had better go in.

Mr. OATES. Then the statement must be made again, so that the stenographer can take it down.

The WITNESS. I called to see Mr. Garland after this suit had passed from the Interior Department, several days after the decision of the Secretary of the Interior had been made, and asked him his opinion whether he thought it would be a proper thing for me to mention to Mr. Lamar the subject of my connection with the Pan-Electric Company. He said he thought it would be a proper thing to do.

Q. That was after the action of the Secretary?—A. Four or five days afterwards. I asked him his opinion, and he said he thought it would be a very proper thing for me to do; and I did state to Mr. Lamar just what I have stated here.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. I understand that is the only time you ever spoke to Mr. Garland about it?—A. That is the only time I ever spoke to him about it, and all I ever spoke to him about it. I never had any further conversation with him or communication with him.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. No communication by letter?—A. No communication by letter, by word, by telegraph, by telephone, or by any other means on the earth. That was all I ever had to say to him upon that subject, in any manner, shape, or form, directly or indirectly; and that was just simply because I wanted his opinion. He was a special friend of mine, a particular friend of mine, and he was a Cabinet officer, and I wanted his opinion as to whether it would be a proper thing for me to mention to Mr. Lamar, being a Cabinet officer, and I being under Mr. Lamar.

Q. I understood you to say you communicated with Mr. Lamar afterwards?—A. I did. I told Mr. Lamar I was connected with the company and I said to him this: The idea grew out of the fact that these criticisms had been made upon gentlemen who owned this stock and held Government positions, and said I "I was invited into this position of Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and if you think that my association with this administration, or with you, or if Mr. Cleveland thinks my association with this administration, in consequence of my ownership of this stock, is the least embarrassment to you or to him, the most remote—if, in a word, there is a shadow of a shadow of a shade of embarrassment about it, I want you to say so, and I could not be tied here." That is what I said. His reply to me was, "I can see nothing you have done that is censurable or wrong. You attend to your official duties. That is all I ask of you."

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Do I understand you to say that you knew of the proceedings pending before the Secretary of the Interior at the time it was pending?—A. Why, of course. It was in the papers. That is all the way I knew it. I saw it in the papers every day.

Q. And you spoke to Colonel Young about the impropriety of his appearing there?—A. No, sir; I did not speak to him of the impropriety of it.

Q. Will you state just what you said to him?—A. Exactly; you can draw your own inferences. I asked Mr. Young if this Pan-Electric Company was represented before the Interior Department in connection with this Government suit, and he said no.

Q. Where was that conversation?—A. Oh, I do not know where it was; I cannot tell, as far as that is concerned; but that is the fact.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. It was here in Washington?—A. Oh, yes. Then I said to him, "How is it that you are before the Interior Department?" He said he was appearing as the counsel of certain parties in Memphis and certain parties in Louisiana; and that he had a right, so far as that was concerned, if he wanted to, to petition the Government himself as an American citizen.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You knew he was the secretary and treasurer of your company?—A. Of course I did.

Q. Did you also know that Colonel Gantt, one of your attorneys, was before the Interior Department?—A. Yes, sir; I understood he was; but I did not understand he was representing the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. You also knew that prior to that time an application had been made to Goode to have a suit brought against the Bell Telephone Company?—A. Oh, yes; I had seen that in the papers.

Q. And such a suit had been brought?—A. Yes, sir; I think it was brought and probably countermanded.

Q. Before the matter was decided by the Secretary of the Interior did you see Garland?—A. I did not; no, sir.

Q. Did you see anybody connected with your company or any one of its officers to call their attention to the impropriety of Young and Gantt all being there?—A. I did not, for so far as that is concerned, I did not know anything about Mr. Gantt's status, and Mr. Young had told me he was not appearing as the representative of the Pan-Electric Company, but appearing for people in Memphis and Louisiana.

Q. It was not until after Lamar's decision that you saw the Attorney General?—A. No, sir; several days afterwards, and it had no reference to the suit in any way except just as I have detailed it. That is all.

Q. To go back. I want to ask you some other questions as to matters prior to that— A. I might state right in that connection, while I am speaking about Mr. Young, that Mr. Young said to me that Mr. Garland—

Mr. MILLARD. I don't suppose that would be proper.

The WITNESS. Very good. I am willing to state it. He said to me Mr. Garland was mistaken in supposing that the Pan-Electric Company had ever made an application to him.

Q. The application was made by the National Improved Company, but by reason of a combination between the two companies, was it not?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Did you not so understand afterwards?

The WITNESS. That the two companies were united for that purpose?

Mr. MILLARD. That there had been a consolidation between the National Improved and the Pan-Electric Company.

The WITNESS. To bring a Government suit?

Mr. MILLARD. That there had been a consolidation.—A. I understood from Senator Harris, on the night of the stockholders' meeting at his house, that there was an understanding between the National Improved Company and the Pan-Electric Company that they would unite in paying the common expense, each party paying its own lawyers and putting in its telephones and other machinery, &c., in prosecuting these private suits, one at New Orleans and the other at Memphis, but not a word was said about the Government suit.

Q. Did you hear Senator Harris's statement yesterday in regard to that?—A. I did not.

Q. That is your recollection of what took place at that meeting?—A. That is what did take place that night at that meeting of the stockholders.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. When was that?—A. I can date it pretty nearly. It was a day or two before these publications. A scene occurred there that night that imprints it upon my mind. There was a scene between Mr. Young and Mr. Rogers, and then these publications came out a day or two afterwards, which I supposed was by the consent and agency of the Rogerses. Right there I want to state to the committee that I was here on the 13th of March last and heard Mr. Harris Rogers depose. In speaking about that difficulty he said that General Johnston and myself constituted a committee of referees, who retired and came back with the report or verdict or understanding that Mr. Rogers was to apologize to Mr. Young. The gentleman's memory is at fault. I was not one of the referees.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. There was such a reference.—A. There was; but I was not one of them. He said I was.

Q. Who were they?—A. Senator Harris and General Johnston.

Q. I understand you were in New York at the time this contract was made?—A. Oh, yes; I was.

Q. Before going to New York, with whom did you converse in regard to the organization of this company?—A. I conversed with Harris, and some with Garland, and some with General Johnston, and some with Young, and some with Dr. Rogers, and some with Harry Rogers.

Q. What was your object in going to New York to make the agreement? Did you go over there for that purpose?—A. We went there for the purpose of making the agreement, I suppose; I do not know for what else. Some of the gentlemen wanted to go there. Some of the gentlemen stated they had to go there anyway; and I went that way from here. I went immediately home from New York.

Q. You were not a director, as I understand it?—A. No, sir.

Q. You were present at the first meeting, in November, 1883, were you not?—A. I am inclined to think I was.

Q. And Mr. Garland was there?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And Senator Harris?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Were not the directors elected on your motion?—A. They might have been. I would not say they were not. I don't know how that was. I was present at that meeting, according to my recollection. You fix it better than I could fix it. I believe it was in November, 1883. I believe you are right about it. I think that was the time.

Q. The organization of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company was under date of November 23, 1883?—A. Yes, sir; it was at Mr. Young's room, on Sixth street.

Q. (Reading from journal.) "On motion of Mr. J. D. C. Atkins the meeting proceeded to elect a board of seven directors."—A. Yes, sir; I expect that is so. I had forgotten it.

Q. "Whereupon the following named gentlemen were chosen to constitute such board: Joseph E. Johnston, Isham G. Harris, Augustus H. Garland, Robert F. Looney, John C. Brown, J. Harris Rogers, and Casey Young."—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That refreshes your recollection?—A. That is so, sir. I recollect being at that meeting. I referred to it in my statement, but I did not know when it was. I said I believed it was in the fall of 1884, but I think it was the fall of 1883 that that meeting occurred.

Q. Upon your return from New York did the Rogerses assign to you and transfer to you an undivided tenth, and an undivided tenth to Senator Harris?—A. So far as I know the only assignment that was made was in that contract. I don't know whether there was any other or not. I don't know anything about that.

Q. Don't you recollect about that?—A. I do not.

Q. You understood that you received a tenth interest, did you not?—A. I did.

Q. From the Rogerses?—A. Under that contract.

Q. In answer to Mr. Ranney I think you stated that you did not pay Mr. Rogers anything for it?—A. I paid nothing except to agree to pay whatever assessments were made.

Q. That was to utilize. Do you know of any of the others paying anything?—A. I don't know anything about it. I expect they just paid the same as I did, whatever assessments were necessary. It was a mere patent; that was all that Rogers had at the time. He had no stock at the time, none in the world, and there was never any stock issued at all that I know of.

Q. How much stock have you now in the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. I have got all the interest I ever had except the 10 per cent. that was surrendered to the general company.

Q. How much is that?—A. Four hundred and fifty thousand dollars. That is what I have got with the 10 per cent. off.

Q. Have you also your proportion of the stock issued by each of these subordinate companies?—A. No, sir; I have none of the stock at all.

Q. Do you know that you have an interest in each of them?—A. I know that I have a tenth interest in the property of that company; of course I do.

Q. You have received your proportion of the dividends that have been paid?—A. I have received some dividends; I do not know how much. I have received, I think, between $1,700 and $1,800.

Q. Did you receive your proportion of the purchase price of the stock sold to Senator Vest?—A. I do not know. I suppose I did. I don't know how that was. I did not know anything about the sale to Vest until long after it was sold to him, as far as that is concerned. I suppose I did receive my proportion, as a matter of course. I suppose the money was divided equally, if it was not retained in the treasury.

Q. I will ask you only one or two questions more. Did you know an application was to be made to the Department of Justice to have a Government suit brought, before it was brought?—A. Never, sir; I never did.

Q. Would you have joined in any such application?—A. I would not.

Q. Why not?—A. I would not, simply because I am connected with the Interior Department as a Government officer.

Q. You would not, because you are connected with the Department of the Interior?—A. Yes, sir; I would not for that reason. As I told you before, I never heard of the agitation of the Government suit until I understood it was ordered. That is an answer to the question.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Do you refer to the suit Mr. Goode ordered?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. When did you first learn of the commencement of that suit?—A. I think it was in September that I heard of the suit being agitated.

Q. When did you first learn that Solicitor-General Goode had ordered the commencement of that suit?—A. I think in September, about the time it was ordered.

Q. How soon after it was done?—A. Oh, I do not know—when it was published in the papers.

Q. What did you do when you learned that fact?—A. I did not do anything. What could I do?

Q. I understand you said you thought it was an improper proceeding?—A. I did not.

Q. And you would not have concurred in it?—A. I beg your pardon; I did not say it would be an improper proceeding for the Government to bring a suit. I said it would be an improper proceeding for me, as a Government officer, to have been a party to it. I said that, and I say it again.

Q. You say it now?—A. I do.

Q. I did not misunderstand you, then. Did you take any individual action when you learned of the commencement of the suit?—A. I took no individual action in regard to the matter until I asked Mr. Young, seeing that he was connected with the suit—

Q. That was when it got to the Interior Department?—A. Yes, sir. I had no dream or knowledge that the Pan-Electric Company had anything to do with it at all. I had no right to suppose it had anything to do with it. Nobody had told me so.

Q. Mr. Young or his associates had not taken you into their confidence?—A. My understanding was that the National Improved Company had made the application.

Q. Had Mr. Young or any of his associates taken you into their confidence in regard to what took place in Memphis?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or in regard to what did take place or was to take place before Mr. Goode?—A. No, sir; I heard nothing about that at all. I heard Mr. Young say that Mr. Van Benthuyzen, the president of the National Improved Company, wanted him to unite with them in making an application to Garland, and he said he would not do it, because he said he knew Mr. Garland would not have anything to do with it and ought not to have anything to do with it; and then he said that Mr. Van Benthuyzen asked him to introduce him to Mr. Garland and he said he would not do that, and then reflected a moment and said, "Well, I will introduce you, so far as that is concerned, but I will not have anything to do with making an application to Mr. Garland to bring this suit." I heard Mr. Young say that two or three times, several months ago.

Q. Was not Mr. Gantt, your attorney, also present?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you not know the fact that Mr. Gantt was with Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. Oh, I knew he was here, yes, sir, as far as that is concerned; but I did not know in what capacity he appeared, for it was none of my business; none whatever. I asked Mr. Young, the secretary of the company, whether or not the Pan-Electric Company was a party to the suit, and he said no; and that was the end of it. I did not run around to inquire of counsel here and there whom they represented. It would have been a piece of impudence on my part to have asked a gentleman whom he appeared for.

Q. Let me see about that. I only want to get at certain facts, if they exist. Did you ever meet Mr. Van Benthuyzen?—A. Never but once in my life.

Q. When and where was that?—A. I don't recollect where it was. I recollect having a passing introduction to him. I never had a word of conversation with him in my life that I know of.

Q. Do you remember who introduced you?—A. I do not.

Q. Was it here in Washington?—A. I think it was; but where and when I do not know anything about. I would not know Mr. Van Benthuyzen if he was to come in the door now.

Q. Where were you on the 30th and 31st of July, 1885?—A. I think I was in the Indian Office.

Q. Here in Washington?—A. Yes, sir; I think so. I went home in the last of August, but what day I left here I do not know.

Q. Was not that about the time that you saw Mr. Van Benthuyssen?—A. I declare I don't remember.

Q. Do you know Mr. Huntington?

The WITNESS. Which Mr. Huntington?

Mr. MILLARD. Mr. C. P. Huntington.

The WITNESS. The vice-president of the Union Pacific?

Mr. OATES. Yes.

A. Oh, I know him well; yes, sir.

Mr. MOFFATT. I think that is not the same man, although the initials are the same.

Mr. HALL. The witness is referring to another man.

Q. Do you know a Mr. Huntington who was interested in or attorney for the National Improved Telephone Company?

The WITNESS. Is he the vice-president of the Union Pacific Railroad?

Mr. MILLARD. I do not know.

The WITNESS. If he is, I know him; if he is not, I do not know him.

Q. Is that the only Huntington you know?—A. The only one I know.

Q. Do you know Mr. Zenas F. Wilbur?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. Do you know Mr. Gantt?

The WITNESS. George Gantt?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

A. Oh, I know him like a book.

Q. How long have you known him?—A. Thirty-five or forty years. I met him when we were boys in the legislature, away back yonder in 1849, and have been intimate with him always. I have not seen much of him for the last ten or twelve years; I have seen very little of him.

Q. Did you ever talk with him in regard to your company or its interests?—A. No, sir. I called to see him when he was here.

Q. When?—A. When he was here.

Q. At the conference?—A. No, sir. I called to see him in the presence of Mr. Young. He was in Mr. Young's room. He was not in his room, but he was in Young's room, and I went in and simply paid my respects to him. He was reading a brief, and he stopped and we had a few moments' conversation, and he got up and walked out.

Q. Was that at the Ebbitt House?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was reading a brief?—A. Yes, sir; he said he was.

Q. In what case?—A. He did not say what case it was, as I remember, but he was reading a paper that looked like a brief, and I think he said it was a brief. I think it was this case.

Q. He was reading some legal paper that he was preparing?—A. Yes, sir; that was what he was doing. I had no conversation with him about Government suits or any other kind; I recollect nothing of the sort.

Q. Did you know there was a conference between the Pan-Electric Company and the National Improved Company?—A. I did not.

Q. Is it not a fact that that was the time and the place when you saw Van Benthuyssen?—A. I don't know whether it was or not. I did not see him at any conference.

Q. May it not have been the very place where you saw Van Benthuyssen?—A. It was not if it was a conference. I was at no conference.

Q. Might it not have been on that day and at that place, the Ebbitt House?—A. I can't say whether it was, because I told you I did not know when it was. It would be just as impossible for me to tell you when I saw Van Benthuyssen and where I saw him as it would for me to tell you what I was doing this day a year ago. I could not do it to save my life, nor could I tell you what ideas were uppermost in my mind this day a year ago. I did not charge my mind at all with the meeting of Mr. Van Benthuyssen. I attached no importance to it in the world, and had no conversation with him. There was certainly no conference and no business of any sort that I had any knowledge of.

Q. Did you know that prior to that time your company and the National Improved Company had been at war with each other?—A. I did not know we ever had been at war with each other.

Q. That there had been litigation between your company and the National Improved Company?—A. That is the first I ever heard of it.

Q. To-day is the first time?—A. The very first I ever heard of it. If I ever heard of it before, I have forgotten it.

Q. Did you ever see any of the papers that were used in the Interior Department?—A. I never saw a paper in my life connected with it. I never even read what I saw in the papers that might have been published about it.

Q. Why not?—A. Just because I have plenty of other work to do, and did not desire to take the time or labor or trouble to do it. That is the reason.

Q. What did you understand was the nature and purpose of the proceeding before the Interior Department?—A. I understood it was to bring suit by the Government to ascertain whether the patents of the Bell Company were valid or not.

Q. Precisely. It was to test the validity of the Bell patents, was it not?—A. That is what I understood.

Q. Did you not also understand that to have been the purpose of the suit that Goode ordered?—A. Oh, well, yes, I did, as far as I know. I only had the same impression about it that anybody else would have had in reading the papers. That was the general understanding, I believe.

Q. I do not suppose you have given your attention especially to this subject, but did you not understand that if the Bell patent is broken down the Pan-Electric patents would become much more valuable?—A. Well, I would suppose that they might be so, provided the Bell patent was entirely broken down. If it was entirely broken down, I suppose the Pan-Electric and all other telephone companies probably would be benefited to some extent; but still I do not think it would inure to the benefit of the Pan-Electric any more than other telephone company. That is my opinion, and it is simply an opinion. I do not know whether it is worth anything legally or scientifically.

Q. Do you know Mr. Elisha Gray?—A. I do not think I do.

Q. You understand that suit has now been ordered by the Government?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Against the Bell Telephone Company?—A. Yes, sir; that is my understanding.

Q. From whom did you get that information?

The WITNESS. That the suit was brought?

Mr. MILLARD. Yes.

A. I saw it in the papers; I read the daily papers.

Q. Have you had any conversation with any of your associates in regard to the bringing of the Government suit that has now been brought?—A. Only in connection with these late attacks that have been made upon members of the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. With whom have you talked?—A. Oh, I do not know. I have talked with Mr. Young; I have talked with Senator Harris, and I have talked with General Johnston.

Q. Anybody else?—A. No, sir. I have not met the Rogerses and I have not met Mr. Garland only as I told you, and the subject was not mentioned then except as I detailed it, and the conversation about the Government suits was in connection with these attacks; that is all. I knew nothing in the world about it until it was ordered, and of course I never opened my mouth about the Government suit during its pendency in the Interior Department or the Department of Justice.

Q. Do you know as a fact that the Government suit that has now been brought was brought upon substantially the same papers on which Goode ordered the suit?—A. I do not know. I cannot say. I suppose it was, but I do not know, because I have never read a legal paper about it.

Q. You have trusted the management of this matter to your associates?—A. Yes, I have trusted the management of this matter to the gentlemen who had charge of it.

Q. Who were they?—A. The directory. General Johnston, Senator Harris, and Mr. Young were the principal ones.

Q. There has been no change in the organization that you know of?—A. None that I know of.

Q. From the first?—A. None that I know of.

Q. Have you expressed your opinion as to the propriety or impropriety of the present suit that has now been instituted?—A. I don't know whether I have or not. I may have. I do not know anything about the legal propriety of it. I may have expressed this opinion, which I am very willing to express now: That if the Bell Company has obtained its patents fraudulently, as is alleged, as I understand, as a matter of course, every just man should desire to see them upset and overthrown.

Q. You may have said that?—A. Well; I will say it now. I don't know that I ever did say it before. I will say it now, and I suppose you would say the same thing.

By Mr. HALL:

Q. When your attention was first called to these patents they had never been put to any practical application, had they?—A. No, sir; except in the little laboratory that Mr. Rogers had.

Q. I mean in the matter of bringing them prominently before the public?—A. Oh, no, I suppose not. I suppose they had never seen the light of day outside of the laboratory.

Q. So that they had no possible market value?—A. None in the world, was my judgment; none upon the living earth.

Q. They possessed just such value as the owner by manipulation might give them; they were worth whatever could be made out of them?—A. Precisely.

Q. He could have given away part or have sold part, or done whatever he pleased to induce men to go in with him?—A. I simply regarded it as an unknown quantity. That was the way I looked at it. If it had been estimated at $100,000,000 and we had paid $100,000,000 and it had only been worth $50,000, the fact that we paid $100,000,000 would not have made it worth $100,000,000.

Q. The first positive agreement that was entered into between yourself and associates, including the Rogerses, was the agreement of March 13, in New York?—A. Everything connected with the company simmered down to that contract; every understanding or every conversation, everything connected with it came right down to that contract.

Q. Do you remember when the transfer was made?—A. I do not. Which transfer?

Q. The assignment to the Pan-Electric Company.—A. The assignment of this association to the Pan-Electric Company?

Q. Yes.—A. No, sir; I do not know when that took place. I suppose that was done when the charter was obtained.

Q. Do you remember how it was that the association came to capitalize the properties consisting of these various patents at $1,000,000 or $5,000,000, as was done?—A. Well, I have only this idea about it: A good deal was said by Mr. Rogers about what he thought this patent was worth, and all that sort of thing, and after we had made experiments with it and had seen it operate we thought exceedingly well of it. We did not know but what it might be a very valuable property, and might be a very large matter.

Q. In other words, if successful, it might become a very valuable property?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. At the time you consented to enter into this association had the question of a contest between your association and the Bell Telephone Company, or any other corporation, arisen?—A. No, sir; I never heard of anything of that sort until after this.

Q. Was this association or incorporation organized and set on foot for the purpose or as a means of attacking the Bell telephone patents?—A. Oh, no, sir; not that I ever heard of or dreamed of.

Q. It was, then, an enterprise entered into because it was thought possible that there was some merit, some value, some outcome to it?—A. We believed it was a better instrument than the Bell instrument, and we did not believe that it infringed the Bell instrument. I had a right to believe that, because Mr. Garland, as a lawyer, gave his opinion that it did not, and Mr. Marble, ex-Commissioner of Patents (who ought to know about the value of patents and whether one patent infringes another), had given his opinion that the transmitter and receiver of the Pan-Electric Company did not infringe the transmitter and receiver of the Bell Company.

Q. Do you remember whether those opinions were taken before you had concluded to form the association?—A. We formed the association in March, before those opinions were procured.

Q. I understand you to say that at the inception of the organization of the company there was no design to institute proceedings for the purpose of attacking the Bell telephone patents?—A. None that I ever heard of.

Q. Was there at any time any legislation contemplated by the corporation to aid you in any way?—A. Never, that I ever heard of; never.

Q. Was there at any time any design or purpose to originate or have originated in Congress this postal telegraph system?—A. I never heard of the postal telegraph system until the agitation of this question this winter. There might have been measures of that kind introduced in Congress when I was in Congress; I do not know whether there were or not; I do not know now whether the records will show that or not.

Q. In fixing the capital at $5,000,000 was there any purpose or design thereby to create a fund or to use the stock for the purposes of influencing anybody in his official conduct, directly or indirectly?—A. None on the earth that ever I heard of or dreamed of; no, sir.

Q. Has any stock or evidence of stock or interest in that corporation ever been used for any purpose of that kind?—A. Not that I am aware of.

Q. Do you know what persons now profess to claim or own interests in this Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. I do not know that I know them all.

Q. I do not care about going into the details; you know some of them?—A. Oh, yes.

Q. I will ask you whether the interest that is claimed to be owned by those persons, so far as your knowledge extends, has been obtained by them in consideration of any official act or acts on their part or for the purpose of influencing the official action of any other persons?—A. I do not have any idea that any such thing was done or thought of.

Q. It was not very long after you became associated in this manner that your attention was directed to the fact of a probable conflict between the patents of the Bell Telephone Company and those of your company?—A. Well, I do not know, Mr. Hall, how that is. I was at home in Tennessee, and I do not remember to have heard anything about any conflict between the Bell Company and the Pan-Electric Company for a year or such a matter, may be more; I do not know when it took place.

Q. When it was known that litigation would probably arise between the Bell Telephone Company and your company, or its licensees in the States where those sub-companies had been organized, there was a resolution on the part of your company to insist upon its rights to resist the claims of the Bell Telephone Company, was there not?—A. I understood that, I believe, but really I am not advised about much that took place in the proceedings of the company, because I never attended its meetings.

Q. It was expected that the Pan-Electric Telephone Company would insist upon the validity of its patents?—A. Oh, yes; as a matter of course, because it believed in the validity of them; I did.

Q. Do you know anything about the suit that had been brought in the State of Pennsylvania?—A. I heard something about it, but I did not know anything in the world about it.

Q. You were not familiar with the details of the affairs of the company?—A. No, sir; I was not much familiar with those matters. I heard, though, about that suit, but I just heard that there was such a suit. I understood that there was a suit brought against the subcompany; I believe that is the way I understood it; I never paid much attention to it.

Q. Then, in brief, so far as the subsequent steps are concerned that have been taken, either by corporations or individuals, to secure this suit to be brought in the name of the Government, you state that you had never known, up to the time of the proceedings before Secretary Lamar, that the Pan-Electric Company was a party to those proceedings?—A. No, sir; I did not understand that it was then. Mr. Young told me it was not.

Mr. HALL. I do not think of anything else.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Have you understood since that the Pan-Electric Company was directly or indirectly a party to either or both of those applications?—A. Not that I have heard, except what may have been said in this investigation. I have been reading the proceedings of this committee.

Q. Neither Colonel Young nor Senator Harris has ever informed you that such was the case?

The WITNESS. That the Pan-Electric Company had anything to do with it?

Mr. MOFFATT. Yes.

A. Upon the contrary, they told me it had not, at least Young did; and so far as Senator Harris was concerned, I have always understood that that was his position, although I never had any special talk with him about it.

Q. Let me call your attention to a clause in the contract entered into between the National Improved Telephone Company and the Pan-Electric Company, that contract having been introduced in evidence here.

Mr. EDEN. What contract is that?

Mr. MOFFATT. What is called the supplemental contract. Among the agreements which the parties entered into is this, with reference to setting aside the Bell Telephone patents:

“And for the purpose of accomplishing the same they shall obtain, if possible, the action of the Government of the United States by bringing proceedings in its name or at the relation of some agent or officer,” &c.

Was that ever brought to your attention?—A. Never in the world; never until I heard it mentioned here in the last few days.

Mr. EDEN. Is that paper signed by the Pan-Electric Company?

Mr. MOFFATT. No, sir; the evidence is that there were two contracts.

The WITNESS. That does not relate to the understanding that existed, to which I referred awhile ago, between the Pan-Electric Company and the National Improved Company, in regard to the prosecution of their suits with the Bell Company at Memphis and New Orleans.

Mr. MOFFATT. That is not mentioned here at all.

The WITNESS. I never heard of that.

Q. You never heard of that agreement?—A. Never until it was brought out in the last few days.

Q. You are not aware that this contract was made before the first application was made to the Attorney-General to institute suit?—A. I never heard of that at all until the last day or two, when it has been developed here in this investigation.

Q. Were you not aware that, as a member of the Pan-Electric Company, you were bound, as well as the rest of them, by that agreement?—A. I should hardly think that I would be bound by an instrument that I did not sign.

Q. But the company was bound by it, probably, was it not, if it was done by the directors of the company?—A. I am not aware that it was done by the company, and I don't believe that it was.

Mr. OATES. It has not been proved to have been done by the company.

Mr. MOFFATT. Senator Harris thinks he signed it.

Mr. OATES. Not that one. He says he thinks he signed one contract.

Mr. MOFFATT. I think when we get Mr. Van Benthuyzen here we shall find out that this is the contract that Mr. Harris signed.

Q. Did Senator Harris, in speaking at the meeting of the stockholders in regard to the arrangement between these two companies, mention any other telephone companies that were included in the arrangement—the Overland or the Globe?—A. I do not think he did. I do not remember whether he did or not; but I do not think he did. I am not certain that something was not said possibly about the Globe Company, that it might possibly be connected with the contract. But I remember very well that he said that the principal purpose of the stockholders' meeting was to bring to the attention of the stockholders the fact that there had been an understanding arrived at by the Pan-Electric Company and the National Improved Company that they would unite for the purpose of prosecuting these private suits.

Q. But nothing about the Government suits?—A. Nothing in the world about them.

Mr. RANNEY. You are going into a written contract that we have not here.

Mr. MOFFATT. I was referring to what Senator Harris or Mr. Young told him at this meeting.

Mr. OATES. The written contract is the best evidence

Mr. EDEN. He is testifying about a conversation at the time the information was given to him.

The WITNESS. I am stating what Senator Harris said at that stockholders' meeting.

Mr. MOFFATT. I think that is all I care to ask you.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. One question, general: When this application was pending before Mr. Lamar last winter, you say you were aware of that fact?—A. Oh, yes; I would have had to be blind, deaf, and dumb not to be aware of it.

Q. Were you present at any of the hearings before the Secretary?—A. Never. I never heard a word of the testimony; never went to the rooms where the hearings were conducted; I attended to my own business.

Q. Did you consult with Mr. Lamar about the matter?—A. Not a word.

Q. You took no part whatever in the proceedings?—A. None in the world. I never spoke to Mr. Lamar, or Mr. Muldrow, Mr. Jenks, Mr. Montgomery, or anybody else connected with the Department of the Interior, on that subject.

Q. You never heard of this supplemental contract, as it is called, until it was brought out the other day?—A. No, sir; I never did.

Q. So far as you knew from conversations with Senator Garland, Senator Harris, or any of the other members of the concern, were they aware of it?—A. I never had any conversation with Senator Garland, except the little conversation I detailed awhile ago; and so far as Senator Harris is concerned, I have heard him say half a dozen times that he knew nothing about the Government suit being brought; that the Pan-Electric Company had nothing to do with it, so far as he had any knowledge.

Q. Was there any combination with this other company—what is its name?

The WITNESS. The National Improved Telephone Company?

Mr. HALE. Yes.

The WITNESS. Do you speak of a combination with that company?

Mr. HALE. I mean a combination to induce the Government to bring suit.—A. Oh, no.

Q. All that was said was simply in regard to private suits?—A. Private suits altogether.

Mr. HALE. That is all.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Had you anything to do with the Washington Telephone Company?

The WITNESS. Had I?

Mr. RANNEY. Yes.—A. No, sir; I had not.

Q. You have no stock in it?—A. Not a bit that I know of. If the Pan-Electric Company has any stock in it, I suppose I have an interest in it, but I do not know that it has.

Q. Did you know that the Pan-Electric Company was one of the petitioners before the Attorney-General for the bringing of a Government suit?—A. No, sir; I did not know that; I did not know that they were one of the petitioners.

Q. You did not know that they had an application?—A. No; I did not.

Q. When Mr. Young told you that the Pan-Electric Company had nothing to do with it, did he tell you that the Washington Telephone Company was one of the petitioners?—A. He did not; that was not mentioned. I did not know that they had anything to do with it at all.

Q. He told you pretty emphatically that he did not appear before Mr. Lamar in behalf of the Pan-Electric Company in any way?—A. He did; he said he did not appear there as their representative at all, and they had no representative there.

Q. Did he tell you who the citizens were for whom he appeared?—A. No, I never asked him.

Q. Did he tell you that he was appearing for Colonel Gantt, or Mr. Beckwith, or other counsel?—A. He did not tell me so.

Q. Did he tell you that in Mr. McCorry's application to the Attorney-General there was a request that he (Colonel Young) should be one of the counsel?—A. He did not say anything to me about Mr. McCorry.

Q. Or that Mr. Goode had appointed him and Gantt as counsel in the suit?—A. He did not say anything to me about it; not a single word.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Mr. Millard asked you if you intrusted the whole thing to the management of the directory, and the substance of your answer was that you did. That was when he was questioning you with reference to the bringing of the Government suit. I would like for you to explain to the committee what you meant by that, whether you meant to intrust to the directory the procurement of the Government suit, or what you meant?—A. Oh, no; the general management of the company. If I had had any idea that the Pan-Electric Company intended to be a party to the bringing of a Government suit it would have met with my remonstrance as a stockholder.

Mr. OATES. The record was not clear to me and I wanted to know.

Mr. MILLARD. I so understood him to testify.

Q. One other question. Were you ever chairman of the Committee on Appropriations when you were a member of Congress?—A. Yes, sir; I was for four years chairman of that committee.

Q. Were you chairman in the Forty-seventh Congress?—A. No; I was not.

Q. I have seen some reference to that as a fact in newspaper publications, that you were chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the Congress preceding the present?—A. I feel that a very great outrage has been perpetrated upon me by that publication.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You were a member and you were chairman of that committee?—A. Yes, sir; I was a member and was chairman of that committee for four years, as I have said; but I was not a member of Congress, so far as that is concerned, when the company was organized; and as I said awhile ago, I should have gone into this company if I had been a member of the Forty-eighth Congress; I consider that I would have had as much right to go into it as any private citizen, so far as that is concerned. And right on that point, Mr. Chairman, I want to say one word: A very foul aspersion has been published in the New York World against me in the paper of the 6th, in its telegraphic dispatches from this city.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. The 6th of what month?—A. Of February.

Q. This year?—A. Yes, sir; in that paper is printed a letter which it seems that I, in my innocence, wrote to Dr. Rogers; I never expected to hear of it again. Of course I kept no copy. I never wrote a letter in my life of which I kept a copy, and I never keep anybody's letter to me. If I could hang a man with his letter I would not do it. This is what is published:

“PARIS, TENN., April 19, 1883.

“Dr. J. W. ROGERS:

“MY DEAR SIR:”—It is not necessary to read it.

Mr. OATES. Read it if you desire.

Mr. MILLARD. Let us see what it is.

The WITNESS. (Reading:)

“I have been absent on a visit to a place down in another county, where I have been for a few days farming and fishing; hence the delay in answering.”

That is an answer, I suppose, to one I had received from him, but I do not find that letter from him.

“I am very glad to find that you and General Johnston are well satisfied; and while I have far greater respect for yours and his opinion upon scientific subjects, especially the further possibilities of electricity, than I have for any one's, I would like to know what Harry thinks of the experiments also. Did you read an article in the last issue of the American Register, published at Washington? The suggestion of the editor that perhaps the doctrine of the transmigration of souls was being illustrated in the person of yourself being the reappearance of the old Grecian philosopher, Thales, one of the Seven Wise Men of that classic old state, for whom the honor of the original discovery of electricity is claimed, will amuse you very much.

“Yours,

“J. D. C. ATKINS.”

That letter is published in the World, in a dispatch from this city dated February 5, 1886. This language precedes that letter :

"A letter from Chairman Atkins. In publishing the letter to Dr. Rogers the other day, an interesting one from the Hon. J. D. C. Atkins was unintentionally omitted."

I am very glad it was published.

"At the time of the writing of this letter he was chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations."

My letter was dated April 19, 1883. My services as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations expired March 4, 1881, and my term of service expired March 4, 1883, and I had been for six weeks a private citizen when I wrote that letter. And yet I am held up to the country by this great metropolitan paper, the New York World, to its 200,000 daily readers—if it has that many—as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations at that time. Well, I do not care anything about that. There is nothing in it. All I have to say about that is this: that I suppose the motive for publishing it was a base one; that is my opinion; and the man who sent that dispatch is either a fool or a knave.

Now, I want to say another word. I am glad this is brought up.

Mr. RANNEY. What is the date of that letter?

The WITNESS. April 19, 1883.

By Mr. MILLARD :

Q. Is it your letter?—A. I think it is. I do not know exactly whether it is or not, but I think it is.

Q. You were not the chairman at that time, but were a member of the committee as I understand?—A. I had been a member of the committee.

Q. You were a member of the committee at the time the letter was written?—A. I was not.

Mr. OATES. It was long after his term had expired.

The WITNESS. It was written April 19, 1883, which is subsequent to the 13th of March, and that was the date upon which that contract was made so far as that is concerned. Now, sir, that letter was published on the 6th of February. On top of that here is the World of February 10, in which it alludes, in a long editorial, to this letter of February 6, 1886, published in the paper, and which I will read, if the committee desire.

"Mr. Rogers's most valuable profits so far consist of Wintersmith's letter of uncontrollable gratitude and Chairman Atkins's reference to the suggestion of an imaginative editor that he (Rogers) was the habitation of the transmigrated soul of the Greek philosopher Thales. Possibly Thales's idea of the proper uses of official influence was not very clear, and hence the obtuseness and innocence of Rogers. The mixture of business, official influence, effusive gratitude, transmigration of soul, and administrative embarrassment, which enter into this case, is truly remarkable, but it in no way detracts from the pathos of the situation of Rogers or from the moral obligation on the part of Garland and his associates to return the unearned stock."

Now, there is an unmistakable intimation and declaration that "Chairman Atkins" used his official influence to promote this telephone, or as part consideration for this telephone. I pronounce that, sir, in the presence of this committee, with all proper respect for this committee, an infamous slander and a base lie, and I put that brand upon the brow of Jo. Pulitzer, who said he was responsible for this, and he shall wear it while I live. I wanted to make that remark, sir, and to make it here upon the solemn responsibilities of my oath, and with a perfect knowledge of what the language means. I have been held up all over this country as using official influence, bargaining my official influence, when the record shows—not my oath, which would be good, I hope—but the record shows that I was not a Member of Congress, and consequently was not chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and consequently had no official influence to bargain. And yet that fact has been published to the country, and when the Critic and the Post of this city denied the truth of the original publication and stated that I was not a Member of Congress at that time this paper has never contradicted its statement, so far as I have seen, but has let it float to the country. If that is journalism—decent journalism—then I have no knowledge of what decency is.

By Mr. MILLARD :

Q. I would like to ask Mr. Atkins a scientific question. You speak there in your letter of the transmigration of souls. If the Government had set aside the Bell telephone patents, and you had developed the Pan-Electric telephone to its full extent, do you not believe you could connect the two worlds?—A. I do not know, sir, that my abilities are equal to the stretch of your imagination. You had better write a book on that subject.

Mr. MILLARD. That was suggested by the character of your letter.

The WITNESS. As every gentleman must understand, my letter was a mere jesting allusion to the comparison made between Dr. Rogers and the Grecian philosopher, Thales, in the American Register.

Q. You said you never kept private letters, and that if you could you would not hang a man on a letter; what did you mean by that?—A. I meant by that that I would not divulge private letters.

Q. Do you mean that you would destroy private letters so that they could not be used to hang a man in the interest of justice?—A. I do not mean any such thing.

Q. You have letters from Dr. Rogers?—A. Yes, certainly I have.

Q. And from Johnston?—A. Yes, but I never retained any of them.

Q. And from Casey Young, all of them relating to this business?—A. I do not know about Casey Young.

Q. And you destroyed every one of them?—A. Oh, no; I did not destroy them. I have not thought of destroying them, I simply took no care of them.

Q. Was it in pursuance of what you have said was a design in not keeping letters?—A. What I meant by that is this—let me explain: If a gentleman writes me a private letter I do not expect to publish it.

Q. Suppose it relates to public business?—A. I have never had any correspondence with anybody, so far as I am concerned, with reference to which I would have any objection to any part of it being published; but I do not propose to publish the private letters of anybody else to myself. That is a matter of taste, however.

Q. I just ask you whether you did not receive letters from your associates in relation to this business.—A. Oh, yes; more or less.

Q. And you have destroyed letters which related to business likewise?—A. I have taken no care of any letters that I have ever gotten.

Q. Have you looked to see whether you have them?—A. No; I have not.

Q. Will you be kind enough to do so?—A. My letters are all in Tennessee, and I do not know where they are. I have no private letters of that character or of any kind that have been preserved, so far as I know. I may be able to find them; I do not know.

Q. Do you mean that you have destroyed all the letters you have received, both business letters and private?—A. I have no business letters of any consequence. I presume I might find three or four letters from Senator Harris, perhaps, informing me about the dividends that were sent me. I believe I have them; I don't know. I expect he has mine.

Q. You have been asked about the Bell Telephone Company. I want to call your attention to the last clause in the contract made with Wellington Adams, the contract being dated January, 1885, the one that was put in evidence yesterday: "It is further agreed, however, that if the party of the first part [the Pan-Electric Company] shall sell its patents to the American Bell Telephone Company, or otherwise terminate in its favor any suit or suits that may be brought, then and in that case the last $1,000 shall be due and payable." Do you know anything about this contract?—A. Not a thing in the world.

Mr. MOFFATT. What is the date of that contract?

Mr. RANNEY. January, 1885; the day is left blank.

The WITNESS. Is that the contract that has reference to the two companies uniting to prosecute the private suits?

Mr. RANNEY. No; this is the contract made with Dr. Wellington Adams, whose affidavit was put in as testimony. One thousand dollars was to be his fee, contingent upon the success of the suit in which he was to testify.

The WITNESS. I do not know anything about it.

Mr. EDEN. Does the contract say that Adams was to testify?

Mr. RANNEY. As an expert.

Mr. EDEN. Does it say anything about his testifying?

Mr. OATES. The contract speaks for itself.

Mr. MILLARD. He furnished an opinion, besides.

Mr. RANNEY. This is a contract made with Wellington Adams, by which he was employed as an expert, and directly afterwards his affidavit was taken and put into the case.

Mr. EDEN. But the contract, as I understand it, does not say a word about any affidavit. I just suggest that as hardly a fair way to state the question.

Mr. RANNEY. I made the allusion to the contract. I suppose if he was employed as an expert, it was to give an opinion as an expert, of course, and his opinion was taken by means of an affidavit put in, in accordance with a provision in the contract that if they succeeded in the suit $1,000 was to be contingent on the success of that suit.

The WITNESS. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. RANNEY. I observe in the contract also that it is provided, as late as January, 1885, that that $1,000 shall be paid in case the Pan-Electric Company sold out to the Bell Telephone Company.

The WITNESS. I do not know anything about that.

Q. You had nothing to do with the making of that contract?—A. No, sir; I never heard of it before. I think this is the first time I ever heard of its existence.

Q. Did you know anything about endeavors to sell out to the Bell Telephone Company as late as January, 1885?—A. No, sir; I did not know anything about it selling out to the Bell Telephone Company.

Q. The Pan-Electric Company selling out to the Bell Telephone Company?—A. No, sir; I do not know anything about it.

Q. It seems that that was in contemplation under that contract.—A. I never heard of that contract before.

Mr. MILLARD. That is not in the case; it was not put in.

Mr. RANNEY. By some mistake that contract got into my papers and I carried it away; I brought it back this morning. So the stenographer was not able to put it into the record; he has left a space for it.

Mr. OATES (in the chair). Has any other member of the committee any question to put to General Atkins?

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. I see by the minutes that you were present at the first meeting of the association, at which a resolution was passed looking to the negotiation with the Bell Telephone Company; do you call to mind what that was?—A. No, sir; I do not know that I do. I heard that there was some negotiation between the Bell Company and the Pan-Electric Company, but I do not know anything about the details of it, except as stated by Senator Harris.

Q. It seems that almost the first business the company did was to pass a resolution of that character?—A. I do not recollect anything about that, but I know that there had been some negotiation between the Bell Company and the Pan-Electric Company, represented by Senator Harris. Yes, I knew that, because Senator Harris told me about it, and I heard him detail it in his testimony here the other day.

Mr. OATES (in the chair). General, I believe we are through with you.

Mr H. O. SEIXAS then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By Mr. OATES:

Question. Where do you reside?—Answer. At New Orleans.

Q. Have you any connection with any of these telephone companies or matters that are being inquired about here?—A. Yes, sir; I am a director in the National Improved Telephone Company and generally, in the absence of the president, act as its president.

Q. Who is the president of that company?—Mr. W. Van Benthuisen.

Q. You can proceed to make any statement of facts within your knowledge pertaining to these inquiries that you desire to make.—A. I have no particular statement to make. There seemed to be some desire on the part of some gentlemen of the committee to know something about what happened during the pendency of the attempt on the part of the National Improved Company, through its president, to bring about this Government action, about the preparation of the bill and things of that kind, matters which fell to my lot to attend to as the officer in charge of the company in New Orleans.

Q. What efforts were made by your company to induce the Government to bring a suit against the Bell patents?—A. Everything possible.

Mr. RANNEY. State what you did personally.

The WITNESS. I will state what my company did, and that included myself and what I did.

Mr. RANNEY. Your company is impersonal.

The WITNESS. Well, I was the representative of it at that time. I represented the company in New Orleans. The president was absent and my company did all that it possibly could, and I, as its executive officer, did all I could, in that direction.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. State what you personally did.—A. I did everything that a man could possibly do to have it brought about. Mr. Van Benthuisen was here, and after an attempt to have a suit brought under a bill that we supposed had passed Congress, Mr. Van Benthuisen wrote me—

Q. You need not state what he wrote you unless you can produce the letter.—A. Well, I cannot produce any letters, because the letters were of a private nature from Mr. Van Benthuisen to me, and I do not know that I have any of those letters, but I will state what was in them.

Q. That is the very thing I object to.—A. Then I will state what I did as the result of them.

Q. Where are the letters?—A. I don't know where they are.

Q. Have you looked for them?—A. No, sir; I haven't looked for them.

Mr. EDEN. He can state what he did without producing the letters.

Mr. RANNEY. I do not object to that.

The WITNESS. I told Mr. Ranney that I proposed to state what I did as the result of that correspondence, what I did with or without the letters; I will state both together.

Mr. RANNEY. Avoid stating the contents of those letters.

The WITNESS. I will not state the contents of them because I am not accurate enough in memory to remember them, but I will state what I did as the result of the contents of those letters.

Mr. RANNEY. Nobody objects to that.

The WITNESS. Very well. I knew that the company through its president was going to make an application under this bill that we supposed had passed Congress, and I knew that a letter had been written on the basis of that bill to the Attorney-General, asking the right to have an action brought against the Bell Company to set aside its patent, as a right that we had, supposing the bill had been passed. I knew afterwards that later on, when this letter was written, on the 12th of July, from New York, after consultation in New York with our attorney there, Mr. Von Briesen, that we afterwards found out that that bill was not in existence, that there was no such bill, and the advice of counsel given to us by our attorney, Mr. Von Briesen, in New York, was that it was not necessary to have that bill; that that did not deter us from carrying out our intention of having the Government bring this suit. He pointed out to us what our rights were, and said that our rights were to go forward and make a prima facie case before the district attorney; and that if that prima facie case would sufficiently warrant the district attorney to make an application to the Government, that was the mode we had to proceed in, and that was the right that we had. And with that understanding we asked for the withdrawal of the letter of the 12th of July, as it amounted to nothing, and we did not propose to proceed on that letter, as it was not a proper mode to proceed, but we proposed to proceed properly, and did then proceed or make a motion to proceed; and after it was decided to proceed through a district attorney, the matter was referred to me in New Orleans as the acting president of the National Improved Company as to whether I would bring the suit in New Orleans or elsewhere. After consultation with my attorneys there in New Orleans as to whether I would bring the suit in New Orleans, through the district attorney, or not, or at another place, I decided that the suit could not be brought in New Orleans, and that the next nearest forum to us where we could bring the suit was Memphis, and I so telegraphed to Mr. Van Benthuyzen that I had decided, and that Memphis had been selected as the place to bring the suit.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. Why could you not bring the suit in New Orleans?—A. There were three reasons why I could not bring the suit there. First, there is a habit or practice in the Federal courts in New Orleans of taking a summer vacation. Judge Billings, who is the judge of the district court, lives in Connecticut; Judge Pardee lives in Ohio, and takes the summer off, and it is the practice of the Federal courts there, and of all our courts, to take a recess from the last of May until the middle of October or the 1st of November, provided there is no sickness in the city. And at the time this matter was referred to me the court was in vacation; there were no courts in session, they had adjourned. Another reason was, that Mr. Albert Leonard, who was the district attorney at that time, was about to give up his office, his term was about to expire, and his successor would be appointed before the courts convened again. In consequence of that, he had packed his effects up and had left New Orleans and gone home to Shreveport where he lives, and of course as the courts were not in session there was no necessity for him to stay, and I did not think I could induce him to come back to New Orleans where I could make this prima facie statement as I wanted to. I thought he would object, because his term of office would expire in a short time and the name of his successor was being canvassed at that time, to taking any action. But whether he objected or not, I considered that we had better go to some new forum where there had been a new attorney appointed who would be in office during the whole of the litigation, and who would be familiar with the case from the beginning. Then, again, we were somewhat in doubt in regard to the jurisdiction we might get in New Orleans, as the New Orleans company was the subcompany of a subcompany, was a subcompany of a licensed company, and the parent company from which it got its authority was located in Memphis, and we could get better service on them.

On those grounds I decided that the only and the nearest place we could go to would be Memphis, and Memphis should be selected as the place to bring the suit. At that time Mr. J. R. Beckwith was leading counsel in charge of our affairs in New Orleans, the counsel that I consulted with, and after I had decided that the case, should be brought in Memphis, I telegraphed the information to Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and he then directed me to have Mr. Beckwith meet him in Memphis, and I instructed

Mr. Beckwith to go to Memphis and meet Mr. Van Benthuyzen. I then directed instruments to be sent to Memphis, and I think ordered the instruments that we had withdrawn from the case in Pittsburgh to be forwarded to Memphis for the purpose of making a demonstration before the district attorney.

By Mr. HALE:

Q. You are talking about the private suit down there?—A. No, sir; I am talking about the negotiation for the Government suit. The instruments were ordered there, Mr. Beckwith met Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and I think possibly Mr. Huntington, who is also one of the directors of our company.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. What Mr. Huntington is that?—A. Mr. C. P. Huntington, a railroad man from Mississippi, a planter, and railroad man.

Q. Is it Mr. C. P. Huntington who is connected with the Pacific railroads?—A. No, sir; it is not the notorious Mr. Huntington. They spell their names alike, but one is named Charles and the other is named Carlos. They get pretty well mixed up in telephone matters.

Q. Did you ever see a written contract between your company and the Pan-Electric Company with reference to making a joint fight in the courts against the Bell Company?

Mr. RANNEY. You need not state the contents of it.

Q. Did you ever see such a paper?—A. No, sir; I never saw such a paper until I found the paper in Colonel Young's room. Calling on Colonel Young last Sunday, he told me that he had found that contract there.

Q. That is the one that was produced here?—A. Yes, sir; the one produced here.

Q. And you never have seen any other?—A. No, sir; but I will state to you that my knowledge or understanding was that there was always an understanding between the Pan-Electric Company and the National Improved Company that we should join forces and fight this fight. But whether it was put into writing or not it was nevertheless the understanding, and I distinctly knew it.

Q. We won't go any further on that if there is a writing in existence, as there probably is. Did you ever in person do anything or appear before the Attorney-General or the Solicitor-General acting as Attorney-General, to endeavor to have the suit brought?—A. Oh, no, sir; I was not here; I was in New Orleans. My associate, Mr. Van Benthuyzen, did, and I knew about it.

Q. All you know or did about it was done as head of the company, in the absence of Mr. Van Benthuyzen down there in New Orleans?—A. Oh, yes, but I have been following it up ever since we started on this fight, and have been here all the time.

Q. You know the general history of it, I suppose, as we have had it from witnesses; you have heard it detailed; you have been in the room here?—A. Yes, sir; I knew the general history of the whole thing. I knew it before these witnesses testified, and a great many things I have heard from these witnesses I had never heard before. I never knew anything about this Rogers arrangement.

Q. Do you know of any fact connected with it which has not been detailed that is of any importance to the investigation?—A. I do not know that I do specially. I think there was a matter on which Mr. Ranney seemed to lay some stress, as to whether or not this bill that was filed in Memphis had been prepared before the order was filed, as if he wanted to suggest that we had anticipated that it would be, and we previously prepared the bill, feeling confident of our action. I would state for the satisfaction of the committee in regard to that, that I ordered that bill prepared, and it was prepared at New Orleans under my instructions. I paid for printing it in New Orleans, and it was sent by me from New Orleans to Memphis to Mr. Beckwith, our attorney. I prepared it after I had a telegram from Mr. Huntington, who was here in Washington, saying that suit had been ordered, or permission had been given, to bring the suit in answer to Mr. McCorry's request, and as soon as I got that telegram I instructed Mr. Beckwith to prepare the bill, and it was prepared then and there, and he prepared it by commencing and working all day on Sunday; worked all day Sunday and Sunday night, and Monday the bill was prepared, and I made arrangements afterwards that the bill should be sent to Memphis and filed, as soon as submitted to Judge McCorry, if it was satisfactory to Judge McCorry, and he did not find Judge McCorry at Memphis—

Mr. RANNEY. You are not testifying to what you know positively of your own knowledge.

The WITNESS. I am testifying to what I did, because I told him to go there and do it. He found Judge McCorry at Jackson, and he did file that bill.

Mr. RANNEY. That is simply information you received, and not personal knowledge.

The WITNESS. My knowledge is that the bill prepared at New Orleans was filed, because I saw the bill after it was filed, knew the extent of it, and knew that it was the bill sent from New Orleans that was filed. I did not see it filed, but I know it was filed.

Q. You saw it after it was filed?—A. Yes, sir.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. You have been in attendance most every day since this investigation began?—A. Yes, sir; off and on I have.

Q. Do you reside in New Orleans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You do not reside in Washington?—A. No, sir; I do not.

Q. How happened you to be here when the investigation began?—A. Oh, I came here to fight this fight; I have been here four months, and am going to stay here until it is through; I have come for this purpose.

Q. Have you come since this investigation was ordered?—A. No, sir; I came here in October; as soon as the Interior Department attempted to start an investigation I came here.

Q. Where is Mr. Van Benthuyzen now?—A. In New Orleans.

Q. Since we commenced the examination of Colonel Young have you been in telegraphic communication with him?—A. Oh, yes, sir; I have a good many private interests with Mr. Van Benthuyzen, he and I together.

Q. In relation to this hearing?—A. Incidental to it. I have been here, and we wanted to know when this bill was going to be formed. But in regard to this thing here, I don't think that I ever took much stock in it.

Q. Colonel Young testified to having telegraphed to New Orleans to get these contracts, and that he got an answer back asking which one was wanted; did you have anything to do with those telegrams or writings?—A. Oh, yes, sir; I had all to do with it.

Q. Did you telegraph or he?—A. Oh, yes; I and he both telegraphed.

Q. Have you your answer?—A. The answer to my telegram? Yes, sir.

Q. Did you see the one that he sent?—A. I do not know that I did, though he produced it here the other day.

Q. Did you see the one that he received?—A. I do not know that I did.

Q. Who received the telegram asking which paper he wanted?—A. I rather imagine Colonel Young did.

Q. Did you see it?—A. I am not certain I did; I think I did; I think he produced it here.

Q. Did you see the one which said that the contract had been mailed and was on its way?—A. I do not know that I did.

Q. Don't you think you did?—A. Probably; I think I did.

Q. You do think so, don't you?—A. May be I did; I am not certain about it; I will not testify positively about it.

Q. Has it not come—some contract?—A. No; no contract has come. But I will state this: That Colonel Young told me that he had telegraphed to Mr. Van Benthuyzen to send a copy of the contract or agreement here—this agreement that we had entered into about these matters, and that embraced this Government suit and these other private suits, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen wrote to me—

Q. Have you that letter?—A. I have not.

Q. I wish you would produce it.—A. I haven't got it.

Q. Why did you destroy it?—A. What did I want to keep them for? They are private matters of my own. I clean my table of them every night.

Q. Have you got that contract?—A. No, sir; I haven't got it.

Q. You knew that it had been asked for?—A. Yes.

Q. And you wrote about the contract?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you a copy of the letter you sent?—A. No, sir; I never keep any copies of them.

Q. You wrote a letter about the contract?—A. No, sir; I don't know that I wrote a letter, but I telegraphed that Colonel Young wanted the contracts, and I got a dispatch from Mr. Van Benthuyzen in relation to it. I think I wrote him about it.

Q. Didn't you get a letter from him in answer to it?—A. No, sir.

Q. I thought you said you did and destroyed it.—A. Oh, no; I didn't say that I destroyed that letter at all. I told you that I destroyed all letters that I got. Mr. Van Benthuyzen wrote me a letter saying that he did not know what Colonel Young wanted; that he had made search for such a document as Colonel Young wanted, but did not know that he had it, or could not find it.

Q. Did he write that to you or to Colonel Young?—A. He wrote it to me.

Q. Colonel Young says that Van Benthuyzen telegraphed or wrote him, asking which contract he meant.—A. No, I don't think he did; if he did, I didn't know it; may be he did. I think that as this turned up here to be a contract, it looks to me as if this contract was an original contract and that all other contracts were merged into this one, and that this contract was signed by Mr. Van Benthuyzen and sent here to be signed, as it calls for, by some officer of the Pan-Electric Telephone Company, and as it was sent here to be signed and never was signed or returned, consequently it is not in our office, and therefore Mr. Van Benthuyzen could not find what they wanted.

Q. Your idea is that the supplemental contract merged the original?—A. Yes, sir; that is my idea. I think the contract itself will show.

Q. Are you a member of the legal profession?—A. No, sir; I am not, but I have considerable knowledge of the law.

Q. You say that your idea is that a supplemental contract which purports to be additional to another contract merges the original in it?—A. I tell you that my idea from reading this contract that was sent here is that it seems to have taken the place of all previous contracts.

Q. What telegram have you there?—A. I will read it to you when I get through explaining this matter, but I want to explain what I mean by this contract. I think from reading this contract that it is a contract or agreement that superseded and does supersede all others, because it embraced matters thoroughly and covered the whole ground. It sets forth there exactly what it is intended to do.

Q. I don't care for your opinion.—A. You asked me if I was an attorney, and I am trying now to give you an opinion.

Q. That is beyond the information I asked.—A. Then I will go back to this letter. Mr. Van Benthuyzen wrote me a letter saying that he did not know what Colonel Young wanted.

Q. Where is that letter?—A. I told you I tore it up.

Q. Why did you tear it up?—A. Because I tear them all up.

Q. Do you tear up business letters?—A. Yes, sir; unless—this is not a business letter.

Q. You tore up that letter when you knew that it was written in answer to an inquiry before this committee?—A. What Mr. Van Benthuyzen writes to me and I to him is between him and me. I wrote it just because I felt like writing it independent of this committee or anything connected with it.

Q. Didn't you write it in consequence of the inquiries made before this committee in relation to it?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Why did you write it at all?—A. I didn't write about it. Mr. Van Benthuyzen wrote to me that he had received a telegram from Colonel Young, and didn't know what Colonel Young wanted and could not find it.

Q. Did you show that letter to Colonel Young?—A. I don't know that I did.

Q. Why not?—A. Because I didn't feel like it, may be.

Q. Why didn't you feel like it?—A. That is just a part of my business. Now, I have a dispatch—

Q. The letter you received you destroyed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Then what did you do?—A. The letter I got I destroyed and I telegraphed Mr. Van Benthuyzen—

Q. Is that a copy of it?—A. No, sir; I haven't got a copy; I told you that.

Q. What line did you telegraph by?—A. I don't know what line it is.

Q. Where did you go to the office?—A. I don't know where I went.

Q. Where do you stop here?—A. At the Ebbitt House; they have two or three telegraphs there.

Q. Did you send the telegram from the Ebbitt House?—A. I don't know; may be I did.

Q. Don't you remember?—A. No.

Q. You got a reply, did you?—A. Yes.

Q. Have you got that?—A. Yes.

Q. Why didn't you destroy that, too?—A. Because I showed this to Colonel Young, and he told me he would like to show it to the committee.

Q. What is that?—A. This seems to be an answer to—I think Mr. Ranney, that when I got that letter—

Q. Let us have the telegram first.—A. Just wait and I will tell you why this telegram came to me, now, if you please.

Q. Go ahead.—A. I think that when I got that letter that I telegraphed Mr. Van Benthuyzen to send all letters and papers—all letters of Colonel Young's and all letters of mine, and all letters, everything, in connection with this matter that he had, to send them to me here in Washington. I telegraphed him to that effect.

Q. Did you name the agreement, too?—A. I said all letters and papers of every kind, of every manner, shape, or form.

Q. At that time you knew we wanted the contract?—A. Colonel Young wanted it; yes, sir.

Q. Didn't you name that?—A. The contract?

Q. Yes.—A. I probably did; I don't know that I did.

Q. Did you?—A. I don't know positively.

Q. That was the specific thing you were after, wasn't it?—A. Well, I sent a very broad, sweeping dispatch so as to cover all and sweep in everything, and in answer to that, I have this from him: "I have no letters of any consequence, and no copies of mine of last July to you or him, [that is, Young], as I kept no letter book at that time, while away from home. All letters of company have been examined; none of them relate to matter pending, so I can send you none."

Q. I don't see anything in that about the other papers.—A. I telegraphed him to send me all letters.

Q. Is there anything in there about the agreement?—A. No, sir; nothing about the agreement, because I sent a sweeping telegram and asked him to send all letters from Colonel Young to him and all letters from me to him, and all letters from him to me, and to examine our records and send the whole batch; and he says here that he did not have any copies of any letters.

Q. He does not say anything about the agreement?—A. Not a word about the agreement; and I don't think he had the agreement, because we find that here, you know.

Q. No, there is one we have not got here.—A. One moment—

Q. You wait a moment.—A. No, I want to tell how I answered this.

Q. Well, finish it.—A. After I got that dispatch (that was received during the day), I got that night another dispatch from him, which says: "Have determined to carry all papers and documents with me when I start for Washington"—does that cover what you want to get at?—"if called, instead of sending by mail. Show this to Colonel Young." I think that will cover it.

By Mr. OATES:

Q. What is the date of that?—A. The 24th of this month.

Mr. RANNEY. We had one here dated March 25, I think.

The WITNESS. No, that is the same one. That is the one I presented; no, sir; here is the one, I brought it here myself.

Q. A week had transpired since we had asked for that paper, nearly.—A. No, that was about as quick as a letter could get here.

Q. You have been here in attendance; were you not aware that the only subject of inquiry of Colonel Young, and the pressing inquiry and demand, was for that original agreement; you knew that, did you not?—A. No, sir; I think I got kind of tired and worn out during your cross-examination, and the time you were trying to get that out I didn't come, because life was too short.

Q. Didn't you know that we were pressing for that original agreement?—A. I was told that you were, and I think the last time I was up here you were, but I didn't come up the next day, and therefore I telegraphed.

Q. Did you go out and search for it?—A. No, sir; what did I have to search about it for?

Q. You knew that we wanted to get it very much?—A. I was told that you wanted to get it very much, and I telegraphed, and tried to get it for you.

Q. You knew that Mr. Van Benthuyzen had telegraphed, asking which one you wanted?—A. I didn't understand anything of the kind.

Q. Did not Colonel Young tell you that he had a telegram from him inquiring which one he wanted?—A. No, sir.

Q. He didn't tell you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did you see the telegram to Colonel Young relating to it?—A. I don't think I did. I told you so before.

Q. Didn't he confer with you about it?—A. I think probably he did.

Q. What did he say?—A. I don't remember.

Q. Please remember.—A. Well, I can't.

Q. Do you remember anything that he said?—A. I remember his saying that he would like to get what papers there were, and so forth, and on the strength of that I sent the telegram. I was trying to help him out.

Q. You mean the first telegram?—A. Oh, yes; the whole of the telegrams, or anything in connection with it.

Q. Didn't you observe that the telegram you got back didn't say anything about an agreement which was the subject of our search and inquiry?—A. No, sir; I didn't observe anything of the kind about it.

Q. You think you telegraphed for it?—A. I telegraphed for all documents and all letters, my own and Colonel Young's, pro and con, and everything else in connection with it that they wanted to send me; and then I got that first dispatch in the early part of the evening—at least I got it late at night.

Q. Did you send one meanwhile between these?—A. No, sir; I did not.

Q. Are you aware that about a week has transpired since the date when we sent for that agreement, and Colonel Young said he had got a dispatch and it would be here the next morning?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. That an answer had been sent by letter?—A. Yes, sir; I think it was some time.

Q. A week?—A. Yes; a week.

Q. Can you show us what telegrams passed between you and Van Benthuyzen during that week?—A. I do not know that I can, and I don't know that I would if I could, because my dispatches are private.

Q. You will not give us that information?—A. Yes, I will. I said I would not show you my private dispatches to Mr. Van Benthuisen in connection with my business.

Q. I am asking you about this agreement.—A. Well, private matters; that is a private matter.

Q. That agreement is a private matter of yours?—A. My telegrams to Mr. Van Benthuisen about the archives of my office are private.

Q. You say you never have seen any such agreement?—A. I never have seen any one, except the one here.

Q. You never have seen the original agreement to which this is supplementary?—A. No, sir.

Q. You are the vice-president of that company?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And on intimate relations with Mr. Van Benthuisen?—A. The most intimate.

Q. And he never submitted that agreement that he signed in behalf of your company to your directors?—A. No, sir; I think not.

Q. And never told you about it?—A. Oh, I knew that we had an agreement; that there was a general understanding about it.

Q. Did you ever look after that written agreement?—A. Like going down to the written details of it, I could not be sure about it. Whatever Mr. Van Benthuisen said about it I took for granted.

Q. Do you have charge of the papers of that company?—A. No, sir; the clerks have, I reckon.

Q. Have you ever looked for that paper?—A. I haven't been home since October.

Q. You never had curiosity enough to look and see where it went?—A. No, no, no.

Q. Did he tell you that he had entered into an agreement with the Pan-Electric Telephone Company?—A. I don't know that he told me it was written, but I inferred that it was.

Q. Did you ever ask to see it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has he ever shown it to you?—A. No, sir.

Q. Has he ever shown it to the directors?—A. No, sir.

Q. Or called the attention of the directors to it?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. Do you know of any reason why he should conceal it?—A. None in the world.

Q. He never called your attention to this?—A. No.

Q. You don't know what he meant when he sent back here, making an inquiry as to what agreement was wanted?—A. I don't know that he sent back an inquiry of that kind; he said he did not know what Colonel Young wanted.

Q. Colonel Young said that he telegraphed back, "which agreement do you want?" Did you hear him say that?—A. No, sir; I did not hear Colonel Young say that; that was one of those days you were worrying him.

Q. Did Colonel Young tell you that Mr. Van Benthuisen had sent back an inquiry asking which one of the agreements he wanted?—A. I don't think he did; I don't remember.

Q. Don't you know that he did not?—A. Didn't what?

Q. Didn't tell you that Mr. Van Benthuisen telegraphed back inquiring which one of the agreements he wanted?—A. No, sir; I do not know that he did and do not know that he didn't.

Q. You and Colonel Young both knew—A. I knew this, let me tell you plainly: I knew that Colonel Young wanted to get what you were trying to get, and I knew I was trying to help him get it, and I knew that Mr. Van Benthuisen was trying to help him get it, and I know what was the reason why he did not get it, and the reason why he didn't get it is, in all probability, because it was not in existence in New Orleans, because what Colonel Young thought was there turned out to be in the tray of his trunk, and he found it Sunday.

Q. I wish you would not argue the question, but answer my question. You and Colonel Young were boarding at the same house?—A. No, sir.

Q. You saw him after this examination began?—A. Yes, sir, sometimes; whenever I was up here I did.

Q. And he spoke to you about dispatches that he had received?—A. He told me probably, I think he did, that he had sent a dispatch to Mr. Van Benthuisen, but I don't think he ever told me about getting a dispatch from him in return, but I think I did hear about it.

Q. He did tell you about sending a dispatch?—A. Yes, I think so.

Q. What did he tell you that he sent the dispatch for?—A. To send him the agreement that existed between him and the Pan-Electric Company.

Q. Didn't he tell you that he got a dispatch in reply asking which one of the agreements he wanted?—A. No, sir.

Q. He didn't tell you that?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he show you the one saying that it had been sent by mail and would be here, was on the way?—A. I don't remember that he did. I have heard you talk about that; I think I received my impression from you. I know I got a letter and that he did not know what Colonel Young wanted, and that letter induced me to send a telegram to which these are the answers.

Q. And that was about a week after he got the dispatch?—A. Well, it takes about three days for the mail to get from New Orleans here.

Q. How long does it take a dispatch to get there?—A. Well it takes less time.

Q. These of Colonel Young's were dispatches, telegrams?—A. That was a dispatch in all probability, and you told me or left to infer (I do not know where I got it) that it was too late in the day, and knowing how things are situated in New Orleans, how that Mr. Van Benthuyzen leaves the office of the telephone company about 3 o'clock and goes to the railroad office, I can see how it was too late that day, because if we do not get the mail off at 4 o'clock, it is too late for that day, and the next day I presume he intended to hunt up whatever Colonel Young wanted, have a search made in the office for it, and as the dispatch said it was "too late to-day; attend to it to-morrow," and the next day the chances are that looking it up he didn't find it, or didn't know what he did want, and wrote that letter.

Q. I don't want your speculations, Mr. Witness?—A. Well, I don't know anything about it.

Q. We can speculate as well as you. We do not need speculations. Well, you did know of a dispatch about which you drew these inferences?—A. You told me about a dispatch.

Q. Don't you know that Colonel Young swore here that he telegraphed for that agreement to Mr. Van Benthuyzen, and got a dispatch from him first saying, "which one of the agreements do you want?"—A. No, sir; I don't know anything about it.

Q. And next that he got a dispatch saying it was too late that day, and that it would come by mail the next day, and that he said that he should have that here the day after? Didn't you hear his testimony?—A. Oh, you have got that all mixed up, Mr. Ranney.

Q. Didn't you hear him testify to that?—A. No, sir; but I have it in my mind whether I heard him testifying about it or not. You talked about it a good deal.

Q. With whom?—A. I heard you try to talk about it here; trying to mystify things.

Q. With what witness?—A. With Colonel Young.

Q. What was the talk that I had here with Colonel Young? It was when he was being examined on the witness stand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What was it?—A. You talked a good deal about this letter and this dispatch, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen's dispatch that he could not—

Q. Did I do anything more than to put questions about it?—A. Oh, I don't know.

Q. What were the questions I put?—A. I don't know, God Almighty, and I don't think anybody else does; I don't think you know yourself.

Q. But it was relating to that subject?—A. Yes, sir. Life, I think, is too short to go on with all that.

Q. But life is not too short to get that agreement, and I think we will get it before we get through.—A. I think Mr. Van Benthuyzen will bring all the papers.

Mr. MILLARD. I object to the profanity of the witness.

Q. I want to know if you were not present when I inquired of Colonel Young about that agreement?—A. I could not answer you positively; I was not here every day you were cross-examining Colonel Young.

Q. You said you were here?—A. I did not; I told you I was here sometimes, and sometimes I was not.

Q. You said you were here sometimes when I was talking with Colonel Young putting questions?—A. I heard you one day when I was here cross-examining Colonel Young on that point.

Q. You don't remember what that was?—A. What was?

Q. What that cross-examination referred to.—A. It was on that subject; as to exactly what it was I cannot say.

Q. I was inquiring after that agreement, wasn't I?—A. Yes, you were inquiring after an agreement.

Q. And wasn't it the very day that he produced the very telegram you now produce?—A. Yes, that was the day I was here; one of the days I was here.

Q. And he handed me that telegram to you of March 25?—A. Yes, sir; that was the day I was here; I handed him the telegram.

Q. Do you remember that I called his attention to the fact as much as one week after the time when he said he had gotten the other telegram that the agreement had been sent and would be here by mail?—A. No, sir; I don't know that I do. You might have done so, I don't remember. Those are details I don't go into.

Q. You now swear to this committee that you never saw the agreement to which this is supplementary?—A. No, sir.

Q. Were you in the room with Colonel Young when he found the supplementary agreement?—A. No, sir.

Q. I thought you said you were?—A. I said I was there that afternoon, and that when I came in he told me he had found this agreement in the tray of his trunk; that he had just found it.

Q. When did he tell you that?—A. Either Saturday or Sunday evening; I think Sunday last.

Q. Where was he then?—A. In his room.

Q. Did he show it to you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you read it?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did you talk about it?—A. No, sir.

Q. Did he say anything about the original, about the one to which that was supplementary?—A. No, sir; nothing specially that I remember.

Q. Or in general?—A. I don't know; I think I remarked, "Well, this is the reason why Van can't find this agreement; you have it here."

Q. You think you said that?—A. I think I did.

Q. Did you say anything more?—A. I don't know that I did; I don't remember anything more.

Q. That is the first time you had seen that agreement?—A. Yes, sir; because the agreement, you see, Mr. Ranney, was written away from New Orleans, and, as I stated, I was in New Orleans, and Mr. Van Benthuyzen was away, and that agreement seems to have been written here or in Memphis, I don't remember which, and as it was sent here to be signed, I never saw it.

Q. When Mr. Van Benthuyzen telegraphed to Colonel Young and asked which one of the agreements he wanted, which one did you understand that he meant?—A. I told you most positively I had not seen that dispatch.

Q. Hadn't you heard of a telegram asking Colonel Young which agreement he wanted?—A. I told you I hadn't seen that.

Q. Hadn't you heard of such a telegram?—A. No, sir; I will not answer that question again. I told you four or five times my answer, and if you want me to answer it again I ask this committee to protect me in my rights. I ask to be excused.

Q. If I have your answer that is sufficient.—A. I have answered four or five times already.

Mr. MOFFATT. You volunteered your testimony; nobody asked for it.

Q. You asked to come on here as a witness?—A. No, sir; not specially.

Q. Didn't you request the chairman to have you called?—A. No, sir; I saw I was on the list to be called, and I wanted to go to New York—

Q. Didn't you ask the chairman to be called?—A. I asked him if I was going to be put on, that I might be put on now, as I wished to go to New York.

Q. You knew that Mr. Van Benthuyzen was wanted?—A. Oh, I know that he would answer; I supposed this committee would do that.

Mr. EDEN. I think it would be proper, if there has been no subpoena for Mr. Van Benthuyzen, to have one issued for him to bring that paper.

Mr. RANNEY. I think so, and at once.

Mr. OATES. We can settle that in executive session.

Q. Have you had any other correspondence with Mr. Van Benthuyzen about that original agreement than that which you have stated?—A. I don't think I ever wrote anything about any original agreement.

Q. About an agreement?—A. About an agreement? No, sir. After I got his dispatch it was not necessary for me to write any more.

Q. The only letter you ever received relating to it you have not got; you have destroyed?—A. No, sir; I have no letters that I have received here at all on any matters.

Q. You have spoken about having gotten a bill in equity filed in Memphis that was printed in New Orleans?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. When do you say that you directed Mr. Beckwith to withdraw that bill in equity?—A. I think from the circumstances under which the bill was drawn that it must have been on Friday evening or Saturday.

Q. Was Mr. Beckwith in New Orleans then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. On Friday or Saturday evening, when?—A. On a Friday or Saturday probably somewhere about the early days of September.

Q. Was it after you had received notice from Washington, it had been directed?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you find Mr. Beckwith then?—A. He has an office close by my office.

Q. How did you hear that a bill had been directed by Mr. Goode?—A. By a dispatch from my associate, Mr. Huntington.

Q. From Washington?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. He was here then?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Do you remember what day you got it?—A. No, sir.

Q. That was a dispatch saying that it had been ordered?—A. It said that Mr. McCorry's request had been granted, and that McCorry would be instructed to bring suit.

Q. And then you went immediately to your attorney?—A. Oh, he has an office close by, and I sent my errand boy to him to tell him to come around to my office, and then I told him that the request of Mr. McCorry had been granted, and that it was necessary for him to prepare the bill, as it was understood that he should prepare the bill if a suit was ordered.

Q. What did he say about it then?—A. I told him I thought it was necessary for him to do it immediately (I think this must have been Friday evening), and he said that any permission granted in answer to Mr. McCorry's application could not possibly get back to Memphis until Tuesday, but that he would go to work on the bill after he got through in court the next day and work all Sunday and have the bill ready to be in Memphis on Wednesday. He told me he would begin it Saturday, and on Sunday evening he told me he had been at work since 5 o'clock in the morning preparing the bill, and had it nearly completed and was going over it that night for corrections, and it would be given to the printer the first thing in the morning. I told him that it was necessary he should complete it that night, even if he had to work all night on it; that I wanted the bill to go by Monday evening's mail to Memphis.

Q. Why were you in such a hurry?—A. Because I wanted it there in time, and wanted the other attorneys to read the bill, and wanted to be sure to have it there in time.

Q. Did he read it over to you after it was finished?—A. No, sir.

Q. Who attended to the printing of it?—A. I sent it to the printers and paid for it and attended to it.

Q. It seems that Mr. Goode ordered the bill filed, or authorized it, on the 3d of September, and it was filed in Memphis on the 9th, I think, which was just six days afterwards. You must have been very busy during that time.—A. I told you he worked every hour on Sunday; went to work before daylight and worked all day, and I got it just in time to get it put in the mail of Monday.

Q. When you first spoke to him, didn't he tell you that he had got it most ready?—A. No, sir; he did not when I first spoke to him.

Q. Had he done anything about it then?—A. I don't know anything about that.

Q. Do you know of Mr. Beckwith's having been, prior to that, at Memphis?—A. Yes; I sent him to Memphis.

Q. When did he get back from Memphis?—A. He got back from Memphis after we got through with the demonstration before Mr. McCorry.

Q. Don't you know that he brought the Memphis bill already drawn?—A. I know that he did not.

Q. How do you know it?—A. Because I know he came there to prepare the bill, and told me he wanted to consult some English authorities he had in his library.

Q. He didn't tell you that he had brought the bill already drawn, from Casey Young, at Memphis?—A. No, sir, and I don't think he did either.

Mr. RANNEY. Casey Young said that he drew the bill himself at Memphis, and that Mr. Beckwith took it home with him.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I didn't say that.

Q. Why do you say that?—A. Because he tells me now that he didn't.

Q. Did you hear him testify before this committee?—A. I don't think I did, and I don't think he would testify to that.

Q. But you know that he did not bring the bill?—A. Oh, I know the bill was prepared in New Orleans, Mr. Ranney.

Q. You did not go to Memphis?—A. No, sir; I staid in New Orleans.

Q. Have you that written agreement in your possession, Mr. Witness, the one to which this is a supplement, or have you ever had it, to your knowledge?—A. Do you address me?

Q. Has Mr. Van Benthuyzen, since you have been here, sent on any paper from New Orleans, to your knowledge, to you?—A. Sent on any paper to me? No, sir. He sends me many different papers connected with our business.

Q. Has he sent you any papers on this subject?—A. No, sir. The dispatch says he will bring them himself, not send them.

Q. He has sent you no letters?—A. No, sir; no letters.

Q. He has not been here yet?—A. You know that he has not.

Q. I do not know it. I should not know him if I saw him.—A. No, sir; he has not been here yet. He has been here a good deal during this matter of presenting the case before the Department of the Interior. He and I were here all the time.

Q. I am speaking of a recent time?—A. No, sir; he has not been here recently.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. You said you saw your name on a list of witnesses; who showed you that list?—A. I understood that Mr. Crawford was preparing a list of witnesses, and I got it; that he was furnishing a list of witnesses for this committee.

Q. Did you see it on the list of Mr. Crawford?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You saw your name?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Who showed it to you?—A. I got it from the desk there. When Mr. Young was talking about some witnesses the clerk told me that my name was on the list of witnesses furnished by Mr. Crawford.

Q. You got it from the clerk, then, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. You have not been subpoenaed?—A. Not that I know of.

Q. And your testimony this morning was voluntary?—A. Oh, I saw my name here and stated, I presume, that I wanted to get away, and if it was proper to put me on I would like to have them do so.

Q. One thing further as to your being a witness; has it not been a matter of conversation between you and Colonel Young?—A. Since I have had this list of witnesses it has been. He never asked me, though. I wanted to go away from here—

Q. Did you not sit just back of me at the time I examined Colonel Young; were you not behind me at the time I examined him?—A. I have sat behind you several days.

Q. While I was examining Colonel Young were you not signaling to him, making motions to Colonel Young?—A. Not that I know of, except that I wanted to hand him this dispatch. He saw I had the dispatch; I had the dispatch in my pocket.

Q. Did you not indicate to him how to answer certain questions?—A. How could I indicate to him what he should answer?

Q. I was told that you did.—A. You were told wrong; Colonel Young is capable of answering questions himself without indications from me; I am not capable of it.

Q. You did make certain indications to him?—A. No, sir; I do not know that I did. I am not capable of indicating to him what questions he should answer, or how he should answer them. But I did indicate that I had this dispatch at a certain time, and Colonel Young is quite neglectful, or at least absent-minded, and when I handed that dispatch I took it and indicated that I had the dispatch which would answer your question.

Q. Was not that very dispatch produced during the examination of Colonel Young?—A. I produced it; I asked you to hand it back—don't you remember; I handed you the dispatch in an envelope.

Mr. MILLARD. I asked no question of Colonel Young about the dispatch. I think that is all.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. Did I understand you to say that you had a list of witnesses?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Where did you get it?—A. Off that table; it was handed to me by the clerk; I was told that this had been prepared by Mr. Crawford.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Did you ask for it of the clerk of the committee?—A. No, sir.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Have you got it in your possession now?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Let me see it, please.—A. I think I have it here (producing the paper). Here it is. I was told that was prepared by Mr. Crawford.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. The clerk of this committee handed that to you, I understand?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. Did he give it to you voluntarily or did you ask for it?—A. I think it was kind of mutual. Colonel Young was writing some of the witnesses' names here, and he told me that a list had been prepared by Mr. Crawford, but had not been submitted to the chairman yet.

By Mr. EDEN:

Q. Were you advised that your testimony was desired before the committee?—A. Oh, I saw it there on the list; I did not know anything about it until then.

By Mr. MOFFATT:

Q. In whose handwriting is that list?—A. I do not know.

Q. You did not copy it off yourself?—A. No, sir; that is the list I got.

By Mr. RANNEY:

Q. Whose handwriting is it?—A. I do not know; it is not mine.

By Mr. MILLARD:

Q. Has the National Improved Telephone Company an office here in this city?—A. No, sir.

Q. What is the business that keeps you here, do you say?—A. Looking after this Government suit and attending generally to these telephone matters.

Q. The Government suit does not require you to attend here day after day, does it?—A. Well, it does. I just told you, sir, that I am generally looking after everything pertaining to the telephone business; I am always about when anything comes up affecting the Bell telephone and my company or my interest in it; if I am not some of my associates are, in every place.

Mr. EDEN. Have you seen anybody about the building connected with the Bell Telephone Company?

Mr. MILLARD. I don't know a soul connected with the company.

Q. Was this bill that you prepared at Memphis the result of the consolidation of your company and the Pan-Electric Company?—A. There has never been a consolidation.

Q. Was it an agreement as you understood it?—A. Oh, I understood that we were to fight together.

Q. The Government suit?—A. Oh, no; but every suit.

Q. Now, I ask you this question: Whether that bill that you say you helped prepare was the result of some understanding to that effect as you understood it?—A. My understanding was that we were to fight together.

Mr. EDEN. Witnesses have not been permitted to state the contents of papers.

The WITNESS. I understood that we had agreed to fight this fight together.

Q. I will ask the question in another form. From what you have heard, the conversation you have heard, from the representatives of the two companies—

Mr. OATES. First let him state what conversation.

Mr. MILLARD. I am not going into the conversation. He has called the attention of the committee to a certain bill that he helped prepare at New Orleans.

The WITNESS. Yes, after Mr. Goode had given authority to Mr. McCorry.

Q. Did you understand that bill was in pursuance of mutual action on the part of your company and the Pan-Electric Company?

Mr. EDEN. I object to that; there is a written agreement.

The WITNESS. I will explain it outside of that agreement.

Mr. MILLARD. I want you to explain it outside of that agreement.

Mr. EDEN. I do not want it explained outside of that agreement. No one has been permitted to tell what that agreement was, and I object to the witness stating his conclusion about it. If that paper is in existence it is the best testimony, and if it is not in existence, then we have a right to prove the contents of it by whoever wrote it.

Mr. RANNEY. It seems to be a pretty certain thing that we never shall get it.

Mr. HALL. It is not fair to say that. This committee has not yet subpoenaed anybody to produce a paper of that kind. I think that remark would be more proper when the committee has taken the necessary steps to produce the paper. I make that suggestion because this all goes into the record.

Mr. MILLARD. It is a point that is very material. We must have that agreement.

Mr. HALL. If there is any desire to produce an improper impression that is the way to do it.

Mr. RANNEY. The witness has not given very much else in his testimony.

Mr. HALL. You have been asking him—

Mr. MILLARD. Let me ask my question. I ask you this question and I think there is no misunderstanding between us in regard to it if I have heard you correctly: You had heard conversations between Colonel Young and Mr. Van Benthuyzen and perhaps other parties, Mr. Huntington, and have spoken of a telegram that you received from Mr. Huntington. Subsequent to the order made by Mr. Goode, either at New Orleans or Memphis, you helped to prepare the bill of the Government suit; am I right in that?

A. In some respects you are.

Q. As to the fact of its being subsequent to the order?—A. Yes, sir. It was subsequent to the order.

Q. I ask you whether that bill, from what you heard between the parties, not from any written agreement—A. I will have to stop you right there, because you are getting it wrong. I will try to help you. I had heard of no conversations relating to anything of that kind between Colonel Young and my representatives, because all those conversations took place away from New Orleans, and I was in New Orleans, so that it was not brought about by my overhearing any conversations. But what I knew about it was brought about by information I received directly from Mr. Van Benthuyzen, who was a party to it.

Mr. OATES. And therefore it is entirely hearsay.

Mr. EDEN. Entirely.

The WITNESS. I could not hear, because I was not there.

Mr. EDEN. This was a matter that you would not allow Colonel Young to tell about, what was in that written contract.

Q. Did you understand that your two companies had united to bring that Government suit?—A. I understood that we had united to fight every fight, Government and any other kind.

Q. The bringing of a Government suit?—A. Yes; every kind of a suit?

By Mr. EDEN :

Q. You understood that from Mr. Van Benthuyzen ?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. And from him only ?—A. I did ; that was the only source.

By Mr. MILLARD :

Q. Haven't you talked with Colonel Young about the Government suit ?—A. Since I have been here before the Department of the Interior I have talked a great deal to him about it. That is what he and I came here for, and we have certainly talked a good deal about it.

By Mr. OATES :

Q. Is this the clerk's handwriting on this paper ?—A. I don't know.

Q. Did the clerk give it to you ?—A. Yes, sir.

Mr. OATES. The clerk states to me, and Mr. Crawford also, that this memorandum was merely made of those they supposed might be witnesses. Mr. Crawford says that he did not make the list, but suggested the names to the clerk of the men that he supposed would be sworn as witnesses. I can state now, Mr. Witness, that there has been no action of this committee to subpoena the parties upon this list at all.

On motion, the committee went into executive session, and subsequently adjourned until Monday, April 5, 1886, at 12 o'clock a. m.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Monday, April 5, 1886.

The committee was called to order at 12.15 p. m.

Mr. OATES (in the chair). Gentlemen, there is a quorum present. I want to state that in pursuance of the instruction of the committee on Friday evening last I telegraphed to Mr. W. Van Benthuyzen, requesting him to be here before the committee on Tuesday. He has not replied as yet, but Colonel Young has shown me a telegram from him stating that he cannot be here as soon as that in consequence of breaks in the roads (there have been great floods down in that section of the country), but that he will leave there on Tuesday, and will be here Friday. I have told Colonel Young to telegraph him, or have his partner telegraph him, that it will be satisfactory if he gets here this week.

I have received a letter or note this morning from Mr. Goode stating that Attorney-General Garland is still very unwell, and unable to be out, and that he, Mr. Goode, has to appear before the Supreme Court this morning as Acting Attorney-General, and cannot be here at the hour of our meeting, but will be very glad to appear before the committee if he can do so at about half-past 1 o'clock to-day. I suppose under these circumstances it would be well for us to take a recess until that hour.

Mr. RANNEY. We might, possibly, in the mean time, put some papers into the record which should appear there. There is one letter connected with the testimony of Mr. Atkins that ought to be put in, and possibly he should be called in connection with it.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. There are some letters furnished by Dr. Rogers to the committee which were not deemed relevant to the investigation by the subcommittee, and, consequently, were not published as other letters were for the use of the committee. I would like to examine them in order to refresh my recollection in regard to the letter of August 21, 1883, which has been published.

Mr. RANNEY. I have been over some of these letters which were reported by the subcommittee as not deemed material, and I find there are some of them that I wish to have printed.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I wish you would take them all and have them printed. I want to refresh my memory about this letter of mine. I do not remember writing the letter or how I came to write it.

Mr. RANNEY. Which letter is it you are speaking of?

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. It is the one dated Hot Springs, Ark., August 21, 1883, addressed to Dr. Rogers, where there is an italicized sentence, in which I speak of an association with the American Postal Telegraph Company.

Mr. RANNEY. That letter has been printed.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I want to see that letter and others that have not been printed.

Mr. RANNEY. I wish they had all been printed.

Mr. CASEY YOUNG. I think if they were all printed it would relieve the committee as well as myself.

Mr. RANNEY. We shall have to go over them. I have been over some of them and find them material. I see that one of them was printed in the World after Mr. Atkins gave his testimony before the committee.

Mr. OATES (in the chair). If there is no objection, the committee will take a recess until half-past 1 o'clock.

The recess having expired the committee resumed its session at 1.30 p. m.

Hon. JOHN GOODE then came before the committee and was duly sworn.

By the CHAIRMAN (Mr. BOYLE):

Question. Do you hold any office under the Government of the United States at this time?—Answer. Yes, sir; I am Solicitor-General, by appointment of the President, but have not yet been confirmed by the Senate; the matter is pending.

Q. At what time were you appointed?—A. I was appointed on the 4th of May, 1885.

Q. Had you held any office or been a member of Congress prior to that time?—A. Yes, sir; I was a member of the Forty-fourth, Forty-fifth, and Forty-sixth Congresses.

Q. At what time did your Congressional service terminate?—A. It terminated with the Forty-sixth Congress, in March, 1881.

Q. Did you hold any other office between the expiration of your Congressional service and the beginning of your term as Solicitor-General?—A. None.

Q. Are you acquainted with Senator Isham G. Harris, General J. E. Johnston, Mr. Casey Young, Attorney-General Garland, and Mr. J. D. C. Atkins?—A. Yes, sir; I know all those gentlemen.

Q. Did any of those gentlemen, to your knowledge, assist in having you made Solicitor-General?—A. I think not. I was recommended to the President by the Attorney-General. I do not think either Mr. Atkins, Mr. Young, or General Johnston recommended me for appointment.

Q. You say you were recommended by the Attorney-General?—A. Yes, sir; I was recommended by the Attorney-General to the President, and appointed by the President upon the recommendation of the Attorney-General, and I was recommended to the Attorney-General by a great number of gentlemen. I do not think, though, that either one of the gentlemen named by you was one.

Q. Had you prior to your appointment as Solicitor-General any business relations with any one of the gentlemen named?—A. None whatever.

Q. Had you prior to your appointment any conversation with any one of them with respect to any probable litigation affecting telephone patents in case of your appointment?—A. None, sir; none at all.

Q. What had been the relation between yourself and the Attorney-General prior to your appointment?—A. My relations with the Attorney-General have been friendly, but not particularly intimate. I knew the Attorney-General first as a member of the Confederate Congress, and after my election to the Forty-fourth Congress, while he was here in the Senate, I met him occasionally as a member of the House would meet Senators, but our relations were not specially intimate.

Q. Do you recall the fact of an application having been made to you by the district attorney for the western district of Tennessee to have a suit brought in the name of the Government to test the validity of the Bell telephone patents?—A. I do; not made to me, but it was addressed to the Attorney-General and came to me as Acting Attorney-General.

Q. For what reason did it come to you and not to the Attorney-General?—A. I will state—

Q. I merely wish to know whether it was on account of his absence or not?—A. Yes, sir; the Attorney-General left here on the night of the 27th of August for his summer vacation, and, under the law, after he left I became the Acting Attorney-General. Section 347, which you are familiar with, provides that in case of vacancy, or the absence of the Attorney-General, or his disability to act, the duties of the office shall be performed by the Solicitor-General. The Attorney-General left Washington on the night of the 27th of August to go to his home in Arkansas, and on the morning of the 2d of September an application from H. W. McCorry, the United States district attorney for the western district of Tennessee, came to me in the regular course of mail, accompanied by a memorial signed by several citizens and various affidavits and exhibits, which I acted upon, as I did in regard to other routine business that came to me.

Q. I will come to that directly. Had you, before the departure of the Attorney-General, any conversation with him as to the probability of an application of this character being made during his absence?—A. None whatever. I will say in answer to that that I left Washington City on the 26th of June to go to British Columbia. I was sent there by the Department of Justice at the instance of the Post-Office Department to represent the Government in the extradition case of Isaac N. Hibbs, charged with the forgery of certain post-office money-orders, and I left here, as I say, on the morning of the 26th of June. I returned to Washington on the night of the 19th of August. From the 19th of August until the 27th, the night on which the Attorney-General left, I saw very little of him; he was busy in his Department, and I was busy in mine; I saw him occasionally; but when he left the office on the evening of the 27th, knowing that he was going away, I went down and took leave of him as a matter of politeness, but he gave me no instructions about anything.

Q. Had you any conversation with him, prior to his departure, with regard to the Bell Telephone Company or the Pan-Electric Company?—A. He never mentioned the Bell Telephone Company or the Pan-Electric Company to me until, after his return, early in October, I introduced the subject to him, having seen these assaults made upon him in the public press. I did not know that Mr. Garland had any interest in the Pan-Electric or any other company until after this newspaper criticism commenced, but when he came back I mentioned the subject to him.

Q. Had any other person spoken to you prior to the departure of Mr. Garland about probable litigation, or in any way respecting probable litigation of the Bell Telephone Company with the Government?—A. None whatever. That matter came to me in the regular course of business. I will say here—I think it is proper to say it in answer to your question—that this communication of Mr. McCorry, the district attorney, reached me on the morning of the 2d of September. That morning, before I received it, Senator Harris, of Tennessee, and Mr. Casey Young came into my office and I think Senator Harris held something in his hand, a letter or telegram, and asked me if a communication from the district attorney had been received from the western district of Tennessee in regard to a suit against the Bell Telephone Company. I replied that no such communication had been received. He then said that he had information that it had been forwarded. I rang the bell and sent the messenger to inquire of the clerk if there was any such communication there, and I received an answer that there was none. Those gentlemen, I do not think, even took their seats. They said they were confident that such a communication had been sent, and then left the room. Not very long after they left (they were there early in the morning between 9 and 10 o'clock), I suppose about 11 o'clock or perhaps earlier, the communication from the district attorney came to me with other mail, and I saw it then for the first time, and proceeded to examine it.

Q. Had any person spoken to you with reference to the matter before this conversation with Senator Harris and Mr. Young?—A. No, sir.

Q. That was the first information you had?—A. Yes, sir; I never had heard of such a suit or contemplated suit. I did not really know about the existence at that time of these various telephone companies in the country. I never had heard of any controversy or any anticipated controversy in regard to it. The first intimation I had of it was in this conversation that morning with Senator Harris and Mr. Young, the morning of the 2d of September.

Q. You say the application did come to you the same day?—A. It came to me in less than half an hour after they had left the room.

Q. What did you do with it when it came to you?—A. I proceeded to examine it, as it was my duty to do under the law. I read the letter of the district attorney, in which he went on to state the reasons why the use of the name of the Government should be permitted in the suit, and he stated among other things that he had in his possession one of the Reis instruments, that he had personally experimented with it, knew personally that it could talk, and sent along with his letter a memorial signed by Watson Van Benthuyzen, C. P. Huntington—

Mr. RANNEY. Haven't you got the documents which were sent to you?

The WITNESS. Yes, sir; I have them here, but I will say that they are documents from the Department. I am willing to have them copied. Perhaps I had better read the letter of the district attorney.

The CHAIRMAN. If you please.

Mr. RANNEY. We have it already in print. You had better state all the papers you received.

The WITNESS. The letter of the district attorney had accompanying it—

Mr. RANNEY. What is the date of that letter?

The WITNESS. The letter bore date the 31st of August. The letter was written from Jackson, Tenn., and was dated August 31, and addressed to the Hon. A. H. Garland, Attorney-General.

Mr. RANNEY. We have a copy of that.

The CHAIRMAN. I think the letter and the memorial had better appear here.

The WITNESS. Accompanying the letter of the district attorney, written from Jackson, Tenn., and dated the 31st of August, was this memorial, signed by Watson Van Benthuyzen, New Orleans, La., C. P. Huntington, Mississippi, J. R. Beckwith, New Orleans, La., and George R. Gantt, Memphis, Tenn.

The CHAIRMAN. Those appear in the record of the Interior Department at page 7.

Mr. EDEN. I suppose it is well to have them go into the record.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes, they should be put in together.

The letter and memorial referred to are as follows :

OFFICE OF UNITED STATES ATTORNEY,
Jackson, Tenn., August 31, 1885

Hon. A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General, Washington, D. C. :

DEAR SIR: Col. George Gantt, of Memphis, and others presented me an application in writing a few days since asking an examination of certain publications, affidavits, &c., and also a personal inspection of certain telegraphic instruments, which had previously been put in circuit in Memphis, and which are those known as the Reis inventions, and the same referred to in the affidavits accompanying.

The object of the application made to me was to obtain a report by myself to you as to the propriety of instituting a suit in the name of the United States to have the patents under which the Bell Telephone Company operate declared void and vacated and recalled.

I examined the documents given me, and also made a personal inspection of the Reis instruments referred to; I heard the words over said instruments plainly and distinctly, and am fully satisfied that they are the true Reis instruments and inventions, and am sure if the papers submitted are true—and there is every reason to so believe—that Alexander Graham Bell was not the inventor of the transmission of articulate sound or spoken words over wires by means of electricity, and that such invention was that of Reis, a German, and made about 1862, and also that these facts were and must have been known to said Bell when he applied for and obtained his patents.

There appear to have been irregularities attending the issuance of these patents, but my knowledge of the practice on this point is not such as to offer an opinion.

I am of the opinion that the patents were improvidently issued, that they were obtained by false suggestion and concealment, and that Bell was not entitled thereto under the law, and that the interest of the people of the United States demands their recall if it can be done.

I have examined the authorities (cited by Colonel Gantt) upon the question of practice and am of the opinion that letters patent improvidently issued can be recalled, and that the proper proceeding to that end is by bill in equity, as was suggested, and I am impressed, not only as to the propriety of instituting such proceedings, but believe it to be a duty.

I am assured that the parties specially pressing this matter will, if required, save the Government harmless against expense, but I do not think it proper to require such of them farther than the payment of fees to the counsel whom they may desire associated with me in the case. I deem this the proper course, because the suit should be in fact, as well as in name, absolutely one by the Government, and without the power of any one to suggest that, having a pecuniary interest, &c., they should be heard specially in its management, for it might happen that such interest could be adjusted by contract, so that it would become desirable on the part of such persons to dismiss or permit the suit to fail, which should not be.

I caused the Reis instruments which were shown me, and over which I heard conversations, to be put in the hands of the marshal and under my control, so as to protect the Government in case of any compromise between interested parties, and for the same reason I shall keep control of all documents and affidavits, &c.

I inclose the papers submitted to me for your inspection and also a memorandum of the authorities.

I ask that Hon. Casey Young, Col. George Gantt, and Gen. Luke E. Wright, of Memphis, and Col. J. R. Beckwith, of New Orleans, be permitted to appear as associate counsel, without expense to the Government, and that you will direct the commencement of proceedings.

Very respectfully,

H. W. McCORRY,
United States District Attorney for West Tennessee.

Memorandum of authorities: 14 Wall., 434; 18 Fed. Rep.; 22 Fed. Rep.; 9 Fed. Rep.; 2 Wall., 525. I have not the Federal Reporters at hand to give the pages, having examined them in Memphis.

MEMPHIS, TENN., August 26, 1885.

Hon. HENRY W. McCORRY,
United States Attorney for the Western District of Tennessee:

SIR: We are in possession of information that we deem reliable, which, in our opinion, is sufficient to establish these propositions:

(1) That Alexander Graham Bell, the alleged inventor and patentee in the following letters patent of the United States, viz, letters patent No. 174465, dated March 7,

1876, for alleged new and useful improvements in telegraphy, and letters patent No. 186787, for an alleged improvement in electric telephones, was not the original and first inventor of the art of telephony, or of any substantial matter described or claimed in said letters patent.

(2) That the electric speaking telephone was known and used in the United States and Europe long prior to his alleged invention and discovery of the same.

(3) That he was cognizant of these facts; had witnessed the use of the electric speaking telephone, and had knowledge of the discovery thereof, before his alleged discovery and invention of the same. That he has no just or rightful claim to the discovery or invention of the broad art of electric telephony. That he is not the founder, or entitled to stand at the head of said art by reason of prior invention and discovery.

(4) That his oath to his application for letters patent filed in the Patent Office in patent No. 174465 of date January 20, 1876, in which he claimed that he was the first and original inventor of the art, is and was false, in these particulars:

First. He did know that the said art was known before his alleged invention.

Second. He did know that it was used prior to his alleged discovery and invention of the same.

Third. He not only had such knowledge from reliable sources of information, but actually had seen it work and practiced as a known and existing art prior to his alleged invention and discovery of the same.

(5) If said Bell had not intentionally concealed, but had fully disclosed and set forth in his application and the oath thereto for such patent, all that he knew of said art as it existed prior to and at the time of his alleged invention and discovery of the same, such disclosure would have effectually defeated his said application for said patent, by furnishing conclusive evidence that the said art existed, and that the state thereof, as it existed, and the use thereof were known to said Bell prior to his alleged invention and discovery of the same.

(6) That, at most, the alleged discovery and invention of said Bell, as set forth in said application and patent, are an improvement on a well-known art, existing at the time of said alleged invention and discovery by said Bell, and the alleged improvement itself is valueless because not useful and not used even by those owning the said patent of the said Bell, but, on the contrary, wholly discarded as of no practical value.

(7) That what is called the Bell Telephone, and now in extensive use, consists of successive improvements upon the art as known long prior to the said Bell patent; and the said improvements themselves, on the said art, are the discoveries and inventions of others and not of said Bell, and not covered by said Bell patent. That the so-called discoveries and inventions of said Bell, set forth in said patent, constitute nothing that is new, useful, or valuable in the electric speaking telephone, nor are they, in fact, employed in the same.
